The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 3 Of Sales of Immovable Property

⁷⁹⁹[56. Marshalling by subsequent purchaser.—

If the owner of two or more properties mortgages them to one person and then sells one or more of the properties to another person, the buyer is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the mortgage-debt satisfied out of the property or properties not sold to him, so far as the same will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the mortgagee or persons claiming under him or of any other person who has for consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.]

This section has been substituted by the amending Act of 1929.

The scope of the section has been widened so that it now provides for cases where there are more than two properties. The section uses the word “mortgages” instead of the word “charge”. This is because in the amended Act the word charge is used in the sense defined in section 100, and does not include a mortgage. The words “as against the seller” have been dropped to show, that the right can be enforced against the mortgagee. The section may apply to charges.⁸⁰⁰ The section confers a statutory right on the vendee of one property sold to him out of several mortgaged along with that property. Such a right cannot be defeated, unless it is proved that the intention was to extinguish the entire mortgage.⁸⁰¹

Under section 56 of the TP Act, 1882, the mortgage debt is a charge on the property and therefore, the charge remains subsisting on the property so long as it has not been duly discharged.⁸⁰²

[s 56.2] Marshalling by Purchaser

This section deals with the right of a subsequent purchaser to claim marshalling. It should be contrasted with section 81 which refers to marshalling by a subsequent mortgagee. Marshalling is the converse of contribution, for while marshalling requires that a mortgagee who has the means of satisfying his debt out of several properties shall exercise his right so as not to prejudice the purchaser of one of them, contribution requires that if several properties are liable to a mortgage and the mortgagee has been paid out of one, the others shall not escape. Marshalling arises under this section where property has been sold free from encumbrances, while contribution is applicable where the property has been sold subject to the mortgage.⁸⁰³

ILLUSTRATIONS

(1) Properties X, Y and Z are subject to a mortgage. The mortgagor sells X to A free from encumbrances. Marshalling enables A to require that the mortgagee shall satisfy his mortgage as far as possible out of properties Y and Z.

(2) Properties X, Y and Z are subject to a mortgage. The mortgagor sells the equity of redemption of Z to A, of Y to B, and of Z to C. If the mortgagee satisfies his mortgage out of X, then A may require B and C to contribute pro-rata to the discharge of the mortgage debt.

The rule of marshalling is expressed by Dart as follows:

If two estates X and Y are subject to a common charge and estate X be sold to A, A will as against his vendor and his representatives have a prima facie equity in the absence of express agreement and whether or not he had notice of the charge, to throw it primarily on estate Y in exoneration of estate X.

In Aldrich v Cooper,⁸⁰⁴ Lord Eldon had stated the equitable principle to be that:

a person having two funds shall not by his election disappoint the party having only one fund; and equity, to satisfy both, will throw him, who has two funds, upon that, which can be affected to him only; to the intent that the only fund, to which the other has access, may remain clear to him.

No question of marshalling can arise unless there is a common debtor.⁸⁰⁵ In Muhammad Rafeeq v Bank of Baroda,⁸⁰⁶ A, borrowed money from the Bank, B by securing some items of the property. C was a stranger to this loan transaction between A and the bank. He later purchased one item of property from A over which security interest was created. It was held that he would not be eligible to have the property spared under section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act as the provisions of SARFAESI Act, would override the provisions of Transfer of Property Act.

[s 56.3] Omission of the Words “as Against the Seller”

The rule as stated by Dart and as enacted in this section before the amendment, conferred a right only as against the seller. Accordingly, as the mortgagee had a right to proceed against whatever property he chooses and could not be compelled to split his security, the right could not be enforced against the mortgagee.⁸⁰⁷ Tara

*Prasanna v Nilmon*⁸⁰⁸ was an exception to this rule, but in that case the mortgagee had foreclosed, and was treated as representing the seller. The section was, therefore, practically a dead letter for the purchaser had a remedy against the seller under section 55(1)(g). The court in execution in the exercise of the discretion under O XXXIV, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 adjusted the equities by requiring the mortgagee to proceed first against the unsold property.⁸⁰⁹ However, under the amended section the purchaser can insist upon this as of right.

[s 56.4] Independent of Notice

The right given to the purchaser by this section is independent of notice. Section 81 has been amended to make it clear that the right to have securities marshalled is independent of notice.⁸¹⁰ This is in accord with the principle that it should not depend upon the will of one creditor to disappoint another. In some cases not falling under the TP Act, 1882 it was suggested that the purchaser is not entitled to call for marshalling, unless he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.⁸¹¹ However, no such distinction has actually been made, for the rule as to notice as it stood in section 81 before its amendment, was held not to apply to mortgages before the TP Act, 1882,⁸¹² and this was followed by CJ Farran, in the case of a purchaser.⁸¹³

[s 56.5] Marshalling between purchaser and purchaser

If the mortgagee in the illustration given by Dart realised his mortgage by sale of X, then the buyer A will be entitled to a charge on Y for the value of X. Thus, if Y is worth ₹2,000, and X is worth ₹1,000, and the mortgagee realises his security by the sale of X, A will have a charge on Y for ₹1,000. In case both properties are sold, the buyer of the first has no charge against the buyer of the second. Dart states that if after X is sold to A, the owner sells Y to B who has notice of the prior sale to X, and of A's charge, then the charge will be enforceable against B.⁸¹⁴ The correctness of this proposition is doubtful, and the courts in India do not apply the rule of marshalling between purchaser and purchaser, and require both purchasers to contribute ratably to the satisfaction of the original charge.⁸¹⁵

It is obvious that a purchaser of an equity of redemption cannot claim the right to marshal because he has purchased subject to the mortgage. However, supposing of the two properties X and Y which are subject to a mortgage, X is sold to A free from the mortgage and then Y is sold to B, subject to the mortgage, X would be entitled to marshal and to require the mortgage to be realised out of Y. Such a case occurred in Patna.⁸¹⁶ Of the two mortgaged properties, X was sold to A free from encumbrances, and then Y was sold to B, and money to discharge the mortgage was left by the seller with B. But B failed to pay off the mortgage, and the court held that B was not entitled to contribution, but that A was entitled to marshal against B.

A lessee is not entitled to the right of marshalling under this section.⁸¹⁷

The charge on the unsold property may be excluded by a contract to the contrary. Thus, if X and Y are subject to a mortgage and the mortgagor sells X to A and deposits with A a sum of money to discharge the mortgage and agrees that if the sum is not sufficient he will pay the excess with interest, that is a contract to the contrary, which excludes A's charge on Y and makes the seller personally liable.⁸¹⁸ A contract to the contrary need not be express. It may be implied.⁸¹⁹ The words "a contract to the contrary" are not restricted to a contract between a mortgagor and a mortgagee only. Such contract may be between the mortgagor and the purchaser.⁸²⁰

[s 56.8] So as Not to Prejudice

The right of marshalling cannot be exercised so as to prejudice the mortgagee or persons claiming under him or any person having an interest in any of the properties. Whether prejudice would be caused is a question of fact, and it is for the person who invokes the clause to establish such facts; the question of prejudice is linked with the value of the properties involved.⁸²¹ There is a similar proviso to section 81. Marshalling would not be allowed where it would impair the security of a subsequent mortgagee. In this connection, see note “No prejudice to other encumbrancers” under section 81.

[s 56.9] Execution Sales

The doctrine of marshalling has been considered with reference to purchasers at execution sales, and it has been said that an execution purchaser cannot claim marshalling.⁸²² The doctrine has no application at all to execution sales.⁸²³ However, the equitable principle embodied in the section can be evoked in cases of involuntary sales.⁸²⁴

Sections 54–57, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Discharge of Encumbrances on Sale

57. Provision by court for encumbrances and sale freed therefrom.—

- (a) Where immovable property subject to any encumbrance, whether immediately payable or not, is sold by the court or in execution of a decree, or out of Court, the court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of any party to the sale, direct or allow payment into Court,—
 - (1) in case of an annual or monthly sum charged on the property, or of a capital sum charged on a determinable interest in the property—of such amount as, when invested in securities of the Central Government, the Court considers will be sufficient, by means of the interest thereof, to keep down or otherwise provide for that charge, and
 - (2) in any other case of a capital sum charged on the property—of the amount sufficient to meet the encumbrance and any interest due thereon.

But in either case there shall also be paid into Court such additional amount as the Court considers will be sufficient to meet the contingency of further costs, expenses and interest and any other contingency, except depreciation of investments, not exceeding one-tenth part of the original amount to be paid in, unless the Court for special reasons (which it shall record) thinks fit to require a large additional amount.

- (b) Thereupon the Court may, if it thinks fit, and after notice to the encumbrance unless the Court, for reasons to be recorded in writing, thinks fit to dispense with such notice, declare the property to be freed from the encumbrance, and make any order for conveyance, or vesting order, proper for giving effect of the sale, and give directions for the retention and investment of the money in Court.
- (c) After notice served on the persons interested in or entitled to the money or fund in Court, the Court may direct payment or transfer thereof to the persons entitled to receive or give a discharge for the same, and generally may give directions respecting the application or distribution of the capital or income thereof.
- (d) An appeal shall lie from any declaration, order or direction under this section as if the same were a decree.
- (e) In this section “Court” means (1) a High court in the exercise of the ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, (2) the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property or any part thereof is situate, (3) any other Court which the State Government may, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, declare to be competent to exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this section.

57. Provision by court for encumbrances and sale freed therefrom.—

[s 57.1] Freedom from Encumbrances

The object of this section is to facilitate the sale of encumbered estates by taking the encumbrance off the title before sale. This procedure also avoids the necessity of joining the encumbrances as parties to the sale.

The section will not apply when a mortgagee's decree for sale has been adjusted out of court. In Mallikarjuna Sastri v Narasimha,⁸²⁵ a mortgagee obtained a decree in enforcement of his mortgage. The petitioner negotiated for the purchase of the property. The mortgagee agreed to accept a certain sum in discharge of his decree. The petitioner then purchased the property from the mortgagor, and tendered the agreed sum to the mortgagee. The mortgagee refused to accept it. The petitioner then applied for leave to pay the money into court, and to obtain a declaration that the property was freed from the mortgage. The court held that the section had no application to the case as it involved a question of an adjustment of a decree out of court.

The court will not act suo motu. There must be an application by a party to the sale. The power is discretionary and in cases of hardship, eg when the capitalised value of the encumbrance is considerably in excess of the price and the seller prefers to exercise his right of rescission, the court will not make an order for payment into court.⁸²⁶ Service of notice is not obligatory, and it is believed that an order would be made in a proper case even if the encumbrancer could not be found; but notice should ordinarily be given in order to ascertain the amount due on the encumbrance and for that purpose, the court will construe a will and make a declaration as to future rights.⁸²⁷ An order under this section is necessary although a fund has been set apart in the administration action.⁸²⁸

The English section has been applied to sales by mortgagors.⁸²⁹ There is a similar provision in O XXXIV, rule 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 enabling a puisne mortgagee to bring the mortgaged property to sale free from the prior mortgage.⁸³⁰

[s 57.3] One-tenth

The maximum of one-tenth for future contingencies may be exceeded for special reasons.

[s 57.4] Direct or allow

The word "direct" refers to a sale by the court, and the word "allow" refers to a private sale out of court.⁸³¹

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

58. “Mortgage”, “mortgagor”, “mortgagee”, “mortgage-money” and “mortgage-deed” defined.—

- (a) A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

The transferor is called a mortgagor, the transferee a mortgagee; the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being are called the mortgage-money and the instrument (if any) by which the transfer is effected is called a mortgage-deed.

- (b) Simple mortgage.—Where, without delivering possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage-money, and agrees, expressly or impliedly, that, in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be applied, so far as may be necessary, in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage and the mortgagee a simple mortgagee.

- (c) Mortgage by conditional sale.—Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property—on condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void, or on a condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee, a mortgagee by conditional sale:

- (e) English mortgage.—Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage-money on a certain date, and transfers the mortgaged property absolutely to the mortgagee, but subject to a proviso that he will re-transfer it to the mortgagor upon payment of the mortgage-money as agreed, the transaction is called an English mortgage.

- (g) Anomalous mortgage.—A mortgage which is not a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, an usufructuary mortgage, an English mortgage or a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds within the meaning of this section is called an anomalous mortgage.]

[s 58.1] History of Mortgages

In an ancient systems of law, a mortgage was really a pledge—the property being a gage which was forfeited on default of payment. The transaction was effected either by delivery of possession, or by conditional conveyance. In Roman law, the earliest type of security was the fiducia, a conditional conveyance under which the property whatever its value, was forfeited in case of non-payment. This was followed by the pignus which was a transfer not of ownership, but of possession without liability to forfeiture. Then the last stage was the hypotheca, a form of pledge without delivery of possession under which the creditor acquired a power of sale. In Hindu and Mahomedan law, mortgages underwent a similar process of evolution. A mortgage by conditional sale was a very early form of mortgage among Hindus. The usufructuary mortgage with neither power of sale, nor of foreclosure corresponded to the Roman pignus, and the simple mortgage was a later development corresponding to the Roman hypotheca.

⁹ Among Mahomedans, the mortgage by conditional sale was a device to evade the Islamic prohibition of interest. This was the bye-bil-wafa, literally a sale with a promise, so that the mortgagee enjoyed the rents and profits in lieu of interest and became absolute owner of the property if the debt was not paid. However, the earliest form of Mahomedan security was the rahn or pledge with possession corresponding to the Roman pignus. This developed by slow degrees into the recognition of a pledge without possession with a power of sale.¹⁰ The development was slower than in Hindu law because interest not being added, the security was always sufficient. In England it seems certain that the original mortgage at common law was rather a pledge than a mortgage.¹¹ The transfer was not of title, but of possession. When the creditor took the profits in discharge of both principal and interest, the transaction was said to be a vivum vadium or living pledge since it worked out its own redemption. When the creditor took the profits merely in satisfaction of interest, it was called a mortuum vadium or a dead pledge. This form of mortgage was similar to the usufructuary mortgage of TP Act, 1882. At a later time which cannot be exactly ascertained, the English mortgage took the modern form of a conditional conveyance. The condition was originally one of defeasance, that on repayment, the grant determined and the land reverted to the mortgagor who was entitled to re-enter.¹² Subsequently, the condition became one of reconveyance on repayment as defined in clause (e) of this section. After the common law, mortgage became a mortgage by conditional conveyance, and was modified by three principles of equity.

These are—

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

1. that equity looks to the essence of the transaction, and that a mortgage is in essence a borrowing transaction;
2. that the borrower is in need of protection, and that a condition that penalizes him is void;
3. that a condition of forfeiture in default of payment on the due date is a penalty.

These same equitable principles have been applied to the law of mortgages in India.

CLAUSE (A)[s 58.2] Definition—Clause as the Essentials

Justice Mahmood in *Gopal v Parsotam*¹³ says of the definition of mortgage in this section:

Mortgage as understood in this country cannot be defined better than by the definition adopted by the Legislature in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). That definition has not in any way altered the law, but, on the contrary, has only formulated in clear language the notions of mortgage as understood by all the writers of textbooks on Indian mortgages. Every word of the definition is borne out by the decisions of Indian Courts of Justice. .

The definition of simple mortgage would appear to be taken from Macpherson's Law of Mortgages.¹⁴ It is almost the same as the classic definition given by MR Lindley, in Santley v Wilde.¹⁵

A mortgage is a conveyance of land or an assignment of chattels as a security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of some other obligation for which it is given.

With reference to the definition of mortgage by conditional sale under clause (c), the Privy Council said that it may be assumed that the framers of the TP Act, 1882 in section 58, clause (c) intended to state the existing law and practice in India.¹⁶

The three forms of mortgage in section 58(b), (c) and (d) were well-known in Hindu and Mahomedan law. Simple mortgages were called in Bengal—Bhandhaki-khat; in the United Provinces—Rehan, Arh, Mustagraq;¹⁷ in Bombay—Taran Gahan or Nazar Gahan;¹⁸ in Madras—Dhrista Bhandaka or *Adaimana pattram*¹⁹ or *Tanaka*²⁰ or Panayam.²¹ Mortgages by conditional sale were called in Bengal—Khatkabala or Bye-bil-Wafa;²² in the United Provinces—Bye-bil-Wafa;²³ in Bombay—Gahan Lahan;²⁴ in Madras—*Muddata Kriyam*²⁵ or Peruarthum.²⁶ Usufructuary mortgages were called in Bengal—Khai Khalasi or Bhagbandak or Bandaknama;²⁷ in Madras—Duggubhogyam or Swadhin Adha-manam or *Kanom*²⁸ or Otti.²⁹ English mortgages were limited to the Presidency towns, and to Europeans in the Mofussil.

The Supreme Court in Kedar Lal v Hari Lal,³⁰ has observed that the whole law of mortgage in India including the law of contribution arising out of a transaction of mortgage, is now statutory and is embodied in the TP Act,

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

1882 read with the Code of Civil Procedure. The court cannot travel beyond these statutory provisions.

A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property as security for the repayment of a debt.³¹ But such interest itself is immovable property.³² The nature of the right transferred depends upon the form of the mortgage. In a simple mortgage, what is transferred is a power of sale, which is one of the component rights that make up the aggregate of ownership. In a usufructuary mortgage, what is transferred is a right of possession and enjoyment of the usufruct.³³ In a conditional mortgage and in an English mortgage, the right transferred is, in form, a transfer of a right of ownership subject to a condition. In each case, whatever be the form of the mortgage, there is a transfer of some interest only, and not a transfer of the whole interest of the mortgagor.³⁴

The characteristic feature of mortgages is that the right in the property created by the transfer is accessory to the right to recover the debt.³⁵ The debt subsists in a mortgage, while a transaction by which, a debt is extinguished is not a mortgage, but a sale. This is well illustrated by the case of Nidha Sah v Murli Dhar,³⁶ where the deed was purported to be a deed of mortgage with possession of certain villages for a period of 14 years. The deed provided that at the expiry of the term, the mortgagors were to come into possession of the mortgaged villages without settlement of accounts, and that the mortgagee should then have no power whatsoever in respect of the said estate, but should return the mortgage deed to the mortgagors without their repaying the mortgage money. The mortgagee refused to return such villages as he had, on the ground that he had not received the full number of villages, and had not been able to recoup himself. The Privy Council said that the deed was not a security for the payment of any money and that the transaction was not a mortgage but a grant of land for a fixed term free of rent and that, as the suit was not on contract but on title, the so-called mortgagors were entitled to recover possession. A sale deed passed by a mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee containing a recital that in case the mortgagee is dispossessed on account of some defect in title of the mortgagor, the mortgagee would be entitled to renew his debt, does not amount to a mortgage as no specific immovable property was charged.³⁷ Where the suit land was mortgaged for a sum advanced to the mortgagors and later while raising the additional debt a co-mortgagee was inducted, it was held that increase in mortgage money, induction of a co-mortgagee and non-defining of their shares did not alter the situation that the original mortgagee continued as before the mortgagee of the suit land.³⁸ A mortgage and lease are species of the same genus, viz, the transfer of property, but the principal object of mortgage is to provide security for the repayment of loan whereas in lease the owner permits another to use his property on payment of rent. Except in case of usufructuary mortgage and mortgage through conditional sale, possession of the mortgaged property remains with the mortgagor. The right of the mortgagor to redeem his property is also different from the lessee's right to sue for recovery of property and if the transaction is one of lease, it is improper to ask for deficit stamp duty from the transferor treating it as a mortgage deed.³⁹ In assessing whether the document creates a lease or a mortgage, the intention of the parties has to be gathered from the document. Where A handed over his shop to B under a transaction entered through registered document containing a specific relief that in the event of failure of the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage by paying mortgage money, mortgagee can sue the mortgagor and in such cases he can realise the amount from the suit shop, it was held that the document creates a mortgage and not a lease.⁴⁰

When a mortgagor mortgages the land with possession, he does not cease to be its owner. The equity of redemption still vests in him and on redemption, he gets back possession of the mortgaged land.⁴¹

[s 58.4] Construction of Mortgage Deed

No particular form of words is necessary for the creation of a mortgage. It is sufficient that the transfer should be originally intended as security for the debt. The court will ascertain the intention by looking at the substance and essence of the transaction, and not the mere form of the deeds. Even if the deed calls itself a mortgage, its nature will be determined not by the name the parties give it, but by the jural relationship constituted by it. The guidelines for deciding whether a transaction is a lease or mortgage, contemplate that the name given to the document is not conclusive. The question has to be decided with reference to the predominant intention of the parties as gathered from the recitals and the terms of the documents, and the surrounding circumstances including conduct of the parties. In the case of a mortgage, there is a transfer of interest to secure payment of debt and in the case of a lease, there is a transfer of right to enjoy the property.⁴² An agreement to sell and resale executed on the same day for grant and payment of loan amount would be a mortgage transaction.⁴³ Where three documents i.e., sale deed, rent note and agreement to repurchase are executed on the same day the transaction is a mortgage and no relationship of a landlord and tenant is created.⁴⁴

Thus, in a Bombay case,⁴⁵ the deed was called karzrokha (or debt note), but was held not to be mortgage. On the other hand, in an Allahabad case⁴⁶ the deed was construed as a mortgage, although the word mortgage did not occur in it. Similarly, in another Bombay case⁴⁷ the creditor was in possession under a previous mortgage and by the new deed was entitled to receive the profits in lieu of interest "so far as they would go" and to hold as a purchaser, and the debtor would not be liable to repay unless he adopted a son. The deed was called a mortgage, but was construed to be a sale liable to be converted into a mortgage, but the name given by the parties is not to be lost sight of especially if the deed is ambiguous.⁴⁸ In a Madras case, a debtor who was not able to repay the amount of the debt granted to the creditor, a right to occupy and enjoy certain land for a period of 20 years; it was held that the transaction was not a mortgage, but a lease.⁴⁹ In a Delhi case, though a stipulation in the letter confirming equitable mortgage restricted the liability to ₹24 lakhs, on a reading of the document as a whole, it was held that the liability of the mortgagor was restricted not only to an amount of ₹24 lakhs, but would also cover interest thereon and all other costs, charges and commission.⁵⁰

The terms and conditions contained in the document are necessary to adjudicate upon the nature and the character of the document as to whether it is a mortgage by a conditional sale, or a sale with a condition of re-transfer.⁵¹

[s 58.5] Covenant Not to Alienate

A covenant not to alienate does not amount to a mortgage. If the debtor promises to repay the debt and covenants that until payment he will not alienate any property, the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, for there is no transfer of an interest in the property.⁵² In Mohan Lal v Indomati,⁵³ a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that:

A covenant against alienation may be said to be a covenant divesting the executant of a document of a portion of his interest in the property in question, but it does not vest that interest in anyone else, and accordingly, a bond in which the obligor covenanted not to transfer certain property and added the words "if I shall do so, then such transfer shall be invalid" was held not to be a mortgage. A covenant not to transfer, however, may be associated with words expressly making the property a security for the debt.⁵⁴

[s 58.6] Sale with a Condition of Retransfer

A sale with a condition of retransfer is not a mortgage, for the relationship of debtor and creditor does not subsist, and there is no debt for which the transfer is a security. It is not a partial transfer, but a transfer of all rights in the property reserving only a personal right of repurchase or pre-emption, which is lost if not exercised within the stipulated time. This distinction was made in the case of Alderson v White,⁵⁵ and it was accepted by the Privy Council in Bhagwan Sahai v Bhagwan Din.⁵⁶ Their Lordships quoted with approval the following passage from Alderson v White:

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

The rule of law on this subject is one dictated by common sense that prima facie an absolute conveyance containing nothing to show that the relation of debtor and creditor is to exist between the parties do not cease to be an absolute conveyance and become a mortgage merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase.

In Vithal Tukaram Kadam v Vamanrao Sawalaram Bhosale,⁵⁷ A borrowed money from B and upon failure to repay the money, sold the land for Rs 3500, as against the borrowed money of Rs 700. The agreement of sale continued a clause for re-conveyance. B demanded interest for re-conveyance which the court held, reflected the relationship of creditor and debtor. B/buyer was aware of the limited nature of the right agreeing to sale with obligation to return land if amount taken by A repaid. It was held that the transaction in question was a mortgage by conditional sale and not a sale with an option of repurchase. Where the document was executed by the owner of the property for security as a loan, and he had the right to re-convey the land in his favour at his own cost on return of the loan amount of Rs 1500 within a period of 10 years, the mortgagee was entitled to enjoy the property by taking crops on the land for 10 years and the deed also stipulated that upon the failure of the mortgagor to repay the loan amount in 10 years, the sale would be absolute, the transaction would amount to be a mortgage by conditional sale and not an absolute sale.⁵⁸ Where the terms of the deed indicated a right of redemption in the event of return of the amount within five years and it did not disclose any creation of mortgage or debtor -creditor relationship between the parties, it was held that the document executed is a sale deed with option to repurchase and not mortgage by conditional sale.⁵⁹

[s 58.7] Extrinsic Evidence

Although the difference in the legal effect of a sale with a condition of repurchase and a mortgage by conditional sale is clear, it is often a matter of extreme difficulty to decide which of these two transactions a particular document, or set of documents discloses.⁶⁰ The distinction is purely one of intention—whether it was intended that the relation of debtor and creditor should subsist,⁶¹ and the question is what evidence is relevant to prove that intention.

The Indian Evidence Act, 1872 by section 92 excludes evidence of an inconsistent oral agreement, and provides only for cases of fraud invalidating a document. The section does not provide for the case where there is no fraud at the time of execution of the deed, but the grantee subsequently insists that an ostensible sale is a real sale. This principle has been followed by the Supreme Court in Pandit Chunchun Zha v Sheikh Ebadat Ali,⁶² and in Bhaskar Waman Joshi v Narayan Rambilas Agarwal.⁶³ In the latter case, J Shah as he then was, delivering the judgment of the court, observed:

If the words are plain and unambiguous they must in the light of the evidence of surrounding circumstances be given their true legal effect. If there is ambiguity in the language employed, the intention may be ascertained from the contents of the deed with such extrinsic evidence as may by law be permitted to be adduced to show in what manner the language of the deed was related to existing facts. Oral evidence of intention is not admissible in interpreting the covenants of the deed but evidence to explain or even to contradict the recitals as distinguished from the terms of the document may of course be given. Evidence of contemporaneous conduct is always admissible as a surrounding circumstance; but evidence as to subsequent conduct of the parties is inadmissible.⁶⁴

The reference to extrinsic evidence showing in what way the language of the document is related to existing facts is the same exception as proviso (6) of section 92. That proviso is in these terms:

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

"Any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts."

The question of admissibility of evidence must, therefore, be decided solely on the terms of section 92. The section, however, does not preclude oral evidence to contradict a recital of fact in a written contract. Thus, it may be shown that no consideration was paid though payment may have been recited in the document.⁶⁵ Again, the contemporaneous conduct of parties may be proved if it is relevant under proviso (b) to section 92, and even in Balkishen v Legge, the fact that the parties ascertained the so-called price by calculating the amount due on a separate account between the parties, and adding it to the balance due on a former mortgage, was held to indicate that the transaction was a mortgage. However, the subsequent conduct of the parties cannot be considered; for evidence of such conduct would only be relevant on the ground that it leads to the inference that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement that the sale deed should operate as a mortgage.⁶⁶ In Maung Kyin v Ma Shwe La,⁶⁷ the Privy Council explained that though as between the parties to an absolute conveyance oral evidence was not admissible to prove that the transaction was a mortgage, yet it was open to a third party to produce evidence to show the real nature of a transaction. The courts were, therefore, practically limited to the document itself, and devised various criteria for determining whether the intention was to mortgage or to sell. A number of these tests, based on a passage in Butler's preface to Coke on Littleton, are set out in the under-noted cases.⁶⁸ In Pandit Chunchun Jha v Sheikh Ebada Ali,⁶⁹ the Supreme Court observed that much industry had been expended in some of the High Courts in collecting and analysing decisions on these points, and proceeded:

We think that this is a fruitless task because two documents are seldom expressed in identical terms and when it is necessary to consider the attendant circumstances, the imponderable variables which that brings in its train make it impossible to compare one case with another. Each case must be decided on its own facts.

- (1) the existence of a debt;⁷¹
- (2) the period of repayment, a short period being indicative of a sale, and a long period of a mortgage;⁷² but the fact that time was made the essence of the contract to repurchase is not decisive;⁷³
- (3) the continuance of the grantor in possession indicates a mortgage;⁷⁴
- (4) a stipulation for the payment of interest on repayment indicates a mortgage;⁷⁵
- (5) a price below the true value indicates a mortgage;⁷⁶ a fair market value is strong evidence that the transaction is a sale;⁷⁷
- (6) the fact that no application for transfer of name was made till long after the sale, indicates a mortgage;⁷⁸
- (7) the right of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive. The absence of such a right of mortgagee could only mean that it is a conditional sale.⁷⁹

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

A document described the transaction as one of sale, and further provided that the transferee would become an absolute owner if the amount paid by the transferee was not returned by the transferor within 21 years. It was held that the fact that such a long period was provided for exercising the right of re-purchase showed that the transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale, and not a sale with the condition for repurchase,⁸⁰ but even a shorter period would indicate the transaction to be a mortgage. Thus where A borrowed money from B by executing a sale deed that incorporated a condition that property would be reconveyed to A provided he repaid the money within 2 years, the court held the transaction to be a mortgage and not sale despite the fact that A had given possession to B.⁸¹ Mere description of a document would not be sufficient to hold it to be a sale, when in substance it is a document of mortgage by conditional sale.⁸²

In a Madras case, in the document, the condition of sale and resale were engrafted in the same document, wherein the purchaser was specifically prohibited from encumbering the property within a period of five years stipulated for repurchase. There were also substantial differences between the actual value of the property and consideration as stipulated in the deed. It was held that it was a mortgage by conditional sale, and not a sale with a condition for retransfer.⁸³

A deed transferred possession of property worth Rs 1 lakh in favour of X for a consideration of ₹45,000. The deed referred to a cash loan of ₹45,000 and provided that upon payment of ₹45,000 by the executant, X would return the property to the executant. The transaction was held to be a mortgage by conditional sale.⁸⁴

If the words of a document are clear, effect must be given to them and any extraneous inquiry into what the parties thought or intended, must be ruled out.⁸⁵ In deciding whether the transaction is a mortgage or a sale, the intention as gathered from the document is the determining factor.⁸⁶ According to the Orissa High Court, section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 does not bar the admission of oral evidence to prove that a document was not intended to operate as a sale deed, but as a mortgage. However, in the particular case, on the facts, the document was held to be a sale.⁸⁷ According to the Madras High Court, for ascertaining the intention, it is permissible to refer to surrounding circumstances, for which oral evidence is admissible.⁸⁸ Where by a document, the executant conveys certain property absolutely to the purchaser without imposing any obligation on the part of the vendor to recover the property on payment of price, but gives the vendor only an option to do so, the document does not create any relationship of debtor and creditor, and where there is no stipulation of payment of interest or an indication that the property was given by way of security for loan, the transaction is an outright sale, and not a mortgage by conditional sale.⁸⁹ In an Assam case, there was no debt in existence at the time of execution of the document. The period of reconveyance stipulated was only one year, and the purchaser had been in possession since the purchase. There was no stipulation for interest. All these circumstances showed that the transaction was an outright sale, with the condition of repurchase within a stipulated period.⁹⁰ In an Allahabad case, the landlord executed a sale deed in favour of the tenant, on receiving consideration money in respect of tenanted premises. No agreement to reconvey the property was proved. No mention was made in the sale deed that the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted, even after the execution of document. It was held that the document was an absolute sale, and not a mortgage. Tenancy over the shop merged with the right of ownership of the tenant, and it could not be revived on the execution of subsequent sale deed by the tenant in favour of the landlord's wife.⁹¹ In a Madhya Pradesh case, it was held that where a condition of repurchase is embodied in the document which effects the sale, the presumption is that it is a mortgage.⁹² In a Bombay case, a period of five years was stipulated as the period within which the transferor may re-purchase the land. If the amount was not paid within the stipulated period, the deed was to be treated as a permanent sale deed. No charge was created, nor any interest provided for. The deed was held not to be a mortgage, but a sale with a condition of re-purchase.⁹³ The Rajasthan High Court in Askaran v Madan Lal,⁹⁴ relying upon the judgement of Chunchun Jha v Ebadat Ali,⁹⁵ held that if the sale and agreement to repurchase are embodied in separate documents, then the transaction cannot be a mortgage irrespective of whether the documents are contemporaneously executed, but the converse does not hold good, that is to say the mere fact that there is only one document, does not necessarily mean that it must be a mortgage, and cannot be a sale. If the condition of repurchase is embodied in the document that effects or purports to effect the sale, then it is a matter for the construction which was meant.

In applying these tests, the courts put the onus on to the party alleging that an ostensible sale deed was a mortgage;⁹⁶ but this is now, after 1929, subject to the rule that a transaction embodied in one document is prima facie a mortgage.⁹⁷ In case of ambiguity, the courts lean to the construction of a mortgage.⁹⁸ The above tests are not exhaustive, but illustrative.⁹⁹ The test is whether the agreement to reconvey was part of the consideration of the transfer.¹⁰⁰ In order to constitute a mortgage by conditional sale, there must be an ostensible and not a real sale, and it must comply with the three conditions mentioned in section 58(c).¹⁰¹

[s 58.9] Breach of Condition

A deed of re-conveyance contained a clause that on failure to perform certain conditions, the re-conveyance shall stand cancelled. The person bound by the condition committed a breach, but sought to invoke section 74, Indian Contract Act, 1872 Act for relief from the consequences of the breach. It was held that section 74 could not be invoked for the purpose.¹⁰²

[s 58.10] Ejectment of Mortgagee

In case of a mortgage, the mortgagor has no right in law to eject a mortgagee until the mortgage is redeemed. Even though a mortgage was not by a registered instrument, if the entry of the mortgagee into the property was as a mortgagee, nature of his possession would continue to be as mortgagee, unless there is evidence to show that, at any point of time, he asserted his adverse title, by repudiating his possession as mortgagee.¹⁰³

[s 58.11] Onus of Proof

Where the question is whether a document which squarely falls within the definition of mortgage by conditional sale, is a sale, within condition of repurchase, the presumption may be that the document is a mortgage by conditional sale, and the onus will be upon the defendant to displace the presumption.¹⁰⁴

Striking a note of caution, the Supreme Court has observed that having regard to the niceties of distinctions between a mortgage by conditional sale and a sale with an option to repurchase, one should be guided by the terms of the document alone without much help from the case law. It, however, added that cases could be referred for the purposes of interpreting a particular clause to gather the intention.¹⁰⁵

An agreement to mortgage may, in English law, amount to an equitable mortgage, which can be enforced according to its terms, but no such mortgage is recognised in Indian law.¹⁰⁶ An agreement to mortgage gives rise only to a personal obligation, which does not constitute either a mortgage, or charge.¹⁰⁷ An agreement to mortgage is not capable of specific performance, for the court will not enforce an agreement to make a loan of money, whether on security or not.¹⁰⁸ In South African Territories Ltd v Wallington,¹⁰⁹ Lord Macnaghten said that, "specific performance of a contract to lend money cannot be enforced is so well established and obviously so wholesome a rule, that it would be idle to say a word about it." The remedy for the breach of an agreement to mortgage is damages.¹¹⁰ The measure of damages is the interest for the time the money is likely to lie idle, plus actual expenses incurred.¹¹¹ However, when the lender has advanced the money either in whole or in part on an agreement to mortgage, and the borrower is not willing to repay the same at once, the court will specifically enforce the agreement.¹¹² In the converse case of a mortgagor who has executed a mortgage, but has not been paid the full amount of the consideration, the mortgagor cannot sue for the balance, but he may sue in damages or sue to redeem.¹¹³ In such a case, the mortgage is valid for the amount advanced.¹¹⁴ On the other hand, if the mortgage is usufructuary, this rule is not applied, and the mortgagor may sue for the unpaid balance of the mortgage money.¹¹⁵

Clause as to the Transfer[s 58.13] Transfer

The transfer must be to a living person or persons (section 5). Thus, a security bond by which a person charges his property to secure performance of the decree, is not a mortgage, for the court to which it is given is not a

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

juridical person.¹¹⁶ Where the security bond was executed in favour of the Registrar of the court, for the benefit of the decree holders, it was held to be a mortgage.¹¹⁷

[s 58.14] Formal Expression of Transfer Not Necessary

It is not necessary that the transfer should be formally expressed. If the transfer is not in express terms, it is sufficient if the instrument taken as a whole operates as a transfer.¹¹⁸

[s 58.15] Transfer of an Interest

These words stand in contrast with the words "transfer of ownership", occurring in section 54 in the definition of sale. In a sale, all the rights of ownership which the transferor has, pass to the transferee. In a mortgage, some rights are transferred to the mortgagee, and some remain vested in the mortgagor. The transfer of the right to receive rents and profits from tenants for a term of years is a transfer of an interest in land, and may constitute a mortgage.¹¹⁹ The words "transfer of an interest" also distinguished a mortgage from an agreement to mortgage, and from a charge. In an agreement to mortgage no right in rem is transferred at all, but only a personal obligation is created. Similarly, in a charge no right in rem is created, but the right is something more than a personal obligation; for it is a jus ad rem, i.e., a right to payment out of the property specified.¹²⁰ There is, therefore, very little difference between a charge and a simple mortgage. The practical difference is that a simple mortgage being a right in rem is good against subsequent transferees, while a charge is only good as against a subsequent transferee for value, with notice or a volunteer, with or without notice.¹²¹ An agreement which gives immovable property as security for the satisfaction of a debt,¹²² or for payment of a maintenance allowance without transferring any interest in the property, constitutes a charge on the property, and is not a mortgage.¹²³ As a mortgage is a transfer of a right in rem, a purchaser is not affected by a subsequent mortgage given by his vendor.¹²⁴ In a Patna case¹²⁵ J Das said:

Now the broad distinction between a mortgage and a charge is this: that whereas a charge only gives a right to payment out of a particular fund or particular property without transferring that fund or property, a mortgage is in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property.

The interest of the mortgagor and of the mortgagee may each be the subject of another mortgage. The mortgagor may make a second or puisne mortgage of his right of redemption,¹²⁶ and the mortgagee may make a sub-mortgage in his own interest in the property.¹²⁷

There is no inconsistency between a possessory mortgage and a "lease back". The two transactions can exist simultaneously. A transaction of possessory mortgage cannot be converted into one of simple mortgage merely by reason of the contemporaneous transaction of lease back, because that will be contrary to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.¹²⁸

Successive suits for redemption of mortgage can be filed till right of redemption is not extinguished. Having regard to the provision of section 60 of the TP Act, 1882 and O 23, rules 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it will have to be held that dismissal of earlier suit for redemption whether as abated or as withdrawn or in default, would not debar the mortgagor from the filing of a subsequent suit for redemption, and that such second suit for redemption to redeem the same mortgage can be brought so long as the mortgage subsists, and the right of redemption is not extinguished by efflux of time or by a decree of court passed in the prescribed form. This is because the right of redemption is an incident of a subsisting mortgage, and is inseparable from it so that the right is co-extensive with the mortgage itself. Further, if the mortgagee fails to establish that the old decree extinguished the right to redeem, there is no ground for saying that the old decree operates as res judicata, and the courts are prevented from trying the second suit under section 11 of the Code of Civil

The Property[s 58.16] Specific immovable property

In order to create a mortgage it is necessary to specify the immovable property. The description must at least be sufficient to identify the property according to the requirements of sections 21 and 22 of the Registration Act, 1908. In one case,¹³⁰ section 29 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 and section 93 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 were referred to, and in another,¹³¹ the maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest was applied. But the word “specific” shows that the description should not only be free from ambiguity and uncertainty, but also that it should be specific, as distinguished from general. It has the same meaning in the phrase “specifically mortgaged” occurring in section 22 of the Dekkan Agriculturists’ Relief Act, 1879.¹³² In a Madras case,¹³³ it was said that it was sufficient if the indication of the hypotheca is sufficiently precise to enable the land to be determined even after a lapse of time.

The following description was held to be sufficiently specific:

‘ “all the properties appertaining to entire bhag”;¹³⁶

although the properties were wrongly described in the particulars “our zamindari property”.¹³⁷ A description by reference to a specific description in another deed is sufficient. So a mortgage of land and village comprised in the sanad of a talukdari estate was held by the Privy Council to be sufficiently specific.¹³⁸ On the other hand, general descriptions such as:

‘ “my house and landed property”;¹³⁹

‘ “the whole of my property”;¹⁴¹ are bad. But the cases are not consistent, for, in an Allahabad case,¹⁴² a mortgage of “all my wealth and property” was held to be valid. This is erroneous, for the mere fact that the debtor binds his general estate, is not sufficient to create a mortgage.¹⁴³ In another case,¹⁴⁴ a mortgage of "our one biswa five biswansi shares" was held valid, and it was said that oral evidence was admissible to show that it meant the share in the mortgagor's village.

It has been held that machinery in a mortgaged building does not form part of the security, unless it is attached to the building for the permanent beneficial enjoyment thereof.¹⁴⁵

[s 58.18] Purpose

The purpose or object of a mortgage is to secure a debt. A transfer made for the purpose of discharging a debt is not a mortgage.¹⁴⁶ Thus, if A transfers land to B for a term of years in satisfaction of the debt, this is not a mortgage, but a grant of land for a term free from rent.¹⁴⁷ A recovers possession of the land at the end of the term on his title, and not by way of redemption. The words of the definition "for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement that may give rise to a pecuniary liability" are a paraphrase of the words in section 2 of the English Conveyancing Act, 1881, now re-enacted in section 205 (1)(XVI) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, "for securing money or money's worth."

A mortgage may not be for a specific sum, but to secure a current account between the parties upto a limit named (section 79).

Burden of proof is on the party alleging a running security.¹⁴⁸ It is sufficient if the money is left at the mortgagor's disposal in a bank deposit.¹⁴⁹ Where only part of the mortgage money is advanced, the mortgage is good security for the part advanced.¹⁵⁰ In a Madras case, it was said the mortgagor in such a case had an option to cancel,¹⁵¹ but this is incorrect and ignores what CJ Farran in *Tatia v Babaji*¹⁵² calls 'the radical distinction between a perfected conveyance and a contract.' In State of Kerala v Cochin Chemical Refineries,¹⁵³ the Supreme Court, approving Tatia v Babaji, has held that a transaction of mortgage does not become void or ineffective merely because the mortgagee fails to advance the amount undertaken to be advanced by him.

ILLUSTRATION

A mortgaged property to B by a deed executed on 3 May. B advanced the money secured by the mortgage a week later on 10 May. Meanwhile on 7 May A sold the property to C, C contended that as the consideration had not been paid at the time of his sale, he was not bound by the mortgage. Held that the mortgage was effective from the date of execution, and that C's purchase was subject to the mortgage.¹⁵⁴

The Punjab view that the non-payment of full consideration invalidates the mortgage¹⁵⁵ is incorrect, unless it is restricted to cases where the parties agree that the mortgage shall not be operative till the full amount is paid. If the mortgage money is not advanced in full, the remedy is by way of redemption or damages. He cannot file a suit for specific performance of the agreement to lend the whole amount.¹⁵⁶ If there is no consideration at all, the mortgage is a nullity.¹⁵⁷ If the mortgagee has parted with possession, he cannot claim the return of a proportionate extent of the land, and misuse profits of such proportion.¹⁵⁸ The court can go into the question of consideration. In Supreme Court on the facts, the mortgage was held to be fictitious, and to have been executed with ulterior motive.¹⁵⁹

[s 58.20] Future Debt

The future debt referred to in the section may be a contingent liability, a mortgage to secure the payment of the respondent's costs in an appeal,¹⁶⁰ or to further secure a mortgage against the loss of his existing security.¹⁶¹

The Engagement and Parties Thereto[s 58.21] Performance of an Engagement

The word "engagement" means a contract and the limitation to such "as may give rise to pecuniary liability" includes cases in which there is a legal obligation to pay damages,¹⁶² or to pay for the value of improvements due to a person who is to continue to be in possession of the land,¹⁶³ or forbearance to sue.¹⁶⁴ This limitation does not occur in the definition of mortgage given in the Indian Stamp Act, 1899.

ILLUSTRATION

A borrows paddy from another cultivator, B, and mortgages his field to secure repayment of the paddy and the payment of further paddy by way of interest. The engagement to return paddy is one which may give rise to pecuniary liability and the transaction is a mortgage as defined in this section.¹⁶⁵

[s 58.22] Mortgagor

A mortgagor must be a person competent to contract and capable to transfer the property.¹⁶⁶ The word is explained in section 59A to include a person deriving title under a mortgagor—but even before the enactment of the section it was used in this sense. An absolute owner can mortgage, unless he is under some disability, statutory or personal. One of the several co-owners, whether tenants in common or joint tenants, can mortgage their share,¹⁶⁷ but in the case of a joint tenancy, such a mortgage severs the joint tenancy.¹⁶⁸ Where joint owners mortgage property, they are each jointly and severally liable.¹⁶⁹ A minor being unable to contract, cannot transfer by mortgage.¹⁷⁰ As to whether a minor, who has falsely represented himself to be a major, can be estopped from pleading his minority, the cases were conflicting; some holding that the mortgage is validated by estoppel,¹⁷¹ others that it is not.¹⁷² The point is now settled by the Privy Council decision in Sadiq Ali Khan v Jai Kishori,¹⁷³ that a deed executed by a minor being a nullity is incapable of founding a plea of estoppel.

When a mortgage is executed by several persons, some of whom are minors and pardanashin ladies who had not executed the deed in accordance with law, the execution is not invalid as regards the rest, and the mortgage is valid and binding on them.¹⁷⁴ A mortgage by a judgment debtor of his property while it is under the management of the collector to whom decrees against the judgment debtor have been transferred for execution is, under para 11 of the third schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, absolutely void and not merely void as against the collector and those claiming under him,¹⁷⁵ but the personal liability of the mortgagor is not affected.¹⁷⁶ Even if the claim on the personal covenant is abandoned, the mortgagee is entitled to restitution under section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.¹⁷⁷ Guardians of minors and managers of estates of disqualified persons can mortgage subject to restrictions imposed by personal or statutory law. Thus, the guardian of a minor's property under the Guardians and Wards Act may mortgage with the sanction of the court,¹⁷⁸ though a mortgage without such sanction is voidable, and not void.¹⁷⁹ A Hindu widow under Mitakshara Law cannot mortgage her husband's property so as to bind the reversionary heir except for legal necessity. An executor or administrator can make a valid mortgage, and the mortgagee is not bound to see to the application of the mortgage money.¹⁸⁰

In a Privy Council case,¹⁸¹ one of the questions at issue was whether the mortgagees who took a mortgage from the executors had constructive notice of any defect in the proposed exercise of their powers by the executors under the will. It was held that a lender dealing with an executor has no duty to inquire into facts outside the will as those facts existed immediately prior to the testator's death. It was pointed out that much of the usefulness of the statutory power conferred by section 307 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925 on executors in India would be nullified if such a duty of inquiry were to be imposed on a party dealing with executors. Assuming that the executors were not entitled to use the immovable properties for the purposes of the business, the question was:

did the mortgagees know, or were they so put on their enquiry that constructive knowledge must be imparted to them, that the executors were not so entitled?

The question was answered in the negative. There was no evidence that the mortgagees knew anything outside the terms of the will and the recital in the mortgage, and the Privy Council was unable to hold that the mortgagees had any such notice. Further, the mortgagees had no duty, on the facts, to make such inquiry. Accordingly, they got a good title from the executors.

Under section 19(2)(g) of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, in the absence of a usage or a custom or trade to the contrary, the implied authority of a partner does not empower him to transfer immovable property belonging to the firm. However, a mortgage by a partner in a commercial firm of immovable property to secure a partnership debt has been recognized by the Judicial Committee.¹⁸² The manager of a joint Hindu family firm can bind the coparceners by a mortgage of family property for the purposes of carrying on the family business.¹⁸³ The requirements insisted upon by courts in upholding mortgages by pardanishin ladies has been dealt with in several cases.¹⁸⁴

The word "mortgagee" is explained in section 59A to include a person deriving title under a mortgagee; and was so used even before the insertion of this section. Any person capable of holding property may be a mortgagee. The disability of a minor to contract does not disqualify him from being a transferee.¹⁸⁵ A minor may, therefore, be a mortgagee.¹⁸⁶ Although a corporation may act ultra vires in accepting a mortgage, the corporation may be entitled to recover the money lent, though the charter of the corporation may be liable to forfeiture.¹⁸⁷ If no person is named as mortgagee, the instrument cannot be a mortgage. A security bond given to the court cannot be enforced as a mortgage, for the court is not a juridical person.¹⁸⁸

Mortgage Money

The expression is defined in section 58(A) as the principal money and the interest, the payment of which is secured for the time being. There were conflicting decisions as to whether the interest referred to in this section included interest after due date awarded by way of damages, or under the Interest Act. Some courts held that it did,¹⁸⁹ while others held that it did not, and that interest awarded by way of damages was not recoverable out of the mortgaged property, but was to be treated as a decree for damages.¹⁹⁰ The amended O XXXIV, rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure now makes it clear that such interest is included in "mortgage money." But there may be circumstances justifying the court in refusing interest after the date fixed in the decree, as when the mortgagee filed an appeal which was pending for two years.¹⁹¹ The general rule is that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee is entitled to treat the interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate.¹⁹² The mere fact that there is an express reference to interest in the personal covenant, but no express reference to interest in the hypothecation clause, it was held not to imply a contract to the contrary.¹⁹³ Instances of contracts to the contrary excluding interest from the charge will be found in the undernoted cases.¹⁹⁴

Sub-mortgage[s 58.24] Sub-mortgages

As already explained,¹⁹⁵ the interest of the mortgagor and of the mortgagee may each be the subject of assignment either absolutely, or by way of security. The mortgagor may assign his equity absolutely to a purchaser, or he may make a second or puisne mortgage of his equity of redemption. The mortgagee may also assign his interest absolutely to a purchaser, or may make a sub-mortgage of his mortgagee's interest. The rights and liabilities of puisne mortgagees are dealt with in sections 91 to 94. The TP Act, 1882 does not, however, deal with sub-mortgages. A sub-mortgagee does not stand in a higher position than the mortgagee. He is bound by the state of accounts between the mortgagor and mortgagee.¹⁹⁶ An assignment of the

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

mortgagee's interest either absolutely, or by way of sub-mortgage is a transfer of immovable property, and requires registration.¹⁹⁷

A sub-mortgage, being a mortgage, requires attestation.¹⁹⁸

Under section 3, a mortgage debt is not an actionable claim, and the transfer is not subject to sections 130, 131, or 132 of TP Act, 1882.

In England, although a mortgage debt is a chose in action, yet the assignee of a mortgage debt is in a stronger position than the assignee of an unsecured debt. The law on this point by LJ Sterling in this judgment in *Taylor v London and County Banking Co*¹⁹⁹ is:

Although a mortgage debt is a chose in action, yet, where the subject of the security is land, the mortgagee is treated as having "an interest in land" and priorities are governed by the rules applicable to interests in land, and not by the rules which apply to interests in personality.

It is stated by Sir William Grant in Jones v Gibbons:²⁰⁰

a mortgage consists partly of the estate in the land, partly of the debt. So far as it conveys the estate, the assignment—that is of the mortgage—is absolute and complete the moment it is made according to the forms of law. Undoubtedly, it is not necessary to give notice to the mortgagor, that the mortgage has been assigned, in order to make it valid and effectual. The estate being absolute at law, the debtor has no means of redeeming it, but, by paying the money. Therefore he, who has the estate, has in effect the debt; as the estate can never be taken from him except by payment of the debt.

In a Bombay case,²⁰¹ the sub-mortgage was in 1896, and the mortgagor without notice of the sub-mortgage made a final payment to the mortgagee, which discharged the mortgage in 1900. The payment was held to be valid as against the sub-mortgagee, and the fact that the sub-mortgage was registered did not imply notice. Where a mortgagee sub-mortgages his mortgage to another person without the knowledge of the original mortgagor, and the original mortgagor pays off the amount to the mortgagee, the sub-mortgagee's rights against the land are extinguished. The sub-mortgage is only good to the extent of the amount due on the mortgage, and the payment of the mortgage debt extinguishes the sub-mortgagee's security.²⁰² However, if the original mortgagor has notice of the sub-mortgage, he cannot dispossess the sub-mortgagee without redeeming him.²⁰³ Similarly, as section 132 does not apply, the assignee of the mortgage debt is not under that section subject to all the equities to which the assignor (the mortgagee) was subject. In a Madras case,²⁰⁴ the court refused to allow as against the assignee of the mortgage a right of equitable set off which would have been available against the mortgagee.

Assignee Subject to Mortgagee's Liabilities

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

Although the assignee is not subject to the equities available against the assignor, he still takes subject to the liabilities of the mortgagee and obviously, the transfer by the mortgagee must be subject to the rights of the mortgagor.²⁰⁵ Justice Cozens Hardy in the case cited below²⁰⁶ said:

It is well settled that where mortgage is transferred without the privity of the mortgagor the transferee takes subject to the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date of the transfer: *Mathews v Wallwyn*²⁰⁷

This rule was applied in a case where the mortgagee retained the mortgage money, and undertook to apply it to the payment of debts of the mortgagor. The mortgagee only utilized part of the money for that purpose, and assigned the mortgage to a third person. The mortgagor was obliged to pay the rest of the debts himself, and then sued the mortgagee in damages for the deficit. The suit was decreed against the mortgagee, and as against the transferee who was a party to the proceedings, the court made a declaration that if the mortgagee does not pay the sum which may be due to the mortgagor on account of the money which the mortgagee failed to pay, the mortgage in the hands of the transferee will be good only for the amount paid for the mortgage with interest.²⁰⁸ As the transfer is subject to the rights of the mortgagor, it follows that if the mortgage is void, the sub-mortgage is also void. Thus, in an English mortgage when a mortgage was void on account of champerty, the sub-mortgage was also void.²⁰⁹ However, when a minor obtained a decree setting aside a mortgage by his guardian and did not make the sub-mortgagee a party, it was held that the sub-mortgagee's rights were not affected.²¹⁰ As regards the debt, the mortgagee has been said to be very much in the situation of a surety for the sub-mortgagee, because even if he is unable to recover his debt from the mortgagor, he is liable for what may not be recovered, to the sub-mortgagee, and the sub-mortgagee cannot restrain the mortgagee from recovering the mortgage debt, and at the same time hold him liable for the sub-mortgage debt.²¹¹ The mortgagee may affect an equitable sub-mortgage by deposit of the mortgage deed.²¹²

The rights of redemption and sale in the case of successive mortgages are dealt with in section 94, but the case of a sub-mortgage has been omitted.

If A mortgages to B, and B sub-mortgages to C, then, as between B and C, the rights of redemption and of sale or foreclosure are the same as in a mortgage, B may redeem C and C may foreclose or bring to sale B without making A a party.²¹³ The subject-matter of this mortgage are the rights of B as existing at the time of the sub-mortgage.

If A sues to redeem B, he must make C a party, for C is interested in the mortgage security as an assignee of B.²¹⁴

If B sues to foreclose or brings to sale A then he, B must make C a party for the same reason. Again C may foreclose or bring to sale A, and if he does, he must make B a party, for B is interested in the equity of redemption as assignee of A. The authority for this in England is *Hobart v Abbot*²¹⁵ and the form of decree is given in section 12, Chapter 47 of Seton on Decrees. The Indian Form is No 11 of Appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908.

*Narayan Vithal v Ganoji*²¹⁶ is an instance of a suit for redemption of land which has been sub-mortgaged by the mortgagee. Chief Justice Sir Charles Sargent said:

In the case of a derivative mortgage or sub-mortgage, the judgment directs an account of what is due to the original mortgagee or his assignee, and then of what is due to the derivative or sub-mortgagee; and that upon payment to the latter of the sum due to him, not exceeding the sum found due to the original mortgagee, and on payment of the residue if any, of what is due to the original mortgagee, both of them shall reconvey to the mortgagor.

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

In a later Bombay case,²¹⁷ a suit for redemption of a mortgage which had been sub-mortgaged was rightly dismissed, because the deceased mortgagee's legal representatives had not been made parties. The judgment, however, says that there is no privity between the mortgagor and the sub-mortgagee. This is not correct, for there is privity of estate as they have rights in the same property.²¹⁸ The Rangoon High Court has, however, held that the rights given to a sub-mortgagee is in default of payment to sell the interest mortgaged to him and to sell it through the medium of a court. He has no privity of contract or privity of estate with the original mortgagor.²¹⁹

Muthu Vija Raghunatha v Venkatachallam,²²⁰ is an instance of a sub-mortgagee bringing to sale the interest of the mortgagor. This right was admitted by the Allahabad High Court in the Full Bench case of Ram Shankar Lal v Ganesh Prasad.²²¹ It had been previously denied by the Allahabad High Court²²² owing to the erroneous interpretation put upon the word "property" as actual physical objects, and not including rights to and in physical objects. Indeed, under this construction there could be no such transaction as a sub-mortgage; but the Allahabad High Court had not carried their doctrine to this extremity, for it had held that when the mortgagee acquired the equity of redemption, such accession endured for the benefit of the sub-mortgagee,²²³ and that a sub-mortgagee was entitled to redeem a prior mortgagee.²²⁴

The nature of a transaction of a sub-mortgage, and the rights of a sub-mortgagee, has been fully reviewed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court.²²⁵ The court held that a sub-mortgagee had two rights, one based on the personal covenant of the mortgagee, and the other on a derivative title to the mortgage right. These two remedies were alternative, and mutually exclusive; a sub-mortgagee cannot pursue one after he has elected to pursue the other.

Movables[s 58.25] Mortgage of Movable Property

The TP Act, 1882 refers to mortgages of immovable property,²²⁶ and the Indian Contract Act, 1872 refers to pledges of movable property. But neither Acts deal with mortgages of movable property. A mortgagee of movable property is entitled to a decree for sale, just as much as a mortgagee of immovable property.²²⁷ A mortgagee of movable property, if in possession, has a right to sell the property without the intervention of the court, if after proper notice the mortgagor fails to repay the mortgage money.²²⁸ However, delivery of possession is not necessary to constitute a mortgage of movable property, and a hypothecation of movable property though not accompanied with delivery of possession, is valid and recognized in Indian law.²²⁹ As a transfer of movable property is not complete without delivery of possession, such hypothecations have been described as creating an equitable charge.²³⁰ For the same reason, a mortgage of movables is liable to be defeated if the mortgagor in possession sells the goods to a bona fide purchaser without notice.²³¹ In some cases, however, it has been held—it is submitted incorrectly—that the mortgage will prevail against a bona fide purchaser without notice.²³² The preference given to the innocent purchaser is sometimes put on the ground of prevention of fraud, and in Narasiah v Venkataramiah,²³³ the Madras High Court said:

When goods are left in the possession of the mortgagor, a wide door is left open for fraud, and when the equities between the innocent purchaser and the mortgagee have to be weighed, the preponderance must be given to the purchaser, for the mortgagee has by his omission to secure possession of the goods facilitated the commission of the fraud.

On the same principle, a mortgagee of movables without possession has been postponed to a subsequent mortgagee with possession, and without notice of the first mortgagee.²³⁴ As between two mortgagees of movables both without possession, the mortgagee who came to court first has been given priority on the principle qui prior est tempore potior est jure.²³⁵ As between a mortgagee of movables without possession and a judgment creditor of the mortgagor, it has been held that the judgment creditor does not get priority over such a mortgagee merely by filing his application for attachment, and that if the mortgagee takes possession before actual attachment, the judgment creditor gets no prior rights.²³⁶

Shares are movable property in Indian law, and may be the subject of a mortgage or a pledge. Whether it is a mortgage or a pledge depends on the nature of the transaction, and the intention of the parties. Where there is a mere deposit of share certificates without any deed of transfer, the transaction is a pledge.²³⁷ However, a deposit of the certificates accompanied by a duly executed blank transfer deed, has been held to be a mortgage,²³⁸ as the transaction clearly authorised the creditor to fill up the blank, and get his name registered.

No particular formality is necessary for the creation of a security on movable property, and a parole mortgage of goods is valid. Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to a mortgage of movable property, and so O XXXIV rule 14 does not enable a mortgagee of movable property who has obtained a personal decree for the mortgage money, to sue afterwards on the mortgage.²³⁹

A mortgage of movable property, which is to come into existence in future, has also been recognized. Such mortgages are equitable assignments fastening on the property when it comes into existence under the rule in *Holroyd v Marshall*²⁴⁰ and Collyer v Issacs.²⁴¹ Instances of such mortgages are mortgages of future crops,²⁴² or of indigo cakes to be manufactured,²⁴³ or a future decree,²⁴⁴ or future dues for work to be done.²⁴⁵ Such mortgages cannot be enforced against a purchaser for value without notice.²⁴⁶ It has, however, been held that a mortgage of profits accruing from year to year from immovable property as in profits from a sugar refinery, is not valid as it is neither movable property, nor goods.²⁴⁷

[s 58.27] Pawn or Pledge of Movables

A pledge is bailment of movable property by way of security. Possession is given, and the transaction involves a transfer of special property in the subject of the security. The distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is explained by Story in his book on Bailments as follows:

A mortgage of goods is at Common Law distinguished from a mere pawn. By a grant or conveyance of goods in gage or mortgage the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute at law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. But in a pledge a special property only, as we shall presently see, passes to the pledgee the general property remaining in the pledger. There is also another distinction. In the case of a pledge of personal property the right of the pledgee is not consummated except by possession; and ordinarily, when that possession is relinquished, the right of the pledgee is extinguished or waived. But in the case of a mortgagee of personal property the right of property passes by the conveyance to the pledgee and possession is not, or may not, be essential to create or support the title.²⁴⁸ There can be a mortgage of movables which is different from a pawn. In a mortgage of movables, the remedy by way of redemption would be available to the mortgagor, so also, the remedy of foreclosure to the mortgagee.²⁴⁹

The Supreme Court has reiterated that in a contract of pawn/pledge, the pledgee has a special property that vests in him only so far as necessary to secure his debts. Thus the general property remains with the mortgagor as the deed of pledge does not transfer the property to the pledgee and can be attached for being appropriated towards the Provident Fund dues.²⁵⁰ A pawnee has no right of foreclosure since he never had absolute ownership at law, and his equitable title cannot exceed what is specifically granted by law. In this sense, a pledge differs from a mortgage.²⁵¹

In a mortgage, there is a conditional transfer of general title, subject to being divested by a subsequent sale by the mortgagor to a bonafide purchaser without notice. In a pledge, the pledgee is in possession and has a special property in the goods which he is entitled to detain to secure repayment. A subsequent pledge will have priority over a previous hypothecation.²⁵²

The section enumerates six classes of mortgage:—

1. Simple mortgage.
2. Mortgage by conditional sale.
3. Usufructuary mortgage.
4. English mortgage.
5. Equitable mortgage.
6. Anomalous mortgage.

CLAUSE (B)[s 58.29] Simple Mortgage

A simple mortgage consists of—

- (1) a personal obligation, express or implied, to pay; and
- (2) the transfer of a right to cause the property to be sold.

[s 58.30] Binds himself Personally to Pay

The personal liability to pay may be either express, or implied, for a promise to pay arises out of the acceptance of a loan.²⁵⁴ However, the personal liability is excluded when the borrower binds himself to pay out of a particular fund.²⁵⁵ In *Ram Narayan Singh v Adhindra Nath*²⁵⁶ Lord Parker gave the following brief, but adequate summary of the law:

- (1) The loan prima facie involves a personal liability;
- (2) Such liability is not displaced by the mere fact that security is given for the repayment of the loan with interest;
- (3) The nature and terms of the security may negate any personal liability on part of the borrower.

It is accordingly, a matter of construction whether the security is a simple mortgage. For a simple mortgage, there must be a personal covenant either express or implied;²⁵⁷ and in the absence of such a covenant, the security is generally, but not necessarily a charge.²⁵⁸

[s 58.31] No Possession

The characteristic of a simple mortgage is that possession is not given. If a simple mortgagee sues to enforce his security, a decree for possession would be illegal; and if passed, would not operate as a foreclosure, but would make the simple mortgagee, a mortgagee with possession.²⁵⁹

The primary consideration in a suit for sale of the mortgaged property is the debt borrowed, and the mortgage is only by way of security in favour of the mortgagee. There is thus, no legal hurdle in recovering the amount of debt by a simple money decree.²⁶⁰

A simple mortgage with possession is a simple mortgage usufructuary, which is not included in the definition of an anomalous mortgage. In the undernoted case,²⁶¹ the mortgage was a simple mortgage with a provision that if default was made in payment of interest, the mortgagee should take possession. This was really simple mortgage usufructuary or an anomalous mortgage, though called a simple mortgage in the judgment.

[s 58.32] Right to Cause the Property to be Sold

This right as already explained is a right in rem, although it can only be enforced by the intervention of the court.²⁶² In fact, the very words "cause the property to be sold" indicate that the power of sale is not to be exercised without the intervention of the court.²⁶³ The transfer of this right may be express,²⁶⁴ or it may be implied;²⁶⁵ and in *Motiram v Vital*²⁶⁶ J Nanabhai Haridas said that a power of sale is very seldom expressly given in a native mofussil mortgage. Any words pledging the property as security for the debt are sufficient to imply a right of sale.²⁶⁷ The word *muakiza*²⁶⁸ is not commonly used to denote a simple mortgage; but the words nazar gahan and *taran gahan*²⁶⁹ import a power of sale. And so do words like rehan, arh, or mastagharag.²⁷⁰ In a Madras case,²⁷¹ the words "in default I shall on the security of the house site belonging to me ... pay and make good the principal and interest" were held to constitute a simple mortgage. The Privy Council in *Gokuldoss v Kriparam*²⁷² held that the following words sufficed to create a simple mortgage:

If I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs, shall without objection cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you.

Where a mortgage deed gives a mortgagor the option of repaying the loan by selling the mortgaged property, that does not exclude the personal covenant in cases where there is one.²⁷³

In a simple mortgage the security for the debt is, therefore, twofold:

- (1) the personal obligation; and
- (2) the property.²⁷⁴

CLAUSE (C)[s 58.33] Mortgage by Conditional Sale

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

This is a mortgage in which the ostensible sale is conditional, and intended as a security for the debt. In case of payment at the time fixed, the condition was that the sale became void, or that the mortgagee executed a reconveyance. The distinction between a mortgage by conditional sale and a sale with a condition of repurchase has already been explained in the note "Sale with a condition of retransfer" above.

In a mortgage, the debt subsists and a right to redeem remains with the debtor; but a sale with a condition of repurchase is not a lending and borrowing arrangement; no debt subsists and no right to redeem is reserved by the debtor, but only a personal right to purchase. This personal right can only be enforced strictly according to the terms of the deed, and at the time agreed upon.²⁷⁵ However, in a mortgage by conditional sale, the right of redemption subsists notwithstanding that the mortgagor has failed to pay at the time stated.²⁷⁶ This right arises from the fact that the property is considered to be merely a pledge for the loan.²⁷⁷ A mortgage by conditional sale was common in India from very early times, and among Hindus it generally took the form of a mortgage which worked itself out in a sale on default of payment. Justice Sadasiva Ayyar, in the undernoted case,²⁷⁸ suggested that this form of mortgage does not fall within the definition of mortgage by conditional sale in the TP Act, 1882. It is submitted, however, that there is no substance in this distinction, for in a mortgage by conditional sale the ostensible sale is really a mortgage, and it does not matter by what name it is called.²⁷⁹ The Hindu form of mortgage was treated as a mortgage by conditional sale in a Madras case²⁸⁰ by CJ Sir Charles Turner, a member of the second Indian Law Commission. Again, this form of mortgage was recognized by the Privy Council as standing on the same footing as mortgages by conditional sale in Balkishen v Legge.²⁸¹ But the distinction made by J Sadasiva Ayyar, has been followed in some subsequent cases.²⁸² In, ancient India, there was no equity of redemption in case of default in a mortgage by conditional sale, any more than in an outright sale with a condition of repurchase.²⁸³ The Rajasthan High Court²⁸⁴ quoted with approval the decisions of Supreme Court,²⁸⁵ and observed that if the sale and agreement to re-purchase are embodied in separate documents, then the transaction cannot be a mortgage, irrespective of whether the document are contemporaneously executed. But the converse does not hold good, i.e., the mere fact that there is only one document does not necessarily mean that it must be a mortgage, and cannot be a sale. If the condition of repurchase is embodied in the document that effects or purports to effect the sale, then it is a matter of construction which was meant. This change was effected in the TP Act, 1882 by the amendment in section 58(c). The legislature has made a clear classification, and excluded transactions embodied in more than one document from the category of mortgages. Therefore, it is reasonable to suppose that persons who, after the amendment choose not to use two documents, do not intend the transaction to be a sale, unless they displace that presumption by clear and express words.

Execution of a rent note on the same day of transfer by sale deed would not mean that document of sale was not outright sale. In Fatma Bai v Yogendra Sharma,²⁸⁶ as per Sale Deed which according to vendor was document of mortgage by conditional sale, property was sold by vendor to vendee for consideration of Rs50,000/-. Entire ownership, right, title and interest were transferred. Rent deed was executed on the same day. Vendees were in possession of the entire house except ground floor. It was held that transaction was not mortgage and document of sale was never written as document of conditional sale.

In Bengal, the Usury Regulations 15 of 1793 and 34 of 1802, required the mortgagee on redemption to give an account of rents and profits, and to credit receipts in excess of legal interest to capital. Bengal Regulation I of 1798 empowered the mortgagor to pay the money into court on the day named. However, none of these Regulations extended the time for redemption, nor did they require any judicial procedure for foreclosure. This was effected by Bengal Regulation 17 of 1806. Under this Regulation, it was necessary for the mortgagee to make an application for foreclosure to the district judge before he could acquire an absolute title (section 8). The mortgagor had a right of redemption on payment or tender of the amount due, or on making a deposit in the court; and this right he could exercise within one year of service upon him of notice of the mortgagee's application for foreclosure. The provisions as to service were imperative and not merely directory;²⁸⁷ and a notice that did not inform the mortgagor of the different courses open to him invalidated foreclosure proceedings.²⁸⁸ The mortgagee was not entitled to possession without taking foreclosure proceedings;²⁸⁹ and if he entered without taking proceedings for foreclosure, the mortgagor could eject him as a mere trespasser.²⁹⁰ The function of the judge in the proceedings was ministerial,²⁹¹ and if the mortgagee did not get possession after foreclosure, he was obliged to file a suit for the purpose.²⁹² If he neglected to file a suit, the mortgagor remaining in adverse possession for 12 years would acquire a prescriptive title, which could not be displaced by a foreclosure proceeding under the TP Act, 1882.²⁹³ The effect of these Regulations was, therefore, to curtail the strict rights of the mortgagee on the analogy of English rules of equity. These Regulations were followed in the United and Central Provinces and Oudh, and in Punjab. They were extended to the Central Provinces by Act, 20 of 1875. The Privy Council approved of their being followed in the non-regulation provinces as being in accordance with the rule of equity and good conscience.²⁹⁴ The TP Act, 1882 does not affect any right, or any relief in respect of a right, under the repealed Regulation (section 2(c)). So when the mortgagee had given notice of foreclosure under the Regulations, he could not treat the proceedings as a suit filed under the TP Act, 1882,²⁹⁵ nor could he file a fresh suit under the TP Act, 1882.²⁹⁶ On the other hand, if the suit is properly filed under the TP Act, 1882, the mortgagee cannot claim the benefit of one year's grace allowed in the repealed Regulation.²⁹⁷ Section 37A of the Bengal Money-Lenders Act provides that in the case where any loan is secured by a mortgage, and the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property on any of the conditions specified in sub-section (c) of section 58 of the TP Act, 1882, then, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in proviso to the said sub-section, the transaction shall always be deemed to be a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee, a mortgagee by conditional sale for the purpose of the said sub-section, even if the transaction is effected by two separate deeds, viz the ostensible sale deed, and the agreement for reconveyance.²⁹⁸

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

The term "Tamil term 1" means a sale, which is to take effect after a particular time limit. A document termed "Tamil term 2" is an outright sale. The term "Tamil term 3" is more or less equivalent to "Tamil term 1". On the facts, the document in which the consideration was an odd sum was held to be not outright sale, but a sale in the category "Tamil term 1". The entire sum paid by the defendant under the document went towards the discharge of loans due by the plaintiff, and there was also evidence to show that the property was worth much more than the sum mentioned in the document, and also that when the plaintiff gave notice calling upon the defendant to accept the sum and to return possession of the property to the plaintiff, the defendant did not protect and also did not send any reply. Hence, the document was a mortgage by conditional sale.²⁹⁹

In Bombay, the ancient law was followed and no right of redemption was recognized by the Sadar Adalat in gahan lahan mortgages. However, the change came in 1864 when in Ramji v Chimo,³⁰⁰ the Bombay High Court approved the leading Madras case,³⁰¹ and allowed a right of redemption tempered with an allowance to the mortgagee for improvements effected under the mistaken impression that he had become a purchaser.³⁰² And in Madras, this course of decisions persisted despite Pattabhiramier's case,³⁰³ and was justified by CJ Westropp after an exhaustive review of the case law in the under-noted case.³⁰⁴ The Bombay High Court refused to alter this course of decisions even after Thumbusawmy's case,³⁰⁵ and two years after that case, CJ Westropp in *Bapuji v Semavaraji*³⁰⁶ declared that the doctrine known as the equity of redemption was part of the ancient law of India, and this was followed in subsequent cases.³⁰⁷

The TP Act, 1882, repealed the Regulations and removed the differences between the different High Courts; and as to all mortgages executed after it came into force, the right of redemption is given by section 60.

In Central Provinces (now forming part of Madhya Pradesh) in the case of a gahan lahan mortgage, a court can pass a decree either for foreclosure, or for sale.³⁰⁸

[s 58.38] Bihar

Where a document of title contained a stipulation that the vendor is entitled to repay the consideration by a certain date and take back the property and if the vendee or his representative refuses to accept the consideration money, the vendor must be entitled to deposit the money in the government treasury, and enter into possession, it was held that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale.³⁰⁹

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

In Kutch, in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale executed before the merger, there would be a right of redemption after the specific term.³¹⁰

[s 58.40] Personal Liability

The definition does not mention a personal covenant to repay, and the personal liability is not an essential ingredient of a mortgage by conditional sale.³¹¹ It has been said that this circumstance makes mortgages by conditional sale an exception to the rule "no debt no mortgage".³¹² It is true that the test of a right of personal recovery applied by CJ Westropp, in *Bapuji v Senavaraj*³¹³ fails because of the absence of a personal covenant. But this test would also fail in the case of usufructuary mortgage,³¹⁴ and CJ Westropp, in the case cited applied the maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage" to mortgages by conditional sale. It is, therefore, submitted that the debt subsists, although the creditor's right of recovery is limited to the mortgaged property.

In a Calcutta case,³¹⁵ CJ Maclean, said that "a certain date" was an essential element of a mortgage by conditional sale. In a later case,³¹⁶ it was held by the same High Court that "on a certain date" means "on or before a certain date." The Madras High Court, however, has held that these words refer to the default in the second clause of section 58(c), and not to the payment in the third or fourth clause.³¹⁷ Same is the Gujarat view.³¹⁸

The proviso to clause (c) was added by section 19 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. The proviso was introduced in this clause only to set at rest the controversy about the nature of the document, whether the transaction would be a sale or a mortgage. It has been specifically provided by the amendment that the document would not be treated as a mortgage, unless the condition of repurchase was contained in the same document.³¹⁹ The Special Committee, in its Report,³²⁰ stated:

Section 58(c) contains the definition of a mortgage by conditional sale. It is with the greatest difficulty in many cases that such mortgages can be distinguished, from sale with a condition for repurchase. As clause (c) of section 58 indicates, the real point of difference between the two kinds of transactions is that, in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale, the sale is only ostensible, whereas in the case of an out and out sale, it is real. The ostensible or real nature of transaction can, however, be only determined by finding out the intention of the parties. In order to escape the liability of accounting for the profits of the property and other liabilities imposed on a mortgagee, and also to escape the provisions of some of the local laws enacted for the benefit of agriculturists, creditors resort to the mode of having a mortgage which is in form of an out and out sale. Since the decision of the Privy Council in Balkishan Das v Legge,³²¹ it has been a well-settled rule that it is not open to Courts to allow any extraneous evidence in order to find out the intention of the parties. Such intention must, therefore, be gathered from the document itself which purports to effect the transaction. These transactions have given rise to a great deal of litigation and Courts are compelled to enumerate and consider all the various criteria which have been laid down for the purpose of determining whether a transaction is a mortgage or an out and out sale. In order to avoid the difficulties indicated above, we think it desirable to lay down a statutory test by which the intention is to be gathered. We, therefore, propose that no transaction should be deemed to be a mortgage by conditional sale unless the condition is embodied in the document which operates or purports to effect the sale.

This position has now been settled by several decisions of the Supreme Court,³²² and by the High Courts in many cases.³²³ The effect of the proviso is that a transaction in which the stipulation for reconveyance is contained in a separate document cannot be a mortgage of any kind, both because of the language of the proviso, and because it could not fall in any other category of mortgage.³²⁴ The apex court has laid down the following distinguishing features between the mortgage with conditional sale and sale with an option of repurchase:

- (i) In a mortgage with conditional sale, the relation of a debtor and a creditor subsists while in a sale with an option of re-purchase, there is no such relationship and the parties stand on an equal footing.
- (ii) A mortgage by conditional sale is effected by a single document, while a sale with an option of repurchase is generally effected with the help of two independent documents.
- (iii) In a mortgage with conditional sale the debt subsists as it is a borrowing arrangement, while in a sale with an option of repurchase, there is no debt but a consideration for sale.
- (iv) In a mortgage with conditional sale, the amount of consideration is far below the value of the property in the market but in a sale with an option of repurchase the amount of consideration is generally equal to or very near to the value of the property.
- (v) In a mortgage with conditional sale, since this is a mortgage transaction, the right of redemption subsists in favour of the mortgagor despite the expiry of the time stipulated in the contract for its payment. The mortgagor has the option to redeem the mortgage and take back the property on the payment of the mortgage money, after the specified time, but in a sale with an option of re-purchase, the original seller must re-purchase the property within the stipulated time period. If he commits a default the option of re-purchase is lost.³²⁵

The very object of the proviso to section 58(c) is to shut out an inquiry, irrespective of whether a sale with a stipulation to re-convey is a mortgage, where the stipulation is not embodied in the same document. Hence, if the sale and agreement to repurchase are embodied in separate documents, then the transaction cannot amount to mortgage, irrespective of whether the documents are executed contemporaneously.³²⁶

A registered sale-deed was executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on 27 August 1952 for ₹10,000. There was a separate karnama executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant to reconvey the property on payment of ₹10,000 by 6 June 1953. In a suit for possession filed by the plaintiff, it was contended that the transaction was not a sale, but a mortgage. It was held that the fact that possession was deferred will not go against the transaction being a sale, as delivery of possession is not necessarily an integral part of sale. Regarding the sale deed and the karnama, it was clear that there was a complete transfer of title, and vesting thereof in the plaintiff on 27 August 1952. At the same time, there was a contemporaneous agreement between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendant on the other, of reconveyance of the property.³²⁷ Where the suit property was purchased by B from A, through three sale deeds, and the fourth sale deed was in the form of an agreement to re-convey property on repayment of consideration money, the transaction would be a sale with a condition of repurchase and not a mortgage.³²⁸

A executed a document, selling certain property to B for a certain sum. On the same day, a contemporaneous document was executed by B in favour of A, agreeing to sell the property in question for the same amount within 10 years of the date of execution of the document by A. The possession of the property remained with A and he was to pay ₹80 per month as rent to B. The Municipal and other taxes in respect of the property were to be paid by A. The question was about the real nature of the transaction between A and B. It was held that the transaction in question was, in essence and substance, a mortgage, though it was clothed in the garb of a transaction of ostensible sale.³²⁹

Where separate documents of sale deed, deed of reconveyance and lease deed were executed in the same transaction and the condition effecting the sale as a mortgage was not embodied in the sale deed itself, the mortgagor was debarred from saying that the transaction was in the nature of mortgage by conditional sale.³³⁰ In a Calcutta case, the plaintiff executed a sale deed in respect of certain immovable property in favour of the defendant. On the same day, an agreement for re-conveyance and a lease of the property in favour of the plaintiff's son were also executed. The plaintiff subsequently brought a suit for relief under Bengal Act, (10 of 1940) for a declaration that the transaction was, in fact, a mortgage. The court found that it was not a mortgage, but went on to investigate whether it was a loan, and granted a declaration that it was a loan with a charge. On appeal, it was held that the court could not do so. The object behind the legislative enactment in the matter of adding a proviso to section 58(c) would be wholly frustrated if it be considered open to a court to make an investigation (as had been done by the lower court), and then to grant a declaration that the transaction, though on the face of it is an outright sale, yet was a loan subject to a charge over the property. Such being the position, the decree as passed was clearly unsustainable in law.³³¹ However, it does not follow that if the stipulation for reconveyance is embodied in the same document, the transaction is necessarily a mortgage,³³² but a reasonable inference of mortgage can be drawn from such a clause, and unless the presumption is displaced, the deed is one of mortgage by conditional sale.³³³ In Pandit Chunchun Jha v Sheikh Ebadat Ali,³³⁴ Mr Justice Bose, delivering the judgment of the court, observed:

The Legislature has made a clear-cut classification and excluded transactions embodied in more than one document from the category of mortgages; therefore, it is reasonable to suppose that persons who, after the amendment, choose not to use two documents, do not intend the transaction to be a sale, unless they displace that presumption by clear and express words; and if the conditions of section 58(c) are fulfilled, then we are of opinion that the deed would be construed as a mortgage.³³⁵

These observations do suggest that in all cases where the whole transaction is in one document, there is a presumption that the transaction is a mortgage, and that such a presumption can only be rebutted by express terms. Such transactions in some earlier cases were regarded as a mortgage.³³⁶ In Rajamma v B Renuka Murthi,³³⁷ under a deed titled as "conditional sale deed", A took ? 2,000/- ; delivered possession of the property to B and it was B, who was asked to pay taxes. After 5 years, A paid to B the amount of ₹2000/- with interest and brought a suit for title over property and injunction. The issue before the court was whether the present condition was a mortgage by conditional sale or out and out sale with a condition to repurchase. The court held that, the language employed in the document was plain and unambiguous and intention of the parties was also very clear and the transaction was a sale transaction with a condition to repurchase. In Patel Ravjibhai Bhulabhai v Rahemanbhai M Shaikh,³³⁸ A executed a deed in 1960, in favour of B which was titled as a conditional sale for a sum of ? 10,000 providing therein that if the repayment is made within a period of five years, B shall give back the property in suit with possession to A with further stipulation that A would have no right to get back the property after the expiry of five years. A instituted a suit in 1984 for redemption of property on repayment of mortgage money. The Supreme Court went on to differentiate between a "mortgage by conditional sale" and a "sale with an option to repurchase" and concluded that the actual transaction between A and B was of a loan wherein the relationship of a debtor and creditor existed and the deed constituted a mortgage with conditional sale. In Maharishi Ayurveda Products Pvt Ltd v Sparsh Builders Pvt Ltd,³³⁹ the issue was whether the series of documents created a title or any proprietary interest in favour of the transferee, B, or it was in the nature to secure a loan advanced by B to A. The Court reasoned, that when the law compels a document to be in writing, that and that alone will be determinative of what the parties intend. It is where the terms are ambiguous that extrinsic evidence is permitted. The exception to this rule is where the document's professed identity is impeached as a sham or that it is a façade, the real intention of the parties being something else, oral evidence is not precluded. However, in every such exception, there was an evidence to support the claim that the document impeached was sham. The second principle is that where the transaction is said to be a mortgage by conditional sale, proviso to section 58(c) enjoins that a sale deed would not be deemed a mortgage "unless the condition is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale."

The Court noted that there is overwhelming material on the record to establish that the documents executed sought to convey proprietary interest to B. These included a registered agreement to sell; receipt for Rs 4 crores; Affidavits, Indemnity Bond, etc. A letter, symbolic of possession too, was signed. The other series of documents also showed that B agreed to lease out the property for agreed lease rent, A; that arrangement was extended. A was undoubtedly given the option to seek purchase of the property; this was subject to a mutually agreeable consideration. That condition was not fulfilled. Furthermore, A never claimed the suit property as its asset in its balance sheets, which were placed on the record during the trial. Also, it consistently paid tax-deducted amounts towards rent agreed by the parties, to B. Most significantly, it never sought re-conveyance of the suit property in a manner known to law, through cancellation of the agreement to sell, or a separate suit. All this behavior and conduct was consistent with the B's interest in the property. The Court held it to be a sale and not a mortgage. In absence of any stipulation of re-transfer of property the transaction would be an absolute sale and not a mortgage more so if the seller intended to transfer his absolute ownership rights to the transferee.³⁴⁰ The Gujarat High Court has held that once the condition of conveyance is incorporated in the document of ostensible sale executed by the owner, the applicability of section 58(c) is not ruled out merely because the ostensible purchaser's promise to reconvey the property after the specified period is contained in a separate document.³⁴¹ Where the deed here embodied the condition of repayment of the consideration amount and the possession of the property was delivered to the transferee in two years during which the transferor had to repay the amount, and thus it would be a mortgage and the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem the property.³⁴² Where the language of the deed clearly revealed the transaction contained in the deed as mortgage by conditional sale, and there was no specific condition of the sale becoming absolute on non-compliance of the conditions of repayment of amount but there was specific condition of re payment of amount, the transaction would be one of mortgage by conditional sale and not sale.³⁴³ The Supreme Court in *Shyam Singh v Daryao Singh*³⁴⁴ has held that since the sale and agreement of repurchase are contained in two separate documents, although contemporaneously executed, the transaction cannot be treated to be a "mortgage" as defined in section 58(c) read with proviso thereunder, but it seems to be a transaction akin to a "mortgage"—if not "mortgage proper". However, where an illiterate mortgagor executed one document styled as document "A" titled as "loan transaction" and document "B" as "reconveyance after payment of loan", the Chhattisgarh High Court held that the circumstances were sufficient to prove that transaction was a mortgage transaction.³⁴⁵

However, it would be open to the other side to show that it was intended to be an out and out sale.³⁴⁶ As the Supreme Court has itself observed in the latter case, the question whether, by the incorporation of such a condition, a transaction ostensibly of sale may be regarded as a mortgage is one of intention of the parties, to be gathered from the language of the deed interpreted in the light of the surrounding circumstances.³⁴⁷

It has been held by the Allahabad High Court,³⁴⁸ that the proviso does not have retrospective effect.

In Punjab, where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force, a sale deed and a stipulation for reconveyance by a separate document may amount to a mortgage, if the latter is registered, for the rule contained in the proviso has been held not to embody a rule of justice, equity and good conscience.³⁴⁹

[s 58.43] Limitation for a Suit on a Simple Mortgage

The period of limitation is 12 years from the date when the money sued for becomes due.³⁵⁰

CLAUSE (D)[s 58.44] Usufructuary Mortgage

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

In a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is placed in possession and has a right to enjoy the rents and profits until the debt is paid.³⁵¹ It is not necessary that the mortgagee should take physical possession, for the mortgagor may continue in possession as lessee of the mortgagee,³⁵² or he may direct the tenants to pay rent to the mortgagee,³⁵³ but unless there is a clause providing for the mortgagee going in possession, there cannot of course, be a usufructuary mortgage.³⁵⁴ As possession by the mortgagee is the distinguishing feature of such a mortgage, it follows that there cannot be two different usufructuary mortgages on the same property at the same time.³⁵⁵ When a mortgage was executed and the property mortgaged was leased to the mortgagee, both formed one transaction which was a usufructuary mortgage, and not a simple mortgage.³⁵⁶ A lekha mukhi mortgage in Punjab is a usufructuary mortgage.³⁵⁷

Where a mortgage is void by virtue of breach of section 165, MP Land Revenue Code, possession has to be given back to mortgagor. Parties must return benefits received to each other, by virtue of section 65, Indian Contract Act, 1872 where an agreement becomes void, or is discovered to be void.³⁵⁸

The expression "usufructuary mortgage" as understood in the context of the TP Act, 1882, does not apply to the said expression as used in section 12 of the Bihar Money Lenders Act, 1975.³⁵⁹

The words "expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession" were inserted by the amending Act of 1929. The fact that possession was not given cannot alter the character of the transaction,³⁶⁰ and the words now inserted make it clear that the mortgagee who is entitled to possession under the mortgage, but who has not received possession, is a usufructuary mortgagee. There is nothing illegal in a usufructuary mortgagee leasing the property to the mortgagor. The mere fact that at the time of the execution of the mortgage it was agreed that the mortgagor would continue in possession as a lessee, would not affect the latter's legal position.³⁶¹ Where a usufructuary mortgagee leases the property back to the mortgagor, whether the relationship between them is that of landlord and tenant would depend upon the construction of the deed. If it is, the mortgagee may evict the mortgagor for non-payment of rent.³⁶² A Full Bench of the Karnataka High Court while answering the question whether an usufructuary mortgagee is a landlord for purposes of pt II of the Karnataka Rent Control Act, 1961 in the affirmative, held that since delivery of possession is a necessary concomitant of a usufructuary mortgage and since the concomitant entitles the usufructuary mortgagee to claim possession of the property to the exclusion of all others, including the mortgagor, the mortgagee is for all intents and purposes the owner himself, as he steps into the shoes of the owner, and by reason of it he acquires the status of a landlord under section 3(h) as well as the provisions of pt II for claiming possession of mortgaged premises for his personal use.³⁶³ The Supreme Court has found itself in agreement with the view of the Full Bench.³⁶⁴ The document introducing any conditions other than those covered by section 58(d) could not be regarded as usufructuary mortgage. Thus, where the document fixed the time to enjoy property for a term of 25 years on illidarwar rights; created a personal covenant to pay value of improvements as decided by four respectable persons, and after the period of 25 years or when the mortgagee demanded mortgage money, payment of not only the mortgage money, but also the value of improvements were agreed as the terms of the document, it was held that the document cannot be regarded as usufructuary mortgage.³⁶⁵ The essential features of a usufructuary mortgage must be evident from the recitals of the mortgage deed itself. In order to determine whether a mortgage is a simple mortgage or a usufructuary mortgage, the course of conduct of parties is of no relevance for the construction of a deed which is itself unambiguous.³⁶⁶ Normally upon transfer in case of usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to enjoy the usufruct of the property, there can be conditions stipulated in the mortgage deed prohibiting the mortgagee to alienate the interest further even by way of lease or otherwise. If the mortgagee violates the condition and transfers it, the transferee of mortgagee who cultivated the property under the mortgage cannot be deemed to be a lawful tenant.³⁶⁷

A usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy holding was not valid as a mortgage with all its incidents and subject, to the provisions of law relating to usufructuary mortgage, but was valid only in a qualified sense, i.e., in the sense of subletting with a covenant that the mortgagor will not be entitled to recover possession without payment of the mortgage money, and further, that under such a mortgage there is no transfer of the right of an occupancy tenant and consequently no suit for redemption was maintainable, nor was there any extinguishment of the right of an occupancy tenant upon expiry of the period of limitation fixed for redemption under Article 148 of the Limitation Act, 1908.³⁶⁸ A mortgagor executed a usufructuary in respect of his agricultural rent. Since no rent in respect of the land was paid to the landlord, he instituted a suit for arrears of rent and obtained a decree and on an execution thereof, the property was put to sale. The mortgagee paid the decretal amount. It was held that if on some default in payments of rent, a rent decree is obtained and the mortgagee pays the sum even then the mortgage in question is liable to be redeemed at the option of the mortgagor. The mortgagor cannot escape from his obligations by bringing the equity of redemption of sale in execution of a decree on the personal covenant.³⁶⁹

[s 58.45] Appropriation of Rents and Profits

The manner of appropriation of rents and profits depends upon the terms of the deed. The definition has been widened by the addition of the words "or any part of such rents and profits." This would cover cases where the mortgagee is put in possession and retains part of the rents and profits in discharge of the debt, and pays the residue as rent to the mortgagor. Thus, in a Madras case³⁷⁰ the plaintiff in return for a loan of ₹1,400 put the defendant in possession of premises of a rental value of ₹16-12-0 per mensem. The defendant retained ₹14 towards principal and interest, and paid the plaintiff ₹2-12-0 as rent.

The rents and profits or part of the rents and profits may be appropriated

- (1) in lieu of interest;
- (2) in lieu of principal; or
- (3) in lieu of principal and interest.

The first case resembles the Welsh mortgage, and is the most common form where the borrower practically says to the creditor: "you lend the money and I lend the land; if either of us wants that which he has lent, he shall restore that which was lent to him."³⁷¹ The mortgagor recovers possession when he pays the principal and there is no question of an account between the mortgagor and mortgagee. In the first case, the mortgagee takes the chance of the rents and profits being greater or less than the interest.³⁷² In the second case, the mortgagor continues to pay interest, and is entitled to recover possession when the rent and profits received was equal to the amount of the principal. An account of the rents and profits is necessary for this purpose. In the third case, the mortgagor is not entitled to recover possession until the principal and interest are paid out of the rents and profits. This is a common form and an account is necessary to ascertain whether the principal and interest have been paid off. There are cases, however, in which the condition is that the rents and profits are taken in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal. Thus, if the condition is that the rents and profits each year shall be taken in lieu of interest and one-tenth of the principal, the debt is discharged in 10 years, and no account is necessary.

The characteristics of a usufructuary mortgage as defined in this section are:

- (1) there is no personal liability on the mortgagor;
- (2) no time limit is fixed;

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

- (3) the mortgagee takes the whole or part of the rent and profits.³⁷³

[s 58.46] No Personal Liability

The mortgagee takes possession, and looks to the rent and profits to repay himself. The mortgagor cannot be sued personally for the debt.³⁷⁴

In a Calcutta case,³⁷⁵ the words were "having paid the principal money in the month of Chaitra 1297 we shall take back the documents and the land. In case we fail to repay the principal money at due date, the sudbharna bond shall remain in force." But they were held to import no personal covenant. As there is no personal liability, a debt secured by a usufructuary mortgage cannot be attached under O XXI, rule 46 of the Code of Civil Procedure as if it were a simple debt.³⁷⁶ The interest of such a mortgagee can only be attached under O XXI, rule 54.

This characteristic is lacking in many mortgages that are commonly called usufructuary. A personal covenant is often included in order to provide a personal remedy against the mortgagor. If the covenant does not import a right of sale, it has been said that the character of the mortgage is not altered,³⁷⁷ but it is submitted that it is an anomalous mortgage. If it does import a right of sale, it would still be an anomalous mortgage since the amending Act of 1929, but a simple mortgage usufructuary under the TP Act, 1882 as it stood before the amendment.

As section 58(d) stands, if under the mortgage deed, a mortgagor expressly or by implication binds himself to convey possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, the transaction is a usufructuary mortgage, notwithstanding the fact that the actual possession has not been delivered. Such a transaction being a usufructuary mortgage, section 67 does not empower the mortgagee to bring the property to sale. Section 68 may confer a right on the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage money when the mortgagor fails to deliver the property to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any person claiming under him. This does not expressly or by implication confer a right on him to recover the mortgage money by the sale of the property.³⁷⁸

[s 58.47] No Time Limit

The mortgagee retains possession until the mortgage money is paid. It has been held that this is an uncertain time dependent on the state of the account or the ability of the mortgagor to repay, and that if a time limit is fixed the mortgage is not a mortgage "until payment of the mortgage money" and is, therefore, not a usufructuary mortgage.³⁷⁹ But this view does not seem to be correct. A time limit may be impliedly fixed when the agreement is that referred to in section 77, when the rent and profits are in lieu of interest and defined portion of the principal. In *Ram Narayan Singh v Adhindra Nath*³⁸⁰ a fixed date was appointed for restoration of possession after calculation of the time when the mortgage money would be discharged out of the usufruct, yet the Privy Council held that it was only a usufructuary mortgage. Again section 62(b) expressly provides for a case where a term is prescribed for the payment of the mortgage money. However, if the time limit imports a personal covenant to pay and a right of sale in default, the mortgage would not be a usufructuary mortgage, but an anomalous mortgage of the species "simple mortgage usufructuary".³⁸¹ If at the expiry of the time limit the mortgage is to become a mortgage by conditional sale, it is an anomalous mortgage of the species "mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale".³⁸²

Usufructuary mortgages were a cloak for usurious transactions, the rent being taken in lieu of exorbitant interest. The Usury Regulations³⁸³ were designed to check this practice by limiting the mortgagee to interest at 12% and by making him liable to account for rents and profits, notwithstanding the terms of the contract, and allowing redemption before the expiry of the period fixed in the deed.³⁸⁴ Usufructuary mortgages executed while these regulations were in force are controlled by them, even though the suit be filed under the TP Act, 1882.³⁸⁵ Thus, in one case redemption was allowed before the expiry of the period fixed.³⁸⁶ But in a case where the contract was not usurious, the Privy Council held that a condition exonerating the mortgagee from filing

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

accounts was valid, although it was governed by the regulations.³⁸⁷

Possession of the mortgagee is permissive in character in the sense that it is with the consent of the mortgagor.³⁸⁹ Therefore, on redemption of mortgage, the mortgagee is required to hand over the possession of the property to the mortgagor. There are, however, certain exceptions to it. In case of the mortgagee, a tenant of the mortgagor prior to the mortgage, it is a general principle of law that there is no automatic merger of the tenancy rights with the mortgage rights. Both of them operate independent of each other, and on redemption of the mortgage, tenancy would revive except in a case where an intention of the parties is reflected to the contrary.³⁹⁰ The effect of the mortgage is to keep the lessee's rights in abeyance which stood revived upon the redemption of mortgage.³⁹¹ For a merger to arise, it is necessary that a lesser estate and a higher estate should merge in one person at one and the same time and in the same right, and no interest in the property should remain outside. In the case of a lease, the estate that is in the lessor, is a reversion. In the case of a mortgage, the estate that is outstanding, is the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. Therefore, there cannot be a merger of lease and mortgage in respect of the same property since neither of them is a higher, or a lesser estate than the other.³⁹² Since there is no automatic merger, in absence of proof of surrender of lease by the mortgagee/lessee, the mortgagor/lessor is not automatically entitled to recover possession of leased premises on redemption of mortgage.³⁹³ However, if the mortgagee had no tenancy rights prior to mortgage, he cannot claim the same after mortgage ends.³⁹⁴

As regards tenants inducted by the mortgagee, the Supreme Court has held that he may grant lease not extending beyond the period of the mortgage; any leases granted by him must come to an end at redemption³⁹⁵ since it is not an act of prudent management.³⁹⁶ They can be evicted on redemption of mortgage.³⁹⁷ Such tenants are not entitled to the protection of rent control legislation against the mortgagor after the redemption of the mortgage.³⁹⁸ An agricultural lease may confer at best the status of tenants from year to year.³⁹⁹

Zuripeshgi leases bear a close resemblance to usufructuary mortgages, but are not mortgages, unless the lease is for the purpose of securing a debt. The word zuripeshgi means lease for a premium—the premium being the original loan. Mortgages were given in this form in order to evade the prohibition against usury in the Koran, and in the Usury Regulations. The usual form of such a mortgage was a loan repayable on the day the lease should expire, and the rent is either wholly the interest, or partly the interest, and partly repayment of the principal with a proviso that the lessee shall continue in possession till the loan should be repaid.⁴⁰⁰ Once you get a debt with the security of land for its repayment, then the arrangement is a mortgage by whatever name it is called.⁴⁰¹ Where, however, a lease does not intend to create the relationship of debtor and creditor and reserves no right of redemption to the lessor, but simply asks the lessee to quit the land without any payment on the part of the lessor at the expiry of the term of the lease, it is zuripeshgi lease, and not mortgage.⁴⁰² The Privy Council in the *Bengal Indigo Co v Mohunt Roghubur Das*⁴⁰³ described the possession of the lessees under a zuripeshgi lease as being "in part at least, not that of cultivators only, but that of creditors operating repayment of the debt due to them by means of their security." The case of *Venkateshwara v Kesava*⁴⁰⁴ is a good illustration of such a transaction. The plaintiff borrowed ₹1,400 from the defendant, and leased him a piece of land and a warehouse for eight years. It was agreed that the rent of the warehouse should be ₹16-12-0 per mensem, and that the defendant should retain ₹14 as interest on the advance and pay ₹2-12-0 as rent to the plaintiff. The warehouse was destroyed by fire after four years; the defendant ceased to pay ₹2-12-0 as rent, and the plaintiff sued to recover possession for non-payment of rent. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the defendant was entitled to possession as mortgagee. Justice Innes said:

The gist of the agreement was not a letting of the premises with a rent reserved, but a usufructuary mortgage of the premises with a certain small portion of its income made payable to the plaintiff.

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

As the lease is security for the loan, it has been held that zuripeshgi leases are construed as mortgages, when there is a right of redemption expressly or impliedly reserved.⁴⁰⁵ In Maharaja Kesho Prasad v Chandrika Prasad,⁴⁰⁶ CJ Dawson Miller:

I think the result of the authorities as well as of the textbooks is that the test in such cases must be whether there is a secured debt and a right of redemption.

In a mortgage by zuripeshgi lease for a fixed term, a personal covenant to repay is implied.⁴⁰⁷ If the lease is not security for the loan, the transaction would not be a mortgage, but a lease and an ordinary money debt.⁴⁰⁸ If the original premium is not an advance which is repayable, the transaction is a lease, and not a mortgage.⁴⁰⁹ The Supreme Court has approved⁴¹⁰ the above discussion in the fourth edition of this work, and set out the following tests to ascertain whether the transaction is a lease or a mortgage:

- (1) Is there an express term which makes the loan returnable either by repayment, or by enjoyment of the usufruct;
- (2) Is interest fixed;
- (3) Is the right of redemption granted;
- (4) Is there any provision for personal liability if any amount remains outstanding after the term of the lease.

These tests have been applied in several cases.⁴¹¹

It cannot, of course, be a mortgage where the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession even after the discharge of the entire amount advanced.⁴¹²

In a mortgage by zuripeshgi lease, the lease and the mortgage may or may not be separable transactions, and it is purely a question of construction whether the remedies can be separately pursued.⁴¹³ The undernoted cases⁴¹⁴ are examples of combined lease and mortgage. The lease was of a coal mine and the mortgage was of the leasehold premises to secure an advance made by the lessee to the lessor, and the mortgagee-lessee also had the right to appropriate the royalties to the discharge of the principal money secured by the mortgage. These were separate transactions, and the mortgaged property was sold subject to the lease. In a Punjab case,⁴¹⁵ where the lease was merely a means of realising the interest of the mortgage which was executed the same day, a suit for rent was held to bar a subsequent suit for recovery of the principal and interest under O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In a zuripeshgi lease, the mortgagee is the lessee and has physical possession. However, a usufructuary mortgagee may lease the mortgaged property to the mortgagor and put him in physical possession. In such cases, the lease and mortgage are distinct.⁴¹⁶ The distinction between a usufructuary mortgage and a kanam-kuzhikanam, a transaction common in the south, was considered by the Supreme Court in Lakshmi v Narayani.⁴¹⁷ The court held that the question must be resolved by considering the transaction as a whole to determine whether the purpose of the transaction was the enjoyment of the property, or whether it was intended to secure repayment of a debt; the description in the document was immaterial. This was reiterated by the Supreme Court in Mangala v Puthiyaveethil.⁴¹⁸ The court in the latter case emphasised the quantum of money paid and the proportion it bore to the value of the property; if it was a substantial proportion of the value, the transaction would be a mortgage.

Some of the guidelines for deciding whether a transaction is a lease or a mortgage are, that the name given to the document is not conclusive. The question has to be decided with reference to the predominant intention of the parties as gathered from the recitals and the terms in the entire document, and the surrounding circumstances, including the conduct of the parties. Further, while, in the case of a mortgage, there is a transfer of interest in the property to secure repayment of a debt, in the case of a lease it is transfer of a right to enjoy the property. In the instant case, the property was the premises of a shop. The transferee was to be in possession, and was to carry on his business therein, but with no power to lease it out. No rate of interest was fixed in the document and there was no mention of how the money said to have been lent should be realised if the transferor, for some reason, could not remain in possession. Nor was there any clause that if possession was not re-delivered at the end of the period, the transferor had the right to redeem the property. The transferee was a dealer in liquor, and was having business in the premises. On earlier two occasions, the non-residential premises had been given to the transferee. Considering all the above facts, it was held that the predominant intention of the parties was not to secure the repayment of debt. Taking into account the conduct of the parties as evidenced by the earlier deals, the transaction was held to be a lease, and the transferor's suit for "redemption" of the alleged self- redeeming mortgage was dismissed.⁴¹⁹

In an English mortgage, as defined in section 58(e), there is, in form, a transfer of ownership to the mortgagee, with a covenant to repay the debt on a certain date, and a proviso that on this condition being performed the mortgagee will retransfer the property to the mortgagor. Options as regards earlier payment or extension of time for repayment are matters of grace, which do not affect the undertaking to repay at a certain date.⁴²⁰ In *Narayana v Venkataramana*⁴²¹ the Madras High Court said:

The three essentials of an English mortgage are

- (1) That the mortgagor should bind himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain day;
- (2) That the property mortgaged should be transferred absolutely to the mortgagee;
- (3) That such absolute transfer should be made subject to a proviso that the mortgagee will reconvey the property to the mortgagor, upon payment by him of the mortgage money, on the day on which the mortgagor bound himself to repay the same.

The question arises whether this requirement that the property should be transferred absolutely is a mere matter of form, or is a matter of substance so that the whole of the interest of the mortgagor must pass to the mortgagee. The word "absolutely" in the definition of an English mortgage in clause (e) seems inconsistent with the general definition in clause (a) that "a mortgage is a transfer of an interest" in the property. If a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in property, it is not an absolute transfer. Chief Justice Rankin in Bengal National Bank v Janaki Nath Roy,⁴²² suggested that clause (e) and clause (a) might be reconciled, that the estate vests absolutely in the mortgagee, and that the assignment is not less absolute because the mortgagee is under a covenant to reconvey. It was accordingly held that a mortgage by a lessee by way of an English mortgage operated as an absolute assignment of the lease and established privity of estate between the assignee and the lessor, so as to entitle the lessor to claim rent from the assignee. The reasoning of the learned Chief Justice was, however, doubted in a later Calcutta case⁴²³ where with reference to this inconsistency J Mukerji said:

The definition of an English mortgage as given in the Transfer of Property Act section 58(e) must be read subject to the definition of a mortgage as given in clause (a) of that section, and consequently, an English mortgage in India can hardly be regarded as the transfer of the entire estate of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It is correct, however, not to regard what is left in the mortgage as an equitable estate, but it is nevertheless some estate; an interest only in the estate having been transferred under the mortgage. In our opinion, therefore, it is not easy to say of an assignment by way of an English mortgage in India executed by a lessee that the whole of the estate passes under the mortgage to the mortgagee.

The reasoning adopted by J Mukerji found favour with the Judicial Committee in *Ramkinkar v Satyacharan*⁴²⁴ where the nature of an English mortgage as defined in section 58(e) has been clearly explained.

The question as to whether the deed is a deed of mortgage by conditional sale, or a deed of English mortgage, is one of the intention of the parties, to be gathered from the language of the deed, interpreted in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Where the transaction under the deed was a English mortgage, a decree for foreclosure was incompetent under section 67. However, in the instant case, the mortgagee-plaintiff had filed a suit for foreclosure and a final decree was passed in it, and the same cannot be set aside, keeping intact the preliminary decree for foreclosure against which no appeal was preferred by mortgager/appellant. When this was of English mortgage, the mortgagee had a right to apply for passing decree for sale of mortgaged property.⁴²⁵ In Ramkinkar v Satyacharan,⁴²⁶ the question that was ultimately raised was whether a lessor could sue a mortgagee from a lessee for rent. This he could do if there was a privity of estate between him and the mortgagee. There could be privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee if the mortgage operated as an absolute assignment of the lease by the lessee to the mortgagee.

The question was answered as follows:

The Indian mortgagor, however, retains some rights, though the English rules of equity do not apply. He retains a right to a reconveyance of the land and a right to transfer such right by way of sale or second mortgage (sections 81, 82, 91 and 94), and this right in India is a legal right.

The interest which remains in the mortgagor, being thus a legal interest, its retention will, therefore, prevent the whole of the mortgagor's interest from passing to the mortgagee. The correctness of this position is also indicated by the fact that section 54 which deals with sale speaks of a sale as a transfer of ownership as opposed to the transfer of interest spoken of in section 58(a) in the case of a mortgage. The word "interest", it is pointed out, is, when used in opposition to ownership, more appropriate to a limited right. The question arises as to what is the nature of this legal right. Whether it is a mere contractual right to have the property reconveyed? If it is, then under section 54 such contractual right does not create any interest in the property, and the mortgagor cannot possibly assign his right of redemption or create a second mortgage so as to bind the property. However, sections 81, 82, 91 and 94 recognise second mortgagor. It follows, therefore, that the right of a mortgagor in India is more than a mere contractual right, and must be a legal right in the property itself. If it is a legal right in the property which remains with the mortgagor, it clearly follows that the mortgagor has not parted with the whole of his rights. The issue, therefore, is to reconcile this position with the language of section 58(e) which speaks of absolute transfer of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee.

Referring to that section, their Lordships observed:

In using those words, does it mean that no interest or no legal interest in the property remains in the mortgagor? Their Lordships cannot think so. If the sub-section stopped at the word "mortgagee" it might be necessary to put this construction upon it, but it did not stop there: it adds the proviso that the mortgagee 'will transfer' the property 'upon payment of the mortgage money as agreed.

Their Lordships observed that with this addition, the sub-section upon its true construction does not declare "an English mortgage" to be an absolute transfer of the property. It declares only that such a mortgage would be absolute were it not for the proviso for transfer. It does not determine what legal effect follows from the use of a particular form of words; it merely prescribes the form of words necessary to constitute what is known in India as an English mortgage. Section 58(e) deals with form, not substance. The substantial rights are dealt with in sections 58(a) and 60. Whatever form is used, nothing more than an interest is transferred, and that interest is subject to the right of redemption.

In India, the distinction exists between the position before and after the date of payment. Before that date, the mortgagor has an interest in the land which for the reasons given above is legal, and not equitable. After that date, he has the legal right of redemption given to him by section 60 of TP Act, 1882. In each case, he retains a legal interest in the property. Their Lordships, therefore, held that in India a mortgagor when he assigns his interest under a lease to a mortgagee does not under any of the forms specified in section 58 of the TP Act, 1882, transfer an absolute interest and consequently, the mortgagee is not liable by privity of estate for the burdens of the lease. In *Jagadamba Loan Co Ltd v Raja Shiba Prosad*⁴²⁷ the Judicial Committee reiterated and applied the above principles, and held that the fact that the mortgagee had not entered into possession did not make any difference. In the light of these two decisions, the earlier Indian cases should be read where it has been held that in Indian law as well, the right of redemption remaining in the mortgagor is an estate in land.⁴²⁸ In Indian law, the right to redemption is conferred by section 60 of TP Act, 1882. One of the essentials of English mortgage is that the mortgagor has to bind himself to pay the mortgage-money on a certain date. Thus, where the repayment was to be made within a period of eight years, which originally was five years, it was held that this did not constitute a binding obligation to repay the debt on a certain date.⁴²⁹ Similarly, where the mortgagor does not bind himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain date and the deed does not even remotely suggest that the transaction was in the nature of a mortgage the transaction would not be an English mortgage.⁴³⁰

[s 58.52] English Mortgage—Personal Debt

Such a mortgage includes a personal covenant to which is generally annexed a power of sale in section 69. The mortgagee acquires the right to take possession as soon as the mortgage is executed, irrespective of whether a right of entry is expressly covenanted for.⁴³¹ In order to avoid the liability to account on the footing of wilful default, an English mortgage usually provides for the appointment of a receiver by the mortgagee on behalf of the mortgagor, so that the receiver is agent of the mortgagor, and possession remains with the mortgagor.⁴³² When one of the terms of a mortgage was that the mortgagor should execute an irrevocable power of attorney authorizing the mortgagee to collect the rents, either by one's own self or by a substitute, on behalf of the mortgagor, this provision was held to be equivalent to placing a receiver in possession as agent of the mortgagor. It had not the effect of delivering possession to the mortgagee, or of converting the mortgage into a usufructuary mortgage, or of making the mortgagee liable to account for more than the sums actually received by him.⁴³³

CLAUSE (F)[s 58.53] Mortgage by Deposit of Title Deeds

This is called in English law an equitable mortgage. It is the well-established rule of equity that mere deposit of a document of title without writing or without word of mouth, will create in equity a charge upon the property referred to. The term "equitable mortgage" is not appropriate in India, for the law of India knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable estates.⁴³⁴ However, the phrases "equitable mortgage" and "equity of redemption" are commonly used in Indian courts. The phrase "equity of redemption" is not, in view of the two decisions of the Judicial Committee mentioned above, less appropriate than the phrase "right of redemption." The phrase "equitable mortgage" might have been formerly justified in India on the ground that it was an inchoate mortgage perfected by equity. Equitable mortgages or mortgages by deposit of title deeds were accepted in India as equivalent to simple mortgages after the Privy Council decision in Varden Seth v Luckpathy,⁴³⁵ and this is still the case in districts to which the TP Act, 1882 has not been extended.⁴³⁶ The TP Act, 1882 recognizes such mortgages as equivalent to simple mortgages,⁴³⁷ but restricts their operation to certain centers of commerce. This has been done as a matter of convenience to the mercantile community to enable them to borrow money without the delay of investigation of title, and the publicity of registration. Such mortgages are, however, at variance with the policy of publicity of transfer underlying TP Act, 1882 and the Registration Act, 1908. The Privy Council in Imperial Bank of India v U Rai Gyaw Thu,⁴³⁸ held that although there was no formal conveyance, an equitable mortgage effected a transfer of an interest in property, and for purposes of priority stood on the same footing as a mortgage by deed. A proviso to this effect has been added to section 48 of the Registration Act by the amending Act 21 of 1929.

A delivery of documents of title alone is sufficient to create equitable mortgage under the section. There is no necessity to execute any document.

A document merely recording a transaction which is already concluded and which does not create any rights and liabilities does not require registration. Hence, charge of mortgage can be entered into revenue record in respect of mortgage by deposit of title deeds, says the Supreme Court in State of Haryana v Navir Singh.⁴³⁹

Equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds is permissible in Simla in view of the notification dated 22 May 1976.⁴⁴⁰

Where a deposit takes place, it has to be ascertained in the usual way; so where a debtor handed over the deeds to the assistant of the common attorney of the debtor and creditor outside Calcutta,⁴⁴¹ or where a debtor posted the deeds at a place not notified to the creditor under the latter's express instruction,⁴⁴² it was held that the transaction was complete outside a notified town, and section 58(f) did not apply. However, what constitutes the transaction is delivery with the intention of creating a security. So in a case where physical delivery takes place outside the notified town, but the intention to create an equitable mortgage is formed after the deeds are in one of the above towns, the Supreme Court applied the section.⁴⁴³

Territorial restriction referred to in section 58(f) has reference only to the delivery of the documents of title, and not to the situation of the property mortgaged. Once the mortgage is created in a notified town, the registration of the memorandum can be either at the town where the equitable mortgage is created, or in the office of the sub-registrar within whose jurisdiction, the mortgaged property is situated. As long as the memorandum merely confirms an equitable mortgage already created in a notified town, the registration of the memorandum even outside the notified towns, will be valid.⁴⁴⁴ However, a plea that deposit of title deeds are not in relation to properties situated in towns specified in section 58 (f) or in towns notified by the state government is an important plea and cannot be ignored as a non consideration of such a plea would go to the root of the matter and result in remitting of the matter for fresh consideration to the lower court.⁴⁴⁵

[s 58.55] Requisites of a Mortgage by Deposit of Title Deeds

The requisites of an equitable mortgage are:

- (1) a debt;
- (2) a deposit of title deeds;⁴⁴⁶ and
- (3) an intention that the deeds shall be security for the debt.⁴⁴⁷

The above three requisites (debt, deposit, and intention to create security) have been reiterated in a Calcutta case.⁴⁴⁸ The main ingredient of mortgage by deposit of title deeds is that deposit of title deeds should be with an intent of creating a security. Where during the subsistence of debt, the debtor handed over the title deeds to the creditor, it would raise the initial presumption of creating security. The debtor executed a memorandum acknowledging the deposit of title deeds as security for the debts due, thus a presumption can rightly be raised by the court for creating a mortgage by deposit of title deeds.⁴⁴⁹ These three essentials, i.e., a debt, deposit of title deeds and the intention that the delivery of documents should be security for the debt are mandatory in order to create a valid mortgage, but it is not necessary that the whole, or even the most material of the documents deposited should show a complete or good title in the depositor and it is sufficient if the deeds deposited bona-fide relate to the property or are material evidence of title and which are shown to have been deposited with the intention of creating a security thereon.⁴⁵⁰

The debt may be an existing debt, or a future debt. The use of the word "debt" as one of the requisites of a mortgage by the deposit of title deeds in this work, as well as in several leading decisions, does not, it is submitted, preclude such a mortgage being created to secure future advances or contingent pecuniary liabilities. Any transfer of an interest in property to secure the payment of money, advanced or to be advanced, or an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability, is a mortgage—section 58(1); and sub-section (f), which defines an equitable mortgage, merely prescribes one of the modes of creating a mortgage.⁴⁵¹ Deposit of title deeds with banks to secure an overdraft account—which involves both existing and future advances—are common; and have been upheld as falling within sub-section (f);⁴⁵² and also a mortgage to secure a general balance due on an account;⁴⁵³ similar transactions securing guarantees or indemnities are also common and would, it is submitted, be also so upheld. Nor does the use of the word "creditor" in the sub-section make any difference, for the word can mean a person having a future or contingent claim.⁴⁵⁴

It has been held in England that it is sufficient if the deeds deposited bona fide relate to the property or are material evidence of title, and that it is not necessary that all the deeds should be deposited.⁴⁵⁵ These cases have been followed in India.⁴⁵⁶ But CJ Page in a Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court⁴⁵⁷ held that the documents must not only relate to the property, but must also be as to show a prima facie or apparent title in the depositor. If the deeds are lost, certified⁴⁵⁸ copies may be deposited.⁴⁵⁹ The essential requirement is that the title deeds should be deposited.⁴⁶⁰ The transfer would not be regarded as an equitable mortgage upon failure to prove the deposit of title deeds.⁴⁶¹ If the deposit is accompanied by a memorandum in writing, the written bargain determines what is the scope and extent of the security, otherwise the scope of the security is the scope of the title.⁴⁶² If a share of an indigo concern is mortgaged, it is sufficient to deposit the title deeds under which the share was acquired and if the mortgagee's sale takes place at some subsequent date, the share will pass at the date of sale, i.e., not only what is called accession, but changes in good will, rights under contract, and so forth.⁴⁶³

ILLUSTRATION

A had purchased two plots of leasehold land. A's title deed was the sale deed of both plots and two leases, one of each plot, on each of which was an endorsement showing that A was the purchaser. A made a mortgage by deposit of the sale-deed and one lease with B. 16 months later A made a mortgage by deposit of the other lease with C. B's mortgage was a valid mortgage of both plots and C's mortgage was a valid mortgage of one plot, but B's mortgage being earlier had priority.⁴⁶⁴

Physical delivery of documents is not the only mode of deposit, and constructive delivery is sufficient.⁴⁶⁵ The Supreme Court in KL Nathan v SV Maruty Reddy,⁴⁶⁶ observed that:

it would be hyper technical to insist upon the formality of the creditor delivering the title- deeds to the debtor and the debtor re-delivering them to the creditor.

If the documents deposited show no kind of title, no mortgage is created.⁴⁶⁷ A tax receipt and a plan are not documents of title, and their deposit does not create a mortgage.⁴⁶⁸ A deposit of an expired lease creates a mortgage of the leasehold when the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease.⁴⁶⁹ It has been said that a patta of land in the mofussil is usually a document of title,⁴⁷⁰ but this would depend upon the circumstances under which it was issued.⁴⁷¹ A mortgage is not a deed of title for the mortgagor, for it only shows that the mortgagor has dealt with the property as his.⁴⁷² However, a mortgage is a document of title of the mortgagee, and a mortgagee can effect an equitable sub-mortgage by deposit of his mortgage deed.⁴⁷³ When the documents deposited along with the memorandum of deposit, though not complete in themselves for holding the title, were undoubtedly documents relating to the property, and prima facie showing title to the same, they constitute 'documents of title' within the meaning of section 58(f) according to a Madras case. In this case, the documents were:

- (1) the hundi towards the purchase price;
- (2) the agreement by the previous owner of the site to convey the property; and
- (3) tax receipt in the name of the plaintiff's father.⁴⁷⁴

A copy is not a document of title, and its deposit cannot be an equitable title. It is only an evidence of title but, where the original is lost, a certified copy made with safeguards can be received as document of title. However, it must be made out that the original is lost.⁴⁷⁵ Where the mortgagor who was one of the donees of the properties gifted to various persons, did not possess the original title deed, the deposit of registration copy of the title deed, tax receipts and a certificate issued by the president of the Panchayat with an unequivocal intention to create an equitable mortgage was held to be sufficient to create such mortgage.⁴⁷⁶ Where the original title deed is lost, an equitable mortgage can still be created. The mortgagee in such cases has only to be vigilant in accepting such representation made to him and should make necessary inquiries before agreeing to advance monies on the basis of registration, extracts of documents of title, or copies of documents. That is the principle underlying section 78, which provides that if the conduct of prior mortgagee amounted to gross neglect, the mortgage in his favour will be postponed to the subsequent mortgage.⁴⁷⁷

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

In order to create a valid equitable mortgage, it is not necessary:

- (a) that all the documents of title to the property should be deposited; or
- (b) that the documents deposited should show a complete or good title.

It is sufficient if the deeds deposited bona fide relate to the property, or are material evidence of title, and are shown to have been deposited with the intention of creating a security thereon.⁴⁷⁸ However, no mortgage is created if the mortgagee fails to prove that title deeds were ever deposited even though a letter in proof of deposit of title deed is executed.⁴⁷⁹ Where a mortgage has been effected by deposit of title deeds and the credit facility was secured on its strength from the Bank, but the signatures on the mortgaged document and the loan document were slightly different, a plea that there is no obligation on part of the creditors to pay as the signatures on the loan documents are different from the actual signatures would not be tenable as there is a possibility that the loan document might have been signed differently. As the documents were not given to the experts for verifying the difference in signatures it was held that the mortgagors were liable to repay the loan amount to the Bank with interest.⁴⁸⁰

The intention that the title deeds shall be security for the debt is the essence of the transaction. In Heng Moh v Urn Saw Yean,⁴⁸¹ the managing partner admitted that he had received title deeds from the other partner in the capacity of a manager, and the Privy Council held that the delivery of the deeds was a mere partnership transaction, and did not give the managing partner the rights of an equitable mortgagee. Whether the requisite intention exists is a question of fact in each case, and is to be ascertained after considering oral, documentary, and circumstantial evidence. The mere fact of a deposit does not raise the presumption that such an intention existed,⁴⁸² and the fact that at the time of making the deposit the parties intended to execute a mortgage deed does not negative an intention to create an equitable mortgage till such a deed is executed. And even the distinction made in English law between an antecedent and a subsequent debt has been described by the Supreme Court as only a guide.⁴⁸³ Such an intention cannot, as already stated, be presumed from possession, for mere possession of the deeds is not enough without evidence as to the manner in which the possession originated so that a contract may be inferred.⁴⁸⁴ In Jethibai v Putlibai,⁴⁸⁵ it was said that mere possession of title deeds by the creditors, coupled with the existence of a debt, does not necessarily lead to the presumption of a mortgage, that may be so when the title deeds are produced by the creditor after the lapse of many years without explanation. Although the fact that the documents were coming from the custody of the plaintiff is not, by itself, sufficient to prove an intent to create a security, that fact is significant, and unless the defendants satisfactorily explain how the documents came in the plaintiff's custody, this fact would have a great bearing.⁴⁸⁶ According to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh, where there are structures on a land, then the equitable mortgage should extend to the land and structures even though the deeds deposited relate to the land only.⁴⁸⁷

If it is in contemplation of parties to have a legal mortgage prepared and if the title deeds are deposited for that purpose only, the deposit does not create an equitable mortgage.⁴⁸⁸ In Jaittha Bhima v Haji Abdul,⁴⁸⁹ the deeds were delivered for the preparation of a legal mortgage; the legal mortgage was prepared and executed, but was not registered; and the creditor then contended that he had abandoned the idea of taking a legal mortgage, and claimed as mortgagee by deposit of title deeds. This plea was disallowed, for the court found that there was no antecedent debt at the time of the delivery of the deed, and that the creditor would not have advanced the money if the debtor had not been ready to execute the deed. If an additional amount is advanced to the mortgagor on the understanding that the mortgagee will be entitled to retain the documents as security for the additional amount also, the agreement is treated as a constructive delivery of the title deeds to the creditor, as security for further advances.⁴⁹⁰

[s 58.56] Registration

A mortgage by deposit of title deeds does not require any writing,⁴⁹¹ and being an oral transaction it is not affected by the law of registration. where the mortgage is an equitable mortgage, it does not require registration, and a plea of the mortgagor that they are not under any obligation to repay the loan amount because the letter acknowledging the mortgage was not registered would not be tenable. The letter acknowledging the creation of mortgage does not impose any right or liability and therefore does not require registration.⁴⁹² But it is usual for the deposit to be accompanied by a memorandum in writing.⁴⁹³ If this writing is the contract of mortgage so that it creates the mortgage it must be registered—and oral evidence to contradict it is not admissible.⁴⁹⁴ However, registration is not necessary if the mortgage is complete without the writing and the writing is merely a statement that the mortgage has been effected, or a statement of facts from which the contract of mortgage can be inferred. If a memorandum is drawn to record the fait accompli of deposit, it does not require registration. Thus a memorandum that merely records past events of facts of deposit and does not create a mortgage itself would not require registration. However, if only the document itself creates the deposit and contains the bargain between parties, it would require registration. In all such cases the recitals in the memorandum is the best guide of what the parties have intended and how the⁴⁹⁵ transaction has taken effect and how it affects the right to property. In Obia Sundarachariar v Narayanna Ayyar,⁴⁹⁶ the memorandum was merely a list of the deeds deposited, and it did not need registration, although it was deposited before the money was advanced. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said—

No such memorandum can be within the section unless on its facts it embodies such terms and is signed and delivered at such time and place and in such circumstances as to lead legitimately to the conclusion that so far as the deposit is concerned, it constitutes the agreement between the parties.

Similarly, where the memorandum confirms the deposit of title deeds as security for repayment of money advanced or to be advanced, the document would not require registration.⁴⁹⁷ The necessity for registration, therefore, depends upon the construction of the memorandum in the light of the surrounding circumstances,⁴⁹⁸ and if it is loosely worded the distinction is very fine. To illustrate this is the leading case of Kedarnath Dutt v Shamloll Khettry.⁴⁹⁹ In that case, Shankerial had advanced ₹1,200 to the borrower who deposited the title deeds, and executed the promissory note for the amount. On the promissory note he made the following endorsement: "For the repayment of the loan of ₹1,200 and the interest due thereon on the written note of hand, I hereby deposit with Shamloll Khettry, as a collateral security by way of equitable mortgage, title deeds of my property."

Sir Richard Couch in giving judgment pointed out that if there had been no endorsement at all on the promissory note, there would have been a complete equitable mortgage, and that the endorsement was merely a recital of the fact of the deposit from which the contract of mortgage is inferred so that though the writing was not registered, there was a valid equitable mortgage. This case may be contrasted with Bhairab Chandra v Anath Nath De.⁵⁰⁰ The defendant had mortgaged his house to the plaintiff and had delivered his title deeds to him for the purpose of that mortgage. He then took a fresh advance of ₹1,500, executed a promissory note for that amount, and on the sale date sent the plaintiff a letter in these terms: "For the payment of the sum of ₹1,500 with interest I have borrowed from you a promissory note of date, I hereby put it on record that the title deeds in my premises already deposited with you shall be held by you as collateral security." It was held that the letter constituted the mortgage contract, and that it was inadmissible for want of registration. The distinction between the two cases lies in the fact that in Kedarnath's case, the loan and deposit were completed irrespective of the endorsement, while in Bhairab Chandra's case there was no completed contract of mortgage before the letter passed, and it was by the letter that the deeds were made security for the fresh loan.

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

In *Rachpal Maharaj v Bhagwandas Daruka*⁵⁰¹ J Patanjali Sastri (as he then was), has stated the law thus:

The crucial question is: did the parties intend to reduce the bargain regarding the deposit of title deeds to the form of a document? If so, the document requires registration. If, on the other hand, its proper construction and the surrounding circumstances lead to the conclusion that the parties did not intend to do so, then, there being no express bargain, the contract to create the mortgage arises by implication of the law from the deposit itself with the requisite intention, and the document itself, being merely evidential does not require registration.

Where the letter did not set out the amount borrowed or the rate of interest, and did not even mention the details of the title deeds deposited, the Supreme Court held that it was merely evidential.⁵⁰² It is only when the parties intend to reduce their bargain regarding the deposit of title deeds to the form of a document, that the document requires registration. If proper construction of the document and the surrounding circumstances lead to the conclusion that the parties did not intend to do so, then the contract to create the mortgage arises by implication of the law from the deposit itself (if made with the requisite intention). The document is merely evidential, and does not require registration. On the facts, it was held that the deposit of title deeds made by referring to the "promissory note already executed earlier" did not make the memorandum the sole document evidencing the terms of the bargain. The memorandum only confirmed the execution of the promissory note. The memorandum and the promissory note could not, therefore, be considered as integral parts of one transaction, but on the other hand, the deposit was made more than two months after the execution of the promissory note. The mere statement that a deposit is made by way of security for the repayment of the loan cannot be read as a contract which is arrived at by the document itself. Hence, the document cannot be read as recording an agreement between the parties to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds. It is at best an evidence of the fact that the title deeds had been deposited with the plaintiff.⁵⁰³ In case a document was executed for the purpose of creating of mortgage under section 58(f) of the TP Act, 1882, no doubt it requires registration. Similarly, when the memorandum or letter was executed on the date of the deposit or delivery of the title deeds, that needs registration. And after the delivery of the title deeds, if any letter or memorandum was executed endorsing the earlier deposit of title which already created a mortgage, the letter needs no registration.⁵⁰⁴ In a Karnataka case, since the title deed delivered was not original and only a certified copy, the memorandum of deposit of title deed was executed and registered. Since the memorandum was denied, the court, in view of section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 held that the bank ought to have examined one of the attestors of the document. Failure to do so led to dismissal of the suit.⁵⁰⁵

In all cases in which a deposit is made by a letter which explains why the deeds are deposited, the letter must be registered, for there is nothing but the letter to connect the deposit with the debt.⁵⁰⁶ In some cases,⁵⁰⁷ registration was held to be necessary, and in other cases⁵⁰⁸ registration was held to be not necessary.

A document merely recording a transaction which is already concluded and which does not create any rights and liabilities does not require registration. In such cases payment of registration fee and stamp duty is not required.⁵⁰⁹

CLAUSE (G)[s 58.59] Anomalous Mortgages

Under the definition inserted as clause (f) of section 58, it is a mortgage which does not fall within any of the other five classes enumerated. The definition, therefore, includes simple mortgages, usufructuary mortgages, and mortgages usufructuary by conditional sale, in the term "anomalous mortgage". Even before the amendment, these combination of the simple forms were sometimes described as anomalous mortgages.⁵¹¹

Anomalous mortgages take innumerable forms moulded either by custom or the caprice of the creditor—some are combinations of the simple forms, others are customary mortgages prevalent in particular districts, and to these special incidents are attached by local usage. Such are the kanom, otti, and peruartham mortgages of Madras, and the san mortgage of Gujarat.⁵¹²

A document styled as a possessory mortgage was held to be in effect anomalous mortgage, the mortgagee having been given the right to realise the mortgage money by bringing the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor to sale.⁵¹³

[s 58.60] Simple Mortgage Usufructuary

This is now one class of anomalous mortgage, and it is a combination of a simple mortgage, and a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee is in possession and pays himself the debt out of the rents and profits, and there is also a personal covenant with an express or implied right of sale. The property is only collaterally pledged as in the case of a simple mortgage, but the mortgagee is given the usufruct of it either by allowing him to take the rents and profits, or by giving him a lease for a fixed period. Instances of such mortgages are the cases cited below.⁵¹⁴ The Bombay case of *Amarchand v Killa Morar*⁵¹⁵ is a typical simple mortgage usufructuary. The mortgagee was put in possession and authorized to retain possession till payment of the mortgage money; there was a personal covenant to pay, and an agreement that the debt was recoverable from the mortgaged land and from the mortgagor personally. This was described in the judgment as an anomalous mortgage,⁵¹⁶ though under the TP Act, 1882 it is an anomalous mortgage. In a simple mortgage usufructuary, the mortgagee may sue for sale though merely as an usufructuary mortgagee, he could not have done so.⁵¹⁷ A mortgage which is neither purely simple, nor usufructuary exclusively, but a two, is an anomalous mortgage, within the meaning of section 58(g). The mortgage stipulated that, in the event of failure on the part of the mortgagor within the specified period of time, it shall be open to the mortgagee to make realisation of the same by sale of the property mortgaged. This was a characteristic feature of a simple mortgage. And yet, the mortgage was not purely simple, as under the mortgage deed, the mortgagee was given constructive (if not actual) possession over certain shops, with the right to realise the rent thereof from the respective tenants. It was further provided that the mortgagee shall be entitled to be in possession over certain lands. These terms gave the features of a usufructuary mortgage. Hence, it was an anomalous mortgage.⁵¹⁸ The case of *Narsingh Partab v Mohammad Yaqub*⁵¹⁹ is an instance of a simple mortgage usufructuary, and the Privy Council held that its character as such was not affected by the fact that the mortgagor had reserved the right to act as manager, and to enhance rents of the property given into the possession of the mortgagee. If the mortgagee is entitled to recover any part of the mortgage money personally from the mortgagor in a usufructuary mortgage, it would become an anomalous mortgage.⁵²⁰

The right of sale is not to be implied merely from the personal covenant to repay,⁵²¹ although it may in some cases have this effect.⁵²² In *Jag Sahu v Ram Sakhi*⁵²³ the court quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment in a Calcutta case:⁵²⁴

It is well settled that where an instrument of mortgage gives a right to possession and also contains a covenant to pay,

58. "Mortgage", "mortgagor", "mortgagee", "mortgage-money" and "mortgage-deed" defined.—

thus presenting a combination of an usufructuary and a simple mortgage, the two rights are independent and the mortgagee may sue for sale although he may have given up possession, and the right, accrues immediately after the due date is passed.

Again, a simple mortgage usufructuary may be primarily a simple mortgage with a right to take possession in case of default superadded. In such a case, a suit for sale is always permissible.⁵²⁵ However, the application of sections 67 or 68 is not excluded.⁵²⁶ In *Deputy Commr of Rae Bareilly v Lal Rampal Singh*⁵²⁷ there was a mortgage of a village for a sum payable within a certain period by installments with a provision that the mortgagee should take possession in default of payment, but the last clause of the deed was as follows:

Should on the expiration of the term of this instrument any money remain due, then, till payment thereof, possession will continue according to the terms herein set out. If I do not accept this then as soon as the breach of promise occurs, they will at the end of the year realize the whole amount of installment by sale of the villages.

The Privy Council construed the document as a whole as a simple mortgage usufructuary, the mortgagee having an absolute right to take possession, and to sell if the mortgagor objected to the application of the rents, and profits to reduction of interest.

In *Jawahir Singh v Somesha*⁵²⁸ there was a mortgage with possession and

- (1) a stipulation for interest and the appropriation of the usufruct to the interest; and
- (2) a clause that if the rent and profits do not cover the interest, the mortgagor would make good the deficiency out of his own pocket.

The Privy Council held that under the later clause, the mortgagor was personally liable to the mortgagee for the principal and the interest.

In Panaganti Ramarayanimgar v Maharaja of Venkatagiri,⁵²⁹ the mortgage was with possession with covenants to pay both principal and interest, and there was a contemporaneous lease of the mortgaged property for a rent equivalent to the interest, and the lease made the rent a charge on the property. The Privy Council construed the mortgage and lease as one transaction of anomalous mortgage of the type simple mortgage usufructuary, and held that the assignee of the equity of redemption was entitled to a decree for redemption of both the mortgage and the charge.

[s 58.61] Mortgage Usufructuary by Conditional Sale

This is another composite mortgage which is now classed as anomalous. The mortgagee is in possession as usufructuary mortgagee for a fixed period and if the debt is not discharged at the expiry of that period, he is a mortgagee by conditional sale.⁵³⁰ He has, therefore, a right of foreclosure. A typical instance is a Madras case⁵³¹ where the mortgage was with possession, the usufruct to be set-off against interest and the principal to be repaid in five years and if not paid, the mortgage was to work out into a sale at the expiry of 20 years. The Privy Council case of *Abid Husain v Kaniz Fatima*⁵³² is another instance, for there, a usufructuary mortgage was consolidated with a subsequent mortgage by conditional sale. *Sita Nath v Thakurdas*⁵³³ was also a case of a usufructuary mortgage for a fixed period with profits in lieu of interest, with a condition that if the principal was not paid at the end of the period, the mortgagee was to have a right to foreclosure.

In some cases, an usufructuary mortgage has a time limit and a condition that in default of redemption the property shall be sold for the amount then due. In such a case, the stipulation for sale is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption.⁵³⁴ However, before the Privy Council decision in Mahommed Sher Khan v Seth Swami Dayal,⁵³⁵ that the doctrine of clog on the equity of redemption shall be applied to all mortgages, such mortgages were sometimes wrongly classed as anomalous. Thus, in a Madras case⁵³⁶ the terms of the mortgage were as follows:

Within these limits, a house site together with a thatched house thereon we have mortgaged—that is, we have kept it as a possessory mortgage and have received ₹10 from you. So, having paid the principal and interest pertaining to these 10 rupees within the end of a year from the said date, we shall take possession of our house and site. If we do not act according to the said condition we shall quit the land and the house as if this is a sale.

This was construed as an anomalous mortgage, but it is clear that it was an usufructuary mortgage, and that the condition as to sale was void as a clog on redemption. This was so held in another very similar case.⁵³⁷ Where the terms of mortgage deed stated that the amount secured was to be redeemed within a stipulated period, the provision therein, that upon failure to redeem within the stipulated time, the mortgage shall be treated as a sale, would not have the effect of converting the mortgage from usufructuary to an anomalous one. In such a case, when there was no condition in the mortgage-deed that on expiry of stipulated period, the mortgage shall be deemed to be redeemed in full without payment whatsoever by the mortgagor, as required by section 165(b) of Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code, the mortgage could not be considered to be valid. The possession of the property mortgaged has to be given back to the mortgagor, under the aforesaid provisions. As the mortgage was void, the parties were liable to return to each other the benefits earned under the contract in view of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.⁵³⁸

Customary mortgages are mortgages to which special incidents are attached by local usage. Thus, otti and kanom mortgages cannot be redeemed before the expiry of 12 years in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary.⁵³⁹ The otti-holder has a right of pre-emption.⁵⁴⁰ The kanom partakes of the character of a mortgage and a lease.⁵⁴¹ Apemartham mortgage is redeemable for the market value of the land at the time of redemption.⁵⁴²

[s 58.63] Other Anomalous Mortgages

Other anomalous mortgages are very varied. Some are usufructuary mortgages with a covenant to pay,⁵⁴³ or with a time limit but which do not fall within the class of simple mortgage; usufructuary because neither the covenant, nor the time limit imports a right of sale. Instances of such mortgages are a mortgage with possession for three years, where the land is to be redeemed without payment at the expiry of that period,⁵⁴⁴ or a mortgage with possession for four years, where the mortgagee is to credit the rents and profits first to the interest, and then the balance, if any, towards the principal, and the mortgagor is to pay the deficiency at the end of the term,⁵⁴⁵ or a mortgage with possession for 10 years with the rent and profits to be in lieu of the principal and interest and the mortgagee's right is to cease at the end of the term,⁵⁴⁶ or a simple mortgage repayable in three years' time, but with a condition giving the mortgagee power of foreclosure at any time if a creditor brought a suit against the mortgagor, or attempted to attach his property,⁵⁴⁷ or to obtain proprietary possession of the mortgaged property by bringing a suit for a decree of foreclosure.⁵⁴⁸

Other instances of anomalous mortgages are a mortgage where possession was only partly given and there was no personal covenant to pay;⁵⁴⁹ and a mortgage which combines the elements of a simple mortgage, a usufructuary mortgage, and a mortgage by conditional sale.⁵⁵⁰ In the case last cited, there was a mortgage for three years; wherein, in default of redemption at the end of the term, the mortgagee was to be in possession for four years, and to take the rents and profits in lieu of interest; in default of redemption at the end of four years, the mortgage was to work itself out into a sale. In a Rangoon case,⁵⁵¹ a mortgage with a covenant to pay interest but no covenant to pay the principal, was treated as an anomalous mortgage. It is submitted, however, that the covenant to pay interest implied a covenant to pay principal. In another anomalous mortgage,⁵⁵² the mortgagee was to have possession and appropriate rents and profits towards the satisfaction of a certain rate of interest; the mortgagor was to redeem within eight years and in default, the mortgagee was to have the right to recover the total amount through the court by the sale of the property mortgaged, and by sale of the other property of the mortgagor.

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

⁵⁵⁴59. Mortgage when to be by assurance.—

Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage [⁵⁵⁵other than a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds] can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by ⁵⁵⁶[a registered instrument] signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

[s 59.1] Amendments

The words “other than a mortgage by deposit of title deeds” were inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The amendment makes no change in the law.

[s 59.2] Extent of Applicability

The section does not apply to territories excluded from the operation of the Registration Act, 1908. It has been extended to cantonments by section 2 of the Cantonments Act, 1924. If, however, the property mortgaged is situated in an area to which the Act has not been extended, the section does not apply even if the contract may have taken place in such an area.⁵⁵⁸An oral mortgage, even if the money secured exceeds ₹100, is valid where the Act does not apply. Hence, a mortgage that was effected before section 59 was made applicable to the state of Haryana was valid. Limitation for redemption of such a mortgage is 30 years from the date of mortgage under Article 61 of Limitation Act.⁵⁵⁹

This section has been extended to the states of Punjab, and Haryana, with effect from 6 June 1968 and 5 August 1967, respectively. The section does not embody a rule of justice, equity and good conscience and does not affect a mortgage executed before the section was enacted,⁵⁶⁰ or at a place where the section was not in force.⁵⁶¹

As a result of the extension of this section to the states of Haryana and Punjab, mortgages other than mortgages by deposit of title deeds can only be made by following the manner prescribed by the section. Mortgages by deposit of title deeds are not, however, affected. Such mortgages would be governed in Punjab

59. Mortgage when to be by assurance.—

by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. In Haryana, however, section 58(f) has also been extended with effect from 10 May 1972, and some towns notified, so that such mortgages can only be made if the deposit is made in the said towns.⁵⁶²

[s 59.3] Mode of Transfer

Besides deposit of title deeds, there are only two ways in which property may be transferred by way of mortgage, and these are:

- (1) Registered instrument; and
- (2) delivery of possession.

As in the case of sales, the first overlaps the second, for a mortgage for less than ₹100 may also be made by registered instrument. If the principal money secured is less than ₹100, a mortgage may be made by delivery of possession. But of course, this would not apply to a simple mortgage, for in such a mortgage, the mortgagor does not part with possession. A simple mortgage must always be registered.⁵⁶³ An oral mortgage effected by delivery of possession is entitled to precedence over a subsequently registered mortgage.⁵⁶⁴

Even an admission of a mortgage will not be sufficient to create a mortgage.⁵⁶⁵

Where a mortgage was created against a principal amount of ₹200 taken as loan, the mortgage deed was unregistered and unstamped, it was held that there was no valid mortgage, as section 59 of the TP Act, 1882 clearly lays down that where the principal money accrued is ₹100 or upwards, a mortgage, other than a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, can be affected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.⁵⁶⁶

[s 59.4] Transfer when Complete

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the completion of the mortgage does not depend upon the payment of consideration. The transfer takes effect on the execution of the deed of mortgage,⁵⁶⁷ or where there is no deed, when possession is delivered. Mere undertaking to create mortgage is not sufficient to create interest in any immoveable property.⁵⁶⁸

[s 59.5] Principal Money Secured

These words show that interest is not to be taken into account in estimating the amount secured,⁵⁶⁹ as is also the rule under the Registration Act, 1908.

[s 59.6] Registered Instrument

In the case of a mortgage other than a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, if the principal money secured is ₹100 or upwards, a registered instrument is necessary. The deeds must be—

- (1) signed by the mortgagor;

59. Mortgage when to be by assurance.—

- (2) attested by at least two witnesses;
- (3) registered.

[s 59.6.1] Signed by the mortgagor

The section does not expressly empower the mortgagor to sign by an agent as section 123 empowers a donor, but this is implied.⁵⁷⁰ The signature may be made by means of types or by a facsimile,⁵⁷¹ or, it may be a mark of an illiterate person.⁵⁷² But a literate person cannot sign by making a mark.⁵⁷³

[s 59.6.2] Attested

That requisition as to attestation was first made by TP Act, 1882.⁵⁷⁴ It is now clear that the requisition applies to anomalous mortgages, and this was so decided⁵⁷⁵ before anomalous mortgages were included in the definition in section 58. The requirement of attestation does not, of course, apply to instruments executed by courts.⁵⁷⁶ The definition includes attestation on admission of execution, and is retrospective. The word “attested” is defined in section 3 of the TP Act, 1882, and the question as to what constitutes a valid attestation is discussed in the note “Attested” under section 3. The mode of proving an attested document is laid down by sections 68 to 71 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. If execution of the instrument is denied specifically, it is necessary to call at least one attesting witness if there be one alive and subject to the process of the court. But even if execution is admitted, it is still incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the mortgage in the form prescribed by section 59, i.e., he must prove that it was attested by at least two witnesses.⁵⁷⁷ In a case from Patna, a pardahnashin lady admitted execution of a deed of mortgage, and the Patna High Court relying on section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 held the deed proved, although the attesting witnesses were on the other side of the purdah, and did not actually see her sign.⁵⁷⁸ But the Privy Council reversed the decision saying that section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 only applied to a document that was duly attested, and that as the mortgage deed was not attested within the meaning of section 59 of the TP Act, 1882, it was invalid as against her in spite of her admission.⁵⁷⁹ It does not matter that the unattested deed has been put in without objection in the lower court, for section 59 enacts a rule of law, and not a rule of evidence,⁵⁸⁰ but if the objection involves a question of facts it cannot be raised in second appeal.⁵⁸¹

If attestation is invalid the deed cannot operate as a mortgage. Nor can it operate as a charge, for the words in section 100 “and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage” do not mean that a transaction which purports to be a mortgage becomes, by reason of defective execution a charge.⁵⁸² However, the invalidly attested deed is admissible as evidence to prove the personal covenant to pay, and if there is no personal covenant, the obligee may sue for compensation or pursue his remedy under section 68 of the TP Act, 1882, for the Privy Council said that “the position of the mortgagor under this section cannot, by reason of the non-attestation of the deed, be better than it would have been if the mortgage had been duly attested”.⁵⁸³ So, where the deed was unattested, the mortgagor in his suit for redemption was allowed to amend the plaint, and sue on his title.⁵⁸⁴ However, if the deed is validly attested it cannot be proved except by the strict mode of proof required by section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and in default of such proof it cannot be used even as evidence of the personal obligation.⁵⁸⁵

Prior to the TP Act, 1882, a mortgage was not required to be in writing, and usufructuary mortgages in the mofussil were generally made without writing by simple delivery of possession.⁵⁸⁶ The Act as originally enacted made registration compulsory for all mortgages of ₹100 and over, but as to mortgages for less than ₹100, allowed either an instrument registered, or unregistered, or an oral transfer by delivery of possession where the mortgage was not a simple mortgage. This corresponded with the provisions for optional registration in the Registration Act, 1877. And under both Acts interest was not calculated in computing the value of the security.⁵⁸⁷ A simple mortgage for less than ₹100 could be made by an unregistered instrument.⁵⁸⁸

The word “registered” was inserted in the second clause of section 59 by Act 6 of 1904, which came into force on 11 March 1904. The amendment was made because the rule of priority of registered over unregistered instruments enacted in section 48 of the Registration Act had been construed by the courts as subject to the doctrine of notice. This doctrine had been expressly abolished as regards the early registration regulations by Act I of 1843, but the courts treated it as revived, as subsequent Registration Act did not expressly exclude it.⁵⁸⁹ The legislature considered that the application of the doctrine of notice opened the door to perjuries and other malpractices, and virtually abolished it by requiring all deeds of mortgage to be registered. The Amending Act 6 of 1904 thus abolished optional registration as regards mortgage deed, and the competition between registered and unregistered deeds under section 50 of the Registration Act cannot arise in respect of instruments of mortgage executed after 11 March 1904. Such competition may, however, still arise in places where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force. In Punjab, a mortgage for less than ₹100 could, before section 59 was extended, be made by unregistered instrument. The Lahore High Court had held that a subsequent registered mortgagee loses priority over a previous unregistered mortgagee if he receives notice of it before registration of his mortgage, even though he had no notice of it at the time of execution.⁵⁹⁰

An oral mortgage is invalid where it is alleged to be a usufructuary mortgage for ₹450.⁵⁹¹

In Sikkim, the TP Act, 1882 does not apply ex proprio vigore, and the provision in section 59 requiring a mortgage of the value of ₹100 or upwards to be effected by a registered instrument cannot be regarded as an embodiment of the rules of equity, justice, and good conscience. As regards the law of registration in Sikkim, though a document of sale or mortgage of immovable property would be compulsorily registrable under notification no 385/G dated 11 April 1928 and the rules relating to transfer of immovable property dated 18 January 1950, yet, under notification no 2947/G dated 22 November 1946, an unregistered document may be validated and admitted as evidence in a court of law to prove the title or other matters contained in the document on payment of a penalty upto 50 times the usual registration fees.⁵⁹²

[s 59.7] Registration Must be Valid

The registration must be valid according to the law in force in India (section 3). Thus, if the property is so incorrectly described that it cannot be identified,⁵⁹³ or when the registration has proceeded on a misdescription which is a fraud on the law of registration,⁵⁹⁴ or when the deed is registered in a circle in which the property is not situated,⁵⁹⁵ or an infinitesimal property not really intended to be transferred is inserted in the deed only for the purpose of creating jurisdiction in the registration district where the properties really intended to be transferred are situated,⁵⁹⁶ or is not presented for registration by the proper person,⁵⁹⁷ the mortgage is invalid. When both a sale deed and an agreement to reconvey are executed with the intention that the transaction should be a mortgage, both the deeds must be registered.⁵⁹⁸

A mortgage deed invalid for want of registration cannot operate as a charge,⁵⁹⁹ but it would be admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose to prove the nature and character of the possession under the Privy Council ruling in Varatha Filial v Jeevarathammal.⁶⁰⁰ Following this ruling, it has been held that a plaintiff may sue on title for possession after he had executed a usufructuary mortgage which was invalid for want of registration,⁶⁰¹ or use the unregistered deed to defeat the defendant's claim to title by adverse possession.⁶⁰² In an Allahabad case,⁶⁰³ a defendant who had been 12 years in possession under a usufructuary mortgage which was invalid for want of registration was held to have acquired a legally operative mortgage by adverse possession. Under section 53A and the proviso to section 49 of the Registration Act, 1908, a mortgage invalid for want of registration is available to a usufructuary mortgagee to protect his possession. A mortgagor cannot file a suit for redemption in the case of a mortgage which is invalid for want of registration. If the mortgage is usufructuary, the proper course is to treat the mortgagee as a trespasser, and to sue for eviction.⁶⁰⁴

Again an unregistered mortgage deed, though invalid as a mortgage may be used to prove the debt. It has been held that if the personal covenant to pay is separable from the creation of the security, it may be used to support a personal claim for the debt;⁶⁰⁵ but not if the transaction is indivisible and if the loan and the mortgage cannot be separated.⁶⁰⁶ Two Madras cases to the contrary are, it is submitted, unsound. In the first,⁶⁰⁷ the mortgage bond was not admitted even as evidence on an express contract to pay contained in the deed, and in the other⁶⁰⁸ it was not admitted even as evidence of a stipulation to pay compound interest. However, an oral

usufructuary mortgage for a sum over ₹100 is void, and no suit for the redemption of such a mortgage, and the recovery of possession can lie.⁶⁰⁹ However, if possession is delivered to the mortgagee under an oral mortgage such a mortgagee cannot hold the possession adversely to the mortgagor and the mortgagor though cannot regain possession on the strength of the mortgage as it is unregistered, can still do it as the owner of the property.⁶¹⁰

[s 59.9] Effect of Registration

A mortgage does not become complete and enforceable until it is registered. Therefore, if a mortgage is impeached as a fraudulent preference, the time of three months under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act runs from the date of registration.⁶¹¹ But registration does not suspend the operation of the mortgage and under section 47 of the Registration Act, as soon as it is registered it takes effect from the date of execution. Therefore, if the property is attached after the date of execution of a mortgage, but before the date of registration, the mortgage will not be invalid as against claims enforceable under the attachment.⁶¹² This is because an attachment does not affect a subsequent alienation.

When the mortgage and the terms of the mortgage are admitted in the pleading, it has been held that a suit for redemption will lie even though the deed is not registered.⁶¹³ On the other hand, if a person suing to enforce a claim arising out of a mortgage admits that the deed of mortgage has been altered by a subsequent verbal arrangement, he can neither prove the verbal arrangement, nor succeed on the footing that the transaction is governed by the mortgage.⁶¹⁴ If the mortgagee remains in possession of the mortgaged property for 12 years on the basis of a usufructuary mortgage deed which is not registered, the mortgagee prescribes to himself for a valid mortgagee's title; he does not acquire full title to the property.⁶¹⁵

The section has no application to a mortgage of movable property. A mortgage of movable property does not require registration or attestation.⁶¹⁶

⁶¹⁷[59A. References to mortgagors and mortgagees to include persons deriving title from them.—

Unless otherwise expressly provided, references in this Chapter to mortgagors and mortgagees shall be deemed to include references to persons deriving title from them respectively.]

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 to make it clear that the words “mortgagor” and “mortgagee” include all persons deriving title under them. These words were so used even before the amendment.⁶¹⁸ Even ignoring the amendment brought about by section 59A, the general position is that in the absence of any strong contra indication, a mortgagee would include the assignee of a mortgagee. Thus, the term mortgagee as contained in explanation IV to section 2(25) of the Kerala Land Reforms Act, was held to include the assignee mortgagee as well, subject of course, to his satisfying other conditions indicated in that provision.⁶¹⁹

The Privy Council in Muhammad Sidiq v Muhammad Nasirullah,⁶²⁰ treated the words as including the heirs of mortgagor, and of the mortgagee. The word “mortgagor”, however, does not include a transferee of the mortgagor in section 68(a), as the transferee of the mortgagor is not bound by the mortgagor’s personal covenant.⁶²¹ This is shown by the words “mortgagor himself” used in that section. However, in clause (c) of that section, a subsequent purchaser would be included.⁶²² The section refers to such persons as heirs, executors, and administrators who derive their title from a mortgagor or a mortgagee.⁶²³ A recital in a mortgage deed regarding the payment of consideration is, therefore, held binding on a subsequent purchase of the mortgagor or his representative in title to the extent to which it was binding on the mortgagor himself.⁶²⁴ In Thankamony v Retnam Nadathy,⁶²⁵ after the death of the mortgagor, his widow and the daughter filed a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee contested the suit challenging the status of the widow and of the daughter asking them to prove the same through a valid marriage and through the paternity determination. The court held that a mortgagee cannot be allowed to raise an inconsistent plea of unmarried status of the mortgagor or that of determination of paternity of the child, more so when the marriage was proved. A person who has purchased the right of redemption from the original mortgagor by a registered document, can claim that any question relating to the right of redemption in a suit for redemption must be determined by the court. The plaintiff in such a suit is entitled to demonstrate how the suit is not premature, as the minimum period of non-redemption provided in the mortgage deed is a clog on the equity of redemption and is, therefore, void.⁶²⁶ In a Madras case, the auction purchasers purchased one-third share of the mortgagor in mortgaged items of properties, despite their having been made aware of the subsistence of the mortgage. Later on, when some of the purchasers instituted a partition suit, they as well as the other auction purchaser were put on notice of the subsistence of the mortgage, and were warned of the consequences of any collusive arrangement. Despite the notices, the litigant purchasers brought about a compromise partition decree. In this decree, the mortgaged items of properties were allotted to the other parties and some other items of properties (which, according to the mortgagee, were worthless) were allotted to the mortgagors. These materials were held to establish the commission of fraud by the mortgagors and the purchasers. It was held that in such circumstances, the normally available right of the co-sharers of asking for a partition of the mortgaged items free of mortgage, cannot be claimed by such purchasers. The resultant position would be that the mortgagee would be entitled to ignore the partition decree, and to enforce the mortgage against the one-third share of the mortgagor.⁶²⁷

For the purposes of section 59A, the transfer may be a voluntary, or an involuntary transfer such as a court sale.⁶²⁸

A charge holder cannot be equated with a purchaser of mortgage-security. In a charge there is no transfer of any interest in the property, but only creation of a right of payment out of the property specified. Therefore, a subsequent charge-holder in respect of a mortgaged property is not “a person deriving title from” the mortgagor within the meaning of section 59A so as to be liable to be sued in a suit for enforcement of the mortgage-security.⁶²⁹

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

At any time after the principal money has become ⁶³⁰[due] the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage-money, to require the mortgagee (a) to deliver ⁶³¹[to the mortgagor the mortgage-deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee] (b) where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor, and (c) at the cost of the mortgagor either to re-transfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct, or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished.

Provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by the act of the parties or by ⁶³²[decree] of a Court.

The right conferred by this section is called a right to redeem and a suit to enforce it is called a suit for redemption.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid any provision to the effect that, if the time fixed for payment of the principal money has been allowed to pass or no such time has been fixed, the mortgagee shall be entitled to reasonable notice before payment or tender of such money.

Redemption of portion of mortgaged property.—Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except ⁶³³[only] where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor.

The section has been amended by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 60.2] Right of Redemption

The mortgagor in Indian law is the owner who had parted with some rights of ownership, and the right of redemption is a right which he exercises by virtue of his residuary ownership to resume what he has parted with.

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

Section 60 provides that at any time after the money becomes due, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage-money to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property, and where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor.⁶³⁷ Such a right of the mortgagor is called, in English law, the equity of redemption. The mortgagor being an owner who has parted with some rights of ownership has a right to get back the mortgage deed or mortgaged property, in exercise of his right of ownership. The right of redemption recognised under the TP Act, 1882 is thus a statutory and legal right which cannot be extinguished by any agreement made at the time of mortgage as part of the mortgage consideration.⁶³⁸ It is well settled that the right of the mortgagor to deal with the mortgaged property as well as the limitation to which it is subject depends upon the nature of this ownership which is not absolute, but qualified by reason of the right of the mortgagee to recover his money out of the proceedings. The right to redeem the mortgage is a very valuable right possessed by the mortgagor. Such a right to redeem the mortgage can be exercised before it is foreclosed, or the estate is sold. Thus where in exercise of its right to sell the property of defaulting debtor, the Financial Corporation (mortgagee), accepted the offer of prospective purchaser but no sale deed was executed between the two, the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property is not lost.⁶³⁹ The equitable right of redemption is dependent on the mortgagor giving the mortgagee reasonable notice of his intention to redeem, and on his fully performing his obligations under the mortgage.⁶⁴⁰ A mortgagor has the right to make all efforts to save his right of redemption in the property.⁶⁴¹

The right of redemption is an incident of a subsisting mortgage, and subsists so long as the mortgage itself subsists. It can be extinguished as provided in the section and when it is alleged to be extinguished by a decree, the decree should run strictly in accordance with the form prescribed for the purpose.⁶⁴² Dismissal of an earlier suit for redemption whether as abated or as withdrawn or in default would not debar the mortgagor from filing a second suit for redemption so long as the mortgage subsists, and the right of redemption is not extinguished by the efflux of time, or by a decree of the court in the prescribed form.⁶⁴³

Right of redemption as a statutory right continues in mortgage even though the mortgagor fails to pay the debt on the due date. It is an incident of a subsisting mortgage and subsists so long as the mortgage itself subsists and stands extinguished on execution of conveyance and the registration of transfer of the mortgagor's interest by registered instrument or by decree of a court. The dismissal of an earlier suit for redemption does not debar the mortgagor from filing a second suit for redemption during subsistence of mortgage. If the right of redemption is alleged to have been extinguished by a decree, the decree should run strictly in accordance with the form prescribed for the purpose. A borrower has a right to redeem the property at any time before the date the property is transferred to auction purchaser by confirmation of sale by secured creditor. The right of the mortgagor to redeem can be enforced in case of discharge of contract by accord and satisfaction. Where the bank entered into negotiation for settlement of debts owned by the company and accepted the sum offered by the company, the company in exercise of its rights of ownership has a right to get back the mortgage deed and /or other documents once the loan is liquidated and the bank has a corresponding statutory obligation to return such documents relating to mortgaged property and hypothecated goods and cannot withhold securities.⁶⁴⁴ Where an application for passing final decree in first suit and condoning delay was dismissed, but the suit was within time, a second suit for redemption would be maintainable and would not be hit by the rule of res judicata. The mortgage debt is discharged and rights are determined and if transaction is within the period of limitation, any number of suits can be filed.⁶⁴⁵ In absence of any evidence that the mortgage was for a fixed period, no limitation would apply to this right of the mortgagor to redeem the mortgaged property and the same can be redeemed at any time and the principle that once a mortgage always a mortgage would apply.⁶⁴⁶

A redemption pre-supposes the existence of a “mortgage”. As defined in the TP Act, 1882, a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of a loan. It is created by the act of parties. In an usufructuary mortgage, a transfer is made of the right of possession and enjoyment of the usufruct. The rights of a usufructuary mortgagee forms part of the bundle which constitute ownership. The remainder still remains with the mortgagor, and can be transferred by him. The mortgagor’s right is as indicated in section 60 of the TP Act, 1882, i.e., after the principal money has become due, the mortgagor has a right to pay the mortgage money and on such payment, he has the right to require the mortgagee to deliver possession.⁶⁴⁷ This right cannot be extinguished except by the act of parties or by a decree of a court. This right is called the right to redeem, and a suit to enforce it, is called a suit for redemption. Thus, the scope of a suit for redemption is primarily to enforce the right to make a payment of the mortgage-money. A claim to redeem a mortgage actually does not attach to the land, although the decree passed in the suit may ultimately affect possession which is also an interest in land.⁶⁴⁸

The section is not prefaced by any such words as “in the absence of a contract to the contrary.” The right of redemption is, therefore, a statutory right which cannot be fettered by any condition which impedes or prevents redemption.⁶⁴⁹ The section further explains when the right of redemption arises; how the right of redemption is exercised, and what are the mortgagor’s rights on redemption. Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specific period.⁶⁵⁰ A mortgagee’s suit for sale was compromised on terms that the mortgagor should pay within a specified time and that in default, the mortgagee should take possession as usufructuary mortgagee; and that thereafter the mortgagor should have a right to redeem at any time taking out execution. The Madras High Court held that this term of the consent decree was invalid, as it had the effect of reducing the time for redemption from 60 years to three years.⁶⁵¹ On appeal to the Privy Council, the point did not arise as their Lordships held that on a proper construction of the decree, it did not exclude the mortgagor’s remedy by suit.⁶⁵² A mere agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee by which the mortgagor agrees to convey certain lands to the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage does not extinguish the mortgage.⁶⁵³ The Supreme Court has held that the right of redemption under a mortgage deed can come to an end only in a manner known to law. A mortgagee in possession of the property will have to deliver possession to the mortgagor when a suit of redemption is filed, unless he is able to show that the right of redemption has come to an end, or that a suit is liable to be dismissed on some other valid ground.⁶⁵⁴

The mortgagor’s right of redemption is exercised by the payment or tender to the mortgagee at the proper time and at the proper place, of the mortgage money. When it is extinguished by the act of parties, the act must take the shape and observe the formalities which the law prescribes. The expression “act of Parties” refers to some transaction subsequent to the mortgage, and standing apart from the mortgage transaction. A usufructuary mortgagee cannot by mere assertion of his own or by a unilateral action on his part, convert his position on moiety of the property as mortgagee into that of an absolute owner.⁶⁵⁵ The right to redeem follows the interest of the mortgagor, and can be exercised by him and also by those taking the whole of his interest, whether by assignment inter vivos, or by devolution on death.⁶⁵⁶ In accordance with sections 47 and 48 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the right of redemption can be claimed after the death of the mortgagor by his legal heirs. Where the mortgagor, a Christian by religion, was not heard as alive for the past 15 years and his mother’s sister’s son applied as a relative in nearest degree of kindred to redeem the mortgage, he would be so entitled to do so.⁶⁵⁷

The Act is not applicable to the manner of execution of mortgage executed prior to the commencement of the Act. The right of redemption can always be exercised by the mortgagor and therefore a suit of mortgage filed in 1968 under a mortgage executed in 1880 would be decreed in his favour.⁶⁵⁸ The doctrine of equity of redemption is applicable to a mortgage executed in 1924 in the erstwhile state of Talchir.⁶⁵⁹

The mortgagor’s right of redemption and the mortgagee’s right of foreclosure or sale are co-extensive. When the mortgagor’s right to redeem accrues, the mortgagee has a right to enforce his security.⁶⁶⁰ The rule may be limited, however, by the terms of the mortgage and if the limitation is not oppressive or unreasonable, it will be given effect to. Thus, when a mortgage for a fixed term provided that the mortgagee might sue for sale before the expiry of the term if his security were jeopardised, it was held that the right of redemption was not accelerated.⁶⁶¹ It has been held that the mortgagor can adopt the course provided under section 60 only before the mortgagee has filed a suit for enforcement of the mortgage.⁶⁶² Where the right to repay the loan arises immediately after execution of mortgage, the right to foreclose it is also simultaneous and can be exercised within a period of 12 years from the date it arose failing which it would be barred by law of limitation.⁶⁶³

A mortgage being a security for the debt, the right of redemption continues, although the mortgagor fails to pay the debt at the due date. Any provision inserted to prevent, evade, or hamper redemption, is void.

The doctrine has been described as an anachronism by Pollock,⁶⁶⁴ who suggested that it be moulded for modern conditions by limiting it to cases where there was something oppressive or unconscionable in the bargain. However, it is settled law in India (by statute) that a mortgage cannot be made altogether irredeemable (except companies), nor can the right of redemption be made illusory. The test suggested by Pollock has, however, been generally applied in determining whether conditions which directly or indirectly fetter or limit the right to redeem, violate the doctrine. In Seth Ganga Dhar v Shankar Lal,⁶⁶⁵ J Sarkar explained the basis of the right of the court to intervene thus:

The reason then justifying the court's power to relieve a mortgagor from the effects of his bargain is its want of conscience. Putting it in a more familiar language, the court's jurisdiction to relieve a mortgagor from his bargain depends on whether it was attained by taking advantage of any difficulty or embarrassment that he might have been in when he borrowed the moneys on the mortgage. Was the mortgagor oppressed? Was he imposed upon? If he was, then he may be entitled to relief.

The doctrine does not apply if the transaction is not in its essence a mortgage. Thus, where the transaction gives an option to purchase property, the sole consideration being the loan of a sum of money secured on the property during the continuance of the option, the transaction is the sale of an option, the consideration being the use of the money free of interest.⁶⁶⁶

The doctrine applies to anomalous mortgages.⁶⁶⁷ There were some decisions to the contrary when the definition of anomalous mortgages was in a later section;⁶⁶⁸ but these are over ruled by the Privy Council in Mohammed Sher Khan v Seth Swami Dayal.⁶⁶⁹ Even before this decision, the doctrine was applied to simple mortgages usufructuary, which were not then classed as anomalous.⁶⁷⁰ This doctrine also applies to a transaction by which the mortgagor transferred his equity of redemption to the transferee in consideration of a loan; a clause in the said transaction by which the transferee had an option to purchase, was held void.⁶⁷¹

[s 60.6] Companies

The Companies Act, 1956, provides that a debenture may be irredeemable, or redeemable only on the happening of a remote contingency or after a very long period. In view of the very wide definition of 'debenture' in the Companies Act, 1956, almost every kind of instrument executed by or on behalf of a company which acknowledges the indebtedness of the company, even if it does not create a security on the company's property, it would be a debenture. It follows, therefore, that any mortgage by a company would be a debenture, and that such mortgages may be irredeemable. This has been held by the House of Lords in *Knights-bridge Estates Trust v Byrne*⁶⁷² where Lord Maugham expressed the view that there was nothing unfair in this exception. It is submitted that the same view would be adopted in India, as the provisions of the Companies

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

Act, 1956, being both a later Act and a special Act, would prevail over section 60 of the TP Act, 1882.⁶⁷³

[s 60.7] Doctrine of Clog on Equity

The doctrine of a clog on the equity of redemption is a rule of justice, equity, and good conscience—this has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court in Murarilal v Dev Karan.⁶⁷⁴ Chief Justice Gajendragadkar delivering the judgment of the court, observed that there was a long line of authorities in India in which it had been so held, notwithstanding the decisions of the Privy Council in two cases.⁶⁷⁵ It follows that the doctrine is applicable in an area where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force.⁶⁷⁶ The Supreme Court has held that, it is a settled law in England and in India that a mortgage cannot be made altogether irredeemable, or redemption made illusory. The law must respond, and be responsive to the felt and discernible compulsions of circumstances that would be equitable, fair and just; unless there is anything to the contrary in the statute. Law must take cognisance of that fact, and act accordingly. In the context of fast changing circumstances and economic stability, a long term for redemption makes an illusory mortgage, though not decisive. It should prima facie be an indication as to how clogs on equity of redemption should be judged.⁶⁷⁷

Though the TP Act, 1882 does not apply to Sikkim, the courts should apply the principle contained in section 60 and strike down a clog on the right of redemption, since the principle ‘once a mortgage always a mortgage’ is a rule of justice, equity, and good conscience.⁶⁷⁸

The term in the mortgage deed that the land is irredeemable for 95 years is a clog on the equity of redemption.⁶⁷⁹ In *Shivdev Singh v Sucha Singh*⁶⁸⁰ the Supreme Court refused to interfere with the finding of the High Court holding that on the facts of the case, the mortgage deed providing a period of 99 years was a clog on equity of redemption. Whether in a particular transaction there is a clog on the equity of redemption, depends primarily upon the period of redemption, the circumstances under which the mortgage was created, the economic and financial position of the mortgagor and his relationship vis-a-vis him and the mortgagee, the economic and social conditions in a particular country at a particular point of time, custom, if any prevalent in the community or the society in which the transaction takes place, and the totality of the circumstances under which a mortgage is created, namely, circumstances of the parties, the time, the situation, the clauses for redemption either for payment of interest or any other sum, the obligation of the mortgagee to construct or repair or maintain the mortgaged property in cases of usufructuary mortgage, to manage as a matter of prudent management; these factors must be correlated to each other and viewed in a comprehensive conspectus in the background of the facts and circumstances of each case, to determine whether there are clogs on equity of redemption.⁶⁸¹ A long term of redemption is not necessarily a clog; whether a particular term of redemption operates as a clog is to be considered having regard to the circumstances of the case.⁶⁸²

The decision as to what amounts to a clog on the equity of redemption is a question of fact in each case.

[s 60.8] Condition of Sale in Default

A condition converting a mortgage into a sale is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption.⁶⁸³ In a case before the Supreme Court relating to a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagor was given four years’ time from the date of execution of the deed of mortgage to repay the same. However, another clause provided that if the mortgagee received notice of re-entry from a public authority for breach of covenants of the lease before the expiry of four years, then the transfer in favour of the mortgagee shall be made absolute, and the expenses shall be borne by the mortgagor. This was held to be a clog on the equity of redemption.⁶⁸⁴ A condition that ‘if we do not pay your amount by the due date, we agree to this document being treated as a sale deed’, was held to be a clog on the equity of redemption, and the document was held to be a mortgage.⁶⁸⁵ A stipulation in a mortgage deed, that if the property is not redeemed within one year then, the mortgage shall be turned into a sale,⁶⁸⁶ or an agreement that in default of payment on the date fixed, the mortgagor shall sell the property to the mortgagee at a price to be fixed by an umpire is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption,⁶⁸⁷ or a stipulation in a mortgage deed giving a right to the mortgagee to purchase a part or interest in the mortgaged property, or a stipulation giving him a right of pre-emption at a fixed price which is not fair, is a clog on the equity of redemption.⁶⁸⁸ Similarly, a condition allowing the mortgagee to enter into possession as a tenant in case of default,⁶⁸⁹ or a condition in a usufructuary mortgage for a fixed term that in default it should work itself out into a sale,⁶⁹⁰ or that part of the land mortgaged should not be returned on redemption,⁶⁹¹ or that the mortgagor shall not be entitled to get possession of the property mortgaged under a previous usufructuary mortgage, unless he paid the money due under the subsequent mortgage⁶⁹² would be a condition preventing redemption and therefore void. A condition of mortgagee getting his name mutated if the mortgage is not redeemed within four months, is a clog on equity of redemption.⁶⁹³

A clause in a compromise decree in a mortgage suit under which the mortgagee was entitled to take possession if payment was not made in eight months was held not to be a clog, as the Code of Civil Procedure provided a period of six months.⁶⁹⁴ A stipulation in a mortgage deed that after the deposit of the title deeds in suits in which the mortgaged property was involved, the mortgagor would execute a deed of sale in favour of the mortgagee, failing which the mortgagee can have the sale deed executed in his favour through the court, is a clog, and is void.⁶⁹⁵ Where a provision in a mortgage deed being a clog on the equity of redemption is void and unenforceable as against the mortgagor, it can have no more binding force against the assignee of the mortgage.⁶⁹⁶

[s 60.9] Subsequent Sale Valid

A condition of sale is a clog, if it is part and parcel of the mortgage transaction. However, subsequent to the mortgage, the mortgagee may stipulate for the purchase of the property from the mortgagor.⁶⁹⁷ In Shankar Din v Gokal Prasad,⁶⁹⁸ the Privy Council said that there was nothing in law to prevent the parties to a mortgage from coming to a subsequent arrangement qualifying the right of redemption. A separate transaction dehors the mortgage, and is not a clog and may have the effect of extinguishing the equity of redemption.⁶⁹⁹

The mortgage further provided that if the mortgage was not redeemed within a period of 20 years from the due date, the mortgagee should treat the land as sold to him absolutely. This provision was invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption and the mortgage was redeemable even after the period of 20 years.⁷⁰⁰

(2) A mortgaged his land to B with possession and the mortgage provided that in default of redemption after 20 years, B should be owner of half the land. This provision was a clog on the equity of redemption. But four years after the expiry of the period of 20 years while B was still in possession, A executed a deed by which half the land was conveyed to B, and B released the other half from the mortgage. This was an arrangement for the discharge of the mortgage and was valid.⁷⁰¹

In a case where the mortgage provided that in default of payment, the mortgagee should become absolute owner and the mortgagor in ignorance of his rights, surrendered the land to the mortgagee, the court could, give no relief. This was really a surrender subsequent to the mortgage, which the court could not set aside as there was no fraud.⁷⁰² But a mere admission that the mortgagee had become owner will not destroy the equity of redemption.⁷⁰³ Nor is the mortgage extinguished by an understanding that the mortgage has been converted into a sale, if such understanding and conduct is solely due to the gahan lahan clause, and not any transaction independent of the mortgage.⁷⁰⁴

[s 60.10] Stipulation to Demolish Structure

A stipulation in the mortgage deed authorizing the mortgagee to demolish the existing structure and construct new ones at the cost of the mortgagor may amount to clog. In Pomal Kanji Govindji v Vrajlal Karsandas Purohit,⁷⁰⁵ the mortgagee was, by the mortgage, given the right to demolish the existing structure and to construct a new one, the expenses to be reimbursed by the mortgagor at the time of redemption. It was found that the mortgagor was financially hard-pressed. The terms were held to be unreasonable and unconscionable, and to constitute a clog on the equity of redemption, and therefore, not binding.⁷⁰⁶

[s 60.11] Condition Postponing Redemption in Case of Default

Conditions postponing redemption in case of default is a clog on the equity of redemption, and is invalid. In Mohammed Sher Khan v Seth Swami Dayal,⁷⁰⁷ the mortgage was for a term of five years with a condition that if the money was not paid, the mortgagee might enter into possession for a period of 12 years during which the mortgagor could not redeem. The Privy Council held that the condition hindered an existing right to redeem and was, therefore, invalid. Again, a condition that in default the mortgage should be renewed for a period of 40 years, is invalid.⁷⁰⁸ The Allahabad High Court has said that no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what is improper restraint on alienation, and upheld a condition that in default of redemption on due date, the mortgage should not be redeemable for a further period of 20 years.⁷⁰⁹ It is submitted that this decision is inconsistent with Mohammed Sher Khan's case.⁷¹⁰ In a Bombay case,⁷¹¹ the mortgage was for a term of 21 years in order that the mortgagee should plant an orchard, but there was a condition that in default of redemption at the expiry of 21 years, the mortgagee should be allowed to retain possession as long as the trees bore fruit. The condition was not enforced as the mortgagor was an agriculturist within the Dakkan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

[s 60.12] Terms for Redemption

Where the mortgagor allows the normal limitation period to expire, he can then only file a suit on the basis of deferred date of redemption. But he will be precluded from saying that the deferred date amounts to clog on redemption.⁷¹²

[s 60.13] Penalty in Case of Default

A stipulation for a penalty in case of default is relieved against. Thus, a stipulation that in case of default one murra of rice was to be paid for every rupee of the debt, was set aside as unreasonable.⁷¹³ But if there is no question of penalty, stipulation for enhanced interest or for compound interest from date of default are valid;⁷¹⁴ but if the original rate of interest is high, a stipulation for compound interest in default may be a penalty.⁷¹⁵ A stipulation for enhanced interest from the date of the bond would always be a penalty.⁷¹⁶

If there is no undue influence or unfair dealing, a high rate of interest is not a clog.⁷¹⁷ The court cannot, except under the provisions of The Usurious Loans Act, 1918, give relief against excessive interest.⁷¹⁸ However, 24% with six-monthly interest in a deed of further charge, has been relieved against;⁷¹⁹ so also, where the interest at 24% was coupled with a long term (49 years).⁷²⁰ A usufructuary mortgagee may of course, stipulate for interest as well as for profits.⁷²¹

[s 60.14] Restraint of Alienation

A condition restraining alienation by the mortgagor is a clog on the equity of redemption, for it will not recognize the transferee as having acquired the right of redemption.⁷²² So also is a stipulation that the mortgagor shall redeem without having recourse to a loan from anybody.⁷²³ However, a stipulation that the mortgagor might redeem before due date, if he could do so without alienating other property was upheld as a special concession personal to the mortgagor, and not available to his assignee.⁷²⁴

[s 60.15] Long Term

A long term for redemption is not necessarily a clog on the equity of redemption.⁷²⁵ Indeed, a long term may suit both parties, relieving the mortgagor of the necessity of finding another creditor, and being a long-term investment for the mortgagee. In India, terms of a longer duration have been upheld, and this principle has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court in Seth Ganga Dhar v Shankar Lal,⁷²⁶ in which a term of 85 years was upheld. Instances of other cases are set out below.⁷²⁷ However, a term of 200 years has been held to be a clog.⁷²⁸ But if there are circumstances which indicate that the length of the term is unreasonable or oppressive, redemption has been allowed before the expiry of the term.⁷²⁹ A mere long period for redemption would not amount to a clog on the equity of redemption, in the absence of other evidence showing that the mortgagee had taken undue advantage of his position as lender.⁷³⁰ Mortgage deed providing for a redemption period of 99 years is not per se void ab initio. On the facts of the case, the court on being approached may hold it to be unequitable, and declare it to be a clog on the equity of redemption.⁷³¹ In a 99-years mortgage, a suit filed before 99 years but after 30 years from the date of mortgage deed and without any prayer for lifting of clog on equity of redemption, could be resisted by the mortgagee only on the ground that it was premature.⁷³² In a Punjab and Haryana case, there was a usufructuary mortgage of land with possession. The mortgagor was allowed to redeem only after 90 years. The mortgage amount was not less than the market value of the land at the relevant time. There was no allegation of fraud, or undue influence. It was held that in these circumstances, the long term of 90 years was not a clog on the equity of redemption.⁷³³

Postponement or redemption for a long time, may constitute a clog on the equity of redemption depending upon the facts and circumstances of a case. It will be necessary in this context to consider, besides other factors, the amount advanced under the mortgage, the nature of the security offered by the mortgagor, the circumstances in which the mortgagor was compelled to secure the amount, the terms and conditions on which the amount was, in fact, advanced and the other alternatives to which the mortgagor could have taken recourse for obtaining the same advance. Applying this test, in a Gujarat case, a condition postponing redemption was held to be a clog on the facts of the case. The mortgagor was a childless widow, who had mortgaged the property in question for 199 years to secure a debt of ₹61 in 1909, although it was not customary or necessary to submit to such a long term. The mortgagee, who was the owner of the adjacent property, obtained a collateral advantage of beneficial enjoyment in respect of his own property for a long period of time, to the detriment of the mortgagor. Further, under the mortgage, the mortgagee was entitled to raise any construction and the mortgagor was, at the time of redemption, bound to pay the costs of the construction. Viewed along with all these circumstances, the longtime of redemption, being unconscionable, was held to constitute a clog.⁷³⁴

A mortgaged his property to B by an usufructuary mortgage for a term of 101 years. The mortgage provided that A should be liable for interest at 8 ½% and that B should take the rents and profits; that if the rents and profits exceed the interest, B should take the surplus but that if the rents and profits were less than the interest, A was liable for the deficit; and that at the expiry of the term, A should be entitled to redeem on payment of three times the principal money. These provisions rendered redemption onerous and difficult without any corresponding benefit to the mortgagor. A was entitled to an account and redemption before the expiry of the term.⁷³⁵

On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court had held that a long period even though coupled with onerous and oppressive terms, affords no ground for interference, unless there has been coercion, fraud or undue influence.⁷³⁶ This decision is no longer good law in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Seth Ganga Dhar v Shankar Lal.⁷³⁷ In another case, the same High Court held that a condition in a mortgage that if the mortgagee construed a new building by demolishing an old one which was a kutchha structure, the mortgagor would pay the cost of its construction at the time of redemption, was not a clog.⁷³⁸ If there is a long term without a mutual provision for the continuance of the loan, as when the right of redemption is postponed and the mortgagee is given the right to call in his money at any time, the stipulation for postponement becomes unilateral, void of consideration and invalid. This is because the right of redemption and the right for foreclosure, are coextensive.⁷³⁹ So an arbitrary stipulation that the mortgagor shall redeem only when the mortgagee demands his money is void;⁷⁴⁰ and a covenant by the mortgagor for the perpetual renewal of the mortgage is inoperative.⁷⁴¹

In Hira Kuar v Gambhir Singh,⁷⁴² a mortgage for a term of 40 years stipulated that in default of payment of interest for any one year, the mortgagee would be entitled to sue at once for the mortgage money, and it was held that this provision gave the mortgagor, a right to redeem before the expiry of the fixed period. So also, a condition in a mortgage deed that so long as the mortgage money was kept with the mortgagor, he would pay interest to the mortgagee's wife, did not preclude the mortgagor from filing a suit for redemption earlier.⁷⁴³ However, a right to sue for the mortgage-money in case the security is endangered, is not oppressive so as to accelerate the right of redemption.⁷⁴⁴

It has been said that a long term in a usufructuary mortgage is less likely to operate as a clog on redemption, as redemption is effected upon payment of a fixed sum, and there is no danger of arrears of interest exceeding the value of the property.⁷⁴⁵ A term of 95 years with a condition that interest should be paid only with the principal,⁷⁴⁶ or a condition that a usufructuary mortgage should be redeemed on a particular day 60 years later, and on no other day, is void as a clog on redemption.⁷⁴⁷ However, a condition that the mortgage could only be redeemed during the month of Vaisakh was upheld.⁷⁴⁸ A covenant in a mortgage for possession for 51 years, together with a high rate of interest and also a covenant that the expenses of repairs be added to the mortgage-money, were not held to be a clog on redemption.⁷⁴⁹ A condition in a mortgage which seeks to take away the right of redemption even before the period of four years within which the mortgagor was entitled to pay off the mortgage debt had run out, is obviously a clog on the equity of redemption. In this case, the condition was that on the mortgagor receiving notice of re-entry from the land and development officer or any such authority for breach of a covenant of the lease before the said period of four years, "the transfer hereby made shall be absolutely in favour of the mortgagee...".⁷⁵⁰ A mere long term of redemption postponing the right of redemption for a given number of years may not, in itself, amount to a clog on the equity of redemption. But such a term, if coupled with any other condition that authorises the mortgagee in possession so to convert the property mortgaged in the meantime as to make it practically impossible for the original mortgagor to redeem the property, may be regarded as a clog.⁷⁵¹

The later pronouncements appear to be in favour of treating long term mortgages as clog on the right of the mortgagor to redeem his property. The apex court has observed,⁷⁵²

A mortgage cannot be made altogether irredeemable or redemption made illusory. In the context of fast changing circumstances and economic stability, long-term for redemption makes a mortgage an illusory mortgage, though not decisive. It should prima facie be an indication as to how clogs on equity of redemption should be judged.

[s 60.16] Collateral Benefit to the Mortgagee

A collateral stipulation is objectionable only if it is unfair and unconscionable, i.e., imposed in a merely reprehensible manner, and not merely if it is unreasonable. A stipulation for repayment in foreign currency is not a clog, even if the value of the named foreign currency has multiplied.⁷⁵³

In India, a collateral advantage that extends beyond the period of redemption is invalid. Chief Justice Sargent set aside a permanent lease granted by a mortgagor to a mortgagee on the ground that the parties were not in a position to deal on equal terms.⁷⁵⁴ A condition that after redemption the mortgagee should continue in possession as a permanent tenant is invalid, as it prevents the mortgagor from getting back the property free and unfettered.⁷⁵⁵ Such a condition is a clog on the equity of redemption, and it does not cease to be a clog merely because the mortgagor was not in a difficult or embarrassed situation, or because those conditions were not imposed by the mortgagee forcibly.⁷⁵⁶ A mortgagee tenant cannot be permitted to act contrary to terms and conditions of mortgage deed. When at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed, it was agreed by the parties that at the time of the redemption of mortgage, the mortgagee would hand over the possession, he would be bound by it and the court would pass a decree of redemption against such mortgagee directing him to take the mortgage money and hand over the possession of shop to the mortgagor.⁷⁵⁷ Similarly, where the mortgage deed contained a specific statement that the tenant had surrendered the tenancy rights and become mortgagees of the property and thus the substance of the mortgage deed clearly established that effects of this deed was inconsistent with continuance or subsistence of the lease, upon redemption, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession both in terms of the mortgage deed as also the principle of this section.⁷⁵⁸ Where the premises in possession of the tenant were mortgaged to him, and the tenant did not opt for any revival of leasehold rights in respect of the mortgage deed, it was held that since the lease was earlier to mortgage, it will not revive on redemption and the owner/mortgagor would be entitled to restoration of possession upon redemption.⁷⁵⁹ However, if the mortgagee is permitted to continue in possession of the property after redemption of a usufructuary mortgage in accordance with the terms and agreement of the original lease agreement executed prior to effecting a mortgage, the revival of tenancy would be valid,⁷⁶⁰ if the intention of the parties was to keep the tenancy alive,⁷⁶¹ but not where the original occupancy was under an unregistered lease.⁷⁶²

In view of the legislation in this country providing security of tenancies, the chances of the mortgagee being evicted from such property become very bleak, and the condition would be very harsh and burdensome. If the mortgagee, in exercise of a power given to him by the mortgage, has leased out the property then, when the mortgage is redeemed, the only possession that could be decreed is possession through the tenant, and not khas possession.⁷⁶³ A lease by a mortgagor to a mortgagee to last during the pendency of the mortgage is valid.⁷⁶⁴ But in another case,⁷⁶⁵ the Bombay High Court held that an agreement to pay remuneration to a mortgagee mill manager was not a clog on redemption, although the same court had said seven years previously, apparently with reference to the early English case, that it was a well-established principle that a mortgagee cannot charge for his personal services.⁷⁶⁶ In Chalikani Venkatarayanim v Zamindar of Tuni,⁷⁶⁷ the Privy Council held that an agreement that a mortgagee in possession should charge a fixed sum annually for repairs and contingent charges, was not a clog on redemption. In Oudh, a stipulation that the mortgagor should pay on redemption deorha, i.e., the principal and half as much again, has been held to be valid.⁷⁶⁸

A condition for pre-emption in favour of the mortgagee is, it is submitted, a clog on redemption, for the mortgagor gets back his property on redemption fettered with this stipulation.⁷⁶⁹ The cases on the subject are not consistent. In a Madras case,⁷⁷⁰ J Bhashyam Ayyangar suggests that if the price is not fixed and if the right of pre-emption does not continue after redemption, there is no clog as the mortgagor may sell or not as he pleases. In a later case, the same High Court following the decision of the House of Lords in Samuel v Jarrah, Timber & Wood Paving Corp,⁷⁷¹ held that an agreement incorporated in a mortgage deed to sell the property to the mortgagee for the price already agreed upon operated as a clog on the equity of redemption.⁷⁷²

In 1948, the Madras High Court held⁷⁷³ that an agreement incorporated in a mortgage deed to sell the property to the mortgagee for the price already agreed upon, was held as operating as a clog on the equity of redemption. The Allahabad and Patna High Courts have said of a covenant for pre-emption at a fixed price that the covenant for pre-emption was enforceable if the bargain was not unconscionable, and if the right did not continue after redemption.⁷⁷⁴ The Calcutta High Court has held that a stipulation for pre-emption is valid, and not contrary to public policy.⁷⁷⁵ The Madras High Court has observed that the relaxation of the rule of equity in Kreglinger's case does not affect the construction of a statutory enactment such as this section.⁷⁷⁶ But the tendency to restore freedom of contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee which that case discloses, and which is apparent in the protests of Lord Halsbury and Macnaghten in Samuel v Jarrah, Timber & Wood Paving Corp,⁷⁷⁷ may also be observed in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Kanhaya Lal v National Bank of India.⁷⁷⁸ Indian cases were cited to show the necessity to protect mortgagors from a power of sale without the intervention of the court, and their Lordships said it was absurd to apply the reasoning of those cases to a transaction between a limited company, and the trustees of debenture holders.⁷⁷⁹ In a case the plaintiff, a private company, with a view to construct a cinema hall on the land purchased by it and to liquidate the earlier mortgage debt executed a mortgage-deed with the condition that the amount of loan after paying for the earlier mortgage will remain with the defendants who had agreed to advance it only if the contract of construction of the cinema house was made with them, to construct the cinema house for the plaintiff. Simultaneously, a deed of partnership was also executed between the parties at the instance of the defendants which according to the plaintiff was not intended to be acted upon, and was only intended to provide security to the defendant for the expenses that they may have to incur in connection with the construction work over and above the sum retained by the defendants, who on the other hand asserted that they were partners of a lawfully constituted firm for running the cinema business. The defendants did not invest any amount in the partnership business, nor did they actually pay any sum to the plaintiff. Under the terms of the partnership deed, the plaintiff forfeited all their rights even to carry out business. The most eloquent proof of the terms being unreasonable was the fact that the defendants were not to contribute anything to the partnership business, but were entitled to run it in any manner they liked to the exclusion of the plaintiff. The court held that the terms of the partnership deed which specifically referred to the mortgage transaction and sought to establish claims of the defendants arising out of the mortgage transaction stipulating first charge in respect of advances made by the defendants towards the construction of a cinema hall, were oppressive and unconscionable, and constituted a fetter on the equity of redemption.⁷⁸⁰

[s 60.17] Subsequent Agreement Postponing Redemption

A subsequent agreement which has the effect of postponing redemption, or which postpones redemption may be either (1) an agreement which creates a personal obligation; or (2) a charge or a mortgage creating a right in rem.

If the agreement creates only a personal obligation, it is a clog on redemption, for the mortgagor is entitled to get back his land on payment of the debt secured upon it. So if the mortgagor borrows a fresh sum, and executes a money bond agreeing not to redeem the mortgage until the bond is paid off, the agreement is invalid.⁷⁸¹ So also, a condition in a mortgage bond that the mortgage shall not be redeemed until a previous personal loan is paid off, is a clog on redemption; but the Bombay High Court has said that this was not so in cases before the TP Act, 1882.⁷⁸² On the other hand, if the mortgaged property is made security for the repayment of the further advances, the agreement not to redeem the first mortgage until the second debt is paid off is valid, for the agreement operates as a deed of further charge, and the mortgagor can redeem only on payment of all the moneys secured.⁷⁸³ In a case where some of the mortgagors have executed deeds creating a further charge in favour of the mortgagee, he cannot in a suit for the redemption of the mortgage, compel the payment of the sum due in respect of the further charge. He can enforce that right in a separate suit.⁷⁸⁴

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to whether the agreement operates as a further charge, and each case must be decided on the construction of the particular document.⁷⁸⁵ Thus, a clause in a mortgage which did not clearly operate as a stipulation for the renewal of the mortgage, was held as not barring a suit for redemption.⁷⁸⁶

(1) A borrows money from B. and executes a usufructuary mortgage for the amount redeemable in any month of Jeth. A then borrows a further sum from B and executes a simple money bond in which he covenants not to redeem the mortgage until the money due on the latter bond is paid. This covenant is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption.⁷⁸⁷

(2) A borrows ₹500 from B and executes a usufructuary mortgage for ₹300, the rents and profits to be taken in lieu of interest. A covenants in the deed that the payment of the balance of ₹200 with interest at 2% per mensem would be compulsory at the time of redemption. The covenant is not a clog on redemption, but creates a further charge for ₹200.⁷⁸⁸

(3) A borrows ₹500 from B and executes a usufructuary mortgage in his favour. A then borrows a further sum of ₹50 from B and executes a mashral- ul-rahn (or additional mortgage), containing the following covenant:

the stipulation is that when I shall redeem the land mortgaged I shall also pay the said amount, with interest at the stipulated rate, and the mortgaged property shall be redeemed. Without payment of the said sum, the property shall not be redeemed.

It was held that the covenant was not a clog on redemption, but created a further charge.⁷⁸⁹

(4) A borrowed ₹1,500 from B and executed a mortgage for ₹1,500. The mortgage bond recited that ₹5,000 was due on a previous Khata, and A promised to pay this sum and covenanted not to redeem the mortgage till both sums of ₹1,500 and ₹5,000 were paid. The deed was stamped for ₹6,500. It was held that ₹5,000 were also secured by way of mortgage, and that there was no question of a clog on redemption.⁷⁹⁰

If a person executes two successive mortgages of his property, in favour of another to secure separate debts, a stipulation in the second mortgage that the mortgagor shall not be entitled to redeem the first mortgage, unless he also paid the debt secured by the second mortgage, is perfectly valid.⁷⁹¹ The mortgagee is entitled in such a case to resist redemption of the first mortgage, unless the second debt is discharged even if his right to enforce the second mortgage is barred by limitation.⁷⁹² The rule, however, does not apply when the mortgagees are different. Thus, if A mortgages to a firm and then for a further advance makes a second mortgage to a part in that firm stipulating that he will not redeem the partnership mortgage before paying the personal debt, that stipulation will not prevent him from redeeming the partnership mortgage first.⁷⁹³ Again, if the previous advance, whether secured or unsecured, is secured on the mortgage given at the time of second advance, the case is different because both the transactions become merged in one mortgage.⁷⁹⁴ However, one mortgagor cannot by executing a mortgage affect the right of his co-mortgagors to redeem. Thus, in a case where K and L in 1876 executed a mortgage to T, and then K alone in 1891 executed a second mortgage to T which contained a condition that he would not redeem it without at the same time redeeming the mortgage of 1876; L was allowed to redeem the first mortgage without redeeming the second.⁷⁹⁵

[s 60.18] When the Right of Redemption Arises

The right of redemption arises when the principal money secured by the mortgage has become due and may be exercised at any time thereafter, subject of course to the law of limitation. There were a considerable number of Indian cases in which it was held that the time fixed in the deed was fixed for the convenience of the mortgagor, and that he could redeem before that time, unless there was an express stipulation to the contrary.⁷⁹⁶ These cases are bad law, for the view taken in other cases⁷⁹⁷ that the mortgagor cannot redeem before the time fixed for payment is confirmed by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bakhtawar Begam v Husaini Khanam.⁷⁹⁸ Their Lordships said that ordinarily, in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period; but that there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period, and take back the property, such a provision being usually to the advantage of the mortgagor.⁷⁹⁹ The time for payment is sometimes expressed to be within a certain number of years. There is a conflict of decisions as to whether this imports a right to redeem earlier.⁸⁰⁰ It is submitted that this is purely a matter of construction of the deed. In the case of Hewanchal v Jawahir,⁸⁰¹ the mortgage was for eight years with a condition that the mortgagor might redeem on payment of the whole amount due at the second, fourth, and the eighth years. If the mortgage fixes no time for payment, the mortgagor may redeem at any time.⁸⁰² A mortgagor is not entitled to redeem before the expiry of the stipulated period merely on the ground that the mortgagee in possession has done something which he was not authorised to do.⁸⁰³ A condition in a mortgage allowing the mortgagee to plant trees and to recover compensation, therefore, at a certain rate for a number of years, would not entitle the mortgagor to sue for redemption before the expiry of the said period.⁸⁰⁴ In an usufructuary mortgage, there can be a term fixed for the mortgagee's enjoyment during which redemption cannot take place.⁸⁰⁵ Where the mortgage-deed provided that it could be redeemed 12 years after the mortgagee obtained possession of all the lands, some of which were in the possession of tenants, and subsequent events made it impossible to obtain such possession, it was held that the mortgage could be redeemed any time after the expiry of 12 years.⁸⁰⁶

In some agricultural tenancies, time is of the essence of the contract, for redemption at any other time would prejudice agricultural operations. So when a mortgage was redeemable in Jeth of any year, it cannot be redeemed in any other month.⁸⁰⁷ When the mortgage-money was deposited in the month of Jeth, that is at harvest time, but too late for notice to be served on the mortgagee in that month, the Allahabad High Court treated it as available for redemption from the month of Jeth of the next year.⁸⁰⁸

The mortgagor may on equitable grounds, be allowed to redeem before the expiry of the term on account of a default of the mortgagee. Thus, in *Chhatku Rai v Baldeo*⁸⁰⁹ the mortgage was for ₹599.15, and the mortgagee was to discharge prior encumbrances out of the mortgage money. The mortgagee only advanced ₹50.15, and did not discharge the encumbrances. The assignee of the mortgagor was allowed to redeem before the expiry of the term. On the other hand, in order to avoid multiplicity of actions, the mortgagor may in some cases be refused redemption, unless he at the same time pays an unsecured debt. If the mortgaged property is in the hands of an heir or devisee of the mortgagor as assets for the payment of an unsecured debt, the mortgagee may if the assets are sufficient for the payment of all creditors tack the unsecured debt to his mortgage debt⁸¹⁰—but not if the estate is insolvent.⁸¹¹ Such tacking was permitted in a Bombay case⁸¹² where the mortgagor had in his lifetime assigned his whole estate to the plaintiff with an obligation to pay his debts, and the plaintiff was not allowed to redeem the mortgage without paying an unsecured debt also.

The mortgagor's right of redemption is exercised by the payment or tender to the mortgagee at the proper time, and at the proper place of the mortgage-money. A right to redeem can be extinguished by the act of the parties, or by a decree of the court, or also by the operation of law. When it is extinguished by the act of parties, the act must take the shape and observe the formalities which the law prescribes. For instance, if the extinguishment is by payment in cash or by a transfer of property which does not require registration, then no formality beyond the delivery of possession, and the occupation by the mortgagee in full and proper discharge is necessary. However, if the agreement is to transfer immovable property exceeding ₹100 in value, then a writing and registration are necessary because in that case the title cannot pass by mere delivery of possession.⁸¹³ The discharge of a debt by the operation of a statute does not amount to the redemption of the mortgage, to make the continuance of possession by the mortgagee adverse to the mortgagor.⁸¹⁴ Pursuant to section 60, the continuance in possession of a mortgagee after the period of redemption cannot necessarily be adverse to that of the owner. The question is always one of the intention of the parties concerned.⁸¹⁵

Once the mortgage money has been paid, the mortgage comes to an end, though the statutory right to recover possession survives.⁸¹⁶ A conjoint reading of section 60, section 76(h) read with section 83 of the TP Act, 1882 would amplify that on deposit of the mortgage amount, the contractual relationship of the mortgagor and mortgagee ceases.⁸¹⁷ A mortgage was effected by A of his property in favour of B. The son of A filed a suit for redemption of the property as against the successor of B, C. The trial court granted S, the time of three months to deposit the money in court. However, an appeal was filed as against this order of the trial court and the appellate court stayed the order. S was not able to deposit the amount due to this reason and comply with the order of the trial court. It was held that as the failure to deposit the amount was not wilful, but was owing to the stay granted by the court, the plaintiff, S is entitled to a right of redemption and has not lost it through wilful disobedience.⁸¹⁸

Payment may be made not only to the mortgagee, but also to an authorised agent of the mortgagee, e.g. the mortgagee's solicitor,⁸¹⁹ but a payment to an agent who disclaims authority is made at the payer's risk.⁸²⁰ Where there are several mortgagees, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether payment to one is valid. The Madras High Court has held that payment to one of several mortgagees is a valid discharge.⁸²¹ This was doubted in several Madras cases,⁸²² and was not followed in Bombay and Calcutta.⁸²³ In Annapurnaamma v Akkayya,⁸²⁴ a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that one of the several payees of a negotiable instrument can give a valid discharge of the entire debt, but CJ White in a dissenting judgment was of opinion that the equitable presumption of a tenancy in common should prevail. This opinion has since been followed,⁸²⁵ and it is unquestionably correct, for the security being in favour of several mortgagees cannot be re-transferred by any one of them and, therefore, the mortgage cannot be discharged except by payment to all. In an Allahabad case,⁸²⁶ a full discharge given by one of two joint mortgagees was held to operate in respect of his share only. The Judicial Committee in *Shrinivasdas Bavri v Meherbar*⁸²⁷ held that one of two mortgagees was not bound by a recital of a release given by the other, and this decision in effect overrules Barber Maran v Ramana.⁸²⁸ But even after this decision, the Madras High Court has held that a purchase by one of several co-mortgagees of the equity of redemption has the effect of extinguishing the mortgage,⁸²⁹ and that the appropriation of the income by a co-mortgagee in possession was a valid discharge of the mortgagee.⁸³⁰ The Bombay High Court has held that in the case of payment to the heirs of a mortgagee, payment must be made to all, unless they have constituted one of their members as karta or manager,⁸³¹ or, according to the Patna High Court,⁸³² the manager's agent. It was also held in the Patna case that even where the mortgage deed contained a stipulation that the only evidence which the parties could rely upon in support of any payments made in satisfaction of the mortgage debt would be payments endorsed on the mortgage-deed itself, it was open to the mortgagor to rely upon evidence other than the endorsements on the mortgage bond, such as a receipt signed by the mortgagee or his agent.

Payment must be made in the current coin of the realm or currency notes, unless the mortgagee accepts some other form of payment.⁸³³ If the debt is contracted in any particular currency, it must be repaid in that currency or its equivalent.⁸³⁴ A mortgagor is not bound to pay the executors of a mortgagee, until they obtain probate.⁸³⁵ If the mortgagee recovers more than is due, the mortgagor may recover the overpayment as money received by the mortgagee to his use, or, alternatively, money paid by mistake, or alternatively by tracing.⁸³⁶ If the redemption amount paid is less than the figure actually due, the mortgagee can claim the deficiency subject to any issue of estoppel.⁸³⁷

In a case where the purchaser of the equity of redemption made a tender conditional on the delivery of the title deeds to him, the tender was held to be conditional and void.⁸³⁸ It is submitted, however, that a tender coupled with a demand for something which the creditor is bound in law to perform on being paid, is not conditional.⁸³⁹ The law as enacted in section 38 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 is less rigid than the English law.⁸⁴⁰ A tender under protest is a valid tender, for the protest is not a condition, but merely a notice that the tender is not an admission, and the creditor had only to say, "I take the money; protest as much as you please".⁸⁴¹ Tender must be in current coin or currency notes. The old rule that the money must be shown to the creditor to tempt him⁸⁴² is now obsolete and if the debtor is ready to produce the money and offers to pay it, and the creditor dispenses with production at the time that is sufficient. In a case before the Privy Council,⁸⁴³ their Lordships quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Hunter v Daniel:⁸⁴⁴

The practice of the courts is not to require a party to make a formal tender where from the facts stated in the bill or from the evidence it appears that the tender would have been a mere form and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money.

In the case before the Privy Council, a purchaser of the equity of redemption wrote a letter asking to be informed of the amount of the balance due, and promising to send the money on receipt of a reply. The mortgagee replied that there was no need for him to pay as there was a covenant against alienation in the mortgage-deed, but at the conclusion, the letter stated what was the balance due on the mortgage. The covenant against alienation was of course invalid and as the mortgagee stated what was the amount due and no attempt was made by the mortgagor to pay it, their Lordships said they were "unable to construe the (mortgagee's) letter as equivalent to any such clear release to the mortgagor of his obligation to tender the money as is required in order to justify him in not having presented it for receipt".⁸⁴⁵ In another case, when the mortgagor went with the money to the mortgagee and did not pay it as the mortgagee demanded extra interest, that was good tender.⁸⁴⁶ However, a mere expression of willingness to pay is insufficient,⁸⁴⁷ for the money must be available for immediate delivery,⁸⁴⁸ and even an offer by letter to pay is not sufficient.⁸⁴⁹

Tender of less than the proper amount is invalid according to the rule in Dixon v Clarke;⁸⁵⁰ but in *Haji Abdul v Haji Noor Mahomed*⁸⁵¹ J Telang said this rule was limited to cases where the party making the tender admits that more is due than is tendered, but it is difficult to understand why the mortgagees should suffer for the mortgagor's mistake.⁸⁵² But the creditor may accept the amount tendered in part payment, if the debtor does not make it a condition that the tender is to be in discharge of the whole.⁸⁵³ In the absence of a stipulation to that effect, the mortgagee is entitled to decline to receive payment by installments.⁸⁵⁴ A valid tender, with continued readiness to pay, stops the running of interest.⁸⁵⁵ However, not so an invalid tender.⁸⁵⁶ A tender improperly rejected is not equivalent to payment.⁸⁵⁷ Justice Phear said in an old case,⁸⁵⁸ that tender by one of several mortgagors is not valid. But that is incorrect, for any of the several mortgagors can redeem and it is sufficient here, as in England, that tender should be made by a person having a prima facie right to redeem. The costs of a suit for redemption are payable by the mortgagor; but if a mortgagee improperly refuses to accept a tender, he may be refused his costs or ordered to pay costs.⁸⁵⁹ In the absence of a stipulation to that effect, the mortgagee is entitled to decline to receive payment by installments.⁸⁶⁰ Instead of making tender to the mortgagee personally, the mortgagor may make a deposit in court under section 83, but such deposit does not of course, put an end to the relationship of the mortgagor and mortgagee.⁸⁶¹

In the case of an usufructuary mortgage when the debt has been satisfied out of the usufruct, there is no question of tender.⁸⁶² In a suit for redemption, it is not necessary to prove a previous tender.⁸⁶³ The Allahabad High Court once held that it was necessary;⁸⁶⁴ but the Madras High Court disagreed.⁸⁶⁵ The later Allahabad cases follow the judgement of Madras High Court.⁸⁶⁶ According to the Bombay view, the mortgagor is not required to tender the amount due under the mortgage before suing for redemption. If he makes such a tender, he gets certain benefits under sections 83 and 84. However, he is not legally bound to do so.⁸⁶⁷

A mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate.⁸⁶⁸ Mortgage money, therefore, includes both principal and interest.⁸⁶⁹ This accords with the definition in section 58(a). Mortgage-money also includes costs properly incurred by the mortgagee.⁸⁷⁰

The mortgagor's right on redemption are: (1) delivery of the mortgage-deed and documents of title relating to the mortgaged property; (2) possession; and (3) reconveyance or acknowledgment.

[s 60.24] Delivery of the Mortgage Deed

The mortgagor has a right on redemption to the return of the mortgage-deed, and documents of title relating to the mortgaged property. The provision as to documents relating to the property which are in possession or power of the mortgagee have been inserted in conformity with O XXXIV, rules 3 to 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 to show that the mortgagor is also entitled to the return of all title deeds handed over to the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage. If the mortgage-deed comprises of other property, the mortgagor is not entitled to the return of the deed, but the mortgagee must covenant to produce it when required.⁸⁷¹ If the deeds are lost, the mortgagor is entitled to an indemnity,⁸⁷² and may also be entitled to compensation.⁸⁷³ If the mortgagor pays the loan and the same is accepted by the mortgagee bank, the bank has the statutory obligation to return the documents relating to mortgaged property and an action of withholding securities would not be justified.⁸⁷⁴ Where the mortgagor filed a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property as also for claiming its re-possession, he would be so entitled as it was a redemption of mortgage by conditional sale.⁸⁷⁵

[s 60.25] Restoration of Possession

If the mortgagee is in possession, he must on redemption restore possession to the mortgagor—not only to the lands originally mortgaged, but all the lands that have come into his possession as mortgagee.⁸⁷⁶ He must restore the lands in the same condition as when they were mortgaged. A lease granted by the mortgagee comes to an end when the land is redeemed.⁸⁷⁷

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

The mortgagee cannot be heard to say that he does not know what has happened to the mortgaged property.⁸⁷⁸ If the lands have been lost through the negligence of the mortgagee, he is liable to account for them to the mortgagor.⁸⁷⁹

The Supreme Court has held that section 4-A of the Kerala Land Reforms Act, 1963, which provides that certain mortgagees and lessees of mortgagees shall be deemed to be tenant, would not denude the right to repossession of the mortgagor under section 60, without assent of the President of India.⁸⁸⁰

A conjoint reading of section 60, section 76(h) and section 83 of the TP Act, 1882 would amplify that on deposit of the mortgage amount in court, the contractual relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee ceases. The Supreme Court has held that the right to possession under section 60 of the TP Act, 1882, on redemption is kept unaffected by the Kerala Compensation of Tenants' Improvements Act 1958, which only hedges the right to eviction and gives the tenant a right to remain subject to the terms of his lease or mortgage till the payment for improvements are made or deposited, so that the mortgagee/tenant is not driven to a separate suit.⁸⁸¹

The right of the mortgagor to a reconveyance is not limited to the case of an English mortgage—but (except in the case of an English mortgage) it is seldom insisted on in India. If the mortgage-money is paid and the mortgage redeemed, it is not necessary that the redemption should be proved by a registered instrument.⁸⁸² The mortgagor must pay for the cost of the reconveyance which has been described as a useful protection, being evidence of the removal of the cloud on title created by the mortgage.⁸⁸³ As an alternative, the mortgagor may require a registered acknowledgment that the mortgage is not outstanding. Special provision is made in this section for the registration of this acknowledgment in the case of registered mortgages, for section 17(l)(b) of the Registration Act, 1908 would not apply, if the mortgage was for less than ₹100.

[s 60.27] By Act of Parties

The right of redemption may be extinguished by act of parties or by operation of law.' "Act of parties" refers to some transaction subsequent to the mortgage and standing apart from the mortgage transaction; otherwise it would be invalid as a clog on redemption. Such a transaction may be oral.⁸⁸⁴ Where the mortgaged property is sold at a court auction, and the sale certificate and the possession of the property is delivered to the auction purchaser, no mortgage property remains to be redeemed and the right of the purchaser of equity of redemption cannot be enforced having come to an end.⁸⁸⁵ In a mortgage by conditional sale, the right of redemption is not extinguished at the expiry of the period. This has been discussed in the note "Mortgages by conditional sale" under section 58.

The insertion of a clause in the mortgage-deed that in default of payment the mortgage should operate as a sale is, therefore, not an act of parties' extinguishing the right of redemption.⁸⁸⁶ If the mortgage stipulates that in default of payment, the mortgagee shall have a right to foreclose, the equity of redemption is not determined, unless the mortgagee obtains a decree for foreclosure. Otherwise, mere mutation to the name of the mortgagee in the revenue registers is not sufficient to extinguish that equity of redemption.⁸⁸⁷ Subsequent to the mortgage, the mortgagee may purchase the equity or redemption from the mortgagor, and this is an extinction by act of parties. Instances of such purchasers have already been cited.⁸⁸⁸

The equity of redemption is not, however, extinguished by a mere contract for sale.⁸⁸⁹ So also, where a mortgagee having a power to sell the mortgaged property as provided in the mortgage-deed enters into a contract to sell the property in the purported exercise of that power, the mortgagor has still the right to redeem the property.⁸⁹⁰ Where, however, the mortgagor gave a power of sale to the mortgagee under section 69 and the mortgagee exercised the power and the purchaser paid the money which had been distributed, that would certainly discharge the mortgagee.⁸⁹¹ In one case where a charge holder agreed to postpone his right over the property in favour of an equitable mortgage, it was held that such agreement did not extinguish his right to redeem the equitable mortgage.⁸⁹² In Pandurang Maruti Dombale v Bapurao Piraji Owl,⁸⁹³ A mortgaged his property to B. B later filed a suit for foreclosure, i.e. a declaration that in case A was unable to pay the mortgage money, his right of redemption may be treated as forfeited. A, whilst opposing the suit, filed a counter-claim for redemption of mortgage, and deposited the mortgage money in Court. The Court came to the conclusion that the decree of foreclosure could only be passed if the mortgagor could not ask for redemption but since, in the instant case, B had filed a counter-claim claiming redemption and had also deposited the mortgage amount in the Court, it was necessary for the Court to pass a decree of redemption rather than for foreclosure.

A usufructuary mortgagee cannot, by a mere assertion of his own or by a unilateral act on his part, convert his position on moiety of the property as mortgagee into that of an absolute owner. He can do so only if he purchases the entire equity of redemption from the mortgagor.⁸⁹⁴

The effect of the mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption at a court sale is complicated by the peculiar position of the mortgagee. The Calcutta High Court in an old case⁸⁹⁵ described the mortgagee as a trustee. This, it is submitted, is incorrect, and it is clear that a mortgagee is not a trustee, for he has rights of his own which he can exercise adversely to the mortgagor. Nevertheless, the mortgagee is under many obligations which are similar to those of a trustee, and which are entirely discussed in the notes under sections 64, 76(a), 76(g) and 69 of TP Act, 1882. Indeed, section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, itself provides that where a mortgagee availing himself of his position gains an advantage, he holds such advantage for the benefit of the mortgagor. This has been recognised by the Supreme Court in Sidhkamal Nayan v Bira Nayak,⁸⁹⁶ and MritunjoyPani v Naramanda Bala Sasmal.⁸⁹⁷ It follows that the mortgagee can never benefit by his own default. So, if the mortgagee in possession makes default in payment of assessment, or rent, and then himself purchases the property at a sale, he is still liable to be redeemed.⁸⁹⁸ In Parichhan Mistry v Achhiabar Mistry,⁸⁹⁹ where the mortgagor failed to pay rent to the landlord in respect of the holding as required under the mortgage deed and the mortgagee had paid the decretal amount in a suit for sale instituted by the landlord, the Supreme Court held that if for some default in payment of rent, a decree is obtained and the mortgagee pays off the same, even then the mortgage in question is liable to be redeemed at the option of the mortgagor. By virtue of the purchase of the property by the mortgagee in court sale, no merger takes place between the two rights, nor the mortgage stands extinguished.

The courts have never allowed the mortgagee to escape from his obligations by bringing the equity of redemption to sale in execution of a decree on the personal covenant.⁹⁰⁰ By virtue of purchase of the property by the defendant/mortgagee in court sale, there is no merger in the defendant/mortgagee of two rights, extinguishing the mortgage. What proviso to section 60 contemplates is act of parties or a decree either for foreclosure, or putting the mortgaged property to sale.⁹⁰¹ The evil consequences of such sales were described in the judgment of J Macpherson in Kamini Debi v Ramlochan Sircar.⁹⁰² Where the mortgagee had improperly sold the equity of redemption in execution of a money decree for the mortgage debt, J Macpherson said:

Without saying that an equity of redemption can never be seized and sold, I have no doubt that a mortgagee cannot properly in execution of a simple decree for a sum of money, the repayment of which is secured by a mortgage, attach and sell the mortgagor's equity of redemption in the property mortgaged, and that a mortgagee who attaches and sells his mortgagor's equity of redemption, and purchases it (directly or indirectly) himself, is a trustee, for the mortgagor, and cannot acquire an irredeemable title against him.

The Judicial Committee in Mahabir Pershad v Macnaghten,⁹⁰³ approved this passage, but explained that it referred to a case of a mortgagee decree-holder who has purchased without the leave of the court, and then added that leave to bid puts an end to the disability of the mortgagee, and puts him in the same position as any independent purchaser. Mahabir Pershad's case was that of a mortgagee purchasing with leave of the court at a sale in execution of his own mortgage decree, and the Judicial Committee held that he had acquired an irredeemable title. In Kamini Debi's case⁹⁰⁴ J Macpherson, further said:

One view of the matter is that, when the mortgagee purchases, the mortgage debt is satisfied. But I think that the more correct view is that the mortgagee purchasing, is a trustee for the mortgagor who still has the right to redeem.

The first view seems to have been adopted by the Allahabad High Court which at one time held that the mortgagee's purchase of even a portion of the property had the effect of extinguishing the whole mortgage⁹⁰⁵—and, that too, irrespective of the question whether leave to bid had been obtained. However, these decisions were soon overruled.⁹⁰⁶ The second is the correct view, but it should be limited to cases where the mortgagee is the decree-holder, and buys without leave of the court.

The law, therefore, is:

- (1) If the mortgagee, after obtaining leave to bid, purchases at a sale in execution of his decree, he gets an irredeemable title, and the equity of redemption is extinguished.⁹⁰⁷
- (2) If the mortgagee purchases without leave to bid at a sale in execution of his decree on the mortgage, he holds as trustee for the mortgagor, and the equity of redemption is not extinguished.⁹⁰⁸
- (3) If the mortgagee purchases at a sale in contravention of section 99 of the TP Act, 1882, or of O XXXIV, rule 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure he holds as trustee, and the equity of redemption is not extinguished.⁹⁰⁹
- (4) If the mortgagee purchases at a sale in execution of a decree, whether mortgage decree or money decree, obtained by a third person, he gets an irredeemable title and the equity of redemption is extinguished.⁹¹⁰

In cases (2) & (3), the mortgagor must take objection in execution proceedings before the sale is confirmed, otherwise the equity of redemption is extinguished on confirmation of the sale.⁹¹¹ So in a Madras case,⁹¹² where the mortgagee had purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree for an installment of the mortgage debt, a member of the undivided family of the mortgagor born after the decree, but before the attachment and sale and not added as a party, was entitled to redeem his own share as not being bound by the sale, but was not allowed to redeem the share of the members of the joint family who were parties to the decree, and order for sale.

In a suit for redemption, unless it is a conditional sale or anomalous mortgage, so long as the sale is not confirmed, the debtor has a right to deposit the entire sale money including the sale expenses and poundage fee, and the court is under the statutory duty to accept the payment and direct redemption of the mortgage. The limited right given to the corporation under section 29 of the State Financial Corporation Act, 1951, to act as an owner to bring the properties of the defaulter to sale does not have the effect of wiping out the statutory right of redemption under section 60 of the TP Act, 1882.⁹¹³ In a Kerala case, the auction sale of the property was found to be void and since there was no foreclosure of the mortgage, it was held that the mortgagee had the right of redemption on deposit of an amount to which the financial corporation was entitled upto date in terms of section 60.⁹¹⁴

[s 60.29] By Operation of Law

The section does not refer to the extinction of the equity of redemption by operation of law. This may occur by merger when the mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption by inheritance.⁹¹⁵ One co-mortgagor may by adverse possession acquire the equity of redemption of another co-mortgagor;⁹¹⁶ but the possession of a mortgagee can never be adverse to the mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage. This could only occur if the mortgagee's possession were indicative of such an acquiescence on the part of the mortgagor as to amount to a release of the equity of redemption.⁹¹⁷ A forfeiture and sale under the Bombay Land Revenue Code for non-payment of assessment has the effect of extinguishing the equity of redemption.⁹¹⁸ However, where a mortgagee himself is liable to pay the land revenue, but allows it to remain in default and then purchases the property in sale for satisfaction of the land revenue, the mortgagee cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong; and so the mortgage would still subsist.⁹¹⁹ A suit for redemption is not maintainable by a mortgagor who was not personally cultivating the suit lands on 4 December 1952 when jagirs were abolished under the Madhya Bharat Abolition of Jagirs Act, whereby the said mortgagors lost all their rights and interests in the respective lands.⁹²⁰

The decree referred to in the proviso to section 60 is a final decree in a suit for foreclosure, as provided in sub-rule (2) of O XXXIV, rule 3 and a final decree in a redemption suit as provided in O XXXIV, rule 8(3)(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. In a final decree in a suit for foreclosure, on failure of the defendant to pay all amounts due, the extinguishment of the right of redemption has to be specifically declared. Again, in a final decree in a suit for redemption of mortgage by conditional sale or for redemption of anomalous mortgage, the extinguishment of the right of redemption has to be specially declared, as provided in clause (a) of sub-rule (3) of O XXXIV, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In a suit for redemption of a mortgage other than a mortgage by a conditional sale or an anomalous mortgage, the mortgagor has a right of redemption even after the sale has taken place pursuant to the final decree, but before the confirmation of such sale. In view of these provisions, the question of merger of mortgage debt in the decretal debt does not at all arise.⁹²¹

In foreclosure suits, the final decree extinguishes the equity of redemption. Until the final decree for foreclosure is made, the mortgagor can redeem even after the time fixed in the preliminary decree.⁹²² The court's jurisdiction to grant relief on equitable grounds does not by reason of the proviso to section 60 read with section 68 of the TP Act, 1882 and O XXXIV, rules 2 & 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure extend to the granting of a relief in proceedings taken in execution of a final decree for foreclosure. Accordingly, the court has no jurisdiction to re-open a final decree for foreclosure to extend the time for redemption,⁹²³ but not where the right of redemption was not extinguished by passing a specific order.⁹²⁴ However, in a case where the mortgagee under an arrangement with the mortgagor took possession before the order absolute for foreclosure, and the mortgagor raised no objection for many years, he was held to have lost his right of redemption by acquiescence.⁹²⁵ The decisions of the Privy Council in *Het Ram v Shadi Lal*⁹²⁶ and *Matru Mal v Durga Kunwar*⁹²⁷ were based on the law as enacted in these sections. This seemed to imply that the right of redemption continued even after order absolute for sale, and the Calcutta High Court was constrained to construe section 89 as referring to the extinction of the right of redemption on the actual sale, and distribution of the sale proceeds.⁹²⁸ This was doing violence to the section; but the section was bad law, for a decree for sale is but a judgment on the debt, and though the debt merges in the judgment, the collateral security of the mortgage does not merge.⁹²⁹ The provision for the extinction of the right of redemption was, therefore, omitted in rules 5 and 8 of O 34. The Privy Council in *Sukhi v Ghulam Safdar*⁹³⁰ said that the effect of this omission was that the law remained the same as it was before the passing of the TP Act, 1882. And before the TP Act, 1882 a decree for sale did not have the effect of extinguishing the right of redemption.⁹³¹ The Allahabad High Court held that the effect of the repeal of section 89 was that the right of redemption was not extinguished by the decree for sale, but by the sale.⁹³² The legislature has, however, made the law quite clear, for rules 5 and 8 as amended by Act 21 of 1929, expressly states that the mortgagor's right of redemption subsists till the confirmation of the sale held in execution of the decree for sale on a mortgage or, in a suit for redemption, until the final decree.⁹³³ A Bench of the Calcutta High Court seemed to accept this,⁹³⁴ but another Bench took the opposite view on the ground that the amending Act 21 of 1929 was not retrospective.⁹³⁵ After the section of the TP Act, 1882 was transferred to the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, the High Court of Calcutta has held that a mortgagor can have a sale set aside under O XXI, rule 89.⁹³⁶

If the mortgagor obtains a decree for redemption and the decree does not provide that in default of payment of the mortgagor, he shall be debarred of all right to redeem, the right to redeem is not extinguished, and the mortgagor can file another suit for redemption. This has now been settled by the Privy Council in Bhaiya Raghunath Singh v Hansraj Kunwar.⁹³⁷ In that case, the decree was that in default of payment, the suit for redemption should be dismissed. Their Lordships said:

The right to redeem is a right conferred upon the mortgagor by enactment, of which he can only be deprived by means and in the manner enacted for that purpose, and strictly complied with. In the present case, the only basis for the claim that the right to redeem has been extinguished is section 60; but in their Lordships' view the old decree cannot properly be construed as doing that which it does not purport to do, viz as extinguishing the right to redeem.

The Privy Council in the above case pointed out that in the first suit the issue was whether the plaintiff was then entitled to redeem, and in the second suit, the issue is whether he is now entitled to redeem. It is correctly pointed out by the Bombay High Court, following the above decision of the Privy Council, that in each case it would be a question of fact whether the earlier decree involves a decision that the mortgagor's right to redeem was extinguished. In that case, it was held that the decree provided that if there was any default in the payment of installments, the right to redeem would be extinguished.⁹³⁸ It is perhaps unnecessary to add that if the first suit is pending, the second suit will not lie.⁹³⁹ But so long as the equity of redemption is not extinguished, successive suits for redemption will lie.⁹⁴⁰ If the mortgagor fails to pay the loan amount by the stipulated time and the property is sold at the court auction, the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property is extinguished even though the certificate issued by the court is not registered.⁹⁴¹

The mortgagors filed a suit for redemption of mortgage. A preliminary decree for redemption was passed. The mortgagors failed to make payment within the specified period under the preliminary decree. On an application made by the mortgagee, a final decree for sale was passed in the suit, but the mortgagee did not get it executed and allowed the same to be time-barred. The mortgagee, and, after him, his heirs and legal representatives, however, continued to be in possession of the mortgaged property. Subsequently, the successors-in-interest of the original mortgagors filed a second suit for redemption of the mortgages. It was held that the plea that, as a final decree was passed in the earlier redemption suit, there was a merger of the mortgage-debt in the decretal-debt and, as such, the second suit for redemption was barred, would not be sustainable.⁹⁴²

The principle that in a suit for redemption of a mortgage other than a mortgage by conditional sale or an anomalous mortgage, the mortgagor has a right of redemption even after the sale has taken place pursuant to the final decree but before the confirmation of such a sale and that in such a case, the question of merger of mortgage debt in the decretal debt does not arise, is held by the Supreme Court to apply to a sale which has taken place pursuant to an order under section 32 of the State Financial Corporation Act, in so far as the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in O XXXIV, rule 5, which in substance permit the judgment debtor to redeem the mortgage even during the proceedings in execution of a final decree for sale, unless the equity of redemption has got extinguished, are concerned.⁹⁴³ When in execution of a mortgage decree, the mortgaged property is sold and the purchaser sues for possession of the property mortgaged, a minor son of the mortgagor who is discharged from the suit is not entitled to redeem the mortgage, unless the mortgage decree, and the sale are set aside.⁹⁴⁴

The withdrawal of the redemption suit does not extinguish the equity of redemption so as to bar a fresh suit.⁹⁴⁵ In Thota China Subba Rao v Mattapalli Raju,⁹⁴⁶ the Federal Court reversed a Madras judgment to the contrary,⁹⁴⁷ and pointed out, approving a line of Bombay decisions,⁹⁴⁸ that the right of redemption being a statutory right could only be extinguished as provided in section 60. If it is alleged to be extinguished by a decree, the decree should run strictly in accordance with the form prescribed for the purpose. If the right is not so extinguished, provisions such as O 9, rule 9 or O XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure will not debar the mortgagor from bringing a second suit for redemption as the cause of action is a different one under a subsisting mortgage. Successive suits for redemption of mortgage can be filed till the right of redemption is not extinguished. This is because the right of redemption is an incident of subsisting mortgage and inseparable from it, so that the right is co-extinguished with the mortgage itself.⁹⁴⁹ In a case where the first redemption suit was dismissed as the result of a compromise without regard to the fact that the plaintiff was a minor, a fresh suit was maintainable.⁹⁵⁰ So also when the first redemption suit was dismissed for default;⁹⁵¹ when the mortgagee's decree for sale in the first suit was not executed;⁹⁵² or the mortgagor's decree for redemption could not be executed as it was time-barred;⁹⁵³ and also when the first redemption suit abated by reason of the death of the mortgagor-plaintiff.⁹⁵⁴ However, if the decree extinguishes the mortgage, a second suit is barred by res judicata; and it is immaterial that the decree was erroneous.⁹⁵⁵ However, as the abatement of a suit does not amount to a decree extinguishing the right of redemption if a suit for redemption abates, the second suit for redemption is not barred. The provisions of O XXII, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not override the provisions of this section. So long as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continues, and so long as the right to redeem has not been extinguished by the act of the parties, the mortgagor is entitled to go to a court of law to enforce his right of redemption.⁹⁵⁶

Redemption of mortgaged property after the auction sale was made absolute is not permissible. Once the title and ownership is found lost to mortgagor on account of court sale of the subject property, right of redemption cannot be pressed into service.⁹⁵⁷ Even if the mortgagor filed an application for redemption of the property, stating that he wanted to deposit the amount fetched in auction sale of property kept as collateral security with bank after the sale was confirmed and made absolute by issuance of the sale certificate and he received a better offer and not shockingly low price for his property, the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property is lost once the sale is absolute and sale certificate is issued.⁹⁵⁸

A suit for redemption is a suit to enforce the right to redeem. Such a suit may be filed not only by the mortgagor, but by any person mentioned in section 91. He must show that this was a subsisting mortgage.⁹⁵⁹ The preliminary decree in the suit for redemption of mortgage should be drawn up in accordance with O XXXIV, rule 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There should be a direction, first for an account being taken of the decree for principal and interest on the mortgage and, thereafter, a declaration ought to be made of the amount, if any, to be paid to the defendant. A decree shall thereafter be passed for payment by the party as liable to pay the same on account being taken in. If the defendant is held liable, then the decree may be passed against her for refund of the excess amount said to have been recovered illegally by her from the plaintiffs.⁹⁶⁰ The forms of decree enforcing redemption are enacted in O XXXIV, rules 7 and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. All persons interested in the right of redemption or in the security must be joined as parties. The suit can only be instituted after the right has accrued, i.e., after the principal money has become due. It is not necessary to tender the mortgage money before filing the suit.

The mortgagee is entitled to hold against everyone who has not a paramount title.⁹⁶¹ The plaintiff must, therefore, prove his title to redeem.⁹⁶² In Sevvaji Raghunadha v Chinna Nayana,⁹⁶³ the Judicial Committee said:

A plaintiff who alleges that his ancestor, 44 years ago, made a mortgage to the ancestor possessor, must prove his case clearly and indefeasibly. He must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by reason by the weakness of his opponent's. Prima facie evidence will, however, shift the burden of proofs. In Raja Kishen Dutt v Narendar,⁹⁶⁴ where the mortgage deed was lost and the plaintiff claimed to redeem, the Privy Council said:

It appears to their Lordships that in such a case as the present, it lies upon the plaintiff to substantiate his case by some evidence, by some prima facie evidence at least. But in this, as in most other cases, when the quantum of evidence required from either party is to be considered, regard must be had to the opportunities which each party may naturally be supposed to have of giving evidence; and although the prima facie burden of proof in this case in their Lordships' view is upon the plaintiff, still they think the consideration should not be omitted that the defendant would naturally have the mortgage, and that it would be, prima facie at all events, more in his power to give accurate evidence of its contents than in that of the plaintiff.

In an old Bombay case,⁹⁶⁵ it was said that it was not the practice in India for a counterpart of the deed to be taken by the mortgagor and, therefore, very slight proof that a mortgage had originally been made would serve to shift the entire burden of proof on the defendants. But the prima facie evidence must be forthcoming.⁹⁶⁶ If the plaintiff fails to prove the specific mortgage on which he sues, he may succeed on defendant's admission in the suit that he is holding the land under a mortgage;⁹⁶⁷ or if the defendant produces another deed of mortgage.⁹⁶⁸ However, the defendant's admission made in another proceeding is not sufficient.⁹⁶⁹ An agreement for sale in favour of a mortgagee is no defence to such a suit;⁹⁷⁰ nor can the mortgagee resist redemption by denying the mortgagor's title to the property.⁹⁷¹ Where the mortgaged property came to the share of one co-sharer during partition, and he mortgaged the same and fixed the period of redemption but the mortgager died without redeeming his mortgage within the prescribed time it was held that the heirs of the mortgager are entitled to redeem the mortgaged property after expiry of the period fixed. It was immaterial if the mortgagee has accepted the debt from a stranger, and delivered possession thereafter.⁹⁷² Where the decree in a redemption suit became final and during the execution proceedings the erstwhile mortgagor deposited the mortgage amount, and consequently, the executing court ordered delivery of property on such payment to the decree holder, the erstwhile mortgagees in possession were not entitled to get the benefit of section 4-A of the Kerala Land Reform Act, 1964 and become "deemed tenant" of the mortgaged property because once the amount is deposited by the mortgagor decree-holder even during the execution proceedings, the relationship between the parties as mortgagor and the mortgagee ceases and thereafter, till the actual delivery of possession, the erstwhile mortgagee in possession remains merely as judgement-debtor in illegal possession.⁹⁷³

The proceedings in a preliminary decree does not get terminated by dismissal of the first application for passing of final decree or for non-prosecution. Till date of passing the final decree and its execution, or till remedy is barred by limitation under Article 137 of the schedule to the limitation Act, 1963, the court has power and jurisdiction to entertain the application to pass the final decree. At any time before the remedy is barred, it is open to the plaintiff to deposit the redemption money under the preliminary decree. The dismissal of the earlier application or non-prosecution, therefore, does not per se bar the right of the plaintiff. But if remedy to enforce preliminary decree for the redemption is barred by the limitation, thereafter the right remains unenforceable. The deposit therefore, is non est and the court cannot proceed to pass final decree as the remedy is lost.⁹⁷⁴

The provisions of sections 60 and 71 clearly provide that once a mortgage always a mortgage and once the mortgagee has been admitted, the responsibility of mortgagees is to convey the property mortgaged after accepting the mortgage money, and the equity of redemption cannot be lost. Section 60 of the TP Act, 1882 confers a statutory right of redemption. It is an inviolable right of the mortgagor, on redemption to get back the subject of mortgage.⁹⁷⁵

In Purshottam v Sagaji,⁹⁷⁶ a right to redeem was acquired by adverse possession by a mortgagor who had no title when the deed was executed.

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

In 1873, the widow of the deceased owner granted a mortgage to G, the husband of her daughter R. On the widow's death the plaintiffs claimed the property as reversionary heirs and disputed the mortgage. The dispute was settled by G accepting a mortgage from the plaintiffs for a reduced amount, on 22 June 1882. The plaintiffs had then no title, for R was the true heir and had acquiesced in ignorance of her rights. R on discovering that she was the heir, sold the property and her vendee paid off the mortgage of 1873. The plaintiffs then sued to redeem the mortgage of 1882. It was held that the plaintiffs had a right to redeem. As between the plaintiffs and G, the mortgage of 1873 had been treated as having come to an end. G held the property as mortgagee of the plaintiffs, and though G's possession was not in its inception by virtue of a right derived from the plaintiffs, yet, as from 22 June 1882, it was under colour of a right derived from the plaintiffs and so, adverse to R, and that to her knowledge.⁹⁷⁷

Limitation for a suit for redemption is, under Article 61(a) of the Act of 1963, 30 years from the time when the right to redeem accrues.⁹⁷⁸ Within that period, the mortgagor is entitled to redeem if the mortgage has not been foreclosed.⁹⁷⁹ The period of 30 years is to be computed from the date when the mortgagor is entitled to redeem.⁹⁸⁰ It has been held that after the expiry of the said period, not only the remedy to file a suit for redemption of the mortgage is barred, but the right in the property in dispute is also extinguished in view of section 27 of the Limitation Act, 1963.⁹⁸¹ Thus, where the mortgage was for a fixed period of two years, a suit filed after thirty two years and five months was held as barred by limitation,⁹⁸² but where the mortgage-deed was executed on 8 March 1947, and the suit was filed in the year 1976, only 29 years period had been completed and hence, the suit was held to be within limitation.⁹⁸³ In a 99-years mortgage, the starting point for the period of limitation would commence from the expiry of period of 99 years, and not from the date of mortgage itself.⁹⁸⁴ A suit for redemption filed 30 years from the date the cause of action arose would be barred by limitation.⁹⁸⁵ Where the land was mortgaged with the mortgagee in 1952, the limitation for redemption for a period of 30 years would expire in 1982 and thereupon the right of mortgagee to file for foreclosure would start and the right of the mortgagee to file for possession of property would start after three years, i.e., in 1985, which would expire in accordance with the law of limitation in 1994, and thus a suit filed in 1995 for possession of the property would be barred by limitation.⁹⁸⁶ Where ancestral property that was mortgaged was redeemed in its entirety by one of the co-owners, the other co-owner cannot be denied redemption of their respective share as against the first co-owner on the ground, that the suit was barred by law of limitation as against the original mortgagee, as once the mortgage is redeemed, it no longer bears the character of the mortgaged property and no law of limitation can be applied on that basis. As a co-owner he is entitled to get the property partitioned and the law of limitation would apply only from the date the cause of action arose in his favour by denial by one co-owner of his right in the property.⁹⁸⁷

Section 30 of the Limitation Act, 1963 provides that where the period of limitation is shorter than the one prescribed by the Limitation Act, 1908, the same may be instituted within a period of seven years next after the commencement of the Act, which came into force on 5 October 1963.⁹⁸⁸ Thus, where, a suit was filed for redemption after four⁹⁸⁹ or five⁹⁹⁰ years, of the commencement of the 1963 Act, it would be within the period of limitation. Under the limitation Act, 1908, the period of limitation for redemption of mortgage was 60 years that was reduced to 30 years by the present Act of 1963. The 1963 Act, however provided that any suit for which limitation period is shorter than the one prescribed under the 1908 Act, may be instituted within 7 years of the commencement of the 1963 Act or within the period prescribed for such suits by the Act of 1908, whichever is earlier. Thus a mortgage executed in 1880; assigned in 1924, that was duly acknowledged by the mortgagee as well, could be redeemed till 1969.⁹⁹¹ Similarly, if the mortgagor could have redeemed the property by 1961, the limitation period would run from 1961 to another period of 12 years and a suit of redemption filed during this period would not be barred by limitation.⁹⁹² Similarly, in another Punjab & Haryana case,⁹⁹³ it was held that such limitation period as provided in the Limitation Act, 1963 would extend by seven years by virtue of section 39; meaning thereby, since a period of 30 years has been prescribed for limitation, a further seven years would be added, thus, making limitation period for redemption of mortgage as 37 years.

A minor mortgagor's suit to redeem will not be barred under section 7 of the Limitation Act, because a co-mortgagor could have redeemed during his minority.⁹⁹⁴ As the mortgage security is indivisible, limitation for a suit for redemption will not be saved by an acknowledgment made by one of the heirs of the mortgagee.⁹⁹⁵ But in a case from Bombay,⁹⁹⁶ the heirs of the mortgagee had effected a partition, and the suit for redemption was filed after the period of limitation had expired. One of the heirs had acknowledged the existence of the mortgage, and that acknowledgment was held to save limitation as to his share, though redemption of that share was allowed on payment of the whole amount due on the mortgage.

Once the mortgagor institutes a suit for redemption and exercises his right to redeem the mortgage, for which alone the period fixed under Article 61(a) of the Limitation Act fixing the outer limit to sue for redemption, it cannot be contended that his right of redemption has to be tested at different stages till the passing of the final decree in the suit. Where a preliminary decree is passed in favour of the mortgagor of a usufructuary mortgage, which is in effect a declaration or recognition of his right to redeem the property on deposit of the mortgage price already fixed, or to be fixed, time for such deposit has been fixed by the court would no way impair his right in making the deposit after the time limit fixed and move an application for passing a final decree.⁹⁹⁷ The High Court of Kerala in Kuttan Narayanan v Benny Sasi,⁹⁹⁸ also held that at any time before the remedy is barred, usufructuary mortgagor has the right to deposit the redemption money under the preliminary decree. Even if a previous application had been moved after deposit and it was dismissed for non prosecution that would not per se bar his right to move a fresh application for passing a final decree within three years from the date from which the deposit was made. In a usufructuary mortgage, the usufructuary mortgagor holds a right to liquidate money “any time” vis-a-vis the mortgagee and the limitation period commences as and when the liquidation occurs. Thus mere expiry of 30 years from the date of creation of the mortgage would not extinguish the limitation period. A mortgagee thus cannot seek ownership of the property by mere efflux of time.⁹⁹⁹

The mortgagee may stipulate for notice before redemption after due date. This is in order to enable him to find another investment. In India, the mortgagee is entitled to three month's notice especially in presidency-towns. The omission to give notice would not be a bar to a suit for redemption, but probably, the mortgagee would be entitled to six months' interest in lieu of notice.¹⁰⁰⁰

[s 60.34] Redemption Suit by Benamidar

The Judicial Committee have held that an action can be maintained by a benamidar in respect of property, although the beneficial owner is in no way a party to it.¹⁰⁰¹ A benamidar may sue to redeem a mortgage granted by him as benamidar of the real owner, and so may the heirs of the benamidar mortgagor, or their assigns.¹⁰⁰² However, the real owner is also, of course, entitled to sue.¹⁰⁰³ These judgements will not hold good, after promulgation of the Benami Transaction (Prohibition) Act, 1988.

[s 60.35] Redemption Suit by Purchaser of Property

A right of redemption does not remain independent of the property itself. A sale of property, that too to a stranger, who had nothing to do with the mortgage and who was not a party to the same would convey a complete title of the property to him, and once the title to that property goes, the equity of redemption shall also accompany the property. In short, the purchaser would then be in a position to substitute himself in place of the plaintiff, and to step in the latter's shoes.¹⁰⁰⁴ However, in Panchanansharma v Basudeo Prasad Jaganani,¹⁰⁰⁵ the purchaser bought the property in a sale initiated due to default of a usufructuary mortgagee to pay land revenue as required under section 76(c). On the question whether the usufructuary mortgagor still had the right to redeem, the Supreme Court held that at best, the auction- purchaser, on redemption, would look to the mortgagee who had committed default in terms of the mortgage and the possession of the purchaser be on behalf of the mortgagee and becomes liable to accounting, rather than the mortgagor losing his title due to the misfeasance committed by the mortgagee, and the property being sold on account thereof to the third parties.

The last proviso of this section recognises the principle of the indivisibility of the mortgage security. A part-owner or purchaser of part of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage,¹⁰⁰⁶ but is not entitled to redeem his share only.¹⁰⁰⁷ Thus a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property is not entitled to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate amount due on the mortgage but it is not so when a co-mortgagor sells his interest in the mortgaged property in favour of the mortgagee himself.¹⁰⁰⁸ The reason for this rule is that the disintegration of the mortgage security would result in great injustice to the mortgagee. The Judicial Committee in *Nilakant v Suresh Chunder*¹⁰⁰⁹ said:

It would put him to a separate suit against each purchaser of a fragment of the equity of redemption though purchasing without his consent, and he would have separate suits against each of them, and suits in which no one of the parties would be bound by anything which took place in a suit against another. Different proportions of value might be struck in the different suits, and the utmost confusion and embarrassment would be created.

A co-mortgagor cannot be permitted to redeem his own share of the mortgaged property only on payment of proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, as this would break the integrity of the mortgage.¹⁰¹⁰ Where, out of a number of mortgagees, only one of them acquires by purchase a part (one half) of the mortgaged property, the mortgage will remain undivided and, if redeemed at all, can be redeemed in its entirety. There is no merger.¹⁰¹¹ There may be a special condition in the mortgage-deed recognizing the mortgagors' shares as subject to a separate redemption,¹⁰¹² or there may be partial redemption as a matter of subsequent bargain, or arrangement between all the parties interested.¹⁰¹³ When there are two mortgagors only one among them is not entitled to seek partial redemption to the extent of his mortgaged property. By act of co-mortgagor, integrity of the mortgage is broken and as such one of the mortgagors would be entitled to seek redemption to the extent of the share belonging to him. In these circumstances the co-mortgagor would be entitled to seek redemption of his half share in the suit property by paying the mortgage amount in proportion with his share. If the mortgagee acquires half share from the co-mortgagor by way of sale, the integrity of the mortgage being broken, the other co-mortgagor would be entitled to seek partial redemption of his respective share.¹⁰¹⁴ Otherwise neither the mortgagor, nor the mortgagee can get relief except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility—for the character of indivisibility exists both with reference to the mortgagor, and to the mortgagee.¹⁰¹⁵ Therefore, the mortgagor of a share is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage, although the mortgagee is prepared to allow redemption of the share only.¹⁰¹⁶ A lessee of a share of the property mortgaged can redeem the whole property.¹⁰¹⁷ However, when the indivisibility of a mortgage is broken by purchase, inheritance or otherwise, a partial redemption can be allowed.¹⁰¹⁸

An adjustment between a prior mortgagee and a subsequent mortgagee cannot be recognised as it would be a partial redemption.¹⁰¹⁹ The section has application so long as the mortgage continues without being modified or split up by agreement between parties. By the amendment introduced in the proviso, it is no doubt true that the other modes of splitting up of the integrity of a mortgage were practically intended to be registered, and the only way by which the integrity would be broken is in the manner laid down in the last clause of section 60. But that is only when there is no modification of the mortgage by consent of the parties.¹⁰²⁰

The vesting of portion of the mortgaged property with the government and the subsequent assignment of mortgaged right in favour of the government, are not sufficient to formulate the exception provided in the last paragraph of section 60 of the TP Act, 1882.¹⁰²¹

[s 60.37] After the Amendment

It is submitted that by the amendment of the section by the insertion of the word “only,” the first two exceptions are abolished, and the third alone remains. The effect of the amendment is detailed as below:

(i) Where the mortgagee allows redemption of a share

Under the amended section, the fact that the mortgagee has allowed a share in the equity of redemption to redeem his share will not justify partial redemption as to the rest.¹⁰²² So also, the integrity of a mortgage is not broken, if one of the mortgagees acquires the interest of the mortgagor.¹⁰²³ The mortgage of that share will be extinguished by the redemption, but as to the residue, there will be an indivisible mortgage. This was the view of the Allahabad High Court even before the amendment, and cases to that effect have already been cited.¹⁰²⁴

(ii) Release of a share by the mortgagee

Under the amended section, the fact that the mortgagee releases part of the property mortgaged does not justify partial redemption as to the rest.¹⁰²⁵ Thus, when three properties X, Y and Z were mortgaged and the mortgagee released X from the mortgage, Y and Z were liable for the whole amount of the mortgage, and subsequent transferees of Y and Z could not claim that they were liable only for a share of the mortgage debt.¹⁰²⁶ In some cases before the amendment, the purchaser got relief by being allowed partial redemption, which was in effect making the mortgagee contribute. This was wrong, for the obligation of contribution under section 82 is not personal, but attaches to the property. The purchaser gets relief not against the mortgagee, but against the share of the property released by the mortgagee. This he must get after he has redeemed the whole mortgage. This view of the law was taken even before the amendment by the Allahabad High Court in Jugal Kishore Sahu v Kedar Nath,¹⁰²⁷ and by the Madras High Court in Perumal v Raman Chettiar.¹⁰²⁸

(iii) Acquisition by the mortgagee of a share in the property

The law on this case has not been altered. If the mortgagee acquires a share in the property, the integrity of the mortgage is broken, and a sharer in the rest of the property is entitled to redeem his own share. The onus lies on the mortgagee to prove that no part of the mortgage debt was extinguished.¹⁰²⁹ However, it is open to a co-mortgagor to redeem the entire mortgage despite the mortgagee.¹⁰³⁰ If the integrity of the mortgage is broken by the mortgagee purchasing a share and there are several mortgagors, each mortgagor is entitled to redeem his own share, and there is no equity in favour of redeeming more than his share.¹⁰³¹ Cases on this point are still good law, and it does not matter whether the acquisition was by purchase, inheritance or otherwise. The share of the mortgagor means the interest of the mortgagor after the creation of the mortgage.¹⁰³² The third para of section 60 does not apply to a maintenance decree which creates a charge.¹⁰³³ Where the mortgagee had already disintegrated the mortgage by agreeing to redemption of three-fourths of the land, the rule against partial redemption cannot apply. In fact, in the circumstances, the redemption cannot be called “partial”.¹⁰³⁴

ILLUSTRATIONS TO (iii) ABOVE

(1) A mortgages property to his wife B in satisfaction of a debt for dower. After the deaths of A and B, their daughter C sues to enforce the mortgage. C as one of the heirs of A is entitled to one-eleventh share of A's estate. The integrity of the mortgage is broken, and the other heirs are entitled to redeem ten-elevenths of the property mortgaged for their share of the debt.¹⁰³⁵

(2) A mortgages property to B. A then sells one-third of the property to C, one-third to D, and one-third to the mortgagee B. The integrity of the mortgage is broken, and C may redeem his one-third share for one-third of the debt.

(3) Where it was agreed between a usufructuary mortgagee and a co-mortgagor that a co-mortgagor should have liberty to redeem his two-fifths share of the property on payment of the amount for which he was proportionately liable, which amount was also determined by apportionment between the co-mortgagors and a preliminary decree was passed in terms of the arrangement in the presence of the other co-mortgagor, it was held that the mortgage security was split up, and the co-mortgagor in whose favour the preliminary decree was passed was not entitled to redeem the entire mortgage after the passing of the preliminary decree.¹⁰³⁶

The above submission made in earlier editions of this work that by the amendment of the section by insertion of the word “only” after word “except”, the first two exceptions are abolished and the third alone remains, is fully supported by a decision of the Privy Council,¹⁰³⁷ where it was held that the right of redemption of mortgaged

property in India is, in the absence of a wider right being given by agreement express or implied, conferred and defined by the TP Act, 1882, and a mortgagor must redeem on the terms of the Act. The last clause of section 60 of the TP Act, 1882, apart from the exception which it recognises, was intended to preclude mortgagors or persons deriving title from them from claiming, independently of the agreement, to have an equity to redeem their own share on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage money. Under section 60 of the TP Act, 1882 the integrity of a mortgage is not broken except where the mortgagee has purchased or otherwise acquired as proprietor a certain portion of the property mortgaged. This categorical statement of the law sets at rest the divergent views previously expressed by courts in India. Where one co- mortgagor, by paying off the entire mortgage debt, gets a right to contribution against the other co-mortgagor, a co-related right also accrues to the non-redeeming co-mortgagor to redeem his share of the property, and to get possession on payment of his share of the liability to the redeeming co-mortgagor.¹⁰³⁸ The undernoted Allahabad case is one where the mortgagee purchased a part.¹⁰³⁹

[s 60.38] Redemption of Portion of Mortgaged Property

The last paragraph of section 60 prohibits partial redemption subject to one exception. The said paragraph can be divided into two segments. The first part contains a negation to the holder of part of equity of redemption to redeem that part alone on payment of the proportionate debt. The second limb of the paragraph provides the solitary exception to the aforesaid negating edict. The words in that second limb “except only where” are a pointer that the said exception would strictly be confined to the one situation envisaged therein. In order to invoke the solitary exception to the disentitling fiat of the last paragraph of section 60, there must be a conjunction of two postulates. One is that the share of the mortgagor in the property would have been “acquired”. The second is that the person who so acquired should have been the mortgagee. The principle behind the exception to the prohibition clause is, if the mortgagee is satisfied of a part of the mortgage debt by becoming the owner of a part of the mortgaged property, it is only equitable to allow the mortgagor to get pro tanto reduction of the mortgage debt, otherwise it would be in just to allow the entire mortgage debt again to be borne by the remaining mortgaged property. By becoming the owner of the a part of the mortgaged property, it is not necessary that the mortgage money would have been discharged even proportionately. It depends upon how the mortgagee got a share in the mortgaged property.¹⁰⁴⁰

In an early decision of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Jasodha Kumar Dey v Kali Kumar Dey,¹⁰⁴¹ a mortgagor sold one of the items of the mortgaged properties to the plaintiff mortgagee, and in consideration thereof purchased another property of the plaintiff for the same price. In the suit for recovery of mortgage debt from the remaining properties, the mortgagor contended that he is entitled to a proportionate reduction of the mortgage debt. The Division Bench repelled the contention in the following terms:

The mortgagor by his conduct impliedly agreed by receiving the full value of the property that no portion of the mortgage debt would be extinguished by virtue of the purchase by the mortgagee. That being so the mortgagor is not entitled to claim in this suit that a portion of the mortgage debt should be held to be pro tanto extinguished by the purchase of one of the properties by the mortgagee.

Learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the above case relied on a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Lakshmidas Ramdas v Jamnadas Shankarlal.¹⁰⁴² In that case, the mortgagee had purchased one of the properties in an auction-sale in execution of a decree. The Full Bench held that:

If the mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption he must allow proportionate reduction of the value of the property purchased by him; but where the circumstances under which the purchase was made show that it was purchased free from all encumbrances, the plaintiff can enforce his entire security against the remaining property.

60. Right of mortgagor to redeem.—

A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in *Eswara Krishna Iyer v Mariya Susai Reddiar*¹⁰⁴³ held:

The principle underlying the last clause of section 60 applies only in cases where the mortgagee in the character of a mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption outstanding in the mortgagor.

The Supreme Court in the case of *State of Kerala v Koliyat Estates*¹⁰⁴⁴ has approved the above views taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras on the interpretation of the last paragraph of section 60.

The High Court of Kerala had considered the above decisions of the Supreme Court and other High Courts in Leelamma v TG Raveendran Nair,¹⁰⁴⁵ and held that pro tanto extinguishment of the mortgage right would arise only if it satisfies the last paragraph of section 60 which applies only in cases where the mortgagee in the character of a mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption outstanding with the mortgagor.

If the mortgagee purchases a share of the equity of redemption after a redemption suit is filed, he is subject to the doctrine of lis pendens, and is liable to be redeemed as to the whole.¹⁰⁴⁶ Though, under the last para of section 60, the co-mortgagor cannot redeem the entire hypotheca, and has to redeem only the mortgagor's share, the principle does not apply, if the purchase of a share by the mortgagee is after the filing of the suit for redemption by the co-mortgagor. In that case, the co-mortgagor can sue for the redemption and possession of the entire hypotheca and the mortgagee cannot cling on to the possession of the property by purchasing, after the suit, a share of the hypotheca, howsoever small, from the non-redeeming co-mortgagors. In that event, he is subject to section 52, TP Act, 1882 and has to first surrender possession of the entire hypotheca-qua-mortgagee, and then sue for partition and possession.¹⁰⁴⁷

A co-mortgagor cannot claim to redeem his share because of the purchase of another share by one of several mortgagees,¹⁰⁴⁸ for there is no merger unless the rights are co-extensive, and it would be a hardship, on the other mortgagees that one of them should have the power to alter the indivisible character of the security. In order that the integrity of the mortgage may be broken, it is necessary that the mortgagee should have purchased a share in the mortgaged property.¹⁰⁴⁹

[s 60.41] Gift by Mortgagee to Two or More Persons

The mere fact that the mortgagee has divided his interest by gift or assignment to several persons will not justify partial redemption of each share.¹⁰⁵⁰ Where, however, such an assignee subsequently purchases the equity of redemption, the integrity of the mortgage is broken qua that portion, and partial redemption was allowed.¹⁰⁵¹ In Sunitabala Debi v Dhara Sundari,¹⁰⁵² where there was a mortgage to several mortgagees as tenants in common, their Lordships of the Privy Council said that no redemption could be effected of part of the property by paying to one of the mortgagees his separate debt.

Where a mortgagee accepts a settlement with some of the persons interested in the mortgaged property and agrees to recover from them a proportionate part of the debt payable by them out of the property owned by them, and has submitted to the scheme of payment enforced on him by the operation of the provision of the Relief of Indebtedness Act, the court will not allow him to recover the entire debt again from the other

mortgagors. Section 60 is inapplicable to such a case.¹⁰⁵³

[s 60.43] Suit for Partial Redemption

A suit for partial redemption will now only lie when the mortgagee has acquired a share in the equity of redemption. When that occurs, the mortgage is pro tanto extinguished. The ordinary right of any sharer in the rest of the property is to redeem the whole of the rest of the balance of the debt. This is the general rule laid down by the Privy Council in Narendra Narain v Dwarka Lal Mundur,¹⁰⁵⁴ and enacted in section 91 of the TP Act, 1882. Thus, supposing four fields of equal value are mortgaged for ₹400 and the mortgagor then sells one to A, one to B, one to C and one to the mortgagee, the mortgage of the field sold to the mortgagee is extinguished, and there remains a mortgage of the three fields of A, B and C for ₹300. A, B or C is entitled to redeem the three fields for ₹300 and to allow the other two, who are necessary parties to the suit, to take their fields on their contributing ₹100 each. But the right of partial redemption would give either A, B or C a right to sue for the redemption of his own field for ₹100.¹⁰⁵⁵ But if A sues to redeem his field, he must make B and C parties, for they must be bound by the account which will have to be taken as to the respective values of the shares.

A suit for partial redemption is, therefore, a combination of a suit for redemption and a suit for contribution, the right of partial redemption being a privilege given to avoid multiplicity of suits.¹⁰⁵⁶ Thus, if A mortgages property to B, and then A sells one-sixteenth to C, one-half to D, three-sixteenth to E and one-fourth to the mortgagee B; the mortgage of one-fourth is extinguished, and there remains a mortgage of three-fourth consisting of one-sixteenth of C plus one-half of D plus three-sixteenth of E. Then if C sues to redeem three-fourth, this is generally called a suit for partial redemption because it seeks to redeem a part of the original mortgage. However, strictly speaking, this is not partial redemption, for the only mortgage subsisting after B's purchase is a mortgage of three-fourth. C by seeking to redeem this mortgage is exercising his right as co-mortgagor to redeem the whole mortgage existing at the time of his redemption. But if C sues only to redeem his own share of one-sixteenth, he is exercising his right of partial redemption of "his own share only" to quote the words of the section. In this suit, D and E would be made parties and their rights safeguarded. On acquiring a share of the property by the mortgagee, the normal right of a sharer in the residue is to redeem it—and his right under the exception, in his section is to redeem his own share in that residue.

Unfortunately, this proposition has been obscured in what is generally considered to be the leading case on the subject of partial partition. This is the case of Nawab Azimut Ali v Jowahir Singh.¹⁰⁵⁷ In that case, an estate consisting of 16 villages had been mortgaged to the predecessors in title of the Nawab. The villages were then sold in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors. One village Husseinpur was purchased by the plaintiff, one village by A, one by B, a quarter of another village by C, and twelve $\frac{3}{4}$ villages by the mortgagee. The plaintiff sued to redeem his village of Husseinpur on payment of a ratable proportion of the debt, but did not make A, B and C parties to the suit. The mortgagee objected that they should have been made parties, and that plaintiff should have offered to redeem their villages also. The sadar court gave effect to the mortgagee's contention and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff then filed a fresh suit claiming to redeem all the three $\frac{1}{4}$ villages excepting those purchased by the mortgagee. The mortgagee objected that the plaintiff was only entitled to redeem his own village. The sadar court made a decree for redemption in terms of the plaint. On appeal, however, the Judicial Committee varied the decree and allowed the plaintiff to redeem only his own village of Husseinpur on payment of a ratable proportion of the debt. The following passage gives the ratio decidendi:

The courts below, however, seem to their Lordships to have mistaken the effect of the former decision of the Sadar Court. It merely ruled that the plaintiffs were bound to offer to redeem the villages in question, it did not rule that they were entitled to do so, or to acquire the interest of the mortgagee in them against his will. It is unnecessary to determine in this suit, whether in the peculiar circumstances of this case the former proposition is correct. Their Lordships are of opinion, that the latter cannot be supported. They think that the appellant, if desirous of retaining possession of those villages as mortgagee, is entitled to do so against the plaintiffs, whose right in that case is limited to the redemption and recovery of their village of Husseinpur, upon payment of so much of the sum deposited in court as represents the portion of the mortgage debt chargeable on that village.

The right of partial redemption was, therefore, given effect to and in an earlier passage in the judgment, their Lordships said:

The appellant does not, as their Lordships understand, contest the proposition that plaintiffs, as purchaser of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged premises, are entitled to redeem that portion on payment of some proportion of the mortgage debt.

It is clear that the Privy Council did not approve of the sadar court's finding that plaintiff should have offered to redeem the villages of A, B and C as well as his own. Ghose¹⁰⁵⁸ seems to think that the plaintiff was bound to offer to redeem these, as the mortgagee's purchase had not destroyed the indivisible character of the mortgage as to the residue. But this view seems inconsistent with the decree allowing redemption of one village only. All that was necessary was that A, B and C should have been parties to the suit in which the account of the respective values of the villages would have to be taken. But the Privy Council do apparently hold that a sharer in the residue left after a mortgagee's purchase of part of the property cannot redeem the whole of that residue without the consent of the mortgagee. It is impossible to justify this limitation of the ordinary right of the mortgagor of a share to redeem the whole. The mortgagee's only interest is to get his money and so long as he is paid, it cannot matter to him which mortgagor pays him. Chief Justice Sargent was evidently dissatisfied with the case, for he tried to explain it as limited to mortgagors who were owners of distinct villages, and not sharers in the same property.¹⁰⁵⁹ It is submitted that on this point Nawab Azimut Ali's case has been practically overruled by the later decision of the Privy Council in Mirza Yadalli Beg v Tukaram.¹⁰⁶⁰ That was not a case of a mortgagee purchasing a share in the equity of redemption, but it was very similar, for the mortgagee had foreclosed nine villages without making the purchaser in the equity of redemption of one village a party. This purchaser sued to redeem the whole mortgage. On behalf of the mortgagee, Nawab Azimut Ali's case was cited in support of the proposition that he was only entitled to redeem his own village. The Privy Council overruled this contention, and held that he was entitled to redeem the nine villages. Lord Haldane said:

The Judge in the original court thought that the decisions of the courts in India had established that one of several mortgagors cannot redeem more than his share unless the owners of the other shares consent or do not object. Subject to proper safeguarding of the rights to redeem, which those owners may possess, their Lordships are of opinion that this is not so in India any more than in England. The decisions referred to when scrutinized, turn out to be based not on any general principle different from that adverted to, but on the special circumstances of the transactions to which they related.

In the case of an imperfect foreclosure, the mortgagee has not acquired complete title to any part of the equity of redemption, and so the whole mortgage is open to redemption. However, the judgment in *Mirza Yadalli Beg v Tukaram*¹⁰⁶¹ shows clearly that the mortgagor of a share can redeem the shares of other co-mortgagors in the residue left after the mortgagee's purchase in spite of the opposition of the mortgagee. The real question is not whether the mortgagee objects; but whether the other co-sharers are willing to contribute their shares of the mortgage debt and redeem. If they are not, the plaintiff can redeem their share as well as his own. If they wish to redeem, they should be allowed to do so. This was the form of decree made in a case¹⁰⁶² decided by the

Patna High Court. The Patna High Court construed Nawab Azimut Ali's case as follows:

This case does not lay down that, where a mortgage has been split up a mortgagor cannot redeem more than his share in equity of redemption. What it does lay down is that the mortgagee in such case cannot prevent a mortgagor from redeeming his share only, instead of the entire mortgage.

This is good law, but it is doubtful if that is a correct version of the decision in Nawab Azimut Ali's case. Justice Piggot, said quite correctly of the owner of a share in the residue that—he is entitled on the strength of his position as part owner of the mortgaged property to redeem just as much of it as does not belong to the mortgagees themselves, and he is entitled to do so on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage debt.¹⁰⁶³

Some other cases allow redemption of the whole of the residue;¹⁰⁶⁴ but as a rule Nawab Azimut Ali's case has been followed and the right of the owner of a share in the residue left after the mortgagee's acquisition has been limited to the redemption of his own share only,¹⁰⁶⁵ and the result has sometimes been almost absurd. Thus, in an Allahabad case,¹⁰⁶⁶ one Dallibullah owned at two ans eight pie share of the equity of redemption, the other thirteen ans four pie share having been purchased by the mortgagee. If Dallibullah had sued in his lifetime, he could have redeemed that two ans eight pie share, but he died and after his death one of his heirs sued to redeem it. He made the other heirs parties and none of them objected, yet on the mortgagee's opposition, the heir was allowed to redeem only his fraction of the two ans eight pie share. The Allahabad High Court in a later case¹⁰⁶⁷ has sought to justify this course of decisions on the ground that "the integrity of the mortgage is necessary for the benefit of a mortgagee alone, and where that has been broken and a redemption has to be allowed, there is no equity in favour of one of the mortgagors to possess the remaining property, although the same is more than his own legitimate share." This, it is submitted, is wrong, for the character of indivisibility exists both with reference to the mortgagor as well as to the mortgagee.¹⁰⁶⁸

The right of the mortgagor of a share to redeem the whole is recognised in sections 91 and 95 of the TP Act, 1882, and it is difficult to see why the acquisition by the mortgagee of a part of the property should affect that right as to the rest. Where the mortgagee brings a suit omitting a necessary party and obtains a decree and purchases the mortgaged property in execution thereof, the mortgage decree and the execution sale are no effect as against the person who was not impleaded in the mortgage suit, and he is entitled to treat the mortgage as subsisting, and can ask for its redemption in its entirety. The position is quite different where the equity of redemption of some of the mortgagors has been effectively sold and purchased by the mortgagee himself at a private sale, or in execution of a money decree. In such a case, the effect of the mortgagee's purchase would be to wipe out the mortgage in respect of that share. The mortgage could not be said to be subsisting so far as that share was concerned.¹⁰⁶⁹

The part purchased by the mortgagee cannot of course be redeemed. This is either because the mortgage as to that part has been extinguished by merger, or because the mortgagee if redeemed would immediately reclaim it. If the mortgagee has purchased a life-interest in a part, he cannot be redeemed while that interest lasts. Thus, in a Madras case¹⁰⁷⁰ two Hindu widows had mortgaged their late husband's property which was purchased by the mortgagee in execution of a money decree against one of them, the other widow was allowed to redeem her own half share at once, and the other half on the death of the co-widow. In the case of a mortgagee purchasing the share of an undivided Hindu coparcener, the Madras High Court requires the other coparcener to ascertain his share by partition and then sue to redeem it;¹⁰⁷¹ but in Bombay he must redeem the whole property, and then ascertain his share by partition.¹⁰⁷² The Andhra Pradesh High Court following the Bombay ruling has held that though under the last para of section 60 of TP Act, 1882, the co-mortgagor cannot redeem the entire hypotheca, and has to redeem only the mortgagor's share, the principle does not apply if the purchaser of a share by the mortgagee is after the filing of the suit for redemption by the co-mortgagor. In that case, the co-mortgagor can sue for redemption and possession of the entire hypotheca and the mortgagee cannot cling on to the possession of the property by purchasing after the suit a share of the hypotheca, however small, from the non-redeeming co-mortgagors as he is subject to section 52 of the TP Act, 1882, and has to first surrender possession of the entire hypotheca qua mortgage, and then sue for partition and possession.¹⁰⁷³ The Bombay ruling is based on CJ Sargent's construction of Nawab Azimut Ali's case as limited to the part redemption of separate parcels of property. There seems, however, no reason why a prayer for redemption and for partition should not be combined in one suit. Though on general principle, a mortgage security cannot be split up at the instance of the mortgagor by allowing him a piecemeal redemption, a statute such as section 26G of Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 can intervene and provide for the same.¹⁰⁷⁴

[s 60.44] Vis-à-vis SARFAESI Act

The Supreme Court of India has considered the impact of provisions of Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act, 2002 (SARFAESI Act) vis-à-vis section 60. Until the sale is complete by registration of sale, mortgagor does not lose right of redemption. Under section 13(8) of SARFAESI Act borrower retains full right to redeem the property by tendering dues to the secured creditor at any time before the date fixed for sale. Section 60 of Transfer of Property Act is general in nature in respect of all mortgages and applicable to a transaction between debtor and secured creditor under provisions of SARFAESI Act¹⁰⁷⁵

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

¹⁰⁷⁶[60A. Obligation to transfer to third party instead of re-transference to mortgagor.—

- (1) Where a mortgagor is entitled to redemption, then, on the fulfilment of any conditions on the fulfilment of which he would be entitled to require a re-transfer, he may require the mortgagee, instead of re-transferring the property, to assign the mortgage-debt and transfer the mortgaged property to such third person as the mortgagor may direct; and the mortgagee shall be bound to assign and transfer accordingly.
- (2) The rights conferred by this section belong to and may be enforced by the mortgagor or by any encumbrancer notwithstanding an intermediate encumbrance; but the requisition of any encumbrance shall prevail over a requisition of the mortgagor and, as between encumbrancers, the requisition of a prior encumbrancer shall prevail over that of a subsequent encumbrancer.
- (3) The provisions of this section do not apply in the case of a mortgagee who is or has been in possession.]

This section has been inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The right of the redeeming mortgagor under section 60 is to require the mortgagee to re-transfer either to the mortgagor himself, or to a third person. Under this section, he may require the mortgagee to assign the mortgage to a third person. A puisne mortgagee, as assignee of part of the equity of redemption, may redeem a prior mortgagee, and exercise this right.

[s 60A.1] A Mortgagee who is or has been in Possession

The reason why a mortgagee being or having been in possession, is excepted is that a mortgagee who has taken possession remains accountable in respect of profits, and other matters even after the transfer.¹⁰⁷⁷

¹⁰⁷⁸[60B. Right to inspection and production of documents.—

A mortgagor, as long as his right of redemption subsists, shall be entitled at all reasonable times, at his request and at his own cost, and on payment of the mortgagee's costs and expenses in this behalf, to inspect and make copies or abstracts of, or extracts from, documents of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the custody or power of the mortgagee.]

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. It recognises the right of the mortgagor to inspection and copies of deeds of title relating to the mortgaged property which are in the custody of the mortgagee. Cases which denied this right of inspection are no longer good law.¹⁰⁷⁹

¹⁰⁸⁰[61. Right to redeem separately or simultaneously.—

A mortgagor who has executed two or more mortgages in favour of the same mortgagee shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, when the principal money of any two or more of the mortgages has become due, be entitled to redeem any one such mortgage separately, or any two or more of such mortgages together.]

This section was substituted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 61.2] Contract to the Contrary

The parties themselves may exclude the operation of the section, and the contract of mortgage may allow the mortgagee to consolidate.¹⁰⁸¹ However, a provision to that effect must be explicit.¹⁰⁸² If there is a stipulation for simultaneous redemption in the subsequent mortgage of the same property, this is equivalent to a contract for consolidation and the mortgages cannot be redeemed separately. As explained in the notes on section 60, such a stipulation is not a clog on redemption. In this connection, the note “Subsequent Agreement Postponing Redemption” may be referred. In an Allahabad case,¹⁰⁸³ the first mortgage was by two mortgagors, and the second by one of them only, who covenanted to pay before redeeming the first mortgage. This was held not to be a contract of consolidation, but to be a provision fixing time for payment. The effect of a covenant for consolidation was much debated in a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court.¹⁰⁸⁴ The mortgagor had made a usufructuary mortgage of his occupancy holding, and then took further advances and executed two bonds of further charge, and in those bonds covenanted not to redeem the usufructuary mortgage until these subsequent advances had been paid off. Now a transfer of an occupancy holding is forbidden by the Agra Tenancy Act, 1881, but the Allahabad High Court had held that an usufructuary mortgage in so far as it is a transfer of “a right to occupy” or of a right to possession is valid. Under this ruling, the bonds were invalid as mortgages or deeds of further charge and the usufructuary mortgage was valid only as the transfer of a right of possession.¹⁰⁸⁵ In view of this ruling, each of the judges took a different view of the effect of the covenant— one judge held that as a personal covenant it was valid—another judge held that it was invalid as it hindered redemption of the usufructuary mortgage; and the third judge that it was invalid as it has the effect of making the usufructuary mortgage operate as a mortgage of something more than a right of possession.

[s 61.3] Two or more Mortgages

These words mark the distinction between the old section and the new. The new section refers to two or more mortgages of the same or of different properties. For instance, it would include a case of four mortgages thus:

[61. Right to redeem separately or simultaneously.—

- (1) A mortgages X to B;
- (2) A mortgages X to B by a puisne mortgage;
- (3) A mortgages Y to B;
- (4) A mortgages Z to B.

The new section enacts that unless restrained by contract to the contrary, A may redeem each of these four mortgages separately. Under the section it is clear that even if the mortgages are of the same property, the mortgagor may redeem each separately, unless restrained by a contract to the contrary. The effect of the amendment is to abolish the consolidation of mortgages whether in respect of the same properties or different properties.¹⁰⁸⁶

It might be supposed that conversely a mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages of the same property from the same mortgagor might enforce each separately, and that the old rule requiring the mortgagee to consolidate was abolished. However, this is not so; and section 67A of the TP Act, 1882 as amended puts the rights of the mortgagee on a totally different footing, and if he has successive mortgages of the same property or different mortgages of different properties from the same mortgagor, he must enforce all or none. This is because a sale of property subject to other mortgages is not likely to realise a fair price, and would be a hardship on the mortgagor.¹⁰⁸⁷ On the other hand, if the mortgagor redeems one of several mortgages, he benefits the mortgagee by enhancing the value of his security. This equitable consideration overrides not only the rule of procedure which allows a separate suit on each cause of action, but also the principle that rights of redemption and foreclosure are co- extensive.

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

62. Right of usufructuary mortgagor to recover possession.—

In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property ¹⁰⁸⁸[together with the mortgage-deed and all documents relating to the mortgaged property which are in the possession or power of the mortgagee]—

- (a) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself the mortgage- money from the rents and profits of the property,—when such money is paid;
- (b) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself from such rents and profits ¹⁰⁸⁹[or any part thereof a part only of the mortgage- money]—when the term (if any) prescribed for the payment of the mortgage- money has expired and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee ¹⁰⁹⁰ [the mortgage-money or the balance thereof] or deposits it in court as hereinafter provided.

This section has been amended by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 62.2] Right of Usufructuary Mortgagor to Recover Possession

The section does not use the word redemption and it applies only to usufructuary mortgages pure and simple;¹⁰⁹¹ but the remedy of the mortgagor in clause (b) would be enforced by suit for redemption or by the summary process of deposit and notice under section 83. On the other hand, under clause (a) there is no tender or payment and the suit would not be one for redemption. Such a suit would be described in England as a suit in ejectment;¹⁰⁹² and in India it has been said that a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage is in substance a suit for possession.¹⁰⁹³ When the debt is satisfied out of the rents and profits, the mortgagor recovers possession on his title.¹⁰⁹⁴ Thus, in *Nidha Sah v Murli Dhar*¹⁰⁹⁵ the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage for a term of 14 years, and provided that at the expiry of that term the mortgagor was entitled to possession without an account. The mortgagee did not get possession of the whole property because of a misrepresentation by the mortgagor. Nevertheless, the Privy Council held that as the mortgagor's suit was not on contract but on title, he was entitled at the end of the term to recover the part of which the mortgagee had possession. However, the so-called mortgage in this case was not really a mortgage, for the transfer was not security for the payment of any money or for the performance of any engagement, but simply a grant for a fixed term free of rent in consideration of a sum made up of past and present advances. Where no period is fixed in a usufructuary mortgage for redemption of the mortgage when the mortgage was created the principle of "once a mortgage always a mortgage" applies and the mortgage can be redeemed at any time. The mortgagee cannot automatically become the owner of the land due to efflux of time.¹⁰⁹⁶ Upon redemption, the possession of property is to be delivered to borrowers with no further liability towards the bank.¹⁰⁹⁷ Where in a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee was declared as an evacuee and he migrated to Pakistan, and consequently his rights as a mortgagee would vest in the custodian and not the title to the property and therefore the custodian can accept redemption of the property from the mortgagor.¹⁰⁹⁸ In usufructuary mortgage, the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property does to come to an end by simple efflux of time of 30 years. Thus the mortgagee in possession of the property for a period of more than 30 years cannot claim ownership of the same by simple efflux of time.¹⁰⁹⁹

This refers to cases where the principal and interest are paid out of the usufruct, and the suit is one for the recovery of possession rather than redemption. The words “when such money is paid” refer to payment out of the rents and profits.¹¹⁰⁰ In such cases, the mortgagee pays himself out of the rents and profits, and surrenders possession when the debt is paid off. If the mortgagor sues to recover possession before the debt is discharged out of the usufruct, the suit must be dismissed as premature.¹¹⁰¹ In some obsolete cases, the mortgagor was allowed to redeem by making a cash payment before the mortgage was discharged out of the usufruct.¹¹⁰² The chief court of Oudh made a similar order in a subsequent case;¹¹⁰³ but the decision proceeds on the erroneous notion that the mortgagor can redeem at his convenience, and it makes no reference to the Privy Council decision in Bakhtawar Begam v Husami Khanam.¹¹⁰⁴ In a Madras case,¹¹⁰⁵ the mortgage was usufructuary with a condition that the mortgagee should remain in possession until the mortgage debt and interest were discharged out of the usufruct. There was also an option given to the mortgagor to redeem by payment of the balance due at the end of 10 years. The mortgagor did not exercise this option at the end of the period of 10 years, but sued after the 10 years, but before the mortgage was satisfied out of the usufruct. The suit was dismissed as premature. This was on the principle that the law will not allow the mortgagor to discharge the debt before the prescribed period in a manner not contemplated by the contract.¹¹⁰⁶ If the interest or the interest and defined portions of the principal are to be satisfied out of the usufruct, the mortgagee would not be liable to account on redemption. If, however, the mortgagee has remained in possession after the date of tender or deposit and has realised a surplus in excess of the mortgage money, he is liable to account for such surplus but the mortgagor must include a claim for it in his suit, the surplus being really mesne profits, for otherwise he will be barred from filing another suit.¹¹⁰⁷

Usufructuary mortgages under clause (a) sometimes fix a term when right to recover possession arises. This is when the parties make an estimate of the rents and profits, and agree that the mortgage will be discharged by possession for the term fixed. In such cases, the mortgagor will not be entitled to recover possession before the expiry of the term, for “when the parties to a mortgage agree to certain terms, it is the duty of both parties to adhere to the terms of the mortgage”.¹¹⁰⁸ The mortgagor may on equitable grounds be allowed to redeem before the expiry of the term by reason of the conduct of the mortgagee. Thus, in Immani Seshayya v Dronamraju,¹¹⁰⁹ a usufructuary mortgage provided that the mortgage should be discharged by the rents and profits for 55 years, less an annual sum of ₹60 to be paid out of the rents and profits to the mortgagor. The mortgagee did not make these payments to the mortgagor, and it was held that he was bound to apply the sums to the reduction of the debt, so that the mortgagor could redeem within the fixed period as soon as the debt was discharged.¹¹¹⁰

This clause in the old section referred to the case in which the mortgagee took the profits in lieu of interest. It has now been expanded in order to cover all the classes of usufructuary mortgage as defined in section 58(d) which are not included in clause (a). There are three classes in section 58(d). These are when the whole or part of the rents and profits are taken:

- (1) in lieu of interest;
- (2) in payment of the mortgage-money;
- (3) part in lieu of interest and part in payment of mortgage-money.

62. Right of usufructuary mortgagor to recover possession.—

Class (2) is covered by clause (a); and clause (b) covers classes (1) and (3).

In class (1), the interest is part of the mortgage-money and the mortgagor redeems when he tenders the balance of the mortgage money, i.e., the principal. If the usufructuary mortgagee leases the property to the mortgagor for a rent equivalent to the interest so that the lease and mortgage are one transaction, the mortgagor cannot redeem without payment of arrears of rent.¹¹¹¹ However, this has been doubted in some judgments of the Kerala and Madras High Courts.¹¹¹² But if the lease and the mortgage are independent transactions, the mortgagor can redeem on payment of the principal money, irrespective of the amount due under the lease.¹¹¹³

In class (3), part of the rents and profits are set apart as equivalent to interest, and the rest or part of the rest go in reduction of the principal.

If no term is fixed and if the contract is for payment of the debt out of the rents and profits also, the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem when the principal was discharged out of the residue or part of residue of the rents and profits. Otherwise, the mortgagor could redeem at any time on payment of the balance of the mortgage-money. If a term is fixed, the right of redemption would arise at the expiry of the term, and there would be an account to ascertain the balance due, unless such account were dispensed with by the terms of the mortgage.

In Subban Chettiar v Rangan Chetti,¹¹¹⁴ there was a usufructuary mortgage to A for a term for 12 years, then a second usufructuary mortgage to B who was to redeem A and take possession for a further term of 10 years, and a third mortgage to C. B failed to redeem A at the end of the first term and so, C redeemed A and took possession. Then B sued to redeem C as first mortgagee and C delayed giving possession for 15 months. C then sued to redeem B at the expiry of the second term of 10 years. B was not entitled to add the period of 15 months to his term. Whatever remedy B might have in damages or otherwise for C's wrongful conduct, he could not extend the period of the mortgage.

If by the terms of the mortgage, part of the rents and profits are to be taken in lieu of interest and the balance paid to the mortgagor, arrears of such balance should be deducted in the redemption suit.¹¹¹⁵

[s 62.5] Anomalous Mortgages

Section 62 applies to usufructuary mortgages pure and simple, and has no application to anomalous mortgages which contain a covenant to pay.¹¹¹⁶ To an anomalous mortgage, the provisions of section 60 apply.

[s 62.6] Usufructuary Mortgage and Deed of Further Charge

If the usufructuary mortgage is followed by a deed of further charge or a puisne simple mortgage, then in the absence of a covenant for consolidation, the mortgagor is entitled to redeem each mortgage separately.¹¹¹⁷ He may recover possession from the usufructuary mortgagee by suit under section 62, and then redeem the simple mortgage by suit under section 60. In an Oudh case,¹¹¹⁸ it was said that section 62 has no application where after the execution of a usufructuary mortgage, other mortgages by way of further charge have been executed by the same mortgagor. This is incorrect, and the Privy Council have observed that section 62 is not in any way inconsistent with the provisions of section 61.¹¹¹⁹ On the other hand, if there is a contract for consolidation, the mortgagee is entitled to remain in possession until the further charge or mortgage is paid off.¹¹²⁰

62. Right of usufructuary mortgagor to recover possession.—

ILLUSTRATION

A borrowed ₹5,500 from B, and in July 1881, executed a usufructuary mortgage of his village to B for a period of 15 years. In November 1881, A borrowed a further sum of ₹2,500 from B and executed another document promising to repay the sum with interest within the period of 15 years. The deed then provided: "I shall first pay up this debt, including principal and interest, and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up the mortgage money. Without the payment of this debt, I cannot redeem the mortgaged village." Held that this subsequent deed created a further charge on the village and that he was entitled to remain in possession until both debts were discharged.¹¹²¹

Article 61 of the Limitation Act, 1963 provides the limitation of thirty years for a suit to redeem or recover the possession of immovable property mortgaged by the mortgagor from the date of accrual of right of the right to redeem or recover possession. Article 137, which is a residuary provision provides for limitation of three years in a case where no period of limitation is provided.¹¹²² In Achaldas Durgaji Oswal v Ramvilas Gangabisan Heda,¹¹²³ the Supreme Court has upheld the view taken by the Bombay High Court¹¹²⁴ that there is no limitation for filing an application for preparation of a final decree in respect of usufructuary mortgage. It has further been held that sub-rule (2) of rule 7 of O XXXIV of Code of Civil Procedure is not applicable to usufructuary mortgages. A usufructuary mortgagor is not entitled to seek extension of time and, therefore, the rejection of application of time becomes irrelevant.¹¹²⁵ In para 36 of the judgement, it has been held that:

We are therefore, of the opinion that although by reason of preliminary decree in the suit for redemption of usufructuary mortgage, the court may fix the time for payment of the amount declared due, but default in depositing such payment would not debar him from a right to redeem the mortgaged property.

In usufructuary mortgages there is no time fixed for repayment of money. As far as limitation for redemption of mortgage would be 30 years as prescribed under the limitation Act.¹¹²⁶ As the right to seek redemption accrues not from date of creation of mortgage but from the date of payment of mortgage money out of usufructs or partly out of usufructs and partly on payment or deposit by mortgager, mere expiry of the period of 30 years from the date of mortgage does not extinguish the right of the mortgagor under section 62.¹¹²⁷ Where no time is specified for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, the right of redemption is a continuing one and is not subject to any constraints of limitation.¹¹²⁸ The right of redemption in usufructuary mortgage arises only after the payment of loan and no limitation period applies unless the parties agree that mortgage is for a specific period.¹¹²⁹ Thus, if under a usufructuary mortgage, if the mortgagee was in possession of property for 60 years without the mortgagor going in for redemption, the right of redemption would subsist and therefore the mortgagee's suit for declaration of title on the ground of mortgagor's right of redemption being barred by limitation would be dismissed.¹¹³⁰

Usufructuary mortgagor's right under section 62 continues till mortgage money is paid. Until then, limitation does not start for purposes of Article 61 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. A usufructuary mortgagee is not entitled to file a suit for declaration that he had become an owner merely on the expiry of 30 years from the date of mortgage. Thus in case of usufructuary mortgage, mere expiry of period of 30 years from the date of mortgage does not extinguish the right of mortgagor under section 62.¹¹³¹

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

63. Accession to mortgaged property.—

Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, received any accession, the mortgagor, upon redemption shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession.

Accession acquired in virtue of transferred ownership.—Where such accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, and is capable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, the mortgagor desiring to take the accession must pay to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. If such separate possession or enjoyment is not possible, the accession must be delivered with the property; the mortgagor being liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper cost thereof, as an addition to the principal money, ¹¹³²with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum.

In the case last mentioned the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall be credited to the mortgagor.

Where the mortgage is usufructuary and the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be set off against interest, if any, payable on the money so expended.

[s 63.1] Amendment

The words “with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of 9% per annum” were substituted for the words “at the same rate of interest” by the amending Act 20 of 1929. This amendment was necessary in order to provide for cases where the mortgage deed is silent as to the rate of interest.

[s 63.2] Accessions

The section deals with—

- (1) Natural accessions.
- (2) Acquired accessions which are separable.

63. Accession to mortgaged property.—

(3) Acquired accessions which are inseparable.

This section refers to the mortgagor's rights to accessions made by the mortgagee, while section 70 refers to the mortgagee's right to accessions made by the mortgagor. Natural accessions, unless they have been the subject of a special contract, follow the general rule, accessio credit principal, of which sections 70 and 108 (d) are examples.

Accession means an addition or improvement leading to expansion of or benefit of mortgaged property.¹¹³³ It is not an absolute rule that a benefit or an interest acquired by a mortgagee over the mortgaged property in all cases, whatever may be the circumstances, must be held in trust for the benefit of the mortgagor. If the mortgagee by fraud or behind the back of the mortgagor obtained such benefit, it must be held for the benefit of the mortgagor. However, it is open to the mortgagee to show that he acquired it under an agreement.¹¹³⁴ Accessions are treated as accessions to the mortgaged property; but although the section does not make it a condition that the mortgagee should have made the acquisition by availing himself of his position as such mortgage, yet the judgment of the Privy Council in *Sorabjee v Dwarkadas*¹¹³⁵ shows that the section is only an application of the equitable principle enacted in section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 thus:

Where a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee or other qualified owner of any property, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred, and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted in gaining such advantage.

As to this section, their Lordships in the case cited above said:

In their Lordships' opinion there is nothing inconsistent with that section (section 90, Trusts Act) in the provisions of section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act as to accessions to mortgaged property and the terms on which the mortgagor may upon redemption obtain the benefit of them. The word "accession" is not defined in the Act, but the section dealt expressly with accessions which are acquired at the expense of the mortgagee and would appear to be clearly applicable to cases in which a subordinate tenure has admittedly been acquired by the mortgagee as an accession to the mortgaged property. Whether the term "accession" as used in this section should also be held to cover acquisition which the mortgagee has made for his own benefit but is bound, under section 90 of the Trusts Act to hold for the benefit of the mortgagor need not be discussed. Section 90 itself provides for the mortgagor bearing the cost of the acquisition in such a case, but section 63 goes somewhat further and contains as well an express provision as to profits arising from the accession where the mortgage is usufructuary. In the present case, it is sufficient to say that their Lordships are clearly of opinion that section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be read as entitling the mortgagor to recover acquisitions made by the mortgagee for his own benefit in circumstances which do not bring him within section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act.¹¹³⁶

Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 enacts a wider rule than that in section 63 and deals with a tenant for life, a co-owner, a mortgagee or other qualified owner who by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested. An acquisition by the mortgagee is an advantage gained, and illustration (c) to section 90 shows that such an acquisition may not be an accession, though the Privy Council has refrained from saying that this is necessarily the case. However, it was held that when the acquisition is an accession made by the mortgagee for his own benefit, the mortgagor is not entitled to it, except under the equitable rule enacted in section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. In other words, the mortgagor must show that the mortgagee by availing himself of his position as such, acquired the accession in derogation of the rights of the mortgagor. The case before the Privy Council was that of a mortgagee of a share of a village who also became a co-owner by the purchase of a half share in the equity of redemption, and by the purchase of two fields. He required these fields for a ginning factory and, therefore, purchased the tenancy rights in them during the continuance of the mortgage. On redemption, the tenancy right was claimed as an accession, but the Privy Council held that in order to justify the mortgagor's claim it was incumbent on him to show that the tenancy right was acquired under such circumstances as to bring the acquisition within section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. Their Lordships dissented from a decision of the Calcutta High Court¹¹³⁷ that the mortgagor was entitled to a subordinate tenure acquired by the mortgagee without regard to the question whether the mortgagee had any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them. When a mortgagee of mulki lekraj property purchased raiya land appertaining to the mortgage, such purchase was not an accretion within the meaning of the section.¹¹³⁸ The same test has been reaffirmed by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court¹¹³⁹ in which the court approved the last-mentioned case, and disapproved of another Patna decision to the contrary.¹¹⁴⁰

*Rajah Kishendatt v Rajah Mumtaz Ali*¹¹⁴¹ was a case decided by the Privy Council before the TP Act, 1882, but the same principle was applied. In that case, the mortgagee of a taluka, during the continuance of the mortgage, acquired subordinate tenures known as birts. Their Lordships referred to the general principle of English law 'that most acquisitions by a mortgagor ensure for the benefit of the mortgagee, increasing thereby the value of his security; and that, on the other hand, many acquisitions by the mortgagee are in like manner treated as accretions to the mortgaged property, or substitutions for it, and, therefore, subject to redemption. But this rule was only referred to as an equity applicable to the case, and it was held to be applicable because on the facts their Lordships had found that the mortgagee taking advantage of his position as de facto talukdar had acquired the birts on very favourable terms and allowed them to merge in the taluka, and that it would be inequitable to allow him on redemption to revive them for his benefit. But a mortgagor is entitled to such accession only after the redemption of the mortgage.'¹¹⁴² Where a usufructuary mortgagee used his position as mortgagee for getting kumki lands on darkhast and the lands were assigned to the mortgagee under the Revenue Board standing orders on the basis of the preferential claim of the mortgagee as warqadar of the property; lands so assigned could be considered as accession, and liable to be redeemed. Absence of any mention of the right to kumki land in the deed in question, cannot deprive the mortgagor of the right of redemption.¹¹⁴³

An acquisition made after a decree extinguishing the mortgage is not within the section.¹¹⁴⁴ But when the usufructuary mortgagee of a share of a village took a mortgage by conditional sale of a tenant's holding and foreclosed the tenant after the expiry of the usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor was entitled to the tenancy as an accretion.¹¹⁴⁵

[s 63.4] Natural Accession

Natural accessions are, under section 70, additions to the security and becoming incorporated in it, are subject to redemption. When the area of a village mortgaged without specification of boundaries was increased at a survey settlement the mortgagor was, on redemption, entitled to the increase.¹¹⁴⁶ When the mortgagee was, by mistake, put in possession of a greater area of land the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the excess as well.¹¹⁴⁷

[s 63.5] Acquired Accessions—Separable

Such accessions, being separable, the mortgagor is not bound to take them, but if he does take them, he must pay the mortgagee the expense of acquiring them. In the case cited above,¹¹⁴⁸ the mortgagor had to pay the mortgagee the expense incurred in acquiring the sub-tenures. The mortgagor can take the accretion even if the mortgagee has acquired it benami in the name of a relation.¹¹⁴⁹ In a Bombay case, before the TP Act, 1882, government trees standing on the land mortgaged and purchased at a favourable rate by the mortgagee, were held to be accretions to which the mortgagor was entitled on redemption on payment of the purchase price, and other reasonable expenses.¹¹⁵⁰ The mortgagor's right only accrues upon redemption, and so he may be held to have abandoned his right if he does not at the time of redemption tender to the mortgagee the cost incurred by the mortgagee in making the acquisition.¹¹⁵¹ Adjoining government waste land brought into cultivation by the mortgagee, is not an accession.¹¹⁵²

[s 63.6] Acquired Accessions—Inseparable

When the accessions are inseparable, the mortgagor has no option but to take them on redemption. He is, therefore, liable to pay the cost only:

- (1) if the acquisition was necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale; or
- (2) if the acquisition was made with his consent.

Thus, if a mortgagee makes the necessary repairs to a well with the consent of the mortgagor, the mortgagor must pay the cost.¹¹⁵³ But when the mortgagee without the consent of the mortgagor added an upper story to a building,¹¹⁵⁴ or constructed a well,¹¹⁵⁵ or planted a grove,¹¹⁵⁶ he was not entitled to recover compensation from the mortgagor. The last case may seem inconsistent with the case of Bombay High Court already cited,¹¹⁵⁷ but in that case, the trees were government property, and so possibly capable of separate enjoyment. In Raghunandan Rai v Raghunandan,¹¹⁵⁸ a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court said that a mortgagee who had planted a grove without the consent of the mortgagor could fell the trees and, remove the timber; but in Nagesgar Rai v Nand Lal,¹¹⁵⁹ the same court said that the matter is to be considered from the mortgagor's point of view and that the grove cannot be treated as separable for although the mortgagee might remove the timber, that would be destructive of the land. In the latter case, the court allowed the mortgagor a grove of 110 mango trees as an inseparable accession, as they had been planted without his consent. The distinction between these two cases is that in the former, the trees were regarded as separable, and in the latter as inseparable. This, it is submitted, is a question of fact. If the trees are young saplings, the mortgagee may remove them or receive compensation, but if the trees are old trees deeply rooted, the mortgagor is entitled to keep them if they have been planted without his consent. In another case, the grove was planted with the mortgagor's consent, and the mortgagee was allowed compensation.¹¹⁶⁰ The Bombay High Court has held that, irrespective of whether the mortgagor can claim a tree planted by the mortgagee as an accession, the mortgagee does not commit waste if he cuts down a tree planted by himself, in the absence of evidence that it is within the meaning of section 76(e), destructive or permanently injurious to the property.¹¹⁶¹

A house has been held to be an accession that is separable,¹¹⁶² but that view had been dissented from.¹¹⁶³ In an Allahabad case,¹¹⁶⁴ the mortgagee rebuilt a house that was in a dilapidated condition when mortgaged, and the court held that as the house had already fallen down, there was no question of preserving it from destruction, and that the mortgagor was not liable for the cost of rebuilding. Such a case would now probably fall under section 63A.

When the mortgagee had evicted a tenant of tenancy lands, the lands are an accession to the mortgaged property to which the mortgagor is entitled.¹¹⁶⁵ The same rule applies when the mortgagor is a khot, and the mortgagee purchases khot nisbat land without the khot's permission.¹¹⁶⁶

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

¹¹⁶⁷[63A. Improvements to mortgaged property.—

- (1) Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, been improved, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of contract to the contrary, be entitled to the improvement; and the mortgagor shall not, save only in cases provided for in sub-section (2), be liable to pay the cost thereof.
- (2) Where any such improvement was effected at the cost of the mortgagee and was necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration or was necessary to prevent the security from becoming insufficient, or was made in compliance with the lawful order of any public servant or public authority, the mortgagor shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be liable to pay the proper cost thereof as an addition to the principal money with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum, and the profits, if any, accruing by reason of the improvement shall be credited to the mortgagor.]

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The object underlying section 63A is to prevent the mortgagee from improving the property in such a way as to make it impossible for the mortgagor with his means to redeem the property.¹¹⁶⁸

[s 63A.2] Applicability

The present section lays down a uniform rule, and provides that the mortgagor is liable to pay the cost of the improvements only if they are:

- (1) necessary to preserve the property from destruction or deterioration; or
- (2) necessary to prevent the security from becoming inadequate; or
- (3) done under the orders of a public authority such as a municipality.

If the improvement fulfils any one of these tests, the cost is allowed to the mortgagee as an addition to the principal money secured by the mortgage, interest at the rate specified in the section is allowed on the cost.

[63A. Improvements to mortgaged property.—

Profits due to the improvements are credited to the mortgagor.¹¹⁶⁹ Where a kutch building was demolished and a pucca building erected in its place, it was held that it was not an improvement for the preservation of the property and the mortgagor was not liable for its act, nor could he claim the profits arising therefrom.¹¹⁷⁰ In the case of accidental destruction by fire, the mortgagee would not, it is submitted, be allowed to re-build a whole house as in the case already cited,¹¹⁷¹ but he would have to pursue his remedy under section 68. Improvement to agricultural land so as to improve its yield is not within the section,¹¹⁷² nor is the construction of a well on such land.¹¹⁷³ If the improvement is not permanent, the mortgagee is entitled in Punjab to remove the material,¹¹⁷⁴ but even this has been denied to the mortgagee by the Patna High Court when he made new constructions.¹¹⁷⁵

Where the mortgagee, in making improvements, is not acting bona fide, he is not entitled to claim their cost under section 63A or section 72.¹¹⁷⁶

Even though the mortgagee might have spent on improvements of the mortgaged property, he would not be entitled to the same in final decree proceedings if he permits the preliminary decree to attain finality without contesting the same in view of section 97 of Code of Civil Procedure.¹¹⁷⁷ Once the mortgage money is deposited with notice, the contractual relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee ceases and, therefore, the mortgage can no longer continue. The right of the mortgagee to remain in possession is also co-terminus and the mortgagee's possession thereafter is unlawful. In such circumstances, the mortgagee is not entitled to get any improvement which has been effected after the deposit of the mortgage money, and value of improvements.¹¹⁷⁸

[s 63A.3] Contract to the Contrary

The section safeguards the right of private contract. The terms of the mortgage deed may allow the mortgagee to make improvements and to charge the cost to the mortgagor and in that case, the mortgagee is entitled to a charge under the contract. Instances of such contracts are cited below.¹¹⁷⁹ A condition allowing the mortgagee to make reasonable improvements will not justify the demolition and rebuilding of the house at a cost equivalent to nine times the mortgage debt.¹¹⁸⁰ In one reported case,¹¹⁸¹ the mortgagee was by the terms of the deed allowed to rebuild in the event of destruction of a house by fire. On the other hand, if the mortgagee is prohibited from making improvements, the application of this section would be excluded. There may be cases in which the contract may provide that the improvements belong to the mortgagor. In such cases, the mortgagor is not liable to pay costs of the improvements except in cases provided for in sub-section (2). In such cases, if the improvements are such that they cannot be severed from the land and taken away by the mortgagee, the mortgagor must be made liable to pay the costs of such improvements as he will have the benefit of them. In Malabar, a usufructuary mortgage carries with it a customary incident that the mortgagee may affect improvements and claim costs.¹¹⁸² A mortgagee ought not to be allowed to improve the property as he likes; and a condition to pay for all such improvements, though valid for the purposes of section 63A(2), may amount to a clog on the equity of redemption.¹¹⁸³

64. Renewal of Mortgaged lease.—

Where the mortgaged property is a lease ¹¹⁸⁴] and the mortgagee obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract by him to the contrary, have the benefit of the new lease.

[s 64.1] Amendments

The old section referred to a lease for a term of years. The words “for a term of years” have been omitted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 as unnecessary.

[s 64.2] Renewal of Mortgaged Lease

The mortgagee obtaining a renewal of a lease is one particular mode of accession. Under illustration (d) to section 3 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, ¹¹⁸⁵ a mortgagee obtaining a renewal of a lease in his own name is a trustee for those interested in the original lease. In a case before the Privy Council, ¹¹⁸⁶ their Lordships said that this section may be said to give statutory effect to the rule in Rakestraw v Brewer ¹¹⁸⁷ referred to in Rajah Kishendatt v Rajah Mumfaz Ali, ¹¹⁸⁸ as it was apparently thought better to provide for this particular acquisition by the mortgagee instead of leaving it to the general provisions of section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. In Rakestraw v Brewer, ¹¹⁸⁹ there was a mortgage of a lease of chambers in the Temple renewed for an additional term as a favour to the mortgagee who was a brother of a Bencher of the Inn, but the mortgagor was allowed to redeem and this was for the reason that “this additional term comes from the old root, and is of the same nature, subject to the same equity of redemption.” The same principle was applied to a mortgage of a jote, ¹¹⁹⁰ and also to a case where the mortgagee of a leasehold with option to purchase the freehold reversion had purchased the freehold reversion. ¹¹⁹¹

Under section 72(e), the mortgagee is entitled to recover the cost of renewal, and may add it to the mortgage money. This is also the English law. ¹¹⁹²

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

65. Implied contracts by mortgagor.—

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagor shall be deemed to contract with the mortgagee,—

- (a) that the interest which the mortgagor professes to transfer to the mortgagee subsists, and that the mortgagor has power to transfer the same;
- (b) that the mortgagor will defend, or, if the mortgagee be in possession of the mortgaged property, enable him to defend, the mortgagor's title thereto;
- (c) that the mortgagor will, so long as the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay all public charges accruing due in respect of the property;
- (d) and, where the mortgaged property is a lease ¹¹⁹³] that the rent payable under the lease, the conditions contained therein, and the contracts binding on the lessee have been paid, performed and observed down to the commencement of the mortgage; and the mortgagor will, so long as the security exists and the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property, pay the rent reserved by the lease, or, if the lease be renewed, the renewed lease, perform the conditions contained therein and observe the contracts binding on the lessee, and indemnify the mortgagee against all the claims sustained by reason of the non-payment of the said rent or the non-performance or non-observance of the said conditions and contracts;
- (e) and, where the mortgage is a second or subsequent encumbrance on the property, that the mortgagor will pay the interest from time to time accruing due on each prior encumbrance as and when it becomes due, and will at the proper time discharge the principal money due on such prior encumbrance.

The benefit of the contracts mentioned in this section shall be annexed to and shall go with the interest of the mortgagee as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

The amendment was brought in this section by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

65. Implied contracts by mortgagor.—

The mortgagor's covenants implied by this section are subject to any express contract the parties may have entered into. Such a contract may be presumed when the mortgagee was fully aware of the nature and extent of the mortgagor's title.¹¹⁹⁴

Apart from the implied covenants for title referred to in this section, there is a title by estoppel, for a mortgagor cannot derogate from his grant so as to defeat the mortgagee's title;¹¹⁹⁵ nor can the mortgagor set up a title of a third person;¹¹⁹⁶ or allege that the property does not belong to him.¹¹⁹⁷ Even when the mortgagor is a trustee he has not been allowed to set up the trust as a defence for himself.¹¹⁹⁸ Justice Banerjee in Srimati Mallika v Ratanmani,¹¹⁹⁹ held that there was no estoppel when the mortgagor was a trustee for a public purpose. The correctness of this decision has been doubted;¹²⁰⁰ but in such a case there is no estoppel against a succeeding trustee.¹²⁰¹ The principle of estoppel is, however, not applicable when the mortgage is illegal.¹²⁰²

A mortgagee is precluded from denying the title of the mortgagor, but this principle would not apply where the mortgagee in possession is evicted by a person having paramount title.¹²⁰³

[s 65.4] Clause (a): Covenant for Title

The mortgagor's covenant for title is similar to that of a vendor under section 55(2). It is twofold:

- (1) as to the quantum of interest; and
- (2) as to the interest being transferable.

The mortgagor covenants his title and his power to deal with it. However, in a mortgage suit, the question of the mortgagor's title is, in the absence of fraud, irrelevant as between the parties. The mortgagee takes whatever title the mortgagor has, and is entitled to enforce the mortgage against the mortgagor even when both sides knew that the mortgagor's title was imperfect.¹²⁰⁴

A mortgaged property to B. A sold the equity of redemption to C. On C's death B sued C's sons for sale of the property mortgaged. C's sons pleaded that the property was wakf and that A was not entitled to mortgage it. Held that this defence was barred by section 65(a).¹²⁰⁵

As there is no estoppel against a statute, it would be open to the mortgagor to show that the mortgage was forbidden by law, e.g. an occupancy holding in the United Provinces.¹²⁰⁶

The combined effect of sections 8 and section 65(a) is that the mortgagor transfers all the interest he has,¹²⁰⁷ subject of course, to the right of redemption that is reserved. A breach of the covenant for title gives the mortgagee the right to sue for the mortgage-money under section 68. In a Rangoon case,¹²⁰⁸ a mortgagee was allowed compensation for breach of the covenant for title after he had purchased the property mortgaged in execution of his decree for sale on the mortgage,¹²⁰⁹ but not where the mortgage debt is satisfied.¹²¹⁰ It has been said that this clause imposes no duty on the mortgagor to disclose an encumbrance.¹²¹¹ However, it is submitted that if the mortgagor mortgages, an unencumbered property which is subject to an encumbrance, he commits a breach of the covenant that the interest he professes to transfer subsists.

[s 65.5] Clause (b): Defence of Title

The mortgagee being entitled to the full benefit of the security has a right to protect the title of the mortgagor. The mortgagor is, therefore, under an implied covenant to defend the title if he is himself in possession or to assist the mortgagee in defending the title if the mortgagee is in possession.

[s 65.6] Clause (c): Public Charges

The mortgagor when in possession, and after his death his heir, is under a liability to pay public charges, such as government revenue and municipal taxes.¹²¹² The same liability attaches under section 76(c) to the mortgagee when in possession. The Madras High Court has held that when the mortgagor sells the equity of redemption, the purchaser is under no obligation to the mortgagee to pay public charges, though it may be to his interest to do so.¹²¹³ The extinction of the right of redemption by a court sale on the mortgagee's decree puts an end to the implied covenant of the mortgagor.¹²¹⁴ If a stranger acquires the equity of redemption by adverse possession, he is under no duty to the mortgagee to pay the revenue and if after such acquisition, the land is sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by him, he holds it free of the mortgage.¹²¹⁵

If the mortgagor fails to pay and the property is sold for arrears of revenue, the mortgagor if he purchases the property, is still subject to the mortgage, for he cannot take advantage of his own wrong in order to better his position.¹²¹⁶ The mortgagor has no claim against the mortgagee for moneys spent in payment of public charges whether accruing during, or before, the period of the mortgage, for he pays them for his own benefit, and if the mortgagee pays these on behalf of the mortgagor, he cannot recover them from a subsequent mortgagee.¹²¹⁷ A mortgagee, on the other hand, is entitled to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in the payment of public charges; and if the land is sold through no fault of his, he is entitled to a charge on the surplus sale proceeds.

If the mortgaged property is leasehold, the mortgagor covenants that he has paid the rent, and observed the conditions of the lease for the period anterior to the mortgage. For the future, he covenants that as long as the mortgagee is not in possession, he will pay the rent and perform the conditions of the lease. This clause has been held to imply that the mortgagee is liable to pay the rent when he takes possession.¹²¹⁸ This is a liability to the mortgagor, for the mortgagee does not become liable to the lessor on the covenants in the lease that run with the land, unless the mortgage is in English form, and involves a complete transfer. There is no covenant by the mortgagor to renew the lease.

[s 65.8] Clause (e): Prior Mortgages

There is an implied covenant that the mortgagor will discharge prior mortgages, for otherwise, the mortgagee may be deprived of his security. A mortgagor left a sum of money with a mortgagee and empowered him to redeem a prior mortgage. The sum proved to be insufficient, and the mortgagor was held liable under the principle of this clause to pay the excess amount incurred in discharging the prior mortgage.¹²¹⁹

This covenant does not affect the mortgagee's right to redeem prior encumbrances himself under section 92. A breach of this covenant entitles the mortgagee to sue for the mortgage money under section 68, although there may be no personal covenant in the mortgage.¹²²⁰ If the mortgagee was not informed of the previous mortgage, he has a cause of action to sue for the mortgage money as soon as he discovers it.¹²²¹

[s 65.9] Benefit of the Contracts

The benefit of the covenants implied by this section runs with the land, so that not only the mortgagee, but anyone claiming under him is entitled to enforce them. The burden of the covenants cannot be enforced against a purchaser of the equity of redemption.¹²²²

- (3) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deed; and the provisions of sub- section (2) may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed and, as so varied and extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in like manner and with all like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in that sub-section.

This section was inserted by Act 20 of 1929.

[s 65A.2] Whether Section Retrospective

Section 63 of the amending Act 20 of 1929 expressly enacts that this section shall not have retrospective effect.¹²²⁴ The validity of leases granted by a mortgagor whose rights were governed under a mortgage deed executed prior to 1 April 1930 must be determined with reference to the law as it stood prior to the enactment of section 65A.¹²²⁵

[s 65A.3] Mortgagor's Power to Lease

As no provision was made in the TP Act, 1882, before the insertion of this section, for the mortgagor's power to lease, the cases were not consistent. Section 65A was introduced by the amending Act of 1929 in recognition of the mortgagor's powers exercised bona fide to grant lease of the mortgaged property in the usual course of management, makes provision with regard to exercise of such power by the mortgagor, while the mortgage subsists and mortgagor is in lawful possession of mortgaged property.¹²²⁶

The present section confers upon the mortgagor in possession, a statutory power of leasing, subject to any express provision in the deed of mortgage. The section has been said in the Rangoon case¹²²⁷ to embody the same law as in the Calcutta case.¹²²⁸ Under this section, the validity of a lease granted by a mortgagor in possession is determined with reference to the section, and the terms of the deed of mortgage without regard to its effect on the mortgagee's security. Such a lease will not bind either the mortgagee, or a person claiming through him,¹²²⁹ unless the mortgagee has given his consent to the lease. Such consent may be given in the mortgage-deed itself,¹²³⁰ and may be inferred from conduct which may also create an estoppel,¹²³¹ but such acquiescence does not arise merely because the mortgagee allows the tenant to remain in possession,¹²³² or waits for eight months before taking steps to evict him.¹²³³ It is submitted, on a parity of reasoning that this new section, which expressly gives power to the mortgagor in possession to grant a lease binding on the mortgagee, does not take away the old right of the mortgagor to grant a lease which, without the consent of the mortgagee, will not be binding on the mortgagee, but will be binding on the mortgagor. Therefore, if the mortgagor grants a lease which is not in conformity with this section, the lease, while it will not be binding on the mortgagee, will still be binding on the mortgagor, and such a lessee will be entitled to redeem the mortgage. A lease for seven years, which is bad under this section, would be valid as a lease from year to year.¹²³⁴ When the mortgage deed does not prohibit a mortgagor from making a lease of the mortgaged property and so long as the lease satisfies the requirements of section 65 A(2), a lease made by a borrower as a mortgagor will be valid and binding on the secured creditor as a mortgagee.¹²³⁵ A person cannot claim the protection as a protected tenant under an unregistered lease deed executed before the property was mortgaged with the Bank and the fact of the occupation of such tenant was not disclosed to the Bank. Thus where the Bank gave an advertisement in the newspaper for auction of flats and T filed a writ for protection of tenancy, it was held that in absence of proof of delivery of possession to him and payment of rent there would be doubts created with respect to the genuineness of the claim and he cannot be treated as a protected tenant.¹²³⁶ In Kelukutty P M v Young Men's Christian Association,¹²³⁷ A had taken a loan from the bank, B while keeping its property as security. through an unregistered mortgage deed. The bank served a notice and by way of this notice, any further lease of the mortgaged property now required the written consent of the secured creditor, i.e. the bank. The question before the Court was whether the leases granted after the notice were valid under law. Noting that the deed was unregistered, the Court held that the document could not be treated as a document transferring any right in the land and thus did not constitute a mortgage deed. Section 65A is the overarching provision regulating the right of the borrower to lease a mortgaged property. The Court held that the definition of mortgage under the TP Act, 1882 including section 65A had to be complied with while execution of the lease deed after a mortgage. Therefore, tenants had no protection from dispossession under the 2002 Act as the lease deed was in violation of section 65A(2).

[s 65A.4] Interest of Lessee

A lease granted by the mortgagor, out of ordinary course of management, though not binding on mortgagee, is binding as between mortgagor and lessee. Such a lessor acquires an interest in the right of redemption, and is entitled to redeem. If such a lease is created before the institution of a suit relating to mortgage, the lessee must be joined as party to the suit under O XXXIV, rule 1 of Code of Civil Procedure, otherwise he will not be bound by decree passed in the suit, and will continue to retain his right of redemption. However, in view of section 52, if the mortgagor grants such a lease during the pendency of a suit for sale by the mortgagee, the lessee is bound by the result of the litigation. If the property is sold in the execution of the decree passed in the suit, the lessee cannot resist a claim for possession by auction-purchaser. The lessee could apply for being joined as a party to the suit and ask for an opportunity to redeem the property. However, if he allows the property to be sold in execution of the decree, he loses his right of redemption.¹²³⁸

[s 65A.5] Contract to the Contrary

The right of contract is saved by sub-section (3), for under the sub-section, the terms of the mortgage deed may altogether exclude the power to lease. If the power is varied or extended, such varied or extended power must be exercised according to the terms of the deed, and according to such of the provisions of the section as are not varied.¹²³⁹ If the deed altogether and absolutely excludes the power to lease, a lease in contravention of such covenant will amount to a breach of that covenant. However, where the covenant in the deed only provides that the mortgageor shall not without the consent of the mortgagee exercise the powers conferred by this section and the mortgageor without such consent grants a lease, the question arises whether it would amount to a breach of that covenant. This interesting question arose in Iron Trade Employers' Insurance Association's case,¹²⁴⁰ and was answered in the negative. The covenant adds an additional condition to the statutory conditions and prohibits the granting of a lease which will be binding on the mortgagee and, therefore, the granting of the lease without consent cannot be said to be exercising the powers conferred by the statute, but is rather the exercise of the common law right which does make the lease binding on the mortgagee. The lease not being binding on the mortgagee cannot be said to be under the statute and, therefore, the granting of such a lease is not a breach of the covenant. The English statute contains provisions for the surrender of a lease which are not reproduced in the section.

[s 65A.6] Kanom

The case of a kanom granted, before the enactment of the section was decided on the principle of the effect of the lease on the mortgageor's security. A kanom is a combined lease and mortgage. It is granted by the owner or jenmi, and is not redeemable for 12 years. At the end of 12 years, the jenmi may redeem or grant a renewed kanom on receipt of a renewal fee. The jenmi in this case gave a simple mortgage of property which was subject to two kanoms. During the pendency of the simple mortgage, the period of 12 years expired; and the jenmi instead of redeeming the kanoms granted renewed kanoms, and received renewal fees. The simple mortgagee brought the property to sale subject to the old kanoms which were before his mortgage. He purchased the property himself and sought to evict the renewed kanomdars, whose kanoms were subsequent to his mortgage. The kanomdars did not seek as mortgagees to redeem the simple mortgagee auction purchaser, but claimed to remain in possession as lessees for the remainder of their terms of 12 years each. The court held (1) that as leases the renewed kanoms were invalid, as they had so impaired the security that the sale had not realised the mortgage money; and (2) the kanom transaction being indivisible, the kanoms were also invalid as puisne mortgages.¹²⁴¹

[s 65A.7] Covenant Against Alienation

Apart from this section it has been held that when a mortgage contained the usual covenant against alienation during the term of the mortgage, the covenant only created a personal liability as between the mortgageor and the mortgagee, and that a lease granted despite such a covenant was only voidable by the mortgagee so far as it encroached upon the right to the maintenance of his security.¹²⁴² But under the present section, a lease in violation of such a covenant though valid by estoppel between the mortgageor and the lessee, would be void as between the mortgagee and the lessee.¹²⁴³ The lessee might however, avoid eviction by redeeming the mortgage;¹²⁴⁴ and it has been held that the mortgagee should give the lessee an opportunity of redeeming.¹²⁴⁵

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagor

66. Waste by mortgagor in possession.—

A mortgagor in possession of the mortgaged property is not liable to the mortgagee for allowing the property to deteriorate; but he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto, if the security is insufficient or will be rendered insufficient by such act.

Explanation—A security is insufficient within the meaning of this section unless the value of the mortgaged property exceeds by one-third, or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one-half, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage.

The mortgagor when in possession is never liable to account for rent and profits received by him;¹²⁴⁶ and may do all such acts as are preferable to his qualified ownership, and which are consistent with the maintenance of sufficient security for the mortgagee. Thus, in Humphreys v Harrison,¹²⁴⁷ Lord Eldon refused an injunction to prevent a mortgagor cutting underwood as it was an ordinary act of husbandry. He is not responsible for permissive waste, i.e., for omission to repair or to prevent natural deterioration. The section, therefore, has no application to the grant of a lease by the mortgagor;¹²⁴⁸ but he must not commit destructive waste, i.e., acts of waste so substantial as to reduce the value of the mortgagee's security below the standard fixed in the explanation. Even felling timber may not be waste if the sum advanced on the mortgage is small in comparison with the value of the land, and in King v Smith,¹²⁴⁹ VC Wigram said:

I think the question which must be tried is whether the property the mortgagee takes as a security is sufficient in this sense — that the security is worth so much more than the money advanced — that the act of cutting timber is not to be considered as substantially impairing the value which was the basis of the contract between the parties at the time it was entered into.

66. Waste by mortgagor in possession.—

In a Madras case,¹²⁵⁰ a co-tenant of the mortgagor felled trees during the pendency of the mortgagee's suit for sale so that there was a deficit in the price realized at the sale. The mortgagee was held entitled to sue for damages for waste on the ground that he had the right to have the mortgaged property secured from deterioration in the hands of the mortgagor, or any other person to whose rights those of the mortgagor were superior. In another Madras case, the first defendant mortgagor sold the mortgaged house to the second defendant who pulled it down, and sold the materials. The mortgagee was given a decree for the sale proceeds in the hands of the first defendant, and for the balance of the mortgage money against the second defendant.¹²⁵¹ Mortgagors who had expressed their intention to remove the machinery and sell it must be restrained from doing that. However, if they want to make a second mortgage or to sell the equity of redemption, they cannot be restrained from doing that.¹²⁵²

The principle of this section was applied in Punjab where it was held that the validity of a grant by the mortgagor of a right to take water from a well on the premises mortgaged depended, upon whether it would reduce the value of the security below the prescribed standard.¹²⁵³

English cases supply further instances of waste by a mortgagor in possession, e.g. felling timber,¹²⁵⁴ undermining, binding,¹²⁵⁵ and removing fixtures.¹²⁵⁶

[s 66.2] Leases

Prior to the insertion of section 65A in the TP Act, 1882, the validity of the mortgagor's leases was determined with reference to its effect upon the security.¹²⁵⁷ In an Allahabad case, a lease detrimental to the interests of the mortgagee was held to fall within the mischief of this rule.¹²⁵⁸ Section 66 confers a wider power on the mortgagor and to determine whether the mortgagor has exceeded his power in granting a permanent lease during the continuance of a simple mortgage, the only test which must be applied is to see whether the act of the mortgagor impairs the security so as to render it insufficient. If the security is not being rendered insufficient, the act is within the competence of the mortgagor. However, it may be condemned as amounting to a destruction or a permanently injurious act.¹²⁵⁹ A permanent lease granted after the property was advertised for sale in the execution of a mortgage decree is granted in bad faith, and is not in the ordinary course of prudent management; such a lease is not binding on the mortgagee.¹²⁶⁰

[s 66.3] Easements

Section 10 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882 prohibits a mortgagor from burdening the mortgaged property, during the continuance of the mortgage, with an easement that is injurious to the security.

[s 66.4] Explanation

The standard of value for the security taken under the explanation is the same as that under section 20 (o) of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and section 10 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882.

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

67. Right to foreclosure or sale.—

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee has, at any time after the mortgage-money has become ¹²⁶¹[due] to him, and before a decree has been made for the redemption of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage-money has been paid or deposited as hereinafter provided, a right to obtain from the court ¹²⁶²[a decree] that the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the property, or ¹²⁶³[a decree] that the property be sold.

A suit to obtain ¹²⁶⁴[a decree] that a mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the mortgaged property is called a suit for foreclosure.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- ¹²⁶⁵[(a) to authorise any mortgagee other than a mortgagee by conditional sale or a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage by the terms of which he is entitled to foreclose, to institute a suit for foreclosure, or an usufructuary mortgagee as such or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such to institute a suit for sale; or]
- (b) to authorize a mortgagor who holds the mortgagee's rights as his trustee or legal representative, and who may sue for a sale of the property, to institute a suit for foreclosure; or
 - (c) to authorize the mortgagee of a railway, canal or other work in the maintenance of which the public are interested, to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale; or
 - (d) to authorize a person interested in part only of the mortgage-money to institute a suit relating only to a corresponding part of the mortgaged property, unless the mortgagees have, with the consent of the mortgagor, severed their interest under the mortgage.

[s 67.1] Amendments

This section was amended by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 67.2] Scope

Sections 67 to 77 deal with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagee, just as sections 60 to 66 have dealt with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor. Sections 67, and 68 to 73 refer to the mortgagee's rights and sections 67A, 76 and 77 refer to the mortgagee's liabilities. Section 67 is the counterpart of section 60, and gives the mortgagee a right of foreclosure or sale in default of redemption by the mortgagor. If the mortgagor has paid or deposited the mortgage-money, there is no occasion for the exercise of the right of foreclosure or sale. Again, if a decree for redemption is made, a suit for foreclosure or sale would be barred, especially as a redemption decree itself provides for sale or foreclosure in default of payment.

[s 67.3] Mortgagee Cannot Dispute Mortgagor's Title

Mortgagee always derives his title from his mortgagor. Having come into possession of the property as mortgagee, treating the mortgagor as the full owner, it is not open to the mortgagee to question the title of the mortgagor.¹²⁶⁶ In *Tasker v Small*¹²⁶⁷ Lord Cottenham said:

To him (mortgagee) it is immaterial, upon repayment of the money, whether the mortgagor's title was good or bad. He is not at liberty to dispute it any more than a tenant is at liberty to dispute the landlord's title.

A usufructuary mortgagee cannot deny the title of his mortgagor. Nor can he set up adverse possession, unless he actually leaves the holding and re-enters under a different status.¹²⁶⁸

[s 67.4] Mortgagee's Remedies

The mortgagee's remedies by suit are:

- (1) on the covenant;
- (2) for sale; and
- (3) for foreclosure.

There is a remedy on the covenant, only if the mortgage imports a personal liability, express or implied. This is under section 68(a). The suit for sale of the security is a statutory remedy, and avoids the hardship of the forfeiture of a security which may exceed in value the mortgage debt. Foreclosure is a legal term which implies that the relief given by equity against the forfeiture of the security is withdrawn.¹²⁶⁹ The effect of foreclosure, therefore, is that the conditional conveyance becomes absolute, and the property vests absolutely in the mortgagee.¹²⁷⁰ In the case of successive mortgages, the procedure for foreclosure is complicated and dilatory. The rights of the parties are more easily adjusted by an order for sale. The TP Act, 1882 goes a step further and the amended clause of this section has the effect of abolishing the remedy of foreclosure, except in mortgages by conditional sale and in anomalous mortgages where the parties have by the terms of the deed stipulated for foreclosure.¹²⁷¹ A mortgagee claiming under a mortgage executed before the TP Act, 1882 can enforce remedies under this section.¹²⁷²

In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the court shall pass a preliminary decree directing that if the defendant pays into court the amount found or declared due on or before such date as the court may fix, the plaintiff shall deliver to the defendant or to such person as the defendant appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall re-transfer the property to the defendant at his cost, free from the mortgage and from all encumbrances created by the plaintiff. The defendant can make payment into court of all the amounts due before any final decree is passed in a foreclosure suit.¹²⁷³

The right of redemption is not subject to a contract to the contrary, for the mortgagor requires protection against oppression, but the mortgagee not being in need of the same protection may curtail his right of foreclosure or

67. Right to foreclosure or sale.—

sale by contract.¹²⁷⁴ Thus, a mortgagee may bind himself not to enforce his security without giving notice on the day after the cultivating season, but that will not affect the mortgagor's right to redeem.¹²⁷⁵ A contract to the contrary may also accelerate the mortgagee's right of foreclosure or sale. A proviso for reconveyance may amount to a contract to the contrary, so that the mortgagee may not take action even though interest is unpaid,¹²⁷⁶ but that depends on the construction of the proviso. Where the proviso is conditional upon interest being paid "as hereinbefore provided", it does not amount to such a contract.¹²⁷⁷

[s 67.6] After the Mortgage Money has become Due

In section 60, the phrase used with reference to the mortgagor's right of redemption is "after the principal money has become due," but there is no significance in this difference, for the mortgagee's right of foreclosure or sale is correlative to the mortgagor's right of redemption. Just as the mortgagor cannot redeem before due date, so also the mortgagee cannot enforce his security before the due date.¹²⁷⁸ It had been held that if no time is fixed for payment, the mortgage money is due on the date of execution,¹²⁷⁹ and the mortgagee, may foreclose at any time.¹²⁸⁰ On the other hand, in Nilkanth Balwant v Vidya Narasingh Bharati,¹²⁸¹ the Judicial Committee said that, as there was no specific time for the payment of the mortgage debt, the money did not become due and the cause of action of the mortgagee did not arise until demand for the payment of the mortgage debt was made by the mortgagee, and refused by the mortgagor. In a Madras case,¹²⁸² where in default of payment of interest, the condition was that principal and interest were payable on demand, no demand by the mortgagee before suit was necessary, the words being regarded as technical expression equivalent to "immediately" or "forthwith". However, when the mortgage money was payable "if so required",¹²⁸³ or "when you require",¹²⁸⁴ the mortgagee cannot sue for foreclosure until he has made a demand.

[s 67.7] Default of Payment of Interest

Default in payment of interest by the mortgagor does not accelerate the mortgagee's right to foreclose, unless it is so expressly provided in the mortgage. An instance of such a provision is the case of Yeo Htean Sew v Abu Zaffar,¹²⁸⁵ where the mortgagor covenanted to pay the principal in a year and the interest every month and that in default of paying interest for one month after becoming due, the total sum of principal and interest should thereupon become due and payable.

The Bombay High Court, in the case of a mortgage before the TP Act, 1882, followed the rule in Seaton v Twyford,¹²⁸⁶ and held that the mortgagor's failure to pay interest and to make good title to part of the property, entitled the mortgagee to sue for sale before the due date.¹²⁸⁷ The court professed to follow the principles of the TP Act, 1882, but under this section the mortgagee is unable to realize his security before due date, unless there is a contract to the contrary, and the mortgagor's breach of covenant does not relieve the mortgagee of this disability. In a Madras case,¹²⁸⁸ a covenant to pay interest on specified dates and, in default, at a higher rate, was said to be a contract to the contrary accelerating foreclosure. This again is erroneous, for the higher rate was compensation for breach of the agreement to pay on specified dates, and bore no relation to the mortgagee's right of foreclosure.

A usual contract to the contrary accelerating the mortgagee's right of foreclosure or sale, is that in case of default in payment of interest on the specified dates, or of any act of the mortgagor which causes loss to the mortgagee, the mortgagee shall have the power to realize the mortgage without waiting for the due date. The Privy Council have held in two decisions that such a condition is exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagee, and that it gives him the option either to enforce his security at once, or if the security is ample, to stand by the investment for the full term of the mortgage.¹²⁸⁹ In the earlier case, their Lordships said that it gives the mortgagee "a right by appropriate action to make the mortgage money immediately due".¹²⁹⁰ Such appropriate action may be a notice of demand,¹²⁹¹ or the mere filing of a suit.¹²⁹² Interest is as much a charge on the property as the principal.¹²⁹³ It is as a rule, accessory to the principal, and not separately recoverable.¹²⁹⁴ There may, however, be cases in which there is a separate and independent covenant to pay interest.¹²⁹⁵ In such cases, the mortgagee may sue for the interest as soon as it falls due. Each default constitutes a separate cause of action, and so a subsequent suit for the principal is not barred.¹²⁹⁶ However, apart from a special stipulation to that effect, there is no right to demand a sale of the mortgaged land for interest in arrears.¹²⁹⁷ The usual proviso for reconveyance may be construed, if so drafted, as a contract to the contrary so as to deprive the mortgagee of his right to take action till the date mentioned therein, even if there is a default in the payment of interest,¹²⁹⁸ but that is a matter of construction in each case.¹²⁹⁹

[s 67.8] Installments

In the absence of a stipulation to that effect, the mortgagee is not bound to accept payment by installments.¹³⁰⁰ But if the mortgage deed makes the amount payable by installments, the mortgagee is entitled to sue for the recovery of each installment from the mortgagor as it falls due.¹³⁰¹

[s 67.9] Mortgage Money Paid or Deposited

If a usufructuary mortgagee leases the property to the mortgagor for a rent equivalent to the interest so that the lease and the mortgage are one transaction, the rent is part of the mortgage money.¹³⁰² Payment of mortgage money would render the mortgagee's suit unnecessary. The deposit referred to is the deposit under section 83 which provides the summary procedure for redemption. The security is extinguished and the mortgagee is debarred from suing, not by mere deposit, but when the deposit is accepted and acted upon by the mortgagee in terms of section 83.¹³⁰³ If notice of the deposit has not been served on the mortgagee, he is not debarred from suing.¹³⁰⁴ The section would seem to suggest that the mortgagee's suit is not maintainable after the deposit has been made and the Allahabad High Court have said¹³⁰⁵ that if there is a valid deposit, there is no subsisting mortgage which can be enforced or redeemed. However, this, it is submitted, is not correct, for the deposit does not discharge the mortgage,¹³⁰⁶ and the mortgagee continues in possession as mortgagee, and is accountable for rents and profits.¹³⁰⁷

[s 67.10] Simple Mortgagee

A simple mortgagee cannot foreclose, as the real right transferred is a right of sale. This has been discussed in the notes "Mortgage" and "Right to cause the property to be sold" under section 58. The case of *Papamma Rao v Pratap Korkonda*¹³⁰⁸ illustrates the impossibility of a simple mortgage leading to a foreclosure, for when the court erroneously gave a simple mortgagee a decree for possession against which the mortgagor did not appeal, the Privy Council held 15 years later that the mortgagee was in possession as mortgagee, and liable to be redeemed. The remedy of sale is also available in some anomalous mortgages which involve the transfer of a right of sale.

Limitation for a suit for sale is under Article 62 of the Limitation Act, 1963, 12 years from the time when the mortgage money becomes due,¹³⁰⁹ and a suit filed after 12 years would be barred by law of limitation.¹³¹⁰ If the net proceeds of the sale are insufficient, there will be a personal decree for the balance, if the mortgagor is personally liable, and if the personal claim is not barred by limitation. This is provided for in O XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but such an order may be made on a motion upon a consent decree even though the terms of the decree are silent as to the personal remedy.¹³¹¹

Under the amended rules 4 and 5 of O XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure, there are two decrees, a preliminary mortgage decree, followed in case of default by a final decree for sale.¹³¹²

[s 67.11] Usufructuary Mortgagee

A usufructuary mortgagee is a transferee of a right of possession only, and he retains possession until the debt is discharged. As usufructuary mortgagee he cannot sue either for sale, or for foreclosure;¹³¹³ though if the mortgagor is in possession as lessee of the mortgagee and the lease makes the rents a charge on the property, the mortgagee may sell the property in enforcement of the charge.¹³¹⁴ In a Patna case, a mortgagor in a usufructuary mortgage, after undertaking to give possession, did not give possession. Two questions arose— (a) whether the mortgagee can file a suit for sale under section 67; and (b) whether the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for the mortgage money with interest under section 68(1) (d). On the first question, one of the judges gave an affirmative answer, while the other judge took a different view. As to the second question, one of the judges considered it unnecessary to decide it, but the second judge answered it in the affirmative. A decree for the mortgage money and interest was ultimately passed.¹³¹⁵ The Madras High Court has held that before possession is given to a usufructuary mortgagee, he is not a usufructuary mortgagee and may, therefore, sue for sale of the property mortgaged,¹³¹⁶ but this case has now been rendered obsolete by the amended definition of usufructuary mortgage as explained in the commentary on section 58(d) above. Of course, the usufructuary mortgagee can do so if there is a covenant empowering him to sell in default of delivery of possession. It is then that an anomalous mortgage, and the rights and liabilities of the parties are determined by the terms of the deed. Instances are cited under note “Usufructuary mortgage” under section 58.

[s 67.12] Mortgagee by Conditional Sale

In a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgage works itself out into a sale, or the conditional sale becomes absolute. The mortgagee is, therefore, not entitled under this section to an order for sale, but this remedy is foreclosure.¹³¹⁷ In a suit, the possession of the property was claimed on the strength of title to the suit property arising out of a mortgage which was in the nature of a conditional sale. It was held that the only remedy to which the plaintiff was entitled to was section 67, under which he could obtain from the court a decree that the mortgagor shall be absolutely barred to redeem the property. In a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgage works itself out into a sale, or the conditional sale becomes absolute. The mortgagee is not entitled to an order for sale. His remedy is foreclosure and as the mortgagee did not claim a relief of foreclosure, the suit was dismissed.¹³¹⁸ Article 63(a) of the Limitation Act, 1963, now provides a period of 30 years from the due date for suits by a mortgagee “for foreclosure”. It would appear that the deletion of the words “or sale” is deliberate, and excludes the intention to limit the article to English mortgages (which, after 1929, resulted in the article being superfluous).

A mortgage by conditional sale is not necessarily accompanied by the delivery of possession;¹³¹⁹ but the mortgagee is entitled to possession when he obtains a decree for foreclosure.¹³²⁰ If the mortgagee by conditional sale is entitled to possession under the mortgage, and the mortgagor fails to deliver possession, the mortgagee's suit for possession is now governed by Article 63(b) of the Limitation Act, 1963, which provides for a period of 12 years from the time when the mortgagee becomes entitled to possession.¹³²¹ In decisions under the old Act, it had been held that a suit for possession would lie even if a suit for foreclosure is time-barred.¹³²²

The rights of an anomalous mortgagee depend upon the terms of the deed;¹³²³ he can institute a suit for foreclosure only if the deed specifically so empowers him. He can, however, maintain a suit for sale even if there is no clause in the deed specifically empowering sale, provided, of course, that the deed does not contain a provision to the contrary.¹³²⁴ Such mortgages are generally composite mortgages. If it is a simple mortgage usufructuary, the mortgagee is entitled to an order for sale. In some anomalous mortgages, the mortgagee has the alternative of taking possession or of bringing the property to sale.¹³²⁵ In a case where a mortgage contained certain provisions which indicated a usufructuary mortgage and certain provisions which indicated a simple mortgage, it was held that there was no right of sale on the mere failure to pay the mortgage money.¹³²⁶ The various types of anomalous mortgage are set forth in the note under the same heading under section 58. If it is a mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale, the mortgagee is entitled to foreclose. The court has, however, jurisdiction to order a sale instead of foreclosure under the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, O XXXIV, rule 4(3). A court, however, has no power to direct a sale or foreclosure of a mortgage, unless the mortgage is an anomalous mortgage.¹³²⁷

Section 67 does not conflict with section 98, particularly when there is nothing in section 98 to indicate that it is subject to the other provisions of the TP Act, 1882.¹³²⁸

[s 67.14] English Mortgagee

The section before the amending Act of 1929, did not put any limitation on the right of an English mortgagee, and he could sue either for foreclosure, or sale.¹³²⁹ In cases governed by the present section, he can only sue for sale.

[s 67.15] Mortgagee by Deposit of Title Deeds

The new section 96 inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 puts equitable mortgages on the same footing as simple mortgages, and makes it clear that the remedy of the mortgagee by deposit of title deeds is by suit for sale. In case of mortgage by deposit of title deeds, the period of limitation would also be 12 years from the date when the money becomes due and a suit for the payment of money secured by mortgage would lie.¹³³⁰

67. Right to foreclosure or sale.—

[s 67.16] Mortgagor Trustee for Mortgagee

A mortgagor who is a trustee of the mortgagee may not in his representative character foreclose, and so become trustee of what was his own property. In such a case, sale is the appropriate remedy.¹³³¹ So also when the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor, for he would be acquiring property which it is his duty to preserve for his cestui que trust.¹³³²

[s 67.17] Mortgagee of Public Works

A mortgagee of a railway, canal or other work which serves the public convenience may not foreclose or sell. This is in the interest of the general public. The proper remedy is the appointment of a receiver with a view to realizing the earnings of the undertaking as a going concern.¹³³³

[s 67.18] Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act

If the mortgagee's suit has been referred to the collector under section 9 of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act, 1902, the reference is a final disposal of the suit, and the court cannot pass a decree for sale.¹³³⁴

[s 67.19] Partial Foreclosure or Sale

Section 67(d) is the corollary to the last clause of section 60, and rests on the same principle of the indivisibility of the mortgage security. The reason has been explained in the case of Nilakant v Suresh Chunder.¹³³⁵ Hence, one of several mortgagees, or his assignee or a purchaser of part of the mortgagee's right, cannot foreclose or sell in respect of his fractional share;¹³³⁶ and, on the other hand, foreclosure proceedings must be taken against all persons interested in the equity of redemption.¹³³⁷ The proper remedy of the part-mortgagee, if he cannot obtain the other mortgagee's consent to the suit, is to join them as co-defendants, and sue to realize the whole mortgage debt. The leading case on this point is Sunitabala Debi v Dhara Sundari,¹³³⁸ where the rule was enforced though the mortgage was to two mortgagees to secure two separate sums, because the whole property was conveyed to the mortgagees as tenants-in-common, and there was no covenant to repay each separately. However, the decree would provide for all proper accounts, except that there would be no judgment as between the mortgagor and the defendant mortgagees.¹³³⁹ This view was followed in Gopalswami v Nataraj,¹³⁴⁰ in which it was held that the right of a co-mortgagee defendant is not extinguished automatically on the passing of a decree in favour of the plaintiff co-mortgagee, irrespective of the judgment given and the language of the decree passed in it, and irrespective of whether the right of the co-mortgagee was the subject of adjudication. In Lachmi Narain v Babu Ram,¹³⁴¹ the deed of mortgage specified the separate sums which each mortgagee had advanced to make up the total consideration of the mortgage. One mortgagee was allowed to sue for sale of the entire property including the other mortgagees as co-defendants, the plaintiff mortgagee thus realized his share by sale, while the defendant mortgagees had a charge on the surplus sale proceeds.

As already explained in the notes under section 60, a purchase of a share in the equity of redemption by one of the several part mortgagees does not justify partial redemption, for it is not equitable that one of the several mortgagees should have the right to split the security.¹³⁴² Where a mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption without the consent of his co-mortgagee, the latter can bring the whole of the property to sale to recover his share of the mortgage debt.¹³⁴³ However, in a case where after such a purchase the other part mortgagee sued to recover his share of the debt, he was allowed to proceed against the rest of the property on the ground that his conduct in suing for a share of the debt was an admission that the security had been severed.¹³⁴⁴ This is erroneous, and is contrary to the principle that a mortgage interest cannot be severed without the consent of all mortgagees and mortgagors.¹³⁴⁵ The question will, however, be otherwise where one of the co-mortgagees has by suing for his own share of the mortgage debt, broken up the integrity of the mortgage.¹³⁴⁶ In cases in which a part mortgagee has been discharged, the other mortgagees are allowed to sue to recover their share of the debt on the ground that the mortgage security has been severed with the consent of the mortgagors. Thus, when a part mortgagee obtains a decree for his share of the debt and the mortgagors who are parties to the suit have not objected, the other mortgagee may sue to recover his share.¹³⁴⁷ Again, in an Allahabad case,¹³⁴⁸ there was a simple mortgage by K to two mortgagees B and J, and another simple mortgage by K's brother G also to B and J; and then a usufructuary mortgage was given by K and G to B in discharge of the two previous mortgages. This discharge was not binding on J, and as the action taken by B had operated as a severance with the consent of the mortgagors, J was entitled to realize his share in the two previous mortgage debts. But a payment to one part mortgagee will not operate as a severance of the security, and the other part mortgagee will be entitled to recover his share of the debt against the whole of the security.¹³⁴⁹

ILLUSTRATION

A mortgaged his property to B and C. A then sold part of the property and out of the Sale proceeds paid B ₹9,460 half for himself and half for C in full discharge of the mortgage. C has no knowledge of this transaction and contended that ₹1,000 more was due on the mortgage. The transaction was not binding on C; there was no severance of the security; and C was entitled to recover his share of the debt from the whole of the property.¹³⁵⁰

Where the mortgagee or, if there are several mortgagees, all the mortgagees, acquire by purchase or inheritance or otherwise, a share of the equity of redemption, the mortgage is extinguished pro tanto, and they may recover the balance of the debt against the residue of the property.¹³⁵¹ This is the counterpart of the case referred to in the last clause of section 60, and the severance is effected by the merger which occurs when the mortgagee acquires a share in the equity of redemption. The sale by the mortgagor of his share to the mortgagee implies consent, and brings the case within the terms of the section. So, when the mortgagor of two villages sells one to the mortgagee, the latter can foreclose the other village for a proportionate share of the debt.¹³⁵² When the mortgagee purchases a third share in the equity of redemption from one of three sons of the mortgagor, he can foreclose the remaining two-thirds for two-thirds of the debt.¹³⁵³ So also, when the mortgagee's purchasers inherited a share of the mortgaged property from their father who was one of the heirs of the mortgagor, they were held to be entitled to foreclose on the other heirs for their share of the debt.¹³⁵⁴

A mortgaged his property to B. A died leaving three sons C, D and E, B purchased from E his share in the equity of redemption. B was then entitled to recover two-thirds of the debt from the shares of C and D as the integrity of the mortgage had been broken.¹³⁵⁵

If a subsequent mortgagee who is impleaded in a suit on the basis of a prior mortgage, fails to redeem that mortgage and allows the property included in that mortgage to be sold, his security in that property ceases and he can no longer claim to redeem that mortgage.¹³⁵⁶ The merger may occur even after the final decree for sale. Thus, in an Allahabad case,¹³⁵⁷ the mortgagee K obtained a final decree for sale against his mortgagor T in January; M purchased part of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree against T in March; then in April, M purchased from the mortgagee K, the mortgage decree, and proceeded to execute it against the residue of the property in the hands of T; but it was held that the decree was extinguished pro tanto, and that it could only be executed for the balance of the amount. Again, when a mortgagee purchases part of the property mortgaged at the execution sale on his mortgage decree, he splits his security and can realise a proportionate part of the debt from a purchaser of another part who has not been made a party.¹³⁵⁸

The mere fact that there has been a division of the equity of redemption does not justify a suit for partial foreclosure or sale.¹³⁵⁹ However, when the mortgagee has recognised the partition, it was held that such recognition effects a severance of security with the consent of the mortgagors. This occurred in Venkatchella

67. Right to foreclosure or sale.—

*Chetty v Srinivasa*¹³⁶⁰ where the property was partitioned into four equal shares between the defendant and his three cousins by a deed which directed that each share should bear a fourth of the mortgage debt. The mortgagee was not party to the deed, but he allowed the three cousins to redeem their shares, each for a fourth of the debt. Three-fourths of the mortgage being thus extinguished, the mortgagee was held entitled to recover the remaining one-fourth from the defendant. Similarly, in *Mahadaji v Ganpatshet*¹³⁶¹ when three mortgagors divided the mortgaged property and apportioned their liability under the mortgage, and the mortgagee accepted bonds from two of them in discharge of their liability, two-thirds of the mortgage was extinguished and the mortgagee could only recover one-third of the debt from the third mortgagor. Similarly, in HV Low & Co Ltd v Pulin Beharilal Sinha,¹³⁶² the lessor of a coal mine had a charge for the royalty due under the lease. The lease took a partner into the business, and a registered deed of partition was executed declaring the shares of the lessee and his partner. The lessor opened separate accounts for each partner as being each liable for a share of the royalty. This he did at the request of the partners, and it was held to effect a severance of the charge so that the lessor could enforce the charge against each sharer to the extent of his share. The mortgagee may exempt some portion of the mortgaged property from the suit, and realize the whole debt from the remainder.¹³⁶³ Cases in which it was held that such release made the mortgagee liable to contribution, are no longer law.¹³⁶⁴ A prior mortgagee's suit for sale has been held to be maintainable, although a puisne mortgagee is not made a party. This has been extended to a case where the mortgagee sues without making one of the heirs of the mortgagor a party. In such a suit the court may, under the Code of Civil Procedure, O I rule 9 deals with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it, and make an order for sale proportionate to the share of the defendant.¹³⁶⁵ This rule of procedure splits the security without the consent of the mortgagors, unless it be supposed that the omission of the parties to object implies consent. Where a mortgagor executed a new and later mortgage, part of the consideration for which was the old debt due under a previous mortgage and the later mortgage is found to be invalid, through no fault of the mortgagee, the mortgagee is entitled to sue on the earlier mortgage.¹³⁶⁶ Where both a prior and a subsequent mortgagee obtained decrees and in execution, purchased the mortgaged property, the remedy of the prior mortgagee who is a later purchaser is to redeem the subsequent mortgage.¹³⁶⁷

ILLUSTRATION

A and B mortgage property to C. B dies and C files a suit for sale of the mortgage against A and D. It appears that D is not the heir of B. C is entitled to a decree for sale against A proportionate to his share.¹³⁶⁸

Under section 67, the principle of “substituted security” is relevant. It has been applied to a mortgage of property held by a junior member of a Marumakkattayam family. The other members of the family are entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage made by the junior member. If the mortgaged property is allotted to some other member, then the mortgagee can, by recourse to the principle of substituted security, proceed against any other property allotted to the mortgagor for realisation of the mortgage debt.¹³⁶⁹

[s 67.20] Security for Performance of Decree

When a security bond is executed by a judgment debtor to secure the performance of a decree, the property can be realized in execution, and no suit under this section is necessary.¹³⁷⁰

In a charge, the property is realized by a suit for sale under this section, as if it were simple mortgage (section 100). But if the charge is created by a decree, it may be realized in execution of the decree.¹³⁷¹ However, if the decree creating the charge is merely declaratory, the decree- holder is not entitled to sell the property charged in execution, but must file a suit to enforce the charge.¹³⁷² Some cases requiring a suit for sale even when the charge was executory were decided under the repealed section 99, and are no longer law.¹³⁷³ years would expire in 1982 and thereupon the right of mortgagee to file for foreclosure would start and the right of the mortgagee to file for possession of property would start after three years, i.e., in 1985, which would expire in accordance with the law of limitation in 1994, and thus a suit filed in 1995 for possession of the property would be barred by limitation.¹³⁷⁴

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

¹³⁷⁵[67A. Mortgagee when bound to bring one suit on several mortgages.—

A mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages executed by the same mortgagor in respect of each of which he has a right to obtain the same kind of decree under section 67, and who sues to obtain such decree on any one of the mortgages, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be bound to sue on all the mortgages in respect of which the mortgage-money has become due.

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 67A.2] Mortgagee Bound to Consolidate

This section is the counterpart of section 61, which deals with the mortgagor's right of redemption. The principle of consolidation is abolished by section 61 as regards mortgagors, and a mortgagor who has given different mortgages of different properties or successive mortgages of the same property is entitled to redeem each mortgage separately. However, the principle of consolidation which is abolished as regards the mortgagor, is applied by this section to the mortgagee. If the mortgagee holds different mortgages of different properties or successive mortgages of the same property from the same mortgagor, he must enforce all or none, unless there is a contract to the contrary.

The previous case law had been conflicting. The Madras High Court had inferred from section 60 that a mortgagee having successive mortgages of the same property from the same mortgagor cannot obtain an order for sale on one alone.¹³⁷⁶ This was approved in some case decided by Allahabad and Madras High Courts.¹³⁷⁷ The Bombay High Court held that if a mortgagee sues on a subsequent mortgage without reference to a prior mortgage, he is barred by res judicata from bringing a suit on the prior mortgage,¹³⁷⁸ and the Madras High Court held that a suit on a prior mortgage bars a suit on a subsequent mortgage of the same property.¹³⁷⁹ But it was generally held that a mortgagee might sue on a later mortgage reserving his rights on a prior mortgage. This was decided in the Madras Full Bench case of Subramania v Balasubramania,¹³⁸⁰ which adopted the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in *Sundar Singh v Bholu*¹³⁸¹ that the two mortgages constituted different causes of action, and which had been dissented from in a previous Madras case.¹³⁸² As the law then stood, the Allahabad view was correct, and was generally followed.¹³⁸³ In Nilu v Asirbad,¹³⁸⁴ J

Mookerjee quoted with approval the following passage from Sundar Singh v Bholu:¹³⁸⁵

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act which prevents a holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit.

The learned Judge, however, held that the right was subject to this reservation, that the mortgagee cannot sell the property twice over, nor sell it under the second decree subject to the first, and that the right course to follow was to direct that the property be sold free of both charges, whether the sale takes place in execution of the decree on the first mortgage or the decree on the second mortgage, and that the balance of the sale proceeds be applied in discharge of the dues on the first mortgage and the second mortgage one after the other, and the residue, if any, to stand to the credit of the holder of the equity of redemption. The decree made in *Nilu v Asirbad*¹³⁸⁶ was not warranted by any provision of the Code of Civil Procedure or the TP Act, 1882, but it showed that the court was conscious that it was a hardship to the mortgagor to have his property sold twice. Property sold subject to a prior mortgage will never realize its proper value. If the remedy were foreclosure, the hardship to the mortgagor would be still greater, for he might lose the whole property on a decree for one of the debts.

This equitable consideration has led to the amendment of the law, and sections 61 and 67A of TP Act, 1882 lay down the simple rule that if a mortgagor has made two or more mortgages of the same property or of different properties to the same mortgagee, the mortgagor may redeem each separately, but the mortgagee must enforce all or none. This section is primarily for the benefit of the mortgagor, and he may waive its benefit, and such a waiver would be implied by his failure to object in good time.¹³⁸⁷ Unlike O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the disability imposed by this section is not fatal;¹³⁸⁸ the plaintiff may be given leave to withdraw a suit hit by this section with liberty to file a fresh suit.¹³⁸⁹

[s 67A.3] Same Mortgagor

This rule would not apply, unless the mortgagor were the same.¹³⁹⁰ A husband and wife are not one entity. When they own separate property and mortgage separately and jointly, a suit to enforce the joint mortgage does not bar a separate suit by either.¹³⁹¹ The case of Moro Raghunath v Balaji,¹³⁹² was decided on the principle of res judicata, but it will serve as an illustration. This first mortgage was by two brothers, and the second mortgage of part of the same property by one brother, and the Bombay High Court held that a suit to enforce the first mortgage did not bar a suit to enforce the second. Similarly, in *Rajani Kanta v Sourendra Nath*¹³⁹³ there was a first mortgage by one co-sharer of a one-seventh share, and then a second mortgage by all the sharers of the whole property. Chief Justice Rankin said that the second was an entirely different transaction, and that separate suits could be brought. In the case of a loan advanced by a bank, where it was impliedly stipulated in the mortgage deed that the mortgagee could sue on any one of the mortgages executed by the mortgagor, it was a “contract to the contrary” as contemplated by section 67A and the suit to enforce one of the mortgages was not, therefore, hit by that section.¹³⁹⁴

[s 67A.4] Has a Right to Obtain

These words imply that the mortgage money has become due on both mortgages. The section would not prevent a mortgagee obtaining a decree on a prior mortgage before the debt secured on a subsequent mortgage had become due. Such a case is, however, not likely to arise, for it is not to the advantage of the mortgagee to destroy the security of the puisne mortgage.

[s 67A.5] Charge

The section has no application to a statutory charge.¹³⁹⁵

[s 67A.6] Court-fee

The section does not affect section 17 of the Court Fees Act. If the suit embraces several mortgages, court fee will be separately assessed on each mortgage.¹³⁹⁶

[s 67A.7] Same Kind of Decree

The rule will not apply if the mortgagee is suing for foreclosure on one mortgage, and for sale on another mortgage.

[s 67A.8] Section Not Applicable

If the suit on all mortgages cannot be brought in the same court, section 67A does not apply.¹³⁹⁷

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

¹³⁹⁸[68. Right to sue for mortgage-money.—

- (1) The mortgagee has a right to sue for the mortgage-money in the following cases and no others, namely:—
- (a) where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the same;
 - (b) where, by any cause other than the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor or mortgagee, the mortgaged property is wholly or partially destroyed or the security is rendered insufficient within the meaning of section 66, and the mortgagee has given the mortgagor a reasonable opportunity of providing further security enough to render the whole security sufficient, and the mortgagor has failed to do so;
 - (c) where the mortgagee is deprived of the whole or part of his security by or in consequence of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor;
 - (d) where, the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him, or to secure the possession thereof to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any person claiming under a title superior to that of the mortgagor:

Provided that, in the case referred to in clause (a), a transferee from the mortgagor or from his legal representative shall not be liable to be sued for the mortgage-money.

- (2) Where a suit is brought under clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section (1), the Court may, at its discretion, stay the suit and all proceedings therein, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, until the mortgagee has exhausted all his available remedies against the mortgaged property or what remains of it, unless the mortgagee abandons his security and, if necessary, re- transfers the mortgaged property.

This section was substituted for the original section by the Amendment Act 20 of 1929.

[s 68.2] Scope of the Section

This section refers to the personal remedy of the mortgagee, while section 67 refers to the remedy against the property mortgaged.¹³⁹⁹ The section embraces two different classes of suit. The cause of action in a suit under clause (a) is different from the cause of action in a suit under clauses (b) or (c) or (d). The suit under clause (a) is a suit to enforce the personal covenant expressed or implied in the mortgage; but the suit under clauses (b), (c) or (d) is in the nature of a suit for compensation when the mortgagee is deprived of his security. The cause of action being different, there is a difference in the period of limitation.

There is also a distinction as to interest. In cases under clause (a), the interest is at the contractual rate, and the interest which may be decreed is determined under O XXXIV, rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁴⁰⁰ In cases under clauses (b), (c) and (d), the suit being for compensation, interest is by way of damages and the rate is in the discretion of the court.¹⁴⁰¹ The fact that the deed is not attested makes no difference, for the Privy Council have held that the position of the mortgagor under this section cannot by reason of the non-attestation of the deed be better than it would have been if the mortgage have been duly attested.¹⁴⁰² The provisions of the section are designed for the purpose of indemnifying the mortgagee against any disturbance in the peaceful enjoyment of the property. The provisions are of an enabling nature, and do not preclude the mortgagee from suing a trespasser who has possession.¹⁴⁰³

A bank sued for the realisation of money due on an overdraft account. The overdraft was secured by promissory note executed by the principal debtor, and guarantee agreements executed by the guarantors. Equitable mortgage of the principal debtor's property was also created. It was held that the suit as framed did not attract section 68, as it was not (and could not be) a suit by the creditor qua mortgagee. It was a suit essentially to enforce the promissory note, and the agreements of guarantee. To attract the provisions of section 68, it is necessary that the suit should be for recovery of mortgage money, and the suit must be by a mortgagee against the mortgagor for the mortgage money, on the basis of the mortgagor's personal covenant. The instant suit had not been instituted by the plaintiff bank in his capacity as mortgagee, for mortgage money. The claim of the bank is for a money decree which was advanced in the overdraft account. The personal liability of mortgagor arose not on the mortgage, but was created by independent transactions. The personal liability to repay the loan arose independently of any existing mortgage. Hence, section 68 had no application.¹⁴⁰⁴ The section does not provide a remedy for a breach of the personal covenant; it merely enumerates the conditions under which a suit for the mortgage money may lie. Where, therefore, after finding that the mortgagor had no title to one of the properties mortgaged and leased back to the mortgagor, the mortgagee recovered possession of the other properties, and continued in possession, it was held that he had acquiesced in the diminution of the security, and could not sue for the mortgage money under this section.¹⁴⁰⁵

In case of an enforcement of mortgage in favour of a bank in respect of a permanent lease of government property, where sale of property was prohibited, on payment of necessary charges fixed by Government of India, a purchaser in auction sale could apply to the government for issue of necessary certificates in that behalf, and the government could issue such necessary certificates and orders permitting sale of property on such terms and conditions which the government may fix.¹⁴⁰⁶ The position of anomalous mortgagees is also governed by section 98.

An agreement to sell or an agreement to mortgage does not involve any transfer of right in rem but creates only a personal obligation. Therefore, if specific performance is sought either in regard to an agreement to sell or an agreement to mortgage, the claim for specific performance will be arbitrable. On the other hand, a mortgage is a transfer of a right in rem. A mortgage suit for sale of the mortgaged property is an action in rem, for enforcement of a right in rem will have to be decided by courts of law and not by arbitral tribunals. The provisions of the TP Act, 1882 read with O XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the procedure prescribed for adjudication of the mortgage suits, the rights of the mortgagees and mortgagors, the parties to a mortgage suit and the powers of a court adjudicating a mortgage suit makes it clear that such suits are intended to be decided by courts and therefore impliedly barred from being referred to or decided by private fora (Arbitration Tribunals).

A decree for sale of a mortgaged property as in the case of a decree for order of winding up, requires the court to protect the interests of persons other than the parties to the suit/petition and empowers the court to entertain and adjudicate upon rights and liabilities of third parties (other than those who are parties to the arbitration agreements). Therefore a suit for sale, foreclosure or redemption of a mortgaged property can only be tried by a public forum and not by an arbitral tribunal. Consequently it follows that a court where the mortgage suit is pending should not refer the parties to arbitration.¹⁴⁰⁷

The suit under clause (a) is a suit to enforce the personal covenant, and limitation was six years from the due date under the Limitation Act, 1963.¹⁴⁰⁸ If the mortgage money is payable on demand, time runs from the date of the mortgage bond.¹⁴⁰⁹ The decision of the Privy Council in Ram Raghubir Lal v United Refineries,¹⁴¹⁰ makes it clear that Article 116 of the old Limitation Act was applicable.¹⁴¹¹ There is no article corresponding to Article 116 in the Limitation Act, 1963. Such suit would, therefore, be governed by Article 55, which provides a period of three years for suits for compensation for the breach of any contract, the period to commence from the breach.

The suit under clause (b) or (c) or (d) is in the nature of a suit for compensation when the mortgagee is deprived of his security. The mortgagee is not bound to wait for the expiry of the period fixed by the mortgage.¹⁴¹² The period of limitation under Limitation Act, 1963, Article 113, is three years. The period is to be calculated from the date of deprivation,¹⁴¹³ and not from the date when the mortgage money is payable.¹⁴¹⁴

The suit under this clause is a suit on the personal covenant, expressed or implied. The mortgagor is liable to be sued on the personal covenant at due date. Under O 34, rule 14 the mortgagee may sue on the personal covenant first, and then sue for sale on the mortgage. The Calcutta High Court has held that when a mortgagee is suing on the covenant under section 68(a), it is not open to him to ignore the mortgage.¹⁴¹⁵ This is not a correct statement of the law before the amending Act 20 of 1929. It was no doubt a hardship that the mortgagee should be able to enforce a personal decree while maintaining his security intact, and it was this hardship which led to the amendment of the section by the addition of sub-section (2).

[s 68.6] Personal Liability of the Mortgagor

In a suit for recovery of balance amount after adjusting sale proceeds from sale of mortgaged property, there may be personal liability of mortgagor/surety/ guarantor to pay mortgage money subject to sections 67 and 68.¹⁴¹⁶ As pointed out by Lord Parker in a case already cited,¹⁴¹⁷ a loan prima facie involves a personal liability, but the nature and the terms of the security may negative any personal liability. Thus, there is a personal liability express or implied, in a simple mortgage¹⁴¹⁸ or in an English mortgage; there is none in a mortgage by conditional sale¹⁴¹⁹ or in a usufructuary mortgage.¹⁴²⁰ Therefore, in the last two classes of a mortgage, a personal liability can be created only by a covenant expressed or clearly implied.¹⁴²¹ Again, a promise to pay does not give the right of personal remedy, if the mortgagor binds himself to pay only out of the property mortgaged or a particular fund.¹⁴²² It is always a matter of construction whether there is a covenant enforceable against the person of the mortgagor personally.¹⁴²³ The personal covenant may be contingent as where the mortgagor covenants that if the property mortgaged is sold for arrears of revenue or other causes, the mortgage money may be recovered from him personally, and if it is contingent, it cannot be enforced until the contingency has happened.¹⁴²⁴ The personal covenant has in some cases been too readily assumed on the analogy of English mortgages without regard to the nature of the security.¹⁴²⁵ In the case of an equitable mortgage, the mortgagor must be deemed to bind himself personally to pay the mortgage money.¹⁴²⁶ Express covenants take many forms.¹⁴²⁷ The words “whenever we pay the same to you, you shall receive it and give back the deed,” were held not to amount to a covenant to repay, as they merely gave the mortgagor the option of paying.¹⁴²⁸ Again the words “having paid the principal money in the month of Chaitra 1927 we shall take back the document and the land. In case we fail to repay the principal money at due date, this subdharna bond shall remain in force,” were held not to import a personal covenant, but merely to express the right of redemption.¹⁴²⁹ In a Lahore case,¹⁴³⁰ a provision that the mortgagees could recover the interest for the first five years in any way they liked was held to import a personal covenant. In an anomalous mortgage, the right of the mortgagee to sue on a personal covenant is not affected by his right to enforce his right to recover possession.¹⁴³¹ In another case, where by the terms of the deed, the mortgagee was to repay himself as far as the interest was concerned out of the rents and profits, but the deed provided that after the expiry of a certain period the mortgagor was bound to pay the entire sum, it was held that the deed contained a personal covenant to pay the mortgage money, and the mortgagee was entitled to a decree under the section.¹⁴³² Where there is a personal covenant which the mortgagee is entitled to enforce, the mere fact that he acquires the mortgaged property does not debar him from recovering the debt under the personal covenant unless the acquisition has the effect of extinguishing the debt, i.e., unless it was acquired for that express purpose. But in cases where the consideration was not the extinguishment of the debt, the right to recover on personal covenant remains, though the right to enforce the mortgage qua the mortgagee may go.¹⁴³³

[s 68.7] Personal Liability Not Enforceable Against Purchaser from Mortgagor

The personal covenant does not run with the land, and no personal decree can be made against a purchaser of the equity of redemption.¹⁴³⁴ Thus, in *Jamna Das v Ram Autar*¹⁴³⁵ a purchaser of the equity of redemption retained a part of the purchase money under an agreement with the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt, but the Judicial Committee held that he was not personally liable to the mortgagee under section 90 of the TP Act, 1882, nor the Code of Civil Procedure, O XXXIV, rule 6 as he was not party to the sale, nor could he be held liable on the ground that he held the money in trust for the mortgagee.¹⁴³⁶ There is, however, an implied covenant by the purchaser of the equity of redemption to indemnify the mortgagor.¹⁴³⁷ The word “mortgagor” includes persons who derive title from the mortgagor, unless otherwise expressly provided; but that section does not by itself make the purchaser of an equity of redemption personally liable for a mortgage-debt where, but for the section he would not have been.¹⁴³⁸ The word “himself”, therefore, excludes the liability of a transferee or an heir, though an heir would be liable to the extent of the assets of the deceased in his hands. The assignee can make himself liable by entering into a fresh covenant with the mortgagee,¹⁴³⁹ but liability is not implied from the payment of interest.¹⁴⁴⁰ The mortgagor continues to be liable for the payment of the mortgage debt after he has assigned the equity of redemption, but if he is sued for payment, it has been held that he acquires a new right to redeem.¹⁴⁴¹ The mortgagee when so redeemed conveys the property to him subject to the right of redemption vested in the assignee.

A purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property who retained a part of the sale consideration agreeing to pay it towards the discharge of the mortgage debt cannot be sued personally by the mortgagee under this section. So also a co-sharer in a village cannot be made responsible under the section, for the diminution of the mortgage security caused by the wrongful act of the lambardar if he did it without his consent.¹⁴⁴² Such personal liability arises from the contract of borrowing, whether express or implied, and no personal liability can exist where there is no privity of contract as between the first and second mortgagees, even in respect of money left with the latter to pay the debt of the former.¹⁴⁴³

[s 68.8] Personal Liability Not Affected by Want of Registration or of Attestation

The remedy on the personal covenant is available if the mortgage is invalid for want of registration.¹⁴⁴⁴ The remedy is also available even though the mortgage be invalid for want of attestation.¹⁴⁴⁵

[s 68.9] No Personal Liability if Mortgage Illegal

A suit will not lie on the personal covenant if the transaction of mortgage is illegal.¹⁴⁴⁶ If the mortgage is forbidden by law, any subsidiary covenants also fails.¹⁴⁴⁷ But where the mortgage was void under para 11 of the third schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, it has been held that the personal covenant is not affected and even if the claim on the personal covenant is abandoned, the mortgagee may claim restitution under section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.¹⁴⁴⁸

ILLUSTRATION

A executes an usufructuary mortgage of his occupancy holding to B, and covenants that in case of dispossession, B shall have the right to recover the principal money with damages or interest. The deed also contains a subsidiary simple mortgage of two houses to secure repayment of the principal money with damages or interest. The mortgage of the occupancy holding is illegal under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. The subsidiary mortgage of the houses falls with it.¹⁴⁴⁹

The Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, does not forbid mortgages, but only requires mortgages of land of an agricultural tribe to be in particular form, and renders null and void conditions that do not accord with that form. Under that Act, a condition for possession by the mortgagee for more than 20 years is illegal. Therefore, a simple mortgage usufructuary which provides for possession for more than 20 years is invalid as a usufructuary mortgage, but will be effective as a simple mortgage; but as the TP Act, 1882 forbids sale of such land in execution, the mortgagee can only obtain a decree on the personal covenant, expressed or implied.¹⁴⁵⁰ Such a suit may be filed either within the prescribed period after the moneys became due under the deed or by reason of the default of the mortgagor; the right conferred under section 68 (1)(d) upon the mortgage to sue earlier in the event of the mortgagor's default does not mean that the period is to be computed from the date of the default, for that would enable the mortgagor to gain by his own default.¹⁴⁵¹

The liability on the personal covenant does not run with the land, and no personal decree can be made against the purchaser of an equity of redemption. In this connection, the note, "Personal liability not enforceable against purchaser from mortgagor" may be also referred.

This clause refers to cases where the security is destroyed by accidental causes such as a fire or flood or vis major, without default of either party. When the mortgagor being in possession as lessee of the mortgagee got his rent reduced by the Revenue Court, the Allahabad High Court held that the mortgagee was entitled to sue for the debt.¹⁴⁵² In a later case, the same High Court held that such a case would not fall under the old clause (b), i.e., the present clause (c), as the reduction of the rent was not a default or wrongful act.¹⁴⁵³ It is open to the mortgagee to relinquish his security and sue only on the personal covenant of the mortgagor to pay,¹⁴⁵⁴ but he cannot, on receipt of some money from the assignee of the equity of redemption, give up the security, and sue the heirs of the mortgagor on the personal covenant.¹⁴⁵⁵ It is submitted that it would fall under the present clause (b). As the mortgagor is not in default, the mortgagee must first give him an opportunity of substituting another security that is sufficient as explained in section 66. He must, therefore, before suing require the mortgagor to furnish another sufficient security,¹⁴⁵⁶ and allow him a reasonable time for that purpose. What is reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each case. In one case, the court assumed that six months would be reasonable time.¹⁴⁵⁷ Cases have arisen, both before and after the act of destruction by deluging,¹⁴⁵⁸ and by fire.¹⁴⁵⁹ If the land is wholly or partially destroyed by deluge, the mortgagee has a right to sue for the mortgage money under section 68, but limitation for a suit under section 67 is not suspended while the land is submerged.¹⁴⁶⁰

The acquisition of the property under the Land Acquisition Act is destruction of the security.¹⁴⁶¹ Section 68 has been applied where the mortgaged property was sold under the provisions of the Evacuee Property Act, though it was found that the mortgagee was not to blame for such sale.¹⁴⁶² This case is now specially provided for in section 73(2).

What amounts to an impairment of security is a question of fact. In Ratti Ram & Sons v Motilal,¹⁴⁶³ the Privy Council held that the removal and sale of the roofing of a factory, materially affected the security of the mortgagee of the factory. In an Allahabad case, the mortgage-deed itself provided for the substitution of another security in case the house mortgaged was destroyed or proved insufficient to satisfy the debt, and this was enforced when the house was sold in execution by a prior mortgagee.¹⁴⁶⁴ Where, however, the mortgagee knows already, that the mortgagor is not in possession of the property, but has only a doubtful and disputed title thereto, the transaction is not a mortgage and the section has no application, and further that a compromise by the mortgagor with the person disputing his title cannot be regarded as a wrongful act of default within the meaning of the section.¹⁴⁶⁵

Where the mortgagee is deprived of his security wholly or in part by the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may sue the mortgagor for the mortgage money. It is not reasonable that, if the mortgagee's security is impaired, he should be obliged to realize the security before enforcing the personal covenant if there is one, and this rule applies equally if there is no personal covenant, or if the remedy under the personal covenant is time- barred.¹⁴⁶⁶ A breach of duty imposed upon the mortgagor by section 65 is a default, so that if the mortgagor does not pay off a prior encumbrance when it becomes due, the mortgagee is entitled to sue the mortgagor personally.¹⁴⁶⁷ So also, if the title of the mortgagor is defective, e.g. when the property is subject to a prior mortgage which has not been disclosed,¹⁴⁶⁸ or when the mortgagor knows that the property mortgaged is not transferable.¹⁴⁶⁹ However, in some cases in which the mortgagor included in the security property which was not his own, the court held that the remedy was by action for deceit, and not under this section.¹⁴⁷⁰ In two Oudh cases, when a mortgagor mortgaged joint family property without authority, the mortgagee was given a personal decree.¹⁴⁷¹ It is not sufficient that the mortgagee merely suspects a defect in title.¹⁴⁷² Again a breach of duty under section 66 is a default and if the mortgagor commits waste, the mortgagee may sue him personally for the debt.¹⁴⁷³ Where the mortgaged property was allowed to fall in disrepair so as to diminish its letting value, it was held that the mortgagee could enforce his right under clause (c).¹⁴⁷⁴ When the mortgagor sold the property by a registered deed to a vendor who has no notice of the unregistered mortgage, the mortgagee was deprived of his security and was, therefore, entitled to sue the mortgagor personally.¹⁴⁷⁵

(1) A mortgaged property to B and then to C. A failed to perform the covenant implied by section 65(e) to pay off the prior encumbrance when it became due and B brought the property to sale. C was entitled to sue at once for his mortgage money.¹⁴⁷⁶

(2) A Hindu coparcener under the Mitakshara law as administered in Oudh mortgaged property to B by simple mortgage for a term of 12 years. B discovered that the property was coparcenary property and that the mortgage was without legal necessity. B was entitled to sue for the mortgage money although the term had not expired.¹⁴⁷⁷

(3) A mortgaged certain property to B by a usufructuary mortgage, but remained in possession as B's tenant. A's failure to pay rent would not entitle B to sue under this section.¹⁴⁷⁸

(4) A, B, C & D executed a mortgage in favour of E of two properties. One of the properties which belonged to A was sold under the Public Demand Recovery Act and it was purchased by the landlord at the sale for arrears of rent due under the Bengal Tenancy Act. But the mortgagee was dispossessed. It was held that a mortgagee could file a suit under section 68(l)(c) of this Act. It was immaterial that the property sold did not belong to C & D who were liable to pay the mortgage-money.¹⁴⁷⁹

A sale by the mortgagor of the equity of redemption, whether voluntary¹⁴⁸⁰ or enforced by an execution creditor,¹⁴⁸¹ is not a wrongful act or default so as to attract the application of this section. The default or wrongful act of the mortgagor must be anterior to the deprivation. Thus, although it is the duty of the mortgagor to defend his title to the mortgaged property, he will not be liable under this clause if he fails to perform this duty when called upon after strangers have dispossessed the mortgagee.¹⁴⁸² The mortgagee has of course no remedy under this section when he is deprived of his security by his own default.¹⁴⁸³ There was a mortgage to A which was not as yet registered. B advanced money on a mortgage of the same property and took and registered a second mortgage in the erroneous belief that prior registration would give him priority over A.

When A's mortgage was completed by registration, B had no right to sue for the mortgage money on grounds that his security had been impaired.¹⁴⁸⁴ Where, however, both the mortgagor and the mortgagee migrated to India from Pakistan after the partition, leaving the property there, it was held that there was no destruction of the security.¹⁴⁸⁵

Before the TP Act, 1882 it was held that the mortgagee, when deprived of part of his security by wrongful act or default of the mortgagor, was entitled to sue not for the whole of the mortgage-money, but for a proportional part of it.¹⁴⁸⁶ If the mortgagor's heir succeeding to possession as mortgagor commits waste, he is liable under this sub-section,¹⁴⁸⁷ and the same would apply to a transferee of the mortgagor.¹⁴⁸⁸

This clause refers to usufructuary mortgages, and is not applicable to conditional mortgages.¹⁴⁸⁹ The mortgagor by the terms of the mortgage is bound to deliver possession, and to authorize continuance of possession until payment of the mortgage money. If the mortgagor performs these duties he is entitled to recover possession when the debt is discharged, out of the usufruct or otherwise. On the other hand, if he makes default, the mortgagee is entitled under this clause to sue him personally for the mortgage money. This is a statutory right irrespective of any express covenant.¹⁴⁹⁰ If the mortgage deed provided for a personal contract to pay, the mortgagee may either exercise his option under section 68(1)(d), or may act under the personal contract to pay.¹⁴⁹¹ If the mortgagee omits to sue under this clause so that his remedy under clause (d) is time barred, then, if there is no personal covenant in the usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee has no other cause of action.¹⁴⁹² However, a decision to proceed under section 68(1)(d) does not constitute an abandonment of the mortgagee's right to sue under the personal covenant, though it may amount to an election to sue for the mortgage-money, and thus a waiver of the right to obtain possession.¹⁴⁹³ If the mortgagee fails to obtain possession from the mortgagor on the execution of the mortgage,¹⁴⁹⁴ or during the term of the mortgage in accordance with a mortgagor covenants for possession in default of payment of interest,¹⁴⁹⁵ the mortgagee may recover the debt by personal suit. So also, if the mortgagee is dispossessed either by the mortgagor,¹⁴⁹⁶ or by the mortgagor's co-sharer,¹⁴⁹⁷ or by title paramount,¹⁴⁹⁸ or by a prior encumbrancer, although the mortgagee omits to redeem that prior encumbrancer,¹⁴⁹⁹ or himself purchases the property at a sale enforced by that encumbrancer,¹⁵⁰⁰ or if the mortgagor who is in possession as the mortgagee's lessee, wrongfully holds over,¹⁵⁰¹ or where the mortgagor to whom the property has been leased back by the mortgagee commits a breach of the conditions of the lease.¹⁵⁰²

A liability under this section has been enforced when the mortgagor gave two successive usufructuary mortgages;¹⁵⁰³ when the mortgagee could not get possession of some plots because they did not belong to the mortgagor;¹⁵⁰⁴ and also when the mortgagor deprived a usufructuary mortgagee of the rents and profits.¹⁵⁰⁵ A transferee of the mortgagor may be liable under this clause, and when a usufructuary mortgagee was dispossessed at a collector's partition, he was held to be entitled to recover the mortgage money from a purchaser of the equity of redemption.¹⁵⁰⁶ Similarly, a usufructuary mortgagee who was dispossessed at a collector's partition was held entitled to recover the mortgage money from a co-sharer of the mortgagor to whom the property had been allotted.¹⁵⁰⁷ This section enables a mortgagee when dispossessed from a part of the mortgaged property to repudiate the mortgage, and to recover the entire amount of the mortgage money personally from the mortgagor.¹⁵⁰⁸ The expression "being entitled to possession" in section 68(1)(d) means entitled to possession not only under the terms of the mortgage-deed, but also entitled to possession according to law. Thus, a mortgagee of the undivided share of a coparcener not being entitled to the possession thereof under Hindu law, is not entitled to recover the mortgage money under the section.¹⁵⁰⁹ A usufructuary mortgagee who is dispossessed by a subsequent simple mortgagee in execution of a decree in a suit brought by the latter, and in which he was not made a party could sue not merely for the recovery of his mortgage-money, but also for possession of the mortgaged property.¹⁵¹⁰

The words "any person claiming under a title superior to that of the mortgagor" have been substituted for the words "any other person" in the old section. It is now clear that the liability under this section does not arise if the disturbance is by a trespasser. Under the old section also, it was held that the mortgagor was liable under this section for disturbance by title paramount.¹⁵¹¹

If the mortgagee is dispossessed by a trespasser, he is entitled to sue him for possession,¹⁵¹² but if dispossessed by the mortgagor he may sue either under this section for the mortgage money, or for possession.¹⁵¹³ A mortgage provided that if the mortgagee did not obtain possession or if he lost possession, he could recover his money with interest by sale of the mortgaged property or any other property of the mortgagor. It was held that the mortgagee could sue either for possession, or for the mortgage money.¹⁵¹⁴ Where after creating a mortgage with possession, the mortgagor obtains a lease of the property from the mortgagee, where no period is fixed for the lease, and the mortgagor then sells the property and hands over possession to the third person, the mortgagee cannot bring a suit for possession against the transferee treating him as a trespasser.¹⁵¹⁵

(2) A mortgaged property to B by simple mortgage, and subsequently to C by usufructuary mortgage. C took possession under this mortgage. But B brought the property to sale and the execution purchaser evicted C. C was evicted by superior title and was entitled to sue for the mortgage money although he might have redeemed B.¹⁵¹⁷

(3) A mortgaged property to B by usufructuary mortgage. The property had been leased to tenants who wrongfully and without any instigation from A refused to pay rent to B. This was not dispossession by superior title. B's remedy was against the tenants and he had no remedy against A under section 68.¹⁵¹⁸

The mortgagee is not entitled to relief under this clause if he is dispossessed by his own default, e.g. when he neglects to pay the government revenue out of the income and the land is sold for arrears of assessment,¹⁵¹⁹ or when he omits to make a defence to a suit by a subsequent mortgagee which would have preserved his security,¹⁵²⁰ or when a mortgagee's claim proceedings were disallowed under O XXI, rule 62 of Code of Civil Procedure omits to file a suit for the recovery of possession.¹⁵²¹ Again, the mortgagee may lose his remedy by acquiescence in his dispossession.¹⁵²² If a usufructuary mortgagee does not get possession of the whole of the property mortgaged and does not enforce his remedy under the section, he cannot claim interest in lieu of profits,¹⁵²³ unless there is an express stipulation to that effect.¹⁵²⁴ He is deemed in law to have acquiesced in his diminished security. A Privy Council case on this point is that of Rajah Pertab Bahadur v Gajadher,¹⁵²⁵ a suit to redeem five out of 12 villages mortgaged by an Oudh zamindar in 1851. The mortgage was with possession, but there was a covenant to pay interest until delivery of possession. The mortgagee was dispossessed of six villages by a kabulayatdar of the King of Oudh in 1853, then recovered possession, but was again dispossessed of seven villages at the Summary Settlements of 1858 and 1864. The mortgagee claimed interest as he was dispossessed. But the Judicial Committee held that as he brought no suit to recover the mortgage money when he was dispossessed, he had acquiesced in his dispossession, and decreed redemption on payment of the principal sum only. However, the mortgagee is not obliged to repudiate the mortgage because he is dispossessed of part of his security. In a case where the mortgage was of nine villages, seven of which were subject to a prior mortgage, and the mortgagee was dispossessed first of the seven and then some years later of the two villages, the fact that he acquiesced in the dispossession of the seven villages did not prevent his recovering the mortgage money when dispossessed of the two villages.¹⁵²⁶

The privilege conferred by this section on a mortgagee to sue for money cannot be availed of by a chargeholder, in proceedings in execution of a decree, without resorting to a suit, even if the security has been impaired by the conduct of the person creating the charge.¹⁵²⁷

[s 68.15] Succession Certificate

The heirs of a mortgagee can sue on a cause of action accruing after the death of the mortgagee without obtaining a succession certificate, but not if the cause of action accrued in his lifetime.¹⁵²⁸

[s 68.16] Interest

A usufructuary mortgagee who is dispossessed may not only require payment of the debt but also interest, by way of damages, for the unexpired period of the mortgage.¹⁵²⁹ So also he is entitled to interest, if he never obtained possession owing to the fault of the mortgagor.¹⁵³⁰ It has, however, been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the mortgagee at the time of redemption cannot claim by way of interest the profits of the property which have not been delivered to him.¹⁵³¹

A suit under section 68 is not a suit on the mortgage. However, it must be a suit by the mortgagee for the mortgage money.¹⁵³² A suit on the mortgage is a suit under section 67, while in a suit under section 68 the only decree that can be passed is a decree for money.¹⁵³³ A usufructuary mortgagee who has been dispossessed has no remedy either by foreclosure or by sale, but can only be given a simple money decree.¹⁵³⁴ He may also sue for possession, but he cannot sue for sale. This is because there is no personal covenant in a pure usufructuary mortgage. But if there is a personal covenant which implies a right of sale, it would seem that if the mortgage money has become payable under section 68, the mortgagee may also under section 67, sue for sale.¹⁵³⁵ A mortgagor who wishes to avail himself of the benefit of section 68(2) can only do so on the tacit assumption that there was a valid mortgage. He cannot deny the mortgage, and at the same time invoke the discretionary relief under section 68(2).¹⁵³⁶

The suit under section 68 not being a suit on the mortgage, O XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply. It is, therefore, open to the mortgagee to execute his decree against the mortgagor personally, while preserving his rights under the mortgage. This might be a great hardship to the mortgagor who finds himself pressed to pay while his property is under mortgage. To avoid this hardship, the sub-section enacts that in cases where the mortgagor is not in default, i.e., in clauses (a) and (b), the suit under section 68 shall be stayed until the mortgagee has exhausted his remedy against the security or what remains of the security. However, the mortgagee may avoid the stay order and proceed with the suit if he surrenders his security, for a mortgagee who abandons his security is competent to bring a simple suit for the money advanced by him.¹⁵³⁷ When the security is released, the enforcement of the money decree is no hardship on the mortgagor, the mortgage is then no longer subsisting and O 34, rule 14 is no bar to the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree.¹⁵³⁸

Sub-section (2) only applies to mortgages upon which a suit could be filed in that court. The right of an equitable mortgagee of properties in Burma to sue the mortgagor in Madras because the deposit was made in Madras, was not affected by sub-section (2) as no suit could have been filed on the mortgage in Madras.¹⁵³⁹

In cases under clause (c), the mortgagor is in default and is not entitled to this protection. Thus, if the mortgagor in possession commits waste, the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for the mortgage money while still preserving his mortgage rights. He would not, however, be able to sell the mortgaged property in execution of the decree under section 68 by reason of O 34, rule 14. But if there were a personal covenant in the mortgage which implied a right of sale, it would seem that the mortgagee might sue both under section 68 and under section 67 to recover the mortgage money, and to realize the security. This was so decided by the Privy

Council in the case of a simple mortgage usufructuary in Narsingh Partab v Mohammad Yaqub.¹⁵⁴⁰

In cases under clause (d), the mortgage is usufructuary, and there is no question of realizing the security, for a usufructuary mortgagee is not entitled to a decree either for foreclosure, or for sale. He would sue on title to recover possession,¹⁵⁴¹ and in such a suit no question as to the amount due on the mortgage would arise.¹⁵⁴² However, he would also have a right to sue for the mortgage money under section 68(d). This right is supplemental so that he can file a suit in the alternative for recovery of possession, or for the mortgage money.¹⁵⁴³ If the decree were for the mortgage money, he could not bring the mortgaged property to sale¹⁵⁴⁴ except in execution of the decree for costs, for that part of the decree would not be under the mortgage and O 34, rule 14 would not be applicable to it.¹⁵⁴⁵

[s 68.18] Abandon his Security

These words refer to the whole of the security. An abandonment of part of the security would be insufficient; for in that case the mortgage as to the remainder would subsist and O 34, rule 14 would be a bar to its sale. Again a release of part of the security would be inadequate relief to the mortgagor, for its effect would only be to increase the burden on the rest of the property. On the other hand, if part of the security has ceased to exist, a release of the remainder would be sufficient. This was recognised in a Calcutta case¹⁵⁴⁶ under O 34, rule 6. Of course, the section has no application where the mortgagee has no security to abandon, as when his right to enforce security is barred by the provisions of O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁵⁴⁷

It has been held by the Patna High Court that the right to enforce personal liability, and the right to enforce a security are distinct and independent rights. The mortgagee is not bound to sue for realisation of the security where he sues to enforce the personal covenant, as the two claims arise out of distinct causes of action. Hence, the action would not be barred by O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. The two obligations of the debtor are independent of each other.¹⁵⁴⁸

[s 68.20] Limitation

Where a mortgage deed contains a covenant to repay the mortgage money within five years, and also a covenant to put the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property by way of security and the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to the mortgagee, the right to sue for the mortgage money accrues to the mortgagee under this section immediately on the mortgagor's failure to deliver possession of the mortgaged property, and the suit is governed by Article 62 of the Limitation Act 1963.¹⁵⁴⁹

[s 68.21] Burden to Prove Discharge

In a suit for recovery of mortgage loan, when the defendant admits the mortgage, the burden is on the defendant to prove the discharge. However, by production of the original mortgage deed, the defendant is entitled to invoke the presumption under section 114(i) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 to show that the document was returned by the mortgagee in token of discharge. If the original is produced by the defendant, the plaintiff has to rebut the presumption raised in favour of the defendant.¹⁵⁵⁰

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

69. Power of sale when valid.—

1551[(1)] ¹⁵⁵²[¹⁵⁵³] A mortgagee, or any person acting on his behalf, shall, subject to the provisions of this section have power to sell or concur in selling the mortgaged property or any part thereof, in default of payment of the mortgage-money, without the intervention of the Court, in the following cases and in no others, namely:—

- (a) where the mortgage is an English mortgage, and neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee is a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist ¹⁵⁵⁴[or a member of any other race, sect, tribe or class from time to time specified in this behalf by ¹⁵⁵⁵[the State Government] in the official Gazette]
- (b) where ¹⁵⁵⁶[a power of sale without the intervention of the Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee by the mortgage-deed and] the mortgagee is ¹⁵⁵⁷[the Government];
- (c) where ¹⁵⁵⁸[a power of sale without the intervention of the Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee by the mortgage-deed and] the mortgaged property or any part thereof ¹⁵⁵⁹[was, on the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed, situated within the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay ¹⁵⁶⁰] ¹⁵⁶¹[or in any other town ¹⁵⁶² or area which the State Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, specify in this behalf.]

1563[(2)] ¹⁵⁶⁴] No such power shall be exercised unless and until—

1565[(a)] notice in writing requiring payment of the principal money has been served on the mortgagor, or on one of several mortgagors, and default has been made in payment of the principal money, or of part thereof, for three months after such service; or 1566[(b)] some interest under the mortgage amounting at least to five hundred rupees is in arrear and unpaid for three months after becoming due.

1567[(3)] When a sale has been made in professed exercise of such a power, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground that no case had arisen to authorise the sale, or that due notice was not given, or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised; but any person damnified by an unauthorised or improper or irregular exercise of the power shall have his remedy in damages against the person exercising the power.

1568[(4)] The money which is received by the mortgagee, arising from the sale, after discharge of prior encumbrances, if any, to which the sale is not made subject, or after payment into court under section 57 of a sum to meet any prior encumbrance, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be held by him in trust to be applied by him, first, in payment of all costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him as incident to the sale or any attempted sale; and, secondly, in discharge of the mortgage-money and costs and other money, if any, due under the mortgage; and the residue of the money so received shall be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property, or authorized to give receipts for the proceeds of the sale thereof.

1569[(5) Nothing in this section or in section 69A applies to powers conferred before the first day of July, 1882.]

The section has been remodelled by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 69.2] Expressly Conferred

The power of sale in clauses (b) and (c) must be expressed. A provision in a mortgage deed that the mortgagee should “have all the rights, powers, remedies and privileges conferred upon a mortgagee by Act 4 of 1882” does not confer an express power of sale under this section.¹⁵⁷⁰

[s 69.3] Power of Sale without Intervention of the Court

The power of sale referred to in this section is a power of sale without the intervention of the court, and is distinct from the power of a simple mortgagee to cause the mortgaged property to be sold, i.e., under section 67, by decree of the court.¹⁵⁷¹ It refers to a clause expressly included in a mortgage.¹⁵⁷²

If there is a fraud then there may be cause of action against the purchaser to have the sale declared void or to have it set aside on the ground of fraud.¹⁵⁷³ The power of sale cannot be exercised except in one of the three cases:

- (a) Where the mortgage is an English mortgage, and the parties are not Hindus, Mahomedans, Buddhists or members of a notified class. In LV Apte v RGN Price,¹⁵⁷⁴ the Andhra Pradesh High Court applied section 69 to an English mortgage between a company, and trustees for debenture-holders, some of the trustees being Hindus. The court applied certain observations of the Privy Council in *Kanhaya Lal v National Bank of India*¹⁵⁷⁵—a case from the Punjab where the TP Act, 1882 was not in force—to the effect that a limited company stood in no need of protection from the trustees for the debenture-holders.
- (b) When the mortgagee is the government, and an express power of sale is conferred in the mortgage-deed.
- (c) When the mortgaged property is situated in one of the specified towns, and the deed contains an express power of sale. In addition of the Presidency Towns mentioned, the following other areas have been notified: city of Ahmedabad,¹⁵⁷⁶ and towns of Delhi and New Delhi.¹⁵⁷⁷ It was held in *Trimbak Gangadhar v Bhagwandas*¹⁵⁷⁸ that the expression “town of Bombay” in section 69 was to be construed as referring to the area within the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. This position is now accepted by an express provision in section 8 of the Greater Bombay Laws and Bombay High Court (Declaration of Limits) Act, 1945.¹⁵⁷⁹ In a Madras case,¹⁵⁸⁰ this territorial limitation was challenged as being discriminatory, and unreasonable, contrary to Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution, but this contention was rejected. The situation of the property is immaterial in cases (a) and (b).

A power of sale without the intervention of the court does not affect the mortgagee’s ordinary right of realization by suit.¹⁵⁸¹ The right recognised by this section is independent of the right to have a receiver appointed under section 69-A, and may be exercised even after a receiver has been appointed under section 69-A.¹⁵⁸²

The words “private transfer” occurring in section 64, Code of Civil Procedure 1908, would only mean a transfer by the person against whom the attachment was made, or a prohibitory order was issued in respect of the immovable property, or whose interest (including his legal representative) is attached. The words “private transfer” would not include sale or transfer made by a mortgagee with a power of sale. In fact, O XXXVIII, rule 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure also provides that attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree.

A sale held in exercise of the power conferred by section 69 of the TP Act, 1882 is not affected by the attachment made. The purchaser in such an auction held by the mortgagee gets an absolute title, free from all encumbrances. Therefore, no execution could be proceeded (even to the extent of the interest of judgment-debtor), against the property which is sold in auction under section 69. In fact, section 69 is one of those rare instances where a person who is not the owner of the property, could convey the right, title and interest in the property along with his own interest and, while exercising such power of sale, he is not acting under the mortgagor or as an agent of the mortgagor. The attachment order will have, therefore, no effect on the power of sale exercised by the mortgagee.¹⁵⁸³

[s 69.5] Leave of Court if Required

Failure to obtain leave from the court (which had appointed a receiver) for the exercise of the mortgagee's power of sale does not, in itself, invalidate the sale. A party, challenging the sale must state the grounds on which the sale should be avoided.¹⁵⁸⁴

[s 69.6] Who may Exercise the Power

The statutory power in England is exercisable by the person for the time being entitled to the mortgage money.¹⁵⁸⁵ The present section only refers to the mortgagee, but this includes the assignee of the mortgagee.

In a Madras case,¹⁵⁸⁶ the mortgage deed provided for the exercise of the power of sale by the mortgagee or his assignee, and it was held that it could be exercised by sub-mortgagee of the assignee. Such power can be exercised by the second mortgagee, even if the first mortgagee had not been given it.¹⁵⁸⁷

The words “any person acting on his behalf” show that the mortgage deed may provide for the exercise of the power of sale by an agent of the mortgagee. In an English case it was held that an agent expressly authorised by the mortgagee to exercise the power of sale may do so, but not if the authority is only a general authority to sell property and receive money.¹⁵⁸⁸ A power of sale to two joint mortgagees may be exercised by the survivor of them.¹⁵⁸⁹ If the mortgagees are partners, the power of sale must be exercised by all, unless otherwise expressed in the mortgage.¹⁵⁹⁰ The words “sell or concur in selling” refer to such a case. A state financial corporation has remedies to proceed under sections 29 and 31 of the State Finance Corporation Act both against the principal debtor and the guarantor, under section 69 of the TP Act, 1882 against the immovable property, and in certain cases it may file a civil suit to recover its dues.¹⁵⁹¹ A bare reading of sub-sections (1) and (4) of section 29 of the State Finance Corporation Act shows that it is similar to section 69 of the TP Act, 1882 under which it is stipulated that a mortgagee exercising the power of sale is a trustee of the surplus sale proceeds, and after satisfying his own charge he holds the surplus for the subsequent encumbrances and ultimately for the mortgagor.¹⁵⁹²

[s 69.7] What may be Sold

The section says that the mortgaged property or any part thereof may be sold. In England, a mortgagee is not allowed to sell fixtures separately from the land,¹⁵⁹³ and these cases would probably be followed in India.

[s 69.8] Conditions of Exercise of Power

These are specified in sub-section (2). The said conditions are imperative, and cannot be varied even by agreement.¹⁵⁹⁴ The power arises when default is made in the payment of the mortgage money, either of the principal, or part of the principal, or of interest amounting to at least ₹500. If no time is fixed for payment, there can be no default till demand is made.¹⁵⁹⁵ But the power is not exercisable till after three months' notice in writing, if the default is in payment of the principal.¹⁵⁹⁶ No notice is necessary when default is made in the payment of interest. It is sufficient that interest amounting to at least ₹500 has been due for three months; and in such a case the power may be exercised before the expiry of the period allowed for redemption.¹⁵⁹⁷ The proviso as to interest is designed to secure punctual payment during the term of the mortgage; and it has the effect of overruling the Privy Council decision that a power of sale in default of payment of interest is invalid as a penalty.¹⁵⁹⁸ If the mortgagee has given three months' notice for default of principal and interest, he cannot sell for arrears of interest before the expiry of that period,¹⁵⁹⁹ and if the power of sale in the mortgage deed is limited to default in payment of principal, the mortgagee cannot sell for default in the payment of interest.¹⁶⁰⁰ As to principal, a provision as to notice is necessary, for a power of sale without notice would be oppressive, and enable the mortgagee at any time to extinguish the equity of redemption.¹⁶⁰¹ The period of three months fixed by the TP Act, 1882 cannot be curtailed by the terms of the deed. A stipulation for a period of 15 days was held in a Madras case¹⁶⁰² to be invalid, and the sale in accordance therewith afforded grounds for damages.

Even where the notice under section 69(2) is given to only one of the mortgagors, what passes under the sale held in pursuance of the section is the interest of all the mortgagors, provided the power of sale is otherwise validly exercised.¹⁶⁰³

A mortgagee who has wrongly exercised his power of sale has no right to personal recovery, or the balance of the mortgage money.¹⁶⁰⁴ Notice must be served on the mortgagor or if there are several mortgagors, notice on one is sufficient. This is also the case in section 20(1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and section 103(i) of the Law of Property Act, 1925. In Hoole v Smith,¹⁶⁰⁵ J Fry, held in a case where the mortgage deed provided that the power of sale could not be exercised unless notice had been given to the mortgagee or his executors, administrators or assigns, that notice must be given to the assignee of the equity of redemption. This case was followed by the Bombay High Court in Mancherji Furdoonji v Noor Mahomedbhoy.¹⁶⁰⁶ In Santhankumar v Indian Bank,¹⁶⁰⁷ the Supreme Court, having considered these cases, has held that in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect in the mortgage-deed, notice need not be given to the assignee of a portion of the mortgaged property. Section 69(2) requires notice to be given to one of several mortgagors, the mortgagor receiving notice being constituted agent for the others and in the absence of fraud, a sale would be valid even if one mortgagor has received no notice.

A long delay in selling after the expiry of the period of the notice does not make a fresh notice necessary.¹⁶⁰⁸ No form of notice is prescribed. It is sufficient that the notice gives the mortgagor the prescribed period of warning.¹⁶⁰⁹ Service of notice would be in accordance with section 102.

[s 69.8.2] Installments

If the mortgage money is payable by installments, the power of sale is exercisable when an installment of the mortgage money has become due.¹⁶¹⁰

[s 69.9] Mortgagee's Duty

The mortgagee's power is for his own benefit, and enables him to realise his debt.¹⁶¹¹ The mortgagee on his own convenience can exercise the power.¹⁶¹² The court will not inquire in his motives for exercising the power of sale.¹⁶¹³ A mortgagee when exercising his power of sale, owes a duty to the mortgagor to take reasonable care to obtain a proper price. Therefore, when selling tenanted property, which would realise a much higher price with vacant possession, the mortgagee should in appropriate cases, attempt to obtain vacant possession.¹⁶¹⁴ Generally, a mortgagee can safely accept the highest bid at an appropriately publicised auction sale.¹⁶¹⁵ The property should be properly described in the auction advertisement which should be widely published for the appropriate market. The auction must be held in reasonable conditions.¹⁶¹⁶ The fact that the property is re-sold shortly after the sale by the mortgagee for a substantially higher price would be viewed with suspicion.¹⁶¹⁷

69. Power of sale when valid.—

[s 69.10] Restraint on Exercise of the Power

An injunction will not restrain the mortgagee from exercising his power of sale because the amount is in dispute.¹⁶¹⁸ The law in England is that the mortgagee cannot be restrained from exercising his power of sale by the mortgagor filing a suit for redemption.¹⁶¹⁹ But he will be restrained if the mortgagor pays the amount claimed into court,¹⁶²⁰ or if the mortgagee denies the title of a puisne encumbrancer who has offered to redeem.¹⁶²¹ The same rule was adopted by the Bombay High Court in Jagjivan v Shridhar,¹⁶²² where the court said that “the owner of the equity of redemption can only stay the sale pendente lite by paying the amount due into court, or by giving prima facie evidence that the power of sale is being exercised in a fraudulent or improper manner, contrary to the terms of the mortgage.” The mortgagor must offer to redeem before he can bring the mortgagee before the court. This general rule was expressed to be an application of the maxim “he who seeks equity must do equity”.¹⁶²³ An injunction was refused in Mancherji Furdoonji v Noor Mahomedbhoy,¹⁶²⁴ where the mortgagor had filed a suit for redemption and the mortgage deed contained the clause usually found in English mortgages that the mortgagor’s remedy for any impropriety or irregularity should be in damages, and the court cited Prichard v Wilson.¹⁶²⁵ These cases were not decided under the TP Act, 1882. A Madras case,¹⁶²⁶ decided under the TP Act, 1882, holds that a power of sale is not subject to the rule of lis pendens enacted in section 52. The court said that the mortgagor who has given an express power of sale cannot by starting a suit for redemption derogate from that which he has in express terms conferred upon the mortgagee by the instrument, namely, a power of sale, and to hold otherwise would be simply to tear up the instrument which contains the contract agreed upon by the parties; nor can the mortgagor defeat the power of sale by setting up a prior mortgage which he has paid off as a shield against the puisne mortgagee exercising the power.¹⁶²⁷ A mortgagor, however, may obtain an injunction to restrain a sale if the mortgagee is acting in a fraudulent and improper manner, contrary to the terms of the mortgage deed.¹⁶²⁸ In the absence of some substantive legislative provision, the right conferred on a mortgagee to bring the property to sale out of court cannot be held to have been taken away.¹⁶²⁹ Where the security consists of several items, the mortgagee while selling it must not deliberately destroy the value of the whole or the set. Thus, he could not sell seven of a set of eight antique chairs.¹⁶³⁰

It has been held in England¹⁶³¹ that where, after default, the mortgagee has by conduct waived his right to exercise the power of sale, he may be estopped, but this is a fact to be established by the mortgagor.

[s 69.11] Who may Purchase

The mortgagee may not buy the property either himself, or with other or by an agent—for a man cannot sell to himself.¹⁶³² A sale by a person to a corporation of which he is a member will not be a sale by a person to himself.¹⁶³³ Such a sale can, however, be objected to on the ground that the mortgagee had not acted bona fide or taken reasonable precaution to obtain the best possible price.¹⁶³⁴

The mortgagee cannot effect a valid sale in favour of himself; the position would not be different if the auction purchaser is really only a nominee of the mortgagee. The sale in such a case would be void ab initio.¹⁶³⁵ So a sale by a mortgagee to a society secretary of a building,¹⁶³⁶ or other officer concerned in the conduct of the sale,¹⁶³⁷ is void. Such a transaction is not a valid exercise of the power of sale and does not prevent the mortgagor from redemption,¹⁶³⁸ unless he has assented to the purchase.¹⁶³⁹ However a sale by a mortgagee to a company of which he is a shareholder is not necessarily invalid.¹⁶⁴⁰ And a puisne mortgagee may purchase, for he is in the same position as a stranger.¹⁶⁴¹

[s 69.13] Effect of Sale

The Privy Council in *Rajah Kishendatt Ram v Rajah Mumtaz Ali Khan*¹⁶⁴² said:

The effect of a sale under a power of sale is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land, and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power of trustee of the surplus (sale) proceeds, after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent encumbrancers, and ultimately for the mortgagor. The estate, if purchased by a stranger, passes into his hands free of all the encumbrances.

A contract for the sale of immovable property cannot extinguish the equity of redemption; it is only on the execution of the conveyance and registration of transfer of the mortgagor's interest by a registered instrument that the mortgagor's right of redemption will be extinguished. Until the sale is completed by registration, the mortgagor does not lose the right of redemption. The mortgagee, when exercising the power of sale under section 69, does not act as the agent of the mortgagor, but acts against him. Merely putting the property to auction does not extinguish the right of redemption.¹⁶⁴³ The purchaser does not derive title under or through the mortgagee, but acquires a larger estate free from encumbrances.¹⁶⁴⁴ If the mortgagor continues in possession without the permission of the purchaser, such possession is adverse.¹⁶⁴⁵ After the sale, the mortgagee satisfies his own charge and then holds the surplus sale proceeds as trustee.

[s 69.14] Protection of Purchaser

The third sub-section protecting the title of purchasers is taken almost verbatim from section 21(2) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, now section 104(2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925. No irregularity or impropriety in the exercise of the power of sale affects the title of an innocent purchaser, and it has been held that the purchaser gets a good title even though the mortgage had been paid off at the time of the sale.¹⁶⁴⁶ This case seems covered by the words "professed exercise of such a power" which include not only a power irregularly exercised, but a want of power; and the Madras High Court has said that nothing could be clearer than the terms of the proviso which express an interest to protect the purchaser, and to confine the remedy of the mortgagor to a suit for damages.¹⁶⁴⁷ However, the expression "professed exercise of a power" does not include a case where there is no express power of sale without the intervention of the court in the mortgage.¹⁶⁴⁸ The purchaser is under no duty to make inquiries, but if he has notice of any irregularity or impropriety in the exercise of the power of sale he is not protected, for he then becomes a party to the transaction impeached.¹⁶⁴⁹ So the purchaser is not protected if he knows that notice had not or could not have been given;¹⁶⁵⁰ but he is protected if he is not aware of the irregularity in the notice;¹⁶⁵¹ or if want of notice had been waived by the mortgagor.¹⁶⁵²

[s 69.15] Remedy of the Mortgagor

Whatever irregularity may have been committed in the exercise of the power of sale the mortgagor's only remedy, in the absence of fraud, is in damages against the mortgagee.¹⁶⁵³ So when the mortgagee sold not only for money due under an English mortgage, but also for money due under a subsequent equitable mortgage, the sale was valid and the mortgagor's only remedy was in damages against the mortgagee;¹⁶⁵⁴ but a sale will be set aside on the ground of fraud, though not for mere inadequacy of price.¹⁶⁵⁵

The mortgagor may also obtain an injunction to stay the sale, by giving prima facie evidence that it is being conducted in a fraudulent or improper manner, or otherwise by paying the whole amount due into court.¹⁶⁵⁶

[s 69.16] Application of Sale Proceeds

The fourth sub-section dealing with the application of sale proceeds is identical with section 21(3) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, now section 105 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, but for the addition of the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary." When the equity of redemption is extinguished by the sale, the mortgagee exercising the power of sale becomes a trustee of the surplus sale proceeds after discharging previous encumbrances, if any, to which the sale is subject. Such encumbrances may be discharged as indicated in section 57, and the balance is to be applied in payment of the costs and expenses of the sale, then in discharge of the mortgage money and the residue, if any, in payment to the persons entitled to the mortgaged property, i.e., subsequent encumbrancers, and finally to the mortgagor. As to such residue, the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor.¹⁶⁵⁷ The mortgagee is charged interest on this residue from the date of sale to date of payment to the persons interested.¹⁶⁵⁸ If there are subsequent encumbrancers they must be paid before the mortgagor, and the mortgagee, if he has notice of these subsequent encumbrances, is liable to them

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

1660 69A. Appointment of receiver.—

- (1) A mortgagee having the right to exercise a power of sale under section 69 shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), be entitled to appoint, by writing signed by him or on his behalf, a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property or any part thereof.
- (2) Any person who has been named in the mortgage-deed and is willing and able to act as receiver may be appointed by the mortgagee.

If no person has been so named, or if all persons named are unable or unwilling to act, or are dead, the mortgagee may appoint any person to whose appointment the mortgagor agrees; failing such agreement, the mortgagee shall be entitled to apply to the Court for the appointment of a receiver, and any person appointed by the Court shall be deemed to have been duly appointed by the mortgagee.

A receiver may at any time be removed by writing signed by or on behalf of the mortgagee and the mortgagor, or by the Court on application made by either party and on due cause shown.

A vacancy in the office of receiver may be filled in accordance with the provisions of this sub-section.

- (3) A receiver appointed under the powers conferred by this section shall be deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor; and the mortgagor shall be solely responsible for the receiver's acts or defaults, unless the mortgage-deed otherwise provides or unless such acts or defaults are due to the improper intervention of the mortgagee.
- (4) The receiver shall have power to demand and recover all the income of which he is appointed receiver, by suit, execution or otherwise, in the name either of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to the full extent of the interest which the mortgagor could dispose off, and to give valid receipts accordingly for the same, and to exercise any powers which may have been delegated to him by the mortgagee in accordance with the provisions of this section.
- (5) A person paying money to the receiver shall not be concerned to inquire if the appointment of the receiver was valid or not.

69A. Appointment of receiver.—

- (6) The receiver shall be entitled to retain out of any money received by him, for his remuneration, and in satisfaction of all costs, charges and expenses incurred by him as receiver, a commission at such rate not exceeding five per cent, on the gross amount of all money received as is specified in his appointment, and, if no rate is so specified, then at the rate of five per cent on that gross amount, or at such other rate as the court thinks fit to allow, on application made by him for that purpose.
- (7) The receiver shall, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee, insure to the extent, if any, to which the mortgagee might have insured, and keep insured against loss or damage by fire, out of the money received by him, the mortgaged property or any part thereof being of an insurable nature.
- (8) Subject to the provisions of this Act as to the application of insurance money, the receiver shall apply all money received by him as follows, namely:—
 - (i) in discharge of all rents, taxes, land revenue, rates and outgoings whatever affecting the mortgaged property;
 - (ii) in keeping down all annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums, having priority to the mortgage in right whereof he is receiver;
 - (iii) in payment of his commission, and of the premiums on fire, life or other insurances, if any, payable under the mortgage-deed or under this Act, and the cost of executing necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee;
 - (iv) in payment of the interest falling due under the mortgage;
 - (v) in or towards discharge of the principal money, if so directed in writing by the mortgagee, and shall pay the residue, if any, of the money received by him to the person who, but for the possession of the receiver, would have been entitled to receive the income of which he is appointed receiver, or who is otherwise entitled to the mortgaged property.

- (9) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply only if and as far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage-deed; and the provisions of sub-sections (3) to (8) inclusive may be varied or extended by the mortgage-deed, and, as so varied or extended, shall, as far as may be, operate in like manner and with all the like incidents, effects and consequences, as if such variations or extensions were contained in the said sub-sections.
- (10) Application may be made, without the institution of a suit, to the Court for its opinion, advice or direction on any present question respecting the management or administration of the mortgaged property, other than questions of difficulty or importance not proper in the opinion of the Court for summary disposal. A copy of such application shall be served upon, and the hearing thereof may be attended by, such of the persons interested in the application as the Court may think fit.

The costs of every application under this sub-section shall be in the discretion of the Court.

- (11) In this section, “the Court” means the Court which would have jurisdiction in a suit to enforce the mortgage.

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

The provisions of the section cover a case in which it is alleged by the mortgagor that there is no debt outstanding or that the mortgage has become time-barred and thereupon, there should be no receiver.¹⁶⁶¹

[s 69A.2] Receiver

A mortgagee in possession is responsible for prudent management, and is liable to be called upon to account on the footing of willful default.¹⁶⁶² To avoid this liability and at the same time to preserve the advantages of possession, the practice grew in England at first to provide for the appointment of a receiver by the mortgagor, and then for the deed to provide for the appointment of a receiver by the mortgagee on behalf of the mortgagor,

69A. Appointment of receiver.—

so that the receiver was the agent of the mortgagor.¹⁶⁶³

[s 69A.3] Exercise of the power

The mortgagee cannot appoint a receiver until the power of sale is exercisable under section 69(2). In case of default of payment of principal, the mortgagee would, therefore, have to wait until expiry of three months after service of notice. The power conferred by this section may be exercised even after the mortgagee has gone into possession.¹⁶⁶⁴ A receiver is not generally appointed by the court under such a clause in the mortgage decree after the final decree has been made.¹⁶⁶⁵

The power conferred under this section is independent of the power of sale recognised under section 69; and the latter may be exercised even though a receiver has been appointed under this section.¹⁶⁶⁶ A receiver appointed under this section may be removed for due cause. The fact that by reason of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, there is no outstanding debt is, of course, due cause within the meaning of the sub-section.¹⁶⁶⁷

[s 69A.4] Who may be Appointed

Under sub-section (2) the person, if any, named in the mortgage deed must be appointed, and failing that, the appointment must be made by the consent of the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In either case, the appointment must be made in writing signed by the mortgagee. However, if the parties do not agree, the mortgagee has liberty to apply to the court in a summary proceeding to make the appointment. A receiver can be removed from office by the consent of the mortgagor and mortgagee expressed in writing and signed by both, or failing such consent, by the court on application by either party. The provision for an application to the court either for the appointment, or the removal of the receiver is novel.

[s 69A.5] Position of Receiver

The receiver is not accountable to the mortgagor, but to the mortgagee.¹⁶⁶⁸ Similarly, it has been held that it is only a fiction that the receiver is deemed to be an agent of the mortgagor; the fiction cannot, therefore, be extended so as to make a contract entered into by the mortgagor binding upon the receiver.¹⁶⁶⁹ The agency may be modified by the terms of the deed.¹⁶⁷⁰ Under the TP Act, 1882, the mortgagee has no liability for the receiver, and this is the advantage the mortgagee gains by appointing a receiver instead of taking possession.¹⁶⁷¹ Payment by the receiver of part of the debt saves the bar of limitation.¹⁶⁷²

[s 69A.6] Power as to Income

The receiver is appointed out of the income of the mortgaged property, and under sub-section (4), he has full powers of recovery in the name of either the mortgagor, or the mortgagee and to give effectual receipts. Under sub-section (5), a person paying money to him is not concerned with inquiring into the validity of his appointment. A receiver appointed by debenture holders is entitled to possession as against the liquidator.¹⁶⁷³ The official liquidator may dispose off the assets as he deems fit in order to realise them. In case there is a mortgage created on immovable property in favour of secured creditor, he may sell the immovable property to realise the loan extended to the company.¹⁶⁷⁴

It has been held by the Bombay High Court that there is no power conferred by this section on the receiver to let out the mortgaged property on "leave and licence" basis.¹⁶⁷⁵

[s 69A.7] Remuneration

The rate of remuneration is fixed in sub-section (6). Unless a lower rate is specified in the deed, it is 5% on the gross collections. However, the court may allow a higher rate.

[s 69A.8] Powers as to Application of Income

Under sub-sections (7) and (8), the receiver has power to insure the property against fire, and to execute necessary and proper repairs, but only when authorised in writing by mortgagee. Repairs done without written authority by a receiver cannot be included in the mortgagee's account.¹⁶⁷⁶ Any insurance money that the receiver may receive, he must apply in accordance with section 76(f) either in reinstating the property, or in reduction of the mortgage debt. Other moneys received he must apply as directed in sub-section (8).

69A. Appointment of receiver.—

[s 69A.9] Contract to the Contrary

Under sub-section (9), the power to appoint a receiver and the exercise of powers by the receiver are subject to the terms of the deed of mortgage. The deed may either restrict, or extend these powers and the powers so restricted, or extended operate as statutory powers under the TP Act, 1882.

[s 69A.10] Right to Apply

The provisions of sub-section (10) give the parties the same right to apply for directions on present questions of management or administration as a trustee has under section 34 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. The receiver has no doubt a right to apply under this section.

[s 69A.11] The Court

In cases governed by the Code of Civil Procedure, the court having jurisdiction in a suit to enforce the mortgage, is the court within whose limits the mortgaged property or any portion of the mortgaged property is situated—section 17, Code of Civil Procedure 1908. As to the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, clause 12 of the Letters Patent of those courts is applicable.

[s 69A.12] Receiver After Suit Filed

Under O 40, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court may appoint a receiver if it appears just and convenient. The court has power under that rule to appoint a receiver in the case of an English mortgage if the property is in jeopardy,¹⁶⁷⁷ or insufficient to pay the encumbrances,¹⁶⁷⁸ or if the interest is in arrears.¹⁶⁷⁹ The same has been held as to a mortgage by deposit of title deeds.¹⁶⁸⁰ A simple mortgagee is entitled to obtain the appointment of a receiver if the circumstances of the case justify it, and is not disentitled merely because the personal remedy does not subsist.¹⁶⁸¹ But a simple mortgagee has no charge on the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver so as to have preference over the Crown debts.¹⁶⁸² A receiver appointed in a mortgagee's suit is entitled to apply to the court for direction as to the management of the mortgaged property, e.g. as to its insurance. However, the court will not give directions on any collateral matter such as an agreement by the insurance company to pay the mortgagor a commission.¹⁶⁸³ A receiver, appointed under O 40, rule 1 is an officer of the court, and holds the property for the benefit of all parties, and is not the agent of the mortgagor. His appointment is prima facie for the benefit of the mortgagee, and if the mortgagor becomes insolvent, the Official Assignee cannot claim the profits in the hands of the receiver in preference to the mortgagee;¹⁶⁸⁴ nor can the receiver be removed by the Insolvency Court.¹⁶⁸⁵ Again, if after the appointment of a receiver, the mortgagor's interest is attached and sold in execution of a money decree, the purchaser is not entitled to the income of the property realized by the receiver before the sale.¹⁶⁸⁶ If a mortgagee's receiver of the income appointed under this section before suit is also appointed receiver of the property by the court, he becomes an officer of the court and ceases to be the agent of the mortgagor.¹⁶⁸⁷ An executing court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver at the instance of a mortgagee.¹⁶⁸⁸

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

70. Accession to mortgaged property.—

If, after the date of a mortgage, any accession is made to the mortgaged property, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to such accession.

ILLUSTRATIONS

- (a) A mortgages to B a certain field bordering on a river. The field is increased by alluvion. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the increase.
- (b) A mortgages a certain plot of building land to B and afterwards erects a house on the plot. For the purposes of his security, B is entitled to the house as well as the plot.

[s 70.1] Accessions

Section 70 refers to the mortgagee's right to accessions to the mortgaged property and is, therefore, the converse of section 63 which deals with the mortgagor's rights to accessions. As regards natural accessions, it is the corollary to section 63, for such accessions are incorporated in the mortgaged property, form part of the mortgagee's security, and revert to the mortgagor upon redemption.¹⁶⁸⁹ As regards acquired accessions, the mortgagor is not always bound to incur the expense of redeeming them if they have been acquired by the mortgagee. But no such distinction is necessary in regard to the mortgagee's rights, for the mortgagee is entitled to treat acquired accessions as part of his security and to enforce his lien upon them, if they have been acquired by the mortgagor, and a fortiori if they have been acquired by himself. Thus, if the mortgagor builds on the property mortgaged, the buildings form part of the mortgagee's security.¹⁶⁹⁰ So also, land formed by alluvion or diluvion.¹⁶⁹¹ Machinery fixed by bolts and nuts to the concrete floor of a building is an accession to which the mortgagee is entitled.¹⁶⁹² So also, an electric installation set up by the mortgagor in a mortgaged factory.¹⁶⁹³ But this would be a question of fact in each case.¹⁶⁹⁴ In Nannu Mal v Ram Chandra,¹⁶⁹⁵ the auction purchasers at a prior mortgagee's sale removed a shed, and built a small house on the land mortgaged. A puisne mortgagee who had not been made a party sued to enforce his mortgage, and was entitled to have the house sold as an accession to the property mortgaged. So also, if the mortgagee buys government trees standing on the mortgaged land, they form part of his security.¹⁶⁹⁶ If, after the mortgage, the mortgagor sells a plot of the land mortgaged to the mortgagee and then buys it back, the plot is again subject to the mortgage.¹⁶⁹⁷ Where only the building is mortgaged (and not the site), the site cannot be deemed to be an "accession" to the mortgaged property.¹⁶⁹⁸

The section is not limited to physical accretions or additions, for an increase of interest or enlargement of the estate is also an accession.¹⁶⁹⁹ Therefore, when the mortgagor had only the leasehold rights in the mortgaged property and he acquires freehold rights, the same would be an accession to which the mortgagee would be benefitted.¹⁷⁰⁰ Similarly, when the mortgagor subsequently acquires certain sir lands by reason of the extinction of an ex-proprietary tenancy, that would also form part of the tenancy.¹⁷⁰¹ Similarly, when the mortgagor of a chuck acquires the shikmi interest in the chuck, that interest is an accession to the security, and passes with it to the purchaser at a sale in execution of the mortgage decree.¹⁷⁰² If a puisne mortgagee acquires an occupancy right by surrender from the mortgagor, such right is an accession to the mortgaged property, and ensures for the benefit of the mortgagee.¹⁷⁰³ If land which is khudkast when mortgaged is settled as sir land, the accrual of sir rights is an accession to which the mortgagee is entitled; but after foreclosure the mortgagor is entitled, under section 49 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1920, to remain in possession as an occupancy tenant.¹⁷⁰⁴ And if the mortgagor discharges a prior encumbrance existing at the date of the mortgage, the increase in value of the estate is for the benefit of the mortgagee.¹⁷⁰⁵

Again, when a mortgagee who has mortgaged his rights to a sub-mortgagee acquires the equity of redemption, such acquisition ensures for the benefit of the sub-mortgagee.¹⁷⁰⁶ In a Madras case,¹⁷⁰⁷ the mortgage decree was against a Mahomedan lady and her eldest son. Subsequently, their shares were increased by the death of another son who was not a party to the suit and against whom no decree had been made. Yet the increased shares were held liable to be sold under the decree. In a Calcutta case,¹⁷⁰⁸ three coparceners mortgaged family property in which an aunt had a share. After the suit was instituted, the aunt died, and CJ Rankin, held that the increased share was liable to the mortgage not only under section 43, but on the principle of section 70 that any enlargement of the mortgagor's interest generally ensures for the benefit of the mortgagee.

It is immaterial whether the mortgagor or the mortgagee is in possession. However, if the mortgagee in possession encroaches upon the other land of the mortgagor, that other land is not an accession.¹⁷⁰⁹ A clearance of adjoining waste land by the mortgagor is not an accession within the meaning of this section.¹⁷¹⁰ A fresh grant of adjoining land to the mortgagor is not necessarily an accession.¹⁷¹¹

[s 70.2] For the Purpose of Security

Under this section, a mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of accession for the purpose of security only. The section has no application to the case of a mortgagee who purchases a share of the equity of redemption, and sues to enforce the mortgage.¹⁷¹²

[s 70.3] Accession After Extinction of the Mortgage

An accession made after the extinction of the mortgage is not within the section. An accession made by the mortgagor after the property has been sold in execution of the mortgagee's decree does not pass to the mortgagee or to the purchaser at the court sale.¹⁷¹³ In a Patna case,¹⁷¹⁴ the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale against a mortgagor who had a mokarrari right. Before sale, the mortgagor acquired the brahmottar right. The court held that this could not be sold under the decree. It is submitted that the mortgage had not been extinguished by the decree, and the interest was liable to be sold as an accession.¹⁷¹⁵ An accession acquired after the decree was sold, as in a Madras case already cited.¹⁷¹⁶

The rule in this section is rule of equity.¹⁷¹⁷ It is not applicable if the terms of the mortgage exclude the accretion. A Bombay case,¹⁷¹⁸ is an illustration of an implied contract to the contrary. A deshgat watandar mortgaged his watan lands which were inalienable beyond his lifetime. The estate was subsequently enlarged to absolute ownership by the abolition of the deshgat watans. The court held that the heir of the mortgagor was not bound by the mortgage. The section was not referred to, but it would seem that the right to the accretion was subject to an implied contract to the contrary as the mortgagee well understood that his security was only a life estate. A converse instance was that of an older Bombay case,¹⁷¹⁹ where the inam was resumed but the mortgage lien on the proprietary interest continued, as the effect of the redemption was only to make the land again liable to assessment.

71. Renewal of mortgaged lease.—

When the mortgaged property is a lease ¹⁷²⁰] and the mortgagor obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall, for the purposes of the security, be entitled to the new lease.

[s 71.1] Amendment

The original section referred to a lease for a term of years. The words “for a term of years” have been omitted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 as superfluous.

[s 71.2] Renewal of Lease

Section 71 is the corollary to section 64, for just as the mortgagor has on redemption a right to a renewed lease obtained by the mortgagee, so the mortgagee is entitled to a renewed lease obtained by the mortgagor, as it is an increment to his security. This is on the principle that the new lease is treated as engrafted on the stock of the old lease, and forming part of the mortgage security. This principle is not based on the doctrine of quasi-trusts; but there is a similar provision in illustration (a) to section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 that when a tenant for life of leasehold property renews the lease in his own name or for his own benefit, he holds the renewed lease for the benefit of all those interested in the old lease. So if a tenant mortgagor allows his landlord to obtain a collusive decree for rent and to purchase the holding, the property in the hands of the landlord is subject to the mortgage.¹⁷²¹ The deposit of a deed of lease of which the term has expired, operates as a mortgage by deposit of title deeds when the term is renewed.¹⁷²²

- (b) for ¹⁷²⁵[the preservation of the mortgaged property] from destruction, forfeiture or sale;
- (c) for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property;
- (d) for making his own title thereto good against the mortgagor; and
- (e) when the mortgaged property is a renewable leasehold, for the renewal of the lease, and may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, add such money to the principal money, at the rate of interest payable on the principal, and, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum:

¹⁷²⁶[Provided that the expenditure of money by the mortgagee under clause (b) or clause (c) shall not be deemed to be necessary unless the mortgagor has been called upon and has failed to take proper and timely steps to preserve the property or to support the title.]

Where the property is by its nature insurable, the mortgagee may also, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, insure and keep insured against loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of such property, and the premiums paid for any such insurance shall be ¹⁷²⁷[added to the principal money with interest at the same rate as is payable on the principal money or, where no such rate is fixed, at the rate of nine per cent per annum]. But the amount of such insurance shall not exceed the amount specified in this behalf in the mortgage- deed or (if no such amount is therein specified) two-thirds of the amount that would be required in case of total destruction to reinstate the property insured.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the mortgagee to insure when an insurance of the property is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor to the amount in which the mortgagee is hereby authorized to insure.

72. Rights of mortgagee in possession—

This section was amended by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 72.2] Rights of Mortgagee

The scope of this section has been considerably enlarged. It was formerly limited to the rights of the mortgagee in possession. This was an unnecessary limitation, for the rights under all the clauses, except old clauses (a) which was only appropriate to a mortgagee in possession, apply to all mortgages. It also led to the erroneous impression that these rights were not possessed by mortgagees who were not in possession. A striking illustration of this is the Madras case of Perianna v Marudainayagam.¹⁷²⁸ The mortgagee under a usufructuary mortgage had not been given possession. The mortgaged property was subject to a prior lien by a decree of court. The decree holder brought the property to sale, and the mortgagee paid the amount into court, and saved the property. The Madras High Court held in the first place, that as he had not been given possession he was not a usufructuary mortgagee. This is no longer so under the amended definition of a usufructuary mortgagee in section 58. The court then held that as he was not a usufructuary mortgagee, he had no charge on the property, for the amount he paid, either under section 68, or section 72. In other cases, however, it was held that, in spite of its imperfect wording, the old section did not exclude mortgagees who were not in possession.¹⁷²⁹

The section represents to a large extent the English rule that the mortgagee is entitled to be indemnified against all expenses, so long as he acts reasonably as a mortgagee, and is allowed all proper “costs, charges and expenses” incurred by him in relation to the mortgage security.

The costs must be costs which the mortgagee has incurred as mortgagee. Such costs form part of the entire decretal amount,¹⁷³⁰ and are the costs, charges and expenses referred to in O XXXIV, rule 2(1)(a)(iii) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Costs incurred by the mortgagee after a proper tender of the mortgage money have been disallowed.¹⁷³¹ Under the English law, the costs of negotiating the loan and preparing the mortgage are costs leading up to the mortgage, and not costs incurred qua mortgagee. Hence, though the mortgagor may be personally liable for these costs, they cannot be added to the security and recovered as costs, charges and expenses.¹⁷³² This would also be the law under section 72 which refers to money spent by a mortgagee as a mortgagee. But when an equitable mortgage contained an agreement by the mortgagors to give a legal mortgage when required, it was held in an English case that the costs of the legal mortgage can be recovered as costs, charges and expenses, being costs of perfecting the security of the mortgagee.¹⁷³³ Such costs would also be added to the mortgage under section 72(d). Again, liability under this section cannot be enforced after the mortgage has been surrendered. If the mortgagee accepts money paid into court by the mortgagor under section 83 and gives up possession, he cannot bring the property to sale in order to recover expenses.¹⁷³⁴ However, the mortgagee continues to be a mortgagee after the suit and until a final decree for foreclosure is passed, or a sale under a decree for sale is confirmed, and it is submitted that a mortgagee can incur necessary expenses under this section after suit, and until final decree for foreclosure or confirmation of sale.

The English rule, however, includes costs incurred by the mortgagee in regard to the mortgage debt. Thus, the costs of recovering the debt from a surety who had only given a promissory note¹⁷³⁵ were allowed in England. This would not be allowed under section 72 which is limited to costs in relation to the mortgage security. Again, the English rule negatives the remedy by personal suit against the mortgagor to enforce the mortgagee's claim for expenses, for it does not rest on an implied contract by the mortgagor and can only be enforced as a condition of redemption.¹⁷³⁶ Section 72 gives the mortgagee the right to add the amount spent to the mortgage money; However, it seems that this does not exclude the mortgagee's remedy under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.¹⁷³⁷

A mortgaged his interest in a patni taluk to B. A then sold his interest to C who got his name registered in the zamindar's books in place of A. The zamindar threatened to sell the taluk for arrears of rent and B paid the rent to save his interest in the taluk. It was held that B was entitled to recover the amount paid from C under section 69 of the Contract Act.¹⁷³⁸

[s 72.3] Such Money as is Necessary

The question what expenditure is necessary is one of fact, to be decided with regard to the circumstances of each case.¹⁷³⁹ The proviso to the section enacts that no expenditure under clauses (b) and (c) is necessary, unless the mortgagor has been called upon, but has failed to take steps.¹⁷⁴⁰

[s 72.4] Clause (b): Preservation from Destruction, Forfeiture or Sale

The words “destruction, forfeiture or sale” also occur in section 63. The word “destruction” in a physical sense seems appropriate only when the mortgagee is in possession; and expenditure on necessary repairs is covered by section 76(d), and on improvements by section 63A. Under section 76(d), the mortgagee in possession is bound to make such necessary repairs as he can pay for out of the rent and profits. But as he is entitled to preserve his security, this section as well as section 63 gives him the right on the mortgagor's default to incur such expenditure out of his own pocket, and to add the amount so spent to the mortgage money. In the undernoted cases,¹⁷⁴¹ the issue was whether the expenditure was necessarily incurred for the preservation of the property; and in an Allahabad case,¹⁷⁴² the cost of constructing a new upper story when rebuilding a portion of a house that had fallen down, was disallowed.

There is also a destruction of the security in the abstract sense when the mortgaged property is forfeited or sold; and while section 76(c) makes it incumbent on the mortgagee in possession to pay out of the income of the property, public charges and arrears of rent, default of payment of which would involve forfeiture or sale, under this section he has the right to make such payment himself if the mortgagor makes default, and to add the amount to the mortgage money.¹⁷⁴³ It has, therefore, been said that the permission granted by section 72(b) is subject to the obligation imposed by section 76(c), in other words, the mortgagee may add the amount to the mortgage money when it cannot be paid out of the income and he has to pay it out of his pocket.¹⁷⁴⁴ The word “sale” is ejusdem generis with destruction or forfeiture. It must, therefore, be a sale which threatens to extinguish the security. A sale of an equity of redemption would not be within the section and the mortgagee could not recover the amount paid to stay a sale, subsequent to the mortgage, in execution of a money decree,¹⁷⁴⁵ or a sale for recovery of cesses for which the mortgage right could not be sold.¹⁷⁴⁶ A mortgagee who pays up a prior charge decree in order to avert an immediate sale in execution of the decree, in the absence of proof that the mortgagor has been called upon, but failed to take timely steps, cannot be allowed to add to the amount so paid to the principal money of the mortgagee.¹⁷⁴⁷ However, in a case where a prior mortgagee deposited money under O 21, rule 89 to set aside a sale made at the instance of a puisne mortgagee, he was allowed to add the amount to the mortgage money as the sale proclamation purported to sell not merely the equity of redemption, but the whole property.¹⁷⁴⁸

A sued to set aside a sale of property which his mother had sold as his guardian. A decree was made that A should pay a part of the price to the purchaser within six months and recover possession of the property, in default the suit to be dismissed. Before the decree A had mortgaged the property to B. As A failed to make the payment, B four days before the expiry of the time limited, paid the requisite sum into court. This he was entitled to do for the protection of his security.¹⁷⁴⁹

There is, however, no necessity for the mortgagee, who is out of possession, to make the payment of land revenue without calling upon the mortgagor to pay the same, but he can claim to recover the amount paid only by virtue of section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.¹⁷⁵⁰

Several local revenue and municipal Acts give the mortgagee, whether in possession or not, a right to save his security by payment of arrears of assessment, and to add the amount so paid to the mortgage money.

A darpatnidar in Bengal is entitled to consolidate the subsequent payments of rents to the original deposit made by him as a mortgagee in possession under the section.¹⁷⁵¹

[s 72.5] Clause (c): Supporting the Mortgagor's Title

The mortgagee is entitled to costs of litigation incurred in defending the mortgagor's title to the property.¹⁷⁵² A similar duty is imposed upon the mortgagor under section 65(b). The mortgagee's right, therefore, arises when the mortgagor neglects to take proper and timely steps on his behalf. The mortgagee is entitled to add to his security the costs of proceedings in which he is properly made a party, in respect of his encumbrance.¹⁷⁵³ In a Bombay case,¹⁷⁵⁴ the mortgagee was allowed costs incurred by him in a suit filed by a person who alleged he was a prior encumbrancer, and had joined him as a party. When the mortgagee's title was attacked by tenants setting up the title of a stranger and carrying of the crops, the mortgagee was entitled to recover the costs of civil and criminal proceedings taken against them.¹⁷⁵⁵

The mortgagee is entitled to costs of a suit to enforce the mortgage.¹⁷⁵⁶ If a suit is brought by a mortgagee against the mortgagor and a puisne mortgagee, the costs of the suit will be added to the mortgage debt, and will form part of the sum for which the final decree for sale is passed. The puisne mortgagee is impleaded because in a mortgage suit it is incumbent to make parties, all persons who are entitled to redeem, and so normally, the puisne mortgagee is not ordered to pay the costs of the suit.¹⁷⁵⁷ He is also entitled to costs of defending an unsuccessful action for redemption by the mortgagor,¹⁷⁵⁸ or of prosecuting a suit against the mortgagor for establishing his title as a mortgagee,¹⁷⁵⁹ or of a suit for possession or, in case of a usufructuary mortgagee, or a suit against tenants for the arrears of rent.¹⁷⁶⁰ The general rule that a mortgagee is entitled to add the costs, charges and expenses of defending his title to his security applies notwithstanding that the mortgagor has obtained leave to sue as a poor person.¹⁷⁶¹ Such costs are added to the security, and the mortgagor is not made personally liable, unless his conduct has led to such costs being incurred.¹⁷⁶² If the decree is ambiguous, it will not be construed as imposing a personal liability on the mortgagor.¹⁷⁶³ However, the mortgagee is not entitled to costs of defending his title against a stranger. A creditor taking possession of the property does not forfeit his right to claim interest as this section specifically provides that mortgagee in possession is entitled to levy interest. A financial corporation would be entitled to collect interest during period when creditor takes possession of security before sale.¹⁷⁶⁴

[s 72.7] Clause (e): Renewal of Leases

The mortgagor is under no liability to renew leases. However, the mortgagee may do so in order to maintain his security, and if he pays a fine for the renewal, he can add the amount to the mortgage money. Similarly, if a lease is terminated by forfeiture, the mortgagee may apply for relief, and the new lease so granted is part of the original security.¹⁷⁶⁵ The rights of a mortgagee in possession to create lease is not covered under section 72.¹⁷⁶⁶

[s 72.8] Contract to the Contrary

The rights of a mortgagee under this section are subject to a contract to the contrary. So when the mortgagee has undertaken to incur all the expenses necessary for the recovery of the property, he is not entitled to the costs of litigation in which he is obliged to contest the claim of a rival jenmi.¹⁷⁶⁷

[s 72.9] Add Such Money to the Principal

As already stated, these words do not exclude the personal right of suit under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872;¹⁷⁶⁸ though if a personal decree has been obtained, the amount cannot be tacked to the mortgage.¹⁷⁶⁹

72. Rights of mortgagee in possession—

A usufructuary mortgagee tacking sums expended under this section to the mortgage retains possession until the whole amount is discharged out of the usufruct.¹⁷⁷⁰ In a Patna case,¹⁷⁷¹ a usufructuary mortgagee set up an adverse title under a fraudulent conveyance, and made payments of rents due by the mortgagor as owner after his invalid purchase, but when the alleged sale to him was set aside, he was not deprived of his statutory right as regards rents under this section.

[s 72.10] Interest

Interest is allowed on expenditure under this section. It should be simple, not compound.¹⁷⁷² In a Bombay case before the TP Act, 1882, interest at 6% was allowed.¹⁷⁷³ Under this section, interest is at the rate specified in the mortgage,¹⁷⁷⁴ or, if no such rate is fixed, interest is at the rate of 9%.

[s 72.11] Proviso

The mortgagor is the owner of the property, and it is primarily his duty to preserve it and to protect his title. It is only on his default to take proper and timely steps in this behalf that the mortgagee is entitled to spend money under clauses (b) and (c).¹⁷⁷⁵

[s 72.12] Insurance

If the mortgagor has not insured against fire, the mortgagee is authorised to insure, and to add the premium to the mortgaged debt. If the mortgagee is in possession he must, under section 76(f), apply the money, if the mortgagor so directs in reinstating the property or in reduction of the mortgage debt. If the mortgagor has insured, the insurance money belongs to the mortgagor, and the mortgagee may under section 49 require him to apply the money in reinstating the property. And he can do so even against a creditor of the mortgagor who has attached the insurance money.¹⁷⁷⁶

The mortgagee's authority to insure is, however, subject to a contract to the contrary. There may be a stipulation in the mortgage that insurance is not necessary; or the mortgagor may covenant that in case of fire, the mortgagee should rebuild the house at his own expense.¹⁷⁷⁷ Where by a mortgage deed of March 1936, the mortgagors covenanted to keep the premises insured against loss or damage by missiles or projectiles fired at aircrafts and it was further provided that, should they fail to do so, the mortgagees might insure the premises at the expense of the mortgagors and that the power of sale of the mortgagees would immediately become exercisable if the mortgagors broke any covenant. Both parties were unaware that the policy of insurance obtained in respect of the premises and sent to the mortgagee's solicitors did not comply with the covenant though it would then have been possible to obtain a policy in accordance with the covenant. From October 1936, however, such a policy was unobtainable. In January 1939, the mortgagees became aware of the defect in the insurance and gave notice that unless the mortgage-money was paid off, they would exercise their power of sale. It was held that there had been a breach of the covenant, since there was no implied term in the contract that if it became impossible to obtain a policy in accordance with it, neither party should be entitled to rely on a failure to comply with it. It was further held that the mortgagees were not estopped from setting up their claim.¹⁷⁷⁸

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

¹⁷⁷⁹[73. Right to proceeds of revenue sale or compensation on acquisition.—

- (1) Where the mortgaged property or any part thereof or any interest therein is sold owing to failure to pay arrears or revenue or other charges of a public nature or rent due in respect of such property, and such failure did not arise from any default of the mortgagee, the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money, in whole or in part, out of any surplus of the sale-proceeds remaining after payment of the arrears and of all charges and deductions directed by law.
- (2) Where the mortgaged property or any part thereof or any interest therein is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (1 of 1894), or any other enactment for the time being in force providing for the compulsory acquisition of immovable property, the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money, in whole or in part, out of the amount due to the mortgagor as compensation.
- (3) Such claims shall prevail against all other claims except those of prior encumbrances, and may be enforced notwithstanding that the principal money on the mortgage has not become due.]

[s 73.1] Substituted Security

This section is an instance of the application of the doctrine of substituted security, viz that the mortgagee is, for the purpose of his security, entitled not only to the mortgaged property, but also to anything that is substituted for it. The old section reproduced almost verbatim the decision of the High Court of Calcutta in the case of Heera Lal Chowdhry v Janokeenath.¹⁷⁸⁰ The doctrine applies not only to the cases referred to in the section, but also to judicial sales, and to the conversion of an undivided share into a share held in severalty by partition. In Byjnath Lall v Ramoodeen Chowdry,¹⁷⁸¹ where the mortgagee lost the undivided share of his mortgagor by reason of a partition, the Judicial Committee said: "He would take the subject of the pledge in the new form which it had assumed." This case was followed in *Mohammad Afral Khan v Abdul Rahman*¹⁷⁸² where the Privy Council said:

Their Lordships are of opinion that where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages their undivided shares in some of the properties held jointly by them, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby, to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. If the mortgage therefore, is followed by a partition, and the mortgaged properties are allotted to the other co-sharers, they take those properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution of his undivided share.

If the mortgage contains a personal covenant, the substitution of the security does not affect the mortgagee's remedy on that covenant.¹⁷⁸³

In an Andhra Pradesh case, there was a mortgage of a specific item of joint property by one co-sharer. The item so mortgaged was later allotted to another co-sharer. It was held that the mortgagee could proceed against the substituted item in the hands of the co-sharer who had created the mortgage.¹⁷⁸⁴

If, by a process of law or by a compelling situation sanctioned by law, the security given to a creditor is changed into something other than the property which constituted the original security, the mortgagee gets rights over the substituted security.¹⁷⁸⁵

Bhumidari rights, acquired by the mortgagor under section 18 of the Uttar Pradesh Consolidation of Holdings Act, are new rights created under the said Act after the land in which such rights have been acquired had vested in the state free from all encumbrances. This land, notwithstanding that it was the subject matter of mortgage prior to the date of vesting, would not be treated as "substituted security" within the meaning of section 73, and a mortgage decree, if any, cannot be executed against that land.¹⁷⁸⁶

[s 73.2] Revenue and Rent Sales

The sale referred to in this section must be a sale free of encumbrances, ie, a sale which has the effect of nullifying the mortgage.¹⁷⁸⁷ This must be so, for if the sale does not extinguish the mortgage, the mortgagee can enforce his lien against the property in the hands of the auction purchaser.¹⁷⁸⁸ Even if the mortgage is executed after default in payment of revenue, the mortgage has a right to payment out of surplus sale proceeds.¹⁷⁸⁹ When property is sold under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, the purchaser has power to annul encumbrances, and it has been held that if he has not exercised that power, the mortgagee may abandon his precarious security, and claim payment out of the surplus sale proceeds.¹⁷⁹⁰ A sale under which the purchaser has power to annul encumbrances is thus treated as a sale free of encumbrances. In some cases,¹⁷⁹¹ it was held that the mortgagee could exercise this right irrespective of the question whether the sale would annul the security, but this is open to question. This seems too literal a construction of the section, for the sale could hardly have the effect of enlarging the security. If the sale is set aside, the interest of the mortgagor is revested in him, and the mortgagee falls back upon his original security.¹⁷⁹²

[s 73.3] Sale of Part of the Property Mortgaged

The section as amended includes the case where the sale is of only part of the property mortgaged. It is submitted that if the effect of the sale is to extinguish the mortgage of the part sold, the mortgagee can claim a ratable proportion of the mortgage money from the surplus sale proceeds, and the mortgage of the unsold residue subsists. Under section 54 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, a revenue sale of part of an estate does not annul encumbrances.

It is submitted that section 73 does not apply to such a sale. The Patna High Court, however, reading the two sections together, has held that if part of the property mortgaged is sold at a revenue sale, the mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property in the hands of the purchaser, as well as claim payment out of the surplus sale proceeds.¹⁷⁹³

[s 73.4] Compensation under Land Acquisition Act

Once the property mortgaged is compulsorily acquired by the state, the mortgagee can proceed in a manner provided in section 73, namely follow the compensation money, and there is no other way possible for him.¹⁷⁹⁴

[73. Right to proceeds of revenue sale or compensation on acquisition.—

The same rule applies in cases where the mortgaged property is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894; the mortgagee is entitled to claim payment out of the sum awarded as compensation.¹⁷⁹⁵ The Allahabad High Court in one case held that the mortgagee would lose his claim if he did not claim apportionment under the Land Acquisition Act.¹⁷⁹⁶ Assuming that the decision was correct, it will not be so under the present section. If the mortgagee does not exercise his right to claim compensation money before it is withdrawn by the mortgagor, it would not deprive him of his original rights as a mortgagee to enforce his security as against the compensation money.¹⁷⁹⁷ However, when another land is substituted in lieu of compensation for acquisition, the auction purchaser in exercise of the mortgage decree is entitled to enforce his claim against the substituted property.¹⁷⁹⁸ However, this section merely gives a right to the mortgagee to satisfy his claim from the compensation amount; he cannot have such a right sold under the mortgage decree.¹⁷⁹⁹ So also, a contract of sale does not create any interest in the property agreed to be sold. The prospective purchaser is not entitled to the compensation which may be awarded for the compulsory acquisition of property before the sale could be completed.¹⁸⁰⁰

[s 73.5] Judicial Sales

Surplus sale proceeds left after a prior mortgagee's sale represent the puisne mortgagee's security in a new form, and he has a right to follow them¹⁸⁰¹ even after the creditors of the mortgagor have withdrawn them.¹⁸⁰² In Barhamdeo Prasad v Tara Chand,¹⁸⁰³ the first mortgagees under a mortgage of May 1887 also had a third mortgage of 1890 which they sued on without making the second mortgagees on a mortgage of September 1887 a party, and in execution, withdrew the surplus sale proceeds of the sale of the first mortgage. The second mortgagees were held entitled to recover the money from them as part of the security. Their Lordships said:

The surplus moneys of that sale represented the security which the plaintiffs had under their mortgage of 19 September 1887, and did not cease to represent that security owing to the fact that Ram Berhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad had wrongfully and in fraud of the plaintiffs drawn them out of the court in which they had been deposited.

The principle of this section has also been applied to sale by the Official Liquidator after a court has ordered the winding-up of a mortgagor company.¹⁸⁰⁴

This is a case not dealt within the section, but to which the same doctrine applies. If the subject of the mortgage is an undivided share and the joint sharers effect a partition, the mortgagee must pursue his remedy against the share allotted in severally to his mortgagor;¹⁸⁰⁵ and in the absence of fraud or collusion, the co-sharers of the mortgagor would hold their shares free of the mortgage. However, if as a part of the partition agreement, the coparcener to whose share the subject matter of the mortgage is allotted undertakes to pay the mortgage debt, then the true position is that the said coparcener has in effect obtained the equity of redemption only, and is liable to the mortgagee who may sue him.¹⁸⁰⁶ In the leading case of Byjnath Lall v Ramoodeen Chowdry,¹⁸⁰⁷ the Judicial Committee observed that the mortgagee would take the subject of the pledge in the new form which it had assumed. In this case the partition was by the collector, but the rule applies to all partitions. If after partition, the mortgagor makes another mortgage of the share allotted to him, this mortgage will be a puisne mortgage subject to the mortgage effected before partition. It matters not that the post-partition mortgagee had no notice of the pre-partition mortgage, for he cannot take a larger estate than the mortgagor had.¹⁸⁰⁸ For the purpose of the application of the principle underlying this section, it is immaterial whether there is a transfer of an undivided share or a transfer of a specific item of a joint property.¹⁸⁰⁹

[s 73.7] Mortgagor's Title Altered

When the mortgagor's title is altered, the land held under the new title is still subject to the mortgage. When a zamindari was mortgaged and the mortgagor lost the zamindari right and became an ex-proprietary tenant of the sir, the mortgage was effectual against the ex-proprietary right.¹⁸¹⁰

If the mortgagee is in possession, it is his duty under section 76(c) to pay the revenue, rent, and public charges out of the income. If the income is not sufficient to pay the assessment, the sale is not due to his default and he is entitled to claim payment of his mortgage money out of the surplus sale proceeds; and if he purchases at the sale, he is not liable to be redeemed in cases where the revenue sale involves a forfeiture or extinction of the equity of redemption.¹⁸¹¹

But if the income is sufficient to pay the assessment and if the sale is occasioned by his default, he is not entitled to payment out of the surplus sale proceeds; and if he purchases the property himself, he is a trustee for the mortgagor under section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and is liable to be redeemed.¹⁸¹² Generally speaking, a sale for arrears of revenue caused by the mortgagee's default does not affect the right of redemption.¹⁸¹³ Conversely, if the sale is for default of the mortgagor to pay the revenue, and the mortgagor purchases, either himself or benami, he takes it subject to the mortgage;¹⁸¹⁴ and if the mortgagee has obtained payment of the surplus sale proceeds in ignorance of the benami character of the purchase on behalf of the mortgagor, and there is a deficit, he may enforce payment against the property in the hands of the auction purchaser.¹⁸¹⁵

The section as now amended makes provision for priority. The right of the mortgagee to the surplus sale proceeds is subject to the general rule of priority enacted in section 48. If there are two successive mortgagees, the right of the first mortgagee will take precedence and he will be paid first.

ILLUSTRATION

A leased property to B by a lease which gave a charge for arrears of rent. B mortgaged the leasehold to C. A in enforcement of his charge brought the property to sale. The decree for rent was satisfied out of the sale proceeds. The surplus sale proceeds were then applied, first in payment of A's charge for rent from date of suit to date of sale, and then in payment of C's mortgage.¹⁸¹⁶

In the case of a partition where the share allotted to the mortgagor was subject to a charge for owelty, that charge took precedence over the mortgage.¹⁸¹⁷ If there is a subsequent encumbrance and the sale is subject to the encumbrance, the mortgagee, if the sale proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy his mortgage, may pursue his remedy for the balance against that encumbrance. Thus, in a Calcutta case,¹⁸¹⁸ the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage, had granted a putni lease, and the property was sold subject to that putni, and the surplus sale proceeds did not suffice to satisfy the mortgage. The mortgagee was, therefore, allowed to proceed against the putni interest for the deficit, and it was said that the section was not designed to restrict the rights of the mortgagee. If unsecured creditors of the mortgagor have withdrawn the sale proceeds, the mortgagee can enforce his claim against them. In another case,¹⁸¹⁹ a putni taluq had been sold for arrears of land revenue, and unsecured creditors of the mortgagor putni withdrew part of the surplus sale proceeds. They were pleased that there was a sufficient balance left to satisfy the mortgagees, but the court held that the surplus sale proceeds represented the security, and as the mortgagees could not be compelled to split their security, they could enforce their claim against the unsecured creditors. Similarly, in the case of a judicial sale, the right of the puisne mortgagee to the sale proceeds takes priority over that of a money decree holder, or an unsecured debtor of the mortgagor.¹⁸²⁰ A puisne mortgagee not made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit can prove both against the surplus proceeds and against the property in the hands of the auction purchaser, for as he has not been made a party the sale cannot affect his rights.¹⁸²¹

ILLUSTRATION

A mortgaged property first to B and then to C. B sued on his mortgage without making C a party and brought the property to sale. The auction purchaser was D and the sale proceeds satisfied B's mortgage and left a surplus. The surplus sale proceeds were attached and taken by an unsecured creditor, E. C was entitled to enforce his mortgage against the property purchased by D, subject to the prior mortgage, and to require E to repay the surplus sale proceeds.¹⁸²²

In Karan Singh v Ishtiaq Husain,¹⁸²³ the surplus sale proceeds on the prior mortgagee's sale were paid to the mortgagor. The puisne mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage and proceeded to bring the property to sale. The auction purchaser paid the puisne mortgagee to avert a sale, and was then allowed to recover the amount from the mortgagor.

The surplus sale proceeds in the mortgaged property is a new form, and as the mortgagee has the same right to it as he had to the land, his claim is subject to 12 years' limitation under Article 62 of the Act of 1963, which corresponds to Article 132 of the Act of 1908.¹⁸²⁴

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

76. Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.—

When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property,—

- (a) he must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own;
- (b) he must use his best endeavours to collect the rents and profits thereof;
- (c) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature ¹⁸²⁵[and all rent] accruing due in respect thereof during such possession, and any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold;
- (d) he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, make such necessary repairs of the property as he can pay for out of the rents and profits thereof after deducting from such rents and profits the payments mentioned in clause (c) and the interest on the principal money;
- (e) he must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property;
- (f) where he has insured the whole or any part of the property against loss or damage by fire, he must, in case of such loss or damage, apply any money which he actually receives under the policy or so much thereof as may be necessary, in reinstating the property, or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money;
- (g) he must keep clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee, and, at any time during the continuance of the mortgage, give the mortgagor, at his request and cost, true copies of such accounts and of the vouchers by which they are supported;
- (h) his receipts from the mortgaged property, or, where such property is personally occupied by him, a fair occupation-rent in respect thereof, shall, after deducting the expenses ¹⁸²⁶[properly incurred for the management of the property and the collection of rents and profits and the other expenses] mentioned in clauses (c) and (d), and interest thereon, be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest ¹⁸²⁷[] and, so far as such receipts exceed any interest due, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage-money; the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagor;
- (i) when the mortgagor tenders, or deposits in manner hereinafter provided, the amount for the time being due on the mortgage, the mortgagee must, notwithstanding the provisions in the other clauses of this section, account for his ¹⁸²⁸[] receipts from the mortgaged property from the date of the tender or from the earliest time when he could take such amount out of court, as the case may be and shall not be entitled to deduct any amount therefrom on account of any expenses incurred after such date or time in connection with the mortgaged property.

Loss Occasioned by his Default.—

If the mortgagee fails to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section, he may, when accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree made under this chapter, be debited with the loss, if any, occasioned by such failure.

[s 76.1] Possession

The section enacts the statutory duties of a usufructuary mortgagee, or of a mortgagee in possession.¹⁸²⁹ The view taken in an Allahabad case¹⁸³⁰ that the section does not apply where the mortgage is in its inception usufructuary, is, it is submitted, erroneous. It deals mainly with the debit side of the mortgagee's account, while section 72 deals with the credit side.¹⁸³¹

Section 76 is not applicable unless the mortgagee is in possession qua mortgagee. Even if a mortgage deed entitles a mortgagee to take possession, collect rents and profits, his liability to account for such rents and profits will not arise, unless and until he has taken such possession.¹⁸³² A mortgagee is not in possession qua mortgagee if he enters the property as lessee.¹⁸³³ In some cases, the mortgagee is both a lessee and a mortgagee, and then it is a matter of construction whether the transactions of mortgage and lease are separable. If they are separable, the mortgagee is in possession as lessee and is not liable to account under this section. Where part of the rent is set off against the interest, it has been held that the mortgagee is in possession in his own right in order that the debt should be paid off, and that this section applies.¹⁸³⁴ A mortgagor in a zuripeshgi lease may claim credit in the account for arrears of rent due by the mortgagee,¹⁸³⁵ and conversely, a usufructuary mortgagee may set off arrears of rent due by the mortgagor in respect of any tenancy held by the mortgagor within the mortgaged premises.¹⁸³⁶ In an usufructuary mortgage, there was a distinct covenant to pay interest and the mortgagee was to appropriate the usufruct towards interest. The mortgagee gave a lease to the mortgagor on annual rent, which was equal to the annual interest. In such a case if the mortgagor did not pay rent, that did not affect the right of the mortgagee to recover the whole of the mortgage money including the interest.¹⁸³⁷

A mortgagee generally enters into possession qua mortgagee in the case of a usufructuary mortgage or an English mortgage. However, a mortgagee may take possession qua mortgagee even when the deed is silent as to possession.¹⁸³⁸ This may arise where a mortgagee is in possession under a foreclosure decree,¹⁸³⁹ or under the provisions of a debenture trust-deed when the trustees take over the management of a company,¹⁸⁴⁰ or in any other case when the possession is relatable to the mortgage.¹⁸⁴¹ However, the section has no application where the possession is unrelated to the mortgage.¹⁸⁴² Mere receipt of rents and profits does not amount to taking possession, unless the mortgagee receives them in such a way as to displace the mortgagor from management of the estate.¹⁸⁴³ A mortgagee is not in possession because the mortgage deed requires the mortgagor to appoint a manager in whom the mortgagee has confidence.¹⁸⁴⁴ The possession of a statutory receiver appointed by the mortgage under section 69A is that of the mortgagor, unless the agency has been modified by the terms of the deed.¹⁸⁴⁵ A mortgagee is not in possession qua mortgagee after he purchases in execution of a decree for sale on his mortgage.¹⁸⁴⁶

[s 76.2] Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act

It has been said that the section does not apply when the mortgagor is an agriculturist, and the account is taken under sections 13 and 13A of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879.¹⁸⁴⁷

[s 76.3] Clause (a): Management

Clause (a) imposes the same obligation as section 15 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 for though a mortgagee in possession is not a trustee for the mortgagor, his duties are akin to those of a trustee.¹⁸⁴⁸ He is, therefore, bound to act as a prudent owner in the management of the property. The mortgagee in possession of agricultural land is bound to cultivate the ordinary crops that the land is capable of yielding,¹⁸⁴⁹ but he is not an assurer of the continuance of the same rate of profit as his mortgagor was able to raise, for the very change of management may cause a falling off of receipts.¹⁸⁵⁰ A mortgagee in possession is liable for loss occasioned by his failure to make necessary repairs,¹⁸⁵¹ but he will not be liable for damage caused while the mortgagors were in occupation as tenants.¹⁸⁵² The mortgagee who takes possession of the mortgaged property must manage it as a person of ordinary prudence.

The question whether a mortgagee in possession can by reason of clause (a) grant a lease of the mortgaged property, has been considered in several decisions of the Supreme Court. In Mahabir Gope v Harbans Narain,¹⁸⁵³ the Supreme Court observed that the right conferred under clause (a) was an exception to the general rule that a person cannot confer a better title on another than he possesses himself. The court pointed out that it followed that though a mortgagee may, if it is prudent, grant leases, these would determine on redemption. The court recognised, however, that in some cases the granting of a lease in the course of prudent management might result in the tenant acquiring rights under other laws so that he could not be evicted by the mortgagor, but this was an exception, and could not apply where the mortgage deed prohibits such a lease either expressly, or by necessary implication. These observations do not appear to have been followed in Harihar Prasad Singh v Deonarayan Prasad,¹⁸⁵⁴ where the Supreme Court held that even a lease created by a mortgagee in possession in the course of prudent management though binding on the mortgagors after redemption, could not create the rights of a raiya on the tenants. The question was next considered in Asa Ram v Ram Kali,¹⁸⁵⁵ where the Supreme Court held that the creation of a lease which would create occupancy rights in favour of the tenants could not be regarded as a prudent transaction. In Prabhu v Ramdev,¹⁸⁵⁶ however, the Supreme Court without referring to Asa Ram's case held that a tenant of a mortgagee can invoke the benefit of subsequent tenancy legislation, which provided that such a tenant could not be evicted except in the circumstances set out in that legislation. The court explained Mahabir Gope's case as being a decision given with reference to the normal relationship of landlord and tenant, and stressed that the Supreme Court in that case had contemplated an extraordinary situation arising from a tenant acquiring rights under other laws. The court explained Harihar Prasad Singh's case as having been decided on the peculiar facts of the case, viz in that case the tenants were not entitled under the local law to invoke the protection of that law. In Film Corp Ltd v Gyan Nath,¹⁸⁵⁷ the Supreme Court again considered the question. The court did not refer to either Harihar Prasad Singh's case,¹⁸⁵⁸ or Prabhu v Ramdev,¹⁸⁵⁹ and observed the principle laid down in Mahabir Gope's case¹⁸⁶⁰ that a bona fide and prudent lease would bind the mortgagor. "Ordinary" applies only to agricultural lands and has "seldom" been extended to urban property. This observation is strictly speaking, obiter, as the court found that the lease in question was neither bona fide, nor prudent in view of the long term and the low rent. It is respectfully submitted that there is no warrant for limiting section 76(a) to agricultural land. Whether a particular lease is bona fide or prudent is a question of fact; obviously a lease of urban land which would confer on the lessee the protection of special statutes such as the Rent Acts would prima facie be imprudent. In Sachmal Parasram v Ratanbai,¹⁸⁶¹ however, the Supreme Court has repeated the obiter observation in the *Film Corporation case*¹⁸⁶² that except in the case of agricultural land, acts of a mortgagee would not bind the mortgagor.

The position could be more satisfactorily stated with reference to the language of clause (a). The right conferred by that clause is to manage the property during the subsistence of the mortgage. It is unlikely that a prudent manager would create a lease for a period longer than the mortgage, or in circumstances which would give the lessee rights after the redemption of the mortgage. Such leases would prima facie be imprudent, and not binding on the mortgagor as beyond the powers conferred by clause (a). If, however, it can be shown in any given case that such a lease was prudent, it would bind that mortgagor, even after redemption, and even though the lessee acquires thereunder rights of a permanent or quasi- permanent nature. No question of imprudence can arise where, as in Prabhu v Ramdev the rights of the tenant were enlarged by tenancy legislation enacted after the tenant was put in possession by the mortgage.¹⁸⁶³ It is submitted that this statement of the law is consistent with all the Supreme Court decisions quoted above. Where the mortgage-deed requires the mortgagee to cultivate the land himself, a lease by him is not a prudent act of management, but rather a destruction of the rights of the mortgagor, and the lessee is not entitled to statutory ownership conferred by tenancy legislation.¹⁸⁶⁴ A tenant of a mortgagee in possession cannot resist eviction by the mortgagor by relying on the Rent Acts,¹⁸⁶⁵ as the alleged "lessees" inducted by the mortgagee (without the authority of law) were not really lessees at all.¹⁸⁶⁶ In a case before the Supreme Court, as per the mortgage deed, the mortgagee was not entitled to induct tenants who would continue beyond the term of existence of mortgage, or who would be given rights even after expiry of mortgage yet without any concurrence or approval of the mortgagor the tenants were not only inducted but continued in possession. The apex court held that no landlord and tenant relationship between the tenant and mortgagor existed; the tenant was not entitled to protection of the Rent Act and could be evicted in a suit for the recovery of possession.¹⁸⁶⁷ It is a settled principle of law that when the mortgage is redeemed, the tenant inducted by the mortgagee cannot continue in possession.¹⁸⁶⁸

In Sachalmal v Ratanbai,¹⁸⁶⁹ the issue was whether the mortgagee in possession had the right of letting out the mortgaged premises, either under the agreement, or under section 76. The Supreme Court confirmed its earlier decisions¹⁸⁷⁰ and pointed out that generally the relationship of lessor and lessee created by the mortgagee cannot subsist beyond the duration of the mortgage. In the present case, there was a finding by the district judge that the lease was not an act of prudent management. From section 76(a), it can be inferred that acts done bona fide and prudently in the ordinary course of management may be binding even after the termination of the title of the mortgagee in possession. The principle applies ordinarily to the management of agricultural lands, and has seldom been extended to the urban property so as to tie it up in the hands of lessees, or to confer on them rights under special statutes. Decisions of High Courts (even after this pronouncement) are not consistent. According to an Allahabad case, section 76(a) applies to urban immovable property also. If during the subsistence of the mortgage, the mortgagee, acting as an ordinary prudent man, lets out the mortgaged premises bona fide, the rights of the lessee survive even after the redemption of the mortgage. The section is based on the hypothesis that if the mortgagor had been in possession, he also would have similarly let out the premises.¹⁸⁷¹ According to the Bombay view, a tenant inducted by the mortgagee ceases to be a tenant on redemption, whether it be urban or agricultural property, unless a law de hors the TP Act, 1882, confers protection. Merely because a lease has been created by a mortgagee in possession in exercise of “prudent” management under section 76(a), does not mean that the lease can inure beyond the period of the mortgage.¹⁸⁷² A Full Bench of the Rajasthan High Court has held that mortgagee in possession of agricultural land can induct tenant in respect of such land beyond the period of redemption of the mortgage, if he has acted prudently and bona fide, and in cases where the mortgagor agreed with the mortgagee for creation of such tenancy, and there is no prohibition in the deed itself against action of such tenancy.¹⁸⁷³ The legal position emerging from the decisions of the Supreme Court is thus summarised:

(1) The general proposition of law is that no person can confer on another a better title than he himself has. Hence, a mortgagee in possession cannot create, in the tenant inducted by him, a right to continue in possession beyond the period of redemption. But by virtue of section 111(c), expiry of the duration of the mortgagee's interest determines his position as the “lessor” also.

(2) To this proposition, an exception is carved out by section 76(a). This exception has been applied ordinarily to the management of agricultural lands, and has seldom been extended to urban property so as to tie it up in the hands of lessees, or to confer on them rights under special statutes.

(3) In a lease of agricultural lands, a lessee, by the very process of cultivation, brings inputs and improves the fertility of the soil. Constant and continuous cultivation by proper manuring etc would improve the fertility of the soil and, on the determination of the lease, that fertility would still remain in the land. But, in the case of non-agricultural lands, normally nothing is done by the tenant which is likely to improve the inherent quality of the property by his own efforts put in during the terms of the tenancy. There is, therefore, no question of a “prudent” owner of urban immovable property granting a long-term lease merely with a view to improving the inherent quality of the land.

(4) When the mortgagor has, either in the deed of mortgage or elsewhere, stated that the mortgagee with possession may lease the property, such authorisation does not amount to any intention to allow expressly the creation of a tenancy beyond the term of the mortgage.

76. Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.—

(5) Once it is held that the tenant inducted by the mortgagee with possession did not continue to be a tenant on the termination of the mortgagee's interest, it must necessarily follow that there is no scope for the relationship of landlord and tenant to arise either under the general law, or under the special definition set out in the Rent Act, and the protection afforded by the Rent Act is not available to such a tenant.

(6) Accordingly, section 76(a) of the TP Act, 1882 cannot apply to a case of urban immovable property, and a lease created by the mortgagee in possession of an urban immovable property would not be binding on the mortgagor after redemption of the mortgage. This is so even if it were to be assumed that the lease is such, as a prudent owner of property would have granted in the usual course of management.

(7) It is only where the words of the mortgage-deed clearly and indubitably express an intention to allow expressly the creation of a tenancy beyond the term of the mortgage, that a lease created in exercise of the power expressly conferred by the mortgage-deed would be binding on the mortgagor.

(8) According to the Supreme Court's decision in Asa Ram's case, where there is no prohibition under the mortgage-deed expressly prohibiting the mortgagee with possession from granting a lease, the parties will be thrown back on the right under the TP Act, 1882, and the lessee must still establish that the lease is binding on the mortgagors under section 76(a) of the TP Act, 1882.¹⁸⁷⁴

The same view was taken later by the Gujarat High Court and it was held that section 76(a) cannot be applied to a lease of urban immovable property.¹⁸⁷⁵

According to the Kerala view, where the mortgagee inducts tenants in the mortgaged building, the tenancy terminates with redemption of the mortgagee, and it cannot be said that the mortgagee has rented out the building as a prudent and reasonable man would do.¹⁸⁷⁶

According to the Madras view, an express protection conferred by statute on "tenants" [eg by the Tamil Nadu (Buildings, Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960] cannot be claimed against the mortgagor by a tenant inducted by the mortgagee, because the protection is not available against one who is not the tenant of the "landlord". It is not available to erstwhile tenants. Further, with reference to section 76(a), a lease of urban property cannot be placed on the same footing as a lease of agricultural land. If a tenant of urban property inducted by a mortgagee wishes to rely on section 76(a), he must strictly prove the facts establishing the binding nature of the tenancy created by the mortgagee on the mortgagor.¹⁸⁷⁷ The Mysore High Court has held that the act of the mortgagee in exchanging certain items of the mortgaged properties and, in respect of other items, creating a lease of permanent nature even beyond the duration of mortgage, are not acts of prudent men within section 76(a) and, as such, not binding on the mortgagor. The interest of the lessees terminated on redemption of the mortgage.¹⁸⁷⁸

Thus, a tenant inducted by the mortgagee during the continuance of the mortgage can be evicted in a redemption decree passed against the mortgagee. The protection given by the Rent Control Act is not available to such a tenant, and a tenancy created by the mortgagee in possession does not survive the termination of the interest of the mortgagee.¹⁸⁷⁹

Ordinarily, on the termination of the title of the mortgagee, a derivative title from him also comes to an end. But this principle ordinarily applies only to the management of agricultural lands. It has seldom been extended to urban properties. To this again, there is an exception that the lease created by the mortgagee while in possession would continue to bind the mortgagor, provided it is established that the mortgagor had concurred in the grant of the lease. Where the properties mortgaged were shop rooms, situated in an urban area, the tenants of the mortgagee would not be entitled to the benefit of section 76(a) on termination of title of the mortgagee.¹⁸⁸⁰ The mortgagor mortgaged a house property, and delivered possession to mortgagee. The ground floor of the house was, however, already in the occupation of a tenant. Hence, the mortgagors endorsed the rent deed executed by the tenant to the mortgagee, for the remaining period of the lease. The mortgage deed provided that the mortgage could be redeemed whenever the mortgagors paid the mortgage amount and, on redemption, the mortgagee should return the title deeds, and deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagors. Notwithstanding mortgage purporting to be a possessory mortgage, the mortgage deed provided for payment of interest and gave a right to the mortgagee to demand repayment of the mortgage amount at any time the mortgagee deemed fit, and if the demand was not met, to file a suit and to bring the mortgaged property for sale, and also to proceed against the mortgagor for recovery of the balance amount. It was held that in view of the fact that the mortgagors had not empowered the mortgagee to create a lease which would be binding on the mortgagor after the redemption of the mortgage, the tenant's rights, as a tenant, did not become enlarged by means of any tenancy legislation which came to be enacted after the lease was granted. The execution application taken against the mortgagee would be binding on the tenant. Having no independent rights on his own, the tenant could not contend that the decree and the execution application were not binding on him as he was not made a party to the proceedings.¹⁸⁸¹

A permanent lease is, of course, not a prudent transaction.¹⁸⁸² The burden of proving such a lease to be a prudent transaction would be upon he who asserts it, eg the lessee.¹⁸⁸³ The general position of a tenant in such cases has been considered by a Full Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Jagan Nath v Mitter Sain.¹⁸⁸⁴ The court held that a tenant in possession before the mortgage becomes a tenant of the mortgagee on the mortgagee taking possession, and reverts on redemption to his position as a tenant of the mortgagor. The tenancy of a new tenant inducted by the mortgagee comes to an end on redemption, except where the tenancy was a prudent transaction, and certain rights are conferred on the tenant by law. Prior to these decisions, it had been held that it is the duty of the mortgagee not to let vacant lands remain untenanted, but to let them to solvent tenants.¹⁸⁸⁵ A mortgagee in possession may enter into any arrangement which might facilitate the recovery of a reasonable return for his money,¹⁸⁸⁶ and this would include the granting of leases. Such leases may be given even after a suit for redemption is filed,¹⁸⁸⁷ but would determine at redemption,¹⁸⁸⁸ as would an occupancy tenancy.¹⁸⁸⁹ A mortgagee with zamindari rights may settle tenants on the land,¹⁸⁹⁰ unless the mortgage deed negatives this right.¹⁸⁹¹

[s 76.4] Clause (b): Collection of Rents and Profits

The mortgagee in possession must use his best endeavours to collect the rents and profits. It is immaterial in such a case that the mortgaged property was leased before the usufructuary mortgage was executed.¹⁸⁹² If the mortgagee has leased the property mortgaged to the mortgagor and has obtained a decree for rent which has become time-barred, he is not entitled to credit for the amount in a redemption suit.¹⁸⁹³ However, when the mortgage- deed stipulated for payment of interest, and the mortgaged property had been leased to the mortgagor himself and the latter made a default, the mortgagee could not be held liable for failure to recover the rent or to have lost the right of claiming interest.¹⁸⁹⁴ Even when the mortgage deed contained a stipulation that the mortgagor would pay from year to year the amount by which the profits fell short of interest, the mortgagor was not liable when the deficit was due to the default of the mortgagee.¹⁸⁹⁵ This is on the principle that the mortgagee must be diligent in realising his security.¹⁸⁹⁶ It represents the English rule that the mortgagee in possession is always directed to account on the footing of willful default, ie, not merely for rents and profits which he actually receives, but also for rents and profits which but for his mismanagement or neglect he would have received.¹⁸⁹⁷ A mortgagee in possession is not bound to account for its rent when the mortgagor himself is a tenant.¹⁸⁹⁸ This is the usual form of account in actions on mortgages where the mortgagee is in possession,¹⁸⁹⁹ and the plaintiff does not have to make out a special case as in a suit against a trustee.¹⁹⁰⁰ The court must find that the mortgagee was in possession, and if so from which date, and the decree must contain an express provision that accounts are to be taken on this basis.¹⁹⁰¹ The mortgagee will be liable to account on this basis only in respect of the portion of the mortgaged premises taken possession of by him.¹⁹⁰² In Banarsi Prashad v Ram Narain,¹⁹⁰³ the Judicial Committee, on a construction of the deed in suit, held that the mortgagee was not in all circumstances responsible for the gross rental as shown in the jummabundi or rent roll, and that he was liable only for such sums as were actually received by him, or on his behalf, and such sums, if any, as might have been received by him, but for his own neglect or fault. Some of the old cases¹⁹⁰⁴ make the rent roll the basis of the account and hold the mortgagee responsible for that amount, less 10% for collection charges, but this is not correct, for Shah Mukkun Lall's case¹⁹⁰⁵ shows that the mortgagee is not an assurer of the rate of profits.

This rule of wilful default applies only when the mortgagee is in possession in his character of mortgagee so that he knows he is in possession and chargeable accordingly. In Parkinson v Hanbury,¹⁹⁰⁶ Lord Cranworth said:

I think that it is perfectly clear law, that when a person becomes possessed of a property, though erroneously supposing that he is a purchaser, if it afterwards turns out that he is not to be treated as a purchaser, but only as a person who has a sort of lien upon the property, that does not make him a mortgagee in possession within the meaning of that rule which charges him with wilful default.

When a mortgagee by conditional sale went into possession before the decision in *Ramji v Chinto*¹⁹⁰⁷ believing that he was absolute owner, he was allowed to charge for improvements,¹⁹⁰⁸ and was not made accountable for rents and profits.¹⁹⁰⁹ But the last case carried the rule too far. For the condition about crediting the rents and profits are to be always implied.¹⁹¹⁰ If not aware of his character of mortgagee, he is not liable for default of collection, yet he must be liable in the ordinary way for rents and profits that he has received. In a Calcutta case,¹⁹¹¹ when a mortgagee by conditional sale went into possession at due date with the consent of the mortgagor, J Mookerjee held that he was not an usufructuary mortgagee, but that he was, nevertheless, liable to account for rents and profits as they were incidents de jure to the ownership of the equity of redemption. When a mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption at a sale held in contravention of section 99 and which was at that time considered to be void, he was held accountable for the rents and profits.¹⁹¹² So also, when a mortgagee went into possession under an agreement of sale which was invalid.¹⁹¹³ When a simple mortgagee went into possession under an invalid decree for possession, he was held accountable for rents and profits.¹⁹¹⁴ An assignee of an auction purchaser at a prior mortgagee's sale when redeemed by a puisne mortgagee is also accountable.¹⁹¹⁵

A mortgagee in possession may determine the tenancy of an annual tenant without the consent of the mortgagor.¹⁹¹⁶ Similarly, a commutation of bhavli (crop share) rent by the mortgagor into nagdi (cash) is not binding on the mortgagor.¹⁹¹⁷

The mortgagor when in possession is liable to pay public charges, and rent under section 65(c). The mortgagee is under the same liability when he is in possession, although no money may be left with him.¹⁹¹⁸ But when he is not in possession, it is the duty of the mortgagor to pay the land revenue.¹⁹¹⁹

The section, however, deals only with the relative rights and duties of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and does not confer any right on a third party. Thus, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage of a leasehold property, the lessor cannot recover the arrears of rent from the mortgagee.¹⁹²⁰ The mortgagee is, however, bound to pay out of the income of the property, and is not entitled to charge such payment against the mortgagor in the accounts.¹⁹²¹ His liability to pay charges of a public nature is conditioned by two circumstances, one is that it should have been possible for him to pay those charges out of the income, and the other is that the liability to pay should have arisen after he entered into possession as a mortgagee.¹⁹²² But if the mortgagor has

covenanted to pay the rent and makes default, the mortgagee may pay the rent, and debit the mortgagor with the payment in the mortgage account.¹⁹²³ If the mortgagee cannot pay out of the income, and pays out of his own pocket, in order to save the security, he is entitled, under section 72(b), to add the amount to the mortgage money.¹⁹²⁴ If the mortgagee cannot pay out of the income and does not pay out of his own pocket, and the property is sold, he will have a charge on the surplus sale proceeds under section 73. If the mortgagee does not pay and the mortgagor pays in order to avert a sale, he is entitled to credit for the amount in the mortgage account,¹⁹²⁵ and to charge interest.¹⁹²⁶ He is also entitled to recover such payment by a separate suit by way of damages.¹⁹²⁷ However, the default of the mortgagee does not entitle the mortgagor to such credit, unless the mortgagor has actually paid.¹⁹²⁸ If the land is sold for the mortgagee's default of payment and is purchased by the mortgagee, it is still open to redemption by the mortgagor.¹⁹²⁹ If after the execution of the mortgage the government assessment is raised, then, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee is liable to pay the enhanced assessment,¹⁹³⁰ though there is a case to the contrary.¹⁹³¹ But the point is settled by the case of Abid Husain Khan v Kaniz Fatima,¹⁹³² where, in the case of a mortgage before the TP Act, 1882, the Privy Council said that in the absence of a provision to the contrary, the mortgagee must pay out of the income of the property in his possession, the government revenue that might be assessed upon it, this being part of his duty of prudent management. When the government revenue is a consolidated demand on the land mortgaged and other lands as well, the mortgagee is bound to pay the whole revenue accruing due on all the lands.¹⁹³³

The obligation does not, of course, extend to other lands, and the mortgagee is not responsible if the property mortgaged is sold to realise arrears of rents of other lands.¹⁹³⁴

The liability to pay assessment, whether enhanced or not, is subject to a contract to the contrary and is, therefore, controlled by any special stipulation in the deed of mortgage.¹⁹³⁵ If a usufructuary mortgagee agrees to take rents and profits in lieu of interest, or part of the interest, he is liable under the contract to pay enhanced assessment.¹⁹³⁶ Public charges have been held to include tagavi advances,¹⁹³⁷ and local rates.¹⁹³⁸ The provision as to arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be summarily sold, has reference to putni tenures and saleable under tenures. The word "summarily" implies that the proceedings for realization of rent by sale of the property are of a summary nature; for instance, as in the case of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act.¹⁹³⁹ It has been held that the mortgagee is liable to pay such arrears even if they are due for a period before his entry into possession.¹⁹⁴⁰

The usufructuary mortgagor does not lose his title to the property or right to redemption by lapse of time. By operation of the last para of section 76, the mortgagor is entitled to the accounting of the loss occasioned to it. At best the auction-purchaser on redemption would look to the mortgagee who had committed default in terms of the mortgage, and the court would give suitable directions in that behalf. The possession of the purchaser must be on behalf of the mortgagee, and becomes liable to accounting etc.¹⁹⁴¹

[s 76.6] Clause (d): Repairs

The duty of the mortgagee to make necessary repairs out of the rents and profits was recognized before the TP Act, 1882.¹⁹⁴² The cost of repairs to a well has been allowed,¹⁹⁴³ but not the cost of laying out water pipes in a house.¹⁹⁴⁴ However, the mortgagee in possession is not bound to spend money on necessary repairs, unless there is a surplus left after deducting interest and money paid for public charges. Hence, the use for the words "rents and profits" in this clause which are less extensive than the word "income" in clause (c). If the parties dispense with an account, the mortgagee cannot charge for repairs.¹⁹⁴⁵ The mortgagor is entitled to credit in the account for loss caused by the mortgagee's failure to repair.¹⁹⁴⁶

The object of section 76(d) is not to lay down priorities, but to make it obligatory on the mortgagee, unless there is a contract to the contrary, to carry out necessary repairs to the property; the amount he can expend is, however, limited to the difference between the income of the property and the amounts expended on rates charges, etc mentioned in section 76(c), and the interest due to him.¹⁹⁴⁷

[s 76.7] Clause (e): Waste

The mortgagee in possession must not commit waste, and the prohibition is enacted in the same words as in the case of a mortgagor in possession under section 66, and in the case of a lessee under section 108 (o). This prohibition is a corollary to the direction given in clause (a) to the mortgagee to manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would if it were his own. A mortgagee in possession commits waste if he fells trees or even immature bamboo clumps standing on the date of the mortgage,¹⁹⁴⁸ but not if he fells trees he has himself planted.¹⁹⁴⁹ A kanomdar in Madras has power to remove trees planted by his own self.¹⁹⁵⁰ Cutting timber and clearing the ground for the purpose of improvement would not be a waste. The mortgagor would, however, be entitled to the value of the timber cut.¹⁹⁵¹ Failing to inform the mortgagor that trees had fallen so that he could remove the timber renders the mortgagee liable for the value of the timber.¹⁹⁵² Where the mortgagee in possession depreciated the value of the estate by granting occupancy rights in exchange for nazarana, he was held accountable to the mortgagor for the nazarana.¹⁹⁵³ A somewhat forced construction was put upon this clause in an Allahabad case where it was said that a violation of the right of privacy, by keeping a door on the mortgaged premises open, would constitute waste.¹⁹⁵⁴ In a case from Kerala,¹⁹⁵⁵ which was decided before the TP Act, 1882 was made applicable to the state, it was held that the mortgagee in possession was not liable for permissive waste, as when paddy lands became silted and unfit for cultivation because of the negligence of the mortgagee.

[s 76.8] Clause (f): Insurance

Section 72 gives the mortgagee the right to insure the mortgaged property if there is no contract to the contrary, and if the mortgagor has not already done so. When the mortgagee has so insured, he is entitled under that section to tack the premiums to the mortgage money. This clause provides for the application of the insurance money. The mortgagee must apply it in re-instating the property or, if the mortgagor so directs, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage debt. In a case in which the insurance was effected neither by the mortgagor, nor by the mortgagee, but by the Receiver of the court, the application of the insurance money was held to be in the discretion of the court.¹⁹⁵⁶ If the mortgagor has insured, the mortgagee has no claim to the insurance money as against the insurance company.¹⁹⁵⁷

[s 76.9] Clause (g): Accounts

The mortgagee in possession must keep clear, full and accurate accounts supported by vouchers. The section applies to the case of a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee is under statutory liability to maintain accounts of the income.¹⁹⁵⁸ This is another duty of the mortgagee which is akin to that of a trustee under section 19, Indian Trusts Act, 1882.

The same obligation was imposed by the Regulations;¹⁹⁵⁹ and it did not matter whether the mortgagee was in possession with or without the consent of the mortgagor.¹⁹⁶⁰ With reference to the Bengal Regulation, J Phear said in *Goluck Chunder v Mohan Lall*¹⁹⁶¹ that the mortgagee's account should show what the mortgagee has realised, from what portions of the mortgaged property, in what terms of periods, with what loss or gain on the several assets, and with what necessary reductions, and the net profits available as actual realisations towards liquidating the mortgage amounts. And again in Mokund Lall v Goluck Chunder,¹⁹⁶² he said that the mortgagees were bound to exhibit detailed items of all receipts and disbursements upto the time of accounting verified by themselves, and accompanied by all vouchers. This clause has been based on these cases. In a case under the TP Act, 1882, the necessity for detailed accounts has been stressed by the Bombay High Court.¹⁹⁶³ If the mortgagee employs an agent, it is not sufficient to show lump sums received from the agent, and the mortgagee should show what the agent received from the tenants.¹⁹⁶⁴ It has been held¹⁹⁶⁵ that the accounts to be kept by a mortgagee are independent of any which may be kept by a patwari, and this has been followed by the chief court of Oudh.¹⁹⁶⁶ In the undernoted case, the Privy Council applied the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se, and held that the accounts of the property managed by the agent, though prepared by the agent, are the principal's accounts.¹⁹⁶⁷

A mortgagee was not permitted to appropriate receipts of usufruct in lieu of interest, but on the contrary, he had to render accounts on redemption. It was held that section 77 was not attracted, and, under sections 76(g) and (h), accounts must be maintained by the mortgagee as required by law.¹⁹⁶⁸ If there are two mortgages, the mortgagee must file a separate account of each, for the court will take separate accounts.¹⁹⁶⁹ In a case where the mortgage decree directed two accounts, the Privy Council held that the mortgagee is not bound to credit receipts to the debt which bore compound interest, and was more burdensome to the mortgagor.¹⁹⁷⁰ It has been held that the obligation to keep accounts is a rule of justice, equity and good conscience, and applies to mortgages executed prior to the coming into force of the TP Act, 1882,¹⁹⁷¹ and in areas where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force.¹⁹⁷²

[s 76.9.1] Failure to account

If the mortgagee fails to keep accounts, there will be a general presumption against him in odium spoliatoris.¹⁹⁷³ But the presumption must have reasonable limits, and not be mere conjectures based on inexact data.¹⁹⁷⁴ Thus, when the accounts of all the years have not been kept, the court may proceed on the basis of an average annual income,¹⁹⁷⁵ or may assume that all the tenants have paid their rents, and may order the accounts to be prepared on the basis of gross annual rentals.¹⁹⁷⁶ However, the presumption should not be carried beyond reasonable limits and if the mortgagee is debited with gross rentals, he should be allowed collection charges.¹⁹⁷⁷ In some cases, interest has been disallowed,¹⁹⁷⁸ or if there is no definite evidence as to the amount of the rent;¹⁹⁷⁹ it has been assumed that the profits would balance the interest.¹⁹⁸⁰ This was done with the consent of the parties as being just and convenient when a puisne mortgagee was redeeming a prior mortgagee, who had realized his security and purchased and taken possession of the property.¹⁹⁸¹ But this is not a rule of law for a prior mortgagee who has realized his security and is in possession, as purchaser is liable to account for rents and profits when sued for redemption by a puisne mortgagee who had not been made a party.¹⁹⁸² The mortgagee cannot be heard to say that an item entered in his account is an illegal collection;¹⁹⁸³ and when a mortgagee collected a cess which was introduced by an Act subsequent to the mortgage and realizable only by the mortgagee, it was held that the amount should be credited to the mortgagor.¹⁹⁸⁴

[s 76.9.2] Wilful default

A mortgagee is not liable to account under the rule of wilful default, ie, not only for actual receipts, but also for what he might and ought to have received, unless he is in possession in the character of a mortgagee.

When a mortgagee, however, enters into possession under a deed which is silent as to possession, he takes upon himself the obligation of accounting for rents and profits.¹⁹⁸⁵

[s 76.9.3] Contract to the contrary

The sub-section is not expressed to be subject to a contract to the contrary, and a mortgagee in possession cannot contract himself out of the duty to account.¹⁹⁸⁶ Every mortgagee in possession is bound to account, unless he establishes a contract in the terms of section 77.¹⁹⁸⁷ In Bihari Lal v Shib Lal,¹⁹⁸⁸ the contract in the mortgage was that the mortgagee should take the rents and profits in lieu of interest and pay the mortgagor a fixed annual sum by way of malikhana, and that there was to be no account except as to malikhana. The agreement was enforced and redemption was decreed on payment of the principal sum, less the balance due on the malikhana account. The mortgagee under section 76(g) and (h), is bound to maintain full and accurate accounts, supported by vouchers.¹⁹⁸⁹

[s 76.9.4] Accounts only on redemption

The mortgagor cannot claim an account, unless he has filed a suit for redemption.¹⁹⁹⁰ A suit for an account only would contravene the provisions of O II, rules 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the mortgagor cannot split his remedies. But under section 15D of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879, as amended by Act 22 of 1882, an agriculturist is allowed the privilege of suing for an account without asking for redemption.¹⁹⁹¹ Where a statute passed for the benefit of agriculturists bars redemption, the mortgagor can sue for accounts.¹⁹⁹² As the prayer for an account is ancillary to the claim to redeem, no question of limitation can arise between a mortgagor and mortgagee when accounts are taken at the time of redemption.¹⁹⁹³

[s 76.10] Clause (h): System of Accounting

Section 76(h) directs the mortgagee to apply the receipts from the mortgaged property in a certain manner. The order of application is:

76. Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.—

(1) expenses properly incurred for the management of the property, and collection of rents and profits, and other expenses mentioned in section 76(c) and (d);

(2) interest thereon;

(3) the surplus is to be applied towards the interest on the principal money; and

(4) towards the principal money.¹⁹⁹⁴

The account has to be taken with rests, so that, strictly speaking, as soon as there is a surplus of net receipts over interest, the balance should be applied in reduction of principal, and then interest runs on the reduced amount. The section says “from time to time” and evidently contemplates a rest whenever there is a surplus, but the practice of courts in India is to take annual rests,¹⁹⁹⁵ though in one reported case, half yearly rests were ordered.¹⁹⁹⁶ But if the net receipts are less than the interest, the deficit is not added to the principal, as that would lead to compound interest which is not allowed,¹⁹⁹⁷ unless there is express provision to that effect. The same clause in the old section referred to “interest on the mortgage money,” but these words have been omitted, because a mortgage money means principal and interest, the phrase might imply that compound interest was to be charged even when the deed only provided for simple interest. In Gyarsi Bai v Dhansukh Lal,¹⁹⁹⁸ the Supreme Court has held that the obligation to render accounts continues even after a preliminary decree until the final mortgage decree.

Occupation rent is an expression which also occurs in section 62 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. This is charged if the mortgagee is in personal occupation, and it represents what the land would yield if let to a tenant.¹⁹⁹⁹ In a Patna case,²⁰⁰⁰ the mortgagees were in personal occupation at the time of the mortgage and were charged an occupation rent, but when they let the premises to tenants, they were liable for the rent that they received. The court will not, however, require the mortgagee to account for any collateral advantage received from his occupation. So when the mortgaged property is a public house, and the mortgagee, a brewer, lets the house as a tied house, he is not called upon to render an account of the profits of the sale of the beer, but the rent charged is that which would be realized if the house was let without the condition as to purchase of beer from the mortgagee.²⁰⁰¹

By operation of the last para of section 76, the mortgagor is entitled to the accounting of the loss occasioned to it. At best the auction-purchaser on redemption would look to the mortgagee who had committed default in terms of the mortgage and the court would give suitable directions in that behalf. The possession of the purchaser must be on behalf of the mortgagee, and becomes liable to accounting etc.²⁰⁰²

[s 76.10.1] After deducting expenses

The mortgagee's receipts are his actual realisations. From these are deducted the expenses allowed by this clause, and the balance is debited in reduction first of interest, and then of principal. The expenses to be deducted are those under clauses (a) and (b), (c) and (d), ie, management, collection of rents and profits, public charges and necessary repairs. The provision allowing a deduction for expenses of management and collection of rents is new. Under the old section, these were omitted from this clause, but allowed in clause (a) under section 72— so that they were strictly speaking, not recoverable by the mortgagee until the principal money

76. Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.—

became due. It is more reasonable that the mortgagee should get credit for these at once and that they should be deducted from the receipts before these are debited against the mortgagee,²⁰⁰³ and that they should be on the same footing as expenses of collection and necessary repairs. This is in accordance with the law in England where expenses of management are allowed to the mortgagee in the accounts²⁰⁰⁴ as “just allowances,” ie, items admissible though not expressly mentioned in the decree.²⁰⁰⁵ Expenses of repairs,²⁰⁰⁶ and costs of litigation incurred bona fide by a mortgagee to collect his rents have been allowed as “just allowances”.²⁰⁰⁷ But in another case, it was said that the mortgagor was not responsible for such costs, unless the mortgagor’s title was impeached in the suit.²⁰⁰⁸ It is submitted that the former view is correct. There is, however, nothing to prevent the mortgagor and the mortgagee making an express bargain that a fixed sum should be charged annually for expenses.²⁰⁰⁹ The word “expenses” includes public charges, but the mortgagee is not entitled to deduct such charges paid after the date when the amount mentioned in the decree for redemption is tendered to him.²⁰¹⁰

[s 76.10.2] Remuneration

The mortgagee is not allowed to charge remuneration for his personal services in connection with the management of the mortgaged property,²⁰¹¹ but he may employ an agent at a salary, if the work is so onerous that he would do so if the property were his own.²⁰¹² In Kader Moideen v Nepean,²⁰¹³ the mortgagee’s son lived on the mortgaged property and managed it, but the Privy Council allowed only the cost of maintenance of the son during the father’s lifetime, but nothing after the father’s death when the son himself became the mortgagee. However, this strict rule has been relaxed on the principle of Biggs v Hoddinott, Hoddinott v Biggs,²⁰¹⁴ and a mortgagee may stipulate for his own remuneration, and the stipulation will be valid if it is free from oppression and limited to the duration of the mortgage. The Bombay High Court allowed a mortgagee to charge remuneration for the management of a mortgaged mill.²⁰¹⁵

[s 76.10.3] Surplus

If, on redemption, it is found that the mortgagee has received a surplus in excess of the principal and interest, the mortgagor is entitled to recover the surplus. The mortgagee is also liable to pay interest on the surplus, but there is conflict as to whether the interest should run from the time when the debt is satisfied,²⁰¹⁶ or from the time when the redemption suit was instituted.²⁰¹⁷ In one case,²⁰¹⁸ the Allahabad High Court pointed out that the English authority Charles v Jones,²⁰¹⁹ referred to a surplus left after the exercise by the mortgagee of a right of private sale, and that the mortgagee is not liable for interest on the surplus until the institution of a redemption suit.

[s 76.11] Clause (i): Effect of Tender or Deposit

A deposit of the mortgage money in court operates as a tender as soon as the mortgagor has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the money. Tender when wrongfully refused, operates as a cessation of interest if there is a continued readiness to pay.²⁰²⁰ However, the mortgagee is still in possession, as mortgagee is under a statutory liability to account for rents and profits received from the date of tender.²⁰²¹ After tender or deposit, the mortgagee is not entitled to collection charges,²⁰²² but in a Madras case²⁰²³ this was said to be too drastic, and the mortgagee was allowed to make deductions for collection charges, government revenue and repairs. The express provision added at the end of the clause has the effect of superseding the latter decision. It is submitted that the word “receipt” is used in the same sense as in clause (h), and that after tender, the mortgagee is neither entitled to interest, nor to deductions for expenses of management, collection of rents and profits, public charges, or repairs,²⁰²⁴ or expenses for cultivation.²⁰²⁵ There is no warrant for limiting the word “expenses” in clause (i) to what has been spent in connection with the management and the collection of rents and profits. Where a decree directs the mesne profits to be awarded after a particular date, the mortgagee cannot charge for public charges.²⁰²⁶

[s 76.11.1] Loss

If loss is occasioned by the mortgagee’s default in the performance of the duties imposed upon him by this section, the amount will be determined in the same suit.²⁰²⁷ If the mortgagee fails to pay the government revenue, and the mortgagor pays to avert a sale, the mortgagor is entitled to credit for the amount in the mortgage account.²⁰²⁸ The remedy under this section is cumulative, and does not operate as a bar to any other remedy the mortgagor may have at law.²⁰²⁹ He may bring a suit for damages at once, and need not wait to debit the mortgagee with the loss when accounts are taken at redemption.²⁰³⁰ When a mortgagee is in possession, any act which he does affecting the mortgaged property, cannot be said to be an act of tort. A suit by a mortgagor for compensation for such act was not governed by Article 36, but by Article 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908.²⁰³¹ The article corresponding to Article 120 in the Act of 1963 is Article 113, the period prescribed being three years.

76. Liabilities of mortgagee in possession.—

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagee

77. Receipts in lieu of interest.—

Nothing in section 76, clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h), applies to cases where there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of interest on the principal money, or in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal.

[s 77.1] Receipts in Lieu of Interest

Section 77 enacts an exception to section 76. It omits reference to clause (c) of section 76, which makes it obligatory on the mortgagee to pay government revenue.²⁰³²

There is no account to be taken between the mortgagor and mortgagee when the rents and profits are taken in lieu of interest, or in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal.²⁰³³ In such cases, if the mortgagee does not realise the full value of the usufruct, it is the mortgagee and not the mortgagor who suffers. The section was applied in a case in which the rents and profits were taken in lieu of portion of the interest only,²⁰³⁴ but the judgment proceeds on the erroneous assumption that a usufructuary mortgagee is not liable to account, unless there is an express contract to that effect;²⁰³⁵ this decision would appear to have been impliedly overruled by a subsequent Full Bench decision.²⁰³⁶ The exception, therefore, is limited to the two cases specified. When the mortgage merely made an estimate of the amount of rents and profits that would be available for reduction of the debt, the mortgagees were not exonerated from their liability to account.²⁰³⁷ However, when the mortgagee was to take the rents and profits in lieu of interest and receive a fixed annual sum from the mortgagor as well, he was not liable to account.²⁰³⁸ If there is a contract that receipts shall be taken in lieu of interest, the fact that the rate of interest is specified in the mortgage, does not by itself show that the mortgagee is liable to account.²⁰³⁹

Whether this section excludes the operation of clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h) of section 76 depends on the construction of the document. No such exclusion takes place where the document provides that the mortgagee is entitled to a fixed sum in lieu of interest, or where the deed provides that the mortgagee would be entitled to interest if he is unable to obtain any receipts.²⁰⁴⁰ When the mortgage stipulated that the mortgagee was to pay

a fixed annual sum to the mortgagor as malikhana, and that the rents and profits were to be taken in lieu of interest, and that there was to be no account except as to malikhana, redemption was decreed on payment of the principal sum less the balance due on the malikhana account.²⁰⁴¹ But when the malikhana was not to be paid to the mortgagor, and the mortgagee withheld payment as he claimed himself to be the malikhandar, the mortgagee was not liable to account, but was required to give the mortgagor an indemnity against the claim of some other person proving to be the malikhandar.²⁰⁴² In a case when the rent and profits were taken in lieu of interest and the mortgagee covenanted to pay rent to the zamindar who held by title paramount, the fact that the mortgagee afterwards escaped payment of rent did not entitle the mortgagor to get credit for his rent.²⁰⁴³ A usufructuary mortgage provided that the mortgage should be discharged by the rents and profits for 55 years, but that an annual sum of ₹60 should be paid out of the rents and profits to the mortgagor. If these payments had been made there would have been no account, but as the payments were not made, the mortgagee was held liable to account and the term of the mortgage was proportionately reduced.²⁰⁴⁴ A fallen tree is part of the produce of the land, and if the mortgage is one to which section 77 applies, the mortgagee may take it without accounting for its value.²⁰⁴⁵

A mortgagee permitted by the deed to appropriate the usufruct for interest on the principal is, by section 77, exempt from liability to account for the usufruct. However, local legislation—such as section 9, Orissa Money-lenders Act, 1939—which prescribes the maximum lawful rate of interest, would override section 77, and the mortgagee would then have to render accounts.²⁰⁴⁶

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Priority

78. Postponement of prior Mortgagee.—

Where, through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of a prior mortgagee, another person has been induced to advance money on the security of the mortgaged property, the prior mortgagee shall be postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.

[s 78.1] Priority

The priority of successive mortgages is determined by section 48, which enacts the rule qui prior est tempore potior est jure. The following Oudh case²⁰⁴⁷ is an instance of the rule: A mortgaged a share in a village X to B in 1917, and there was a provision in the mortgage that if A was dispossessed of any part of that share by other heirs, the mortgage should operate as a mortgage of a share in village Y. In 1918, A mortgaged the share in village Y to C. In 1922, A was dispossessed of part of his share in the village by co-heirs. The contingent mortgage of village Y to B did not vest till 1922, and, therefore, C's mortgage had priority over the mortgage to B. A question of priority arose in a curious way in the following case:²⁰⁴⁸ A prior mortgagee sued to enforce his mortgage making the puisne mortgagee a party. The puisne mortgagee did not appear and a decree for sale was made on the prior mortgage, but as the puisne mortgagee was not before the court, the judge erroneously made an order dismissing the suit as against him. The puisne then sued to enforce his mortgage, and claimed priority as the prior mortgagee's suit against him had been dismissed. The court got over the difficulty by applying the rule that the object of impleading a puisne mortgagee is to enable the property to be sold free from his encumbrance. The effect of dismissing the suit against the puisne was that the sale was subject to the encumbrance of the puisne mortgage, but did not affect the priority of the prior mortgage. If the mortgagor admits the validity of a puisne mortgage, the prior mortgagee cannot dispute it;²⁰⁴⁹ but the mortgagee who is first in time has priority over a subsequent mortgagee. A prior mortgage duly registered is a valid security in priority to all of a later date. Such priority will be displaced if the puisne mortgagee has redeemed the prior mortgagee.²⁰⁵⁰ The prior mortgagee does not lose priority by releasing part of his security.²⁰⁵¹

The section enacts an exception based on the doctrine of estoppel. A mortgagee need not go out of his way to give notice of his security when he hears that the mortgagor is dealing with the property. But if there is any fraud or artifice, direct or indirect, of the mortgagee, he is postponed to the subsequent mortgagee.²⁰⁵² In a Bombay case,²⁰⁵³ the one-sixth share of a member of a joint Hindu family was purchased at an execution sale by the plaintiff's son, who sold it to the defendant without telling him that the whole property was under mortgage to his father, the plaintiff. Justice West, held that the mere fact that the son bought and sold a share of the property without disclosing the existence of the mortgage was not estopped against the mortgagee; but that if there had been any active fraud or artifice, by which the mortgagee directly or indirectly had prevented the purchaser or his son from making inquiries as to title, the case might have been different. Similarly, in a Calcutta case,²⁰⁵⁴ the mortgagor, after the mortgage to the plaintiff, sold part of the property to A, and gave a second mortgage of the remainder to B. The mortgagee had led both A and B to believe that the property was unencumbered. His suit against A was barred by estoppel, and as to B the mortgagee's mortgage was postponed to that of B.

The section summarises the cases under three heads; fraud, misrepresentation, and gross negligence. These ingredients, it has been said, are disjunctive, and indicate three different kinds of conduct.²⁰⁵⁵

[s 78.2] Fraud

Fraud on the part of the mortgagee is the same as fraud on the part of anyone else. The word “fraud” is used in the section in the sense of the definition in section 17 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Under the explanation to that section, non-disclosure is not fraud unless in the circumstances of the case there is a duty to speak or unless silence is in itself equivalent to speech. Thus, there is a duty on the mortgagee to disclose his lien at a court sale. If the mortgagee brings the property to sale in execution of a money decree and the lien is not notified in the sale proclamation, he is guilty of fraud and cannot assert priority to the auction purchaser.²⁰⁵⁶ In a Bombay case,²⁰⁵⁷ the omission to notify was held not to be fraudulent concealment because the mortgage was registered, but this, it is submitted, is erroneous, for a person who is under a duty to disclose an encumbrance cannot take shelter behind a plea of constructive notice. The mortgagee need not give express notice at the time of the sale if his mortgage is notified in the sale proclamation.²⁰⁵⁸ There is no duty on the mortgagee to disclose his mortgage when attesting a puisne mortgage if he is not aware of the contents of the deed—yet where that knowledge is brought home to him and there are circumstances which show that he acted dishonestly or disingenuously, and the puisne mortgagee was in consequence deceived, the prior mortgagee will be deprived of priority.²⁰⁵⁹

[s 78.3] Misrepresentation

Misrepresentation is defined in section 18 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. It includes cases where there is no intent to deceive. An omission to notify a prior encumbrance in a sale proclamation, even if an innocent mistake, would amount to misrepresentation if the purchaser was thereby misled to his prejudice. If the mortgagee stands by and sees another lending money on the same estate without giving notice of his first mortgage, it is a misrepresentation, and he will lose his priority.²⁰⁶⁰

[s 78.4] Gross Negligence

The history of the doctrine of gross negligence has been explained in the note under the same heading under section 3. Lord Lindley in *Oliver v Hinton*²⁰⁶¹ said:

To deprive a purchaser for value without notice of a prior encumbrance, of the protection of the legal estate it is not, in my opinion, essential that he should have been guilty of fraud; it is sufficient that he has been guilty of such gross negligence as would render it unjust to deprive the prior encumbrance of his priority.

This was followed by the Calcutta High Court,²⁰⁶² dissenting from a dictum of J Jenkins that gross neglect in this section means neglect that amounts to evidence of fraud.²⁰⁶³ The Lahore High Court²⁰⁶⁴ has also dissented from the view of J Jenkins.

Ghose defines gross negligence as any act or omission by the prior mortgagee, which enables the mortgagor to deal with the property as if it was not encumbered. This is a good working definition, and may be illustrated by the case of Bridge v Jones,²⁰⁶⁵ where the mortgagee of leasehold property lent the lease to the mortgagor to enable him to raise money, telling him to give notice of the mortgage. The mortgagor raised money from a bank without giving notice, and the mortgagee was postponed to the bank. Lord Romilly in this case said that “a person who puts it in the power of another to deceive and to raise money, must take the consequences.” This case is very similar to the Madras case²⁰⁶⁶ where the mortgagee instead of retaining the deeds and insisting on their being inspected in his presence, returned them to the mortgagor to enable him to secure a fresh advance. Likewise, if the mortgagee gives loan merely on the strength of certified copies of title deeds, he would be guilty of gross negligence.²⁰⁶⁷ In a Nagpur case,²⁰⁶⁸ the mortgagee made an incorrect endorsement of satisfaction on the mortgage deed, and returned it to the mortgagor who was enabled to raise money on subsequent mortgages. The mortgagee was, therefore, postponed to the subsequent encumbrancers. However, if a mortgagee allows a mortgagor to remain in possession and the latter pays rent to the mortgagee, the former cannot be held to be negligent.²⁰⁶⁹

ILLUSTRATION

G deposited title deeds of his property with bank N to secure an overdraft. G then asked for the return of the deeds saying that he wished to sell the property and clear the overdraft. The usual practice is for the prospective purchaser to inspect the deeds in the office of the bank's solicitor. But G said he would not get a good price if the purchaser knew the bank had the deeds, and the Bank Manager returned the deeds to G. G then borrowed money from bank L on a deposit of the deeds falsely representing that there was no encumbrance on the property. The mortgage to bank L had priority over the mortgage to bank N.²⁰⁷⁰

However, there is no negligence if the mortgagee inquires for the deeds and the mortgagor gives a reasonable excuse that they are lost or that he never had any and that his title is prescriptive; and if the mortgagee honestly accepts the owner's statements he will not be postponed if it turns out afterwards that the mortgagor had deeds;²⁰⁷¹ but not if the owner merely says he has not got the deed and the mortgagor makes no further inquiry.²⁰⁷² Again, the mortgagee does not lose priority when he gives the deeds to a sub-mortgagee who returns them to the mortgagor,²⁰⁷³ or when the non-possession of the deeds is reasonably accounted for.²⁰⁷⁴ But when the mortgagee allowed the title deeds to remain for four years in the possession of the mortgagor and, could give no reasonable explanation, he was postponed.²⁰⁷⁵

When a vendor had taken a mortgage to secure the greater part of the price, and knowing that the buyer was impecunious and a bad paymaster, allowed him to retain the deeds, he was postponed to a second mortgage by deposit of title deeds.²⁰⁷⁶ If the prior mortgagee has done nothing to induce a subsequent mortgagee to advance money, he cannot be postponed simply because there has been a delay in the registration of his mortgage.²⁰⁷⁷ In an Allahabad case,²⁰⁷⁸ an incorrect description of the land in the prior mortgage led to a second mortgagee advancing money in the belief that the land was not encumbered. The mistake was due to an error in the mortgagor's title deeds, and the prior mortgagee would have discovered the mistake if he had examined the revenue registers. His omission, to do so was held not to be such gross negligence as to justify his being deprived of property. The ratio decidendi seems to be that the omission was want of caution, rather than gross negligence.

78. Postponement of prior Mortgagee.—

The rule as to priority, it is submitted, was misapplied in a Lahore case.²⁰⁷⁹ The first mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage for ₹99, but the mortgagee omitted to register the deed or to take possession or to apply for mutation of names in the revenue records, and yet he was not postponed to a second mortgage with possession. The court was under the erroneous impression that gross negligence must be fraudulent. The act or omission must be the proximate cause of the change of position.²⁰⁸⁰ For even if the mortgagee allows the deeds to remain with the mortgagor, he will not be postponed if the second mortgagee advances the money without investigating the title or searching the register.²⁰⁸¹ One of the facts to be taken into consideration is the existence of a universal system of registration.²⁰⁸² Two Madras cases on this point are, it is submitted, incorrect.²⁰⁸³ To constitute a valid equitable mortgage, it has in some cases been held that it is not necessary that all the deeds of title should be deposited. It may, therefore, happen that an equitable mortgage is created by the deposit of some deeds with a first mortgagee, and then another equitable mortgage is created over the same property by the deposit of the remaining deeds with a second mortgagee. In such cases, it is a question of fact whether the omission of the first mortgagee to require the deposit of the remaining deeds is evidence of such gross negligence as to deprive him of priority.

[s 78.5] Liability of Mortgagor Not Affected

Questions of priority only arise between successive mortgagees. They do not affect the liability of the mortgagor. This is illustrated by the case of Padarath Halwai v Ram Nain.²⁰⁸⁴

There was a first mortgage of villages A and B to S; second mortgage of village to L; third mortgage of villages A and B to S, for the amount due on the first mortgage and a further advance; and a fourth mortgage of village to L. L sued on the second and fourth mortgages for sale of villages A, making S a party. The court by mistake overlooked the priority of the first mortgage to S and directed the sale proceeds of village A to be paid first to satisfy the second mortgage, then the first and then the fourth. The second mortgage was fully satisfied, and the first mortgage partly satisfied out of the sale proceeds. The fourth mortgage was not satisfied and so, village B was sold under a personal decree under section 90 and purchased by P. S then sued on his third mortgage and the purchaser of B claimed that village B was relieved of all liabilities under the first mortgage by reason of the failure of S to insist upon his priority in respect of that mortgage. Their Lordships said that it was true that if S has appealed against the decree of the subordinate judge he could have had his interest as first mortgagee protected, and could, on the sale of A, have obtained payment of the amount then due under that mortgage, but the fact that he had not done so did not disentitle him from recovering the full amount of his claim in this suit. P as purchaser of the equity of redemption was in the position of the mortgagor, and his liability was not affected by the fact that S had lost priority owing to the erroneous order of the court.

[s 78.6] Liability of Purchaser Not Affected

The liability of a purchaser is not affected by section 78, for the section applies in cases of successive mortgages, and not to the case of a mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser.²⁰⁸⁵ On the other hand, a purchaser of an equity of redemption is not affected by further advances made after his purchase, though in a Bombay case the purchaser was held to have lost priority on the very doubtful ground that he had allowed the mortgagee to believe that the mortgagor was still the owner.²⁰⁸⁶ In a later Bombay case,²⁰⁸⁷ the mortgagee paid only part of the mortgage money at the time of the mortgage, and the remainder after the mortgagor had sold a portion of the property mortgaged to a third person. The purchaser was only liable for the amount advanced prior to his purchase.

[s 78.6.1] Res judicata

A claim to priority may also be lost by res judicata. When a puisne mortgagee sued to redeem a prior mortgagee and the latter omitted to set up an earlier mortgage to which he was subrogated, a suit subsequently brought on that mortgage against the puisne mortgagee is barred by res judicata.²⁰⁸⁸ Similarly, in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v Ambika Persad Singh,²⁰⁸⁹ a claim to priority was barred by res judicata, and by limitation. The fifth mortgagee sued for sale claiming to have paid off the first mortgagee and to be subrogated to him and to have priority over the second, third and fourth mortgagees. But the second and third mortgagees had previously sued for sale making the fifth a party, and in that suit, the fifth had not claimed to be subrogated to the first. The claim to priority was, therefore, barred as against these mortgagees by res judicata. It was also barred by limitation as against all intermediate mortgagees, as the suit was filed after the period of limitation (under Article 132)²⁰⁹⁰ when the enforcement of the first mortgage had expired.

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Priority

79. Mortgage to secure uncertain amount when maximum is expressed.—

If a mortgage made to secure future advances, the performance of an engagement or the balance of a running account, expresses the maximum to be secured thereby, a subsequent mortgage of the same property shall, if made with notice of the prior mortgage, be postponed to the prior mortgage in respect of all advances or debits not exceeding the maximum, though made or allowed with notice of the subsequent mortgage.

ILLUSTRATION

A mortgages Sultanpur to his bankers, B & Co, to secure the balance of his account with them to the extent of ₹10,000. A then mortgages Sultanpur to C, to secure ₹10,000, C having notice of the mortgage to B & Co, and C gives notice to B & Co of the second mortgage. At the date of the second mortgage, the balance due to B & Co does not exceed ₹5,000. B & Co subsequently advanced to A sums making the balance of the account against him exceed the sum of ₹10,000. B & Co are entitled, to the extent of ₹10,000, to priority over C.

[s 79.1] Priority as to Subsequent Advances

This section like section 78, enacts an exception to the rule of priority. In accordance with that rule, a mortgagee who makes a subsequent advance is, as regards that subsequent advance, puisne to an intermediate mortgagee. Thus:

(1) A mortgages to B

(2) A mortgages to C

79. Mortgage to secure uncertain amount when maximum is expressed.—

(3) A, for a fresh advance, against mortgages to B

then B's mortgage (1) is prior to C's mortgage (2). Even if B were to take a renewal of his mortgage (1) at the time of making a fresh advance on mortgage (3) the latter mortgage would be, puisne to mortgage (2), though he would not lose priority as to mortgage (1).

However, the exception made by this section is that if B's mortgage (1) is to secure a present advance as well as future advances up to a fixed maximum, then any further advance made by B within that maximum will be treated as part of the first mortgage and take priority over C's mortgage (2)—provided C had notice of that first mortgage. Thus, if the mortgage (1) to B is to secure the balance of A's account up to a maximum of ₹1,000 and ₹600 is advanced at the time of the mortgage; and after the mortgage (2) to C who has notice of mortgage, (1), B advances the balance of ₹400, this advance is not treated as a third mortgage, but as a fulfillment of the first mortgage, and has priority over C's mortgage (2).

The two elements to be considered are:

(i) whether the subsequent mortgagee took with notice of the prior mortgage; and

(ii) whether the prior mortgage expresses the maximum amount to be secured.²⁰⁹¹

In a case when the prior mortgage was registered only a day before the second mortgage, it was held that the second mortgagee could not have had notice of it.²⁰⁹² The section, however, has no application when the prior mortgagee claims interest only on the sum advanced under his mortgage prior to the second mortgage. The prior mortgagee has priority for the amount of such interest.²⁰⁹³

[s 79.2] Express the Maximum

These words do not import an obligation to advance up to a maximum limit. The security is for further advances which may, or may not be made. When a mortgage was executed of a leasehold by the lessee to secure payment of rent and interest on defaulted installments for a period of nine years, and the rent per annum was stated, it was held that the maximum secured was expressed.²⁰⁹⁴ Their Lordships said:

Even if we assume for a moment that the amount of interest was not sufficiently specified, there can be no question that the aggregate rent payable under the lease could be determined by a simple arithmetical calculation ... We hold, therefore, that the prior mortgage expressed the maximum to be secured thereby within the meaning of section 79.²⁰⁹⁵

79. Mortgage to secure uncertain amount when maximum is expressed.—

This is on the maxim id certum est quod certum fieri potest. If no maximum is fixed, the mortgage will not have priority as to future advances. This is illustrated by the Privy Council decision in Imperial Bank of India v U Rai Gyaw.²⁰⁹⁶ In that case, the bank was equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds for a present, and for future advances. The mortgagor then granted a legal registered mortgage of some of the property, and subsequently took a further advance from the bank. The Judicial Committee held that the bank was not entitled to priority as to such further advances, as the equitable mortgage did not express the maximum to be advanced in future. The argument was pressed upon their Lordships that equitable mortgages were granted to finance commercial operations, and that the exigencies of business required immediate advances, and preclude the possibility of a search of the registers, but Lord Dunedin pointed out that the remedy was to fix the maximum in the first mortgage so as to secure priority. It was contended that the subsequent mortgagee must have notice of the prior mortgage which expresses the maximum, but as to this it was said that if the subsequent mortgagee advances money without asking for the title deeds such notice should be imputed to him under section 3 of TP Act, 1882.

[s 79.3] Charge

The section was applied in the case of a charge created by a partition deed, which provided that “the common family debts should be discharged by the respective sharers to whom they fell, as per schedule of the document, and that, if any sharer failed to discharge accordingly, such sharer’s properties should be liable for such debts and for the losses that might happen to the family.” One sharer defaulted, and a creditor obtained a decree against all the sharers. The other sharers discharged this decree, and claimed priority against a subsequent mortgagee of the defaulter, and the claim was allowed; the obligation created by the partition deed being treated as a charge for the performance of a future engagement.²⁰⁹⁷

Marshalling and Contribution

²⁰⁹⁸[81. Marshalling securities.—

If the owner of two or more properties mortgages them to one person and then mortgages one or more of the properties to another person, the subsequent mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the prior mortgage-debt satisfied out of the property or properties not mortgaged to him, so far as the same will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee or of any other person who has for consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.]

[s 81.1] Amendment

This section has been substituted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 81.2] Movables

This section applies to the mortgage of immovable property, and not to the hypothecation of movables. Thus, where certain immovable property is mortgaged to a certain person, and under the same document some cattle are hypothecated to him, and the immovable property is again mortgaged to another person, it was held that section 81 had no application, and the subsequent mortgagee could not insist that the prior mortgagee should first liquidate the debt due to him out of the cattle hypothecated.²⁰⁹⁹ Where a claim to marshalling has been raised as an issue in a suit and has been decided on the merits, the matter is not open to a fresh contest in execution.²¹⁰⁰

[s 81.3] Notice

Under the old section, the second mortgagee had no right to have the securities marshalled, unless he had no notice of the prior mortgage.²¹⁰¹ The condition as to notice seems to have been taken from a statement of the rule by Lord Hardwicke in the old case of Lanoy v Athol (Duke and Duchess),²¹⁰² but later cases appear to have been decided without reference to notice.²¹⁰³ In cases to which the TP Act, 1882 did not apply, a subsequent mortgagee was held to have an equity to call for marshalling of securities even though he had taken with notice of the prior mortgage.²¹⁰⁴ The principle that it should not depend upon the will of one creditor to disappoint another, is quite independent of the question of notice; and the rights of the prior mortgagee and of another encumbrancers are sufficiently safeguarded by the words “but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee or of any other person who has for consideration acquired an interest in any of the properties.” The condition as to notice has accordingly been omitted in this section. The right to call for marshalling is, however, subject to other conditions.

[s 81.4] Common Debtor

The first of these is that there must be a common debtor, and marshalling applies only when there are different debts realizable out of the several properties of that one common debtor; and so, the section requires that both mortgages shall be by the same owner.²¹⁰⁵ It does not apply to a case more than one debtor mortgaging their separate properties jointly for contracting the debt.²¹⁰⁶ This qualification was applied in a Madras case,²¹⁰⁷ where a manager of a joint and undivided Hindu family mortgaged the family property, and then made a mortgage of his own share for his personal debt. The second mortgagee had no right of marshalling, for the first mortgagor was the coparcenary, and the second mortgagor the individual coparcener. Again, when A and B mortgaged properties in which they had separate interest to C, and then B alone mortgaged his interest to D, it was held that D had no right of marshalling.²¹⁰⁸

[s 81.5] No Prejudice to First Mortgagee

Marshalling being a rule of equity will not be enforced so as to work injustice to the prior creditor. The prior mortgagee cannot be compelled to proceed against a security which may be insufficient or doubtful or which may involve him in litigation.²¹⁰⁹ Again, marshalling has never been enforced unless the properties are separate parcels. Thus, if the puisne mortgage was of a fractional share of the prior mortgage, the puisne mortgagee could not compel the prior mortgagee to proceed against the fractional residue. A proper price would not be realized, and such a procedure would prejudice both the prior mortgagee and the mortgagor. In a Rangoon case,²¹¹⁰ a puisne mortgagee was allowed to require a prior mortgagee to proceed first against a property which he had “released” from his mortgage. It is not, however, clear from the judgment whether the property was still a part of the prior mortgagee’s security. The Madras High Court has construed the words “but not so as to prejudice the rights of the prior mortgagee” to mean that the first mortgagee’s right to sell whichever property he pleases cannot be curtailed, and that the right of marshalling can only be exercised against the mortgagor.²¹¹¹ This construction would make the section a dead letter, and the omission of the words “as against the seller” which occurred in the old section 56 shows that this view is no longer tenable. In some cases the court, in exercise of its discretion under O XXXIV, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, has adjusted the equities by requiring a prior mortgagee to proceed first against properties that are not subject to a puisne mortgage.²¹¹²

The question whether prejudice is being caused is purely a question of fact, and is intimately connected with the value of the property against which the first mortgagee is directed to proceed in the first instance.²¹¹³

[s 81.6] No Prejudice to Other Encumbrancers

For the same reason marshalling will not be enforced so as to prejudice another encumbrancer. For instance:

A mortgages X and Y to B

A mortgages X to*C*

A mortgages Y to D

[81. Marshalling securities.—

then if C were to insist that B should pay himself wholly out of Y, there might be nothing left for D. The court would, therefore, apportion B's mortgage rateably between X and Y, and the surplus of X would go to C and the surplus of Y to D. This rule was referred to by the Calcutta High Court in a case in which marshalling was refused as the rights of subsequent purchasers would be affected.²¹¹⁴

[s 81.7] Contract to the Contrary

The right of marshalling may be excluded by contract. Thus, if A mortgages X and Y to B, and A then mortgages X to C, C will have no right to require B to realize his mortgage as far as possible out of Y if C's mortgage has been made expressly subject to and after satisfaction of B's mortgage. The converse is also true, for if there is a third encumbrancer thus:—

A mortgages X and Y to B

A mortgages X to*C*

A mortgages X and Y to D

then if D's mortgage has been made expressly subject to and after satisfaction of the two prior mortgages, D could not prevent C from marshalling against him.²¹¹⁵

[s 81.8] Funds on the Same Footing

Another condition for the application of the equity is that securities must be on the same footing. The section deals only with successive mortgages. A fund, and a right of action are not marshalled.²¹¹⁶ If the double creditor has a charge on one fund, and a right of set off against another fund, he cannot be compelled by a second encumbrancer on the first fund to abandon his charge, and rely on his right of set off.²¹¹⁷

[s 81.9] Right of Purchaser

The right to claim marshalling is not confined to puisne mortgagees. The right of purchasers is recognised in section 56. A puisne mortgagee who has a right of marshalling against a prior mortgagee does not lose that right because he has purchased the equity of redemption.²¹¹⁸ The auction purchaser of part of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree on a prior mortgage cannot claim the benefit of this section as regards the marshalling of securities so as to prejudice the person who has purchased the other item of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree of a prior mortgagee. The case is governed by section 84 of the TP Act, 1882, and the former is entitled to contribution ratably from the latter.²¹¹⁹

ILLUSTRATION

[81. Marshalling securities.—

sale first and realize his security as far as possible out of Y.²¹²⁰

[s 81.10] Right of Volunteers

It seems that in England, a grantee under a voluntary conveyance may also claim the right of marshalling. If a mortgage comprises of both settled and unsettled estates, it will be thrown as far as possible on the unsettled estates in England.²¹²¹

In India, however, the section refers to prejudice to the rights of the first mortgagee or any other person who has, for consideration, acquired an interest in either property. This would appear to exclude volunteers.

[s 81.11] Right of Surety

A surety who has given his property as security for the debt may require the creditor to resort to the other property of the debtor first.²¹²²

[s 81.12] Lessee

A lessee has no right to claim marshalling. If a mortgagee of several properties is executing a decree for sale, the lessee of one of the properties has no right to require that the other properties should be sold first.²¹²³

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Marshalling and Contribution

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—²¹²⁴

Where property subject to a mortgage belongs to two or more persons having distinct and separate rights of ownership therein, the different shares in or parts of such property owned by such persons are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, and, for the purpose of determining the rate at which each such share or part shall contribute, the value thereof shall be deemed to be its value at the date of the mortgage after deduction of the amount of any other mortgage or charge to which it may have been subject on that date].

Where, of two properties belonging to the same owner, one is mortgaged to secure one debt and then both are mortgaged to secure another debt, and the former debt is paid out of the former property, each property is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the latter debt after deducting the amount of the former debt from the value of the property out of which it has been paid.

Nothing in this section applies to a property liable under section 81 to the claim of the ²¹²⁵[subsequent] mortgagee.

[s 82.1] Amendments

The first para of the section was substituted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 82.2] Contribution

Marshalling settles the rights of competing mortgages, while contribution settles the rights of mortgagors of several shares in one property. Marshalling requires that the creditor who has the means of satisfying his debt out of several funds shall so exercise his rights as not to take from another creditor the funds which form his only security. Contribution requires that a fund which is equally liable with another to pay a debt shall not escape because the creditor has been paid out of that other fund alone.

²¹²⁶ It, therefore, follows that such of the mortgaged properties as have been sold for the realization of the mortgage money and have thus contributed to the mortgage debt are not liable to a claim for contribution; and that such a claim can only be advanced by the owners of those properties which have contributed more than their ratable share of the debt, and against those portions of the mortgaged property only, which have not contributed to the mortgage debt, and have benefited by the sale of the property of the claimants for contributions.²¹²⁷

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

ILLUSTRATION

Three brothers A, B and C mortgaged their joint property first to D, and then to E. A, B and C effected a partition of the property into three shares. D brought a suit for sale on his mortgage and realized the amount by the sale of A's share. A obtained a decree for contribution against the shares of B and C. Thereafter, B and C redeemed the puisne mortgage to E and claimed contribution from A. Held that they had no right to contribution as A's share had been sold to satisfy the prior mortgage debt.²¹²⁸

The first para enacts the general rule that if several properties whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged for one debt, they shall contribute ratably to its discharge, after deducting from each property the value of any prior encumbrance to which it may be subject. As the mortgage debt is indivisible, the mortgagee may realize the whole debt out of only one parcel of the property mortgaged and in that case, it is only fair that the other should be liable to contribute. To quote the words of the Privy Council:

if a person owning one property subject, with the property of other persons, to a common mortgage, has paid off the mortgage, he is entitled to call upon the owners of the other property to bear their proper proportion of the burden.²¹²⁹

The suit for contribution is maintainable when the whole of the mortgage debt has been paid out of parts of the mortgaged property, and it is not necessary that the whole of the debt was paid out of the properties of the plaintiff alone.²¹³⁰

The second para is only an illustration of the first and assumes that payment of the prior encumbrances has been made in which case, the amount of the encumbrance is deducted from the value of that property in ascertaining its ratable contribution.²¹³¹ Thus supposing:—

Property X is mortgaged for ₹200 to..... A

then, if X and Y are each worth ₹500 and are sold wherein X is sold to C and Y to D, the contribution of C and D to the mortgage of ₹400 is in the ratio of 300 : 500, and C is liable for ₹150 and D for ₹250. As a consequence of this rule, the person who has paid in excess of his share or who has discharged the whole, is entitled to be reimbursed by the others. Thus, if B has recovered the whole debt of ₹400 from C's property X, C would be entitled to recover ₹250 from D by a suit for contribution.

Both, section 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 and section 82 of TP Act, 1882 deal with the question of contribution.²¹³² Section 43 is a general provision dealing with contracts generally. This section applies to mortgages, and excludes section 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Where three persons jointly mortgaged their three properties, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the remedy of the mortgagors is to sue for redemption under section 92, and then to claim contribution from his other co-mortgagors under this section.²¹³³

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

The old section used the word “encumbrance”, which is a term of wider connotation than mortgage.²¹³⁴ With reference to this word, the Judicial Committee have held that if one of the properties, the subject of a second mortgage, is along with different properties the subject of a first mortgage, the value of the property for purposes of contribution to the second mortgage-debt would be ascertained by deducting not the whole of the first mortgage-debt, but the ratable share of that debt.²¹³⁵ Sir George Lowndes in delivering the judgment of the Board said:

Where properties A, B and C are made security for one mortgage, if property A is subject to a prior encumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, their Lordships think that the ratable share to be attributed to A under the prior encumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage.

In valuing the property for the purpose of ratable contribution, the liability on the other property is to be taken into account.²¹³⁶

[s 82.3] Two or More Persons Having Distinct and Separate Rights

These words include not only cases where several properties are mortgaged, but also cases where the property becomes divided after the mortgage either by the death of the mortgagor, or by partition, or by the sale of shares. The old section merely referred to several properties mortgaged. The question was raised in a Madras case²¹³⁷ whether this covered a case of subsequent division. The amendment answers the question, but even under the old section, it was held that the rule of contribution would be applicable as between shares purchased from the mortgagor,²¹³⁸ or heirs of the mortgagor,²¹³⁹ or in cases of partition between joint mortgagors.²¹⁴⁰ This section applies to mortgagors inter se, and gives one mortgagor a right of contribution from the other property. The right cannot be availed of against the mortgagee or the auction purchaser.²¹⁴¹ Co-judgment debtors are in the position of joint promisors. Each is jointly and severally liable to the decree holder. Inter se, each is liable to contribute towards discharge of the decretal debt.²¹⁴²

[s 82.4] Obligation Not Personal

The obligation to contribute is not personal. The section attaches liability to the properties.²¹⁴³ Contribution is in proportion to the value of the properties,²¹⁴⁴ and not according to the extent of the benefit the co-mortgagors have received from the mortgage money.²¹⁴⁵ The owner of the property has an option either to pay his ratable share, or to allow it to be realized out of the property.²¹⁴⁶

[s 82.5] Prior Encumbrance

The amount of a prior encumbrance is deducted for the purpose of ascertaining the ratable contribution to a subsequent debt. However, if the amount due on the earlier mortgage on one property exceeds the value of that property, it follows that the whole amount of the second mortgage is recoverable from the other properties,²¹⁴⁷ for the value of that property for the purpose of contribution is nil. The same result ensues when the prior mortgagee has realized the first mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property.

Thus let us suppose that—

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

X is mortgaged to B and X and Y are mortgaged to C

If B sells X in execution of a decree on his mortgage, the whole burden of C's mortgage must fall on Y. An illustration of this rule is the case of Bohra Thakur Das v Collector of Aligarh.²¹⁴⁸ The mortgagor mortgaged the village of Kachaura to N and another in 1868 by simple mortgage, and then again mortgaged an 11 biswa share of Kachaura and an eight biswa share of another village Agrana to N in 1870. The plaintiffs in 1873, purchased the equity of redemption of Agrana. The first mortgagees obtained a decree on their mortgage and in execution, purchased the 11 biswa share of Kachaura. The plaintiffs then sued to redeem the second mortgage, and contended that as the mortgagee had purchased the 11 biswa share of Kachaura, they were only liable to pay a proportionate share of the debt of redemption. As to this the High Court said:

The answer to this question depends on the circumstances under which the purchase was made. Supposing A and B are mortgagors of certain property which they have jointly mortgaged to C. Now if C, the mortgagee himself, purchases the equity of redemption from A, it is clear that he cannot be permitted to throw upon B's share the whole burden of his mortgage. In such a case, B's share can only be saddled with the proportionate amount of the mortgaged debt. But if, as is the case here, C's purchase was at a sale in execution of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage, the case is different. The learned Judge finds that the mortgagee bought the Kachaura property at an open sale and not subject to any charge and that he must be presumed to have paid fair value for it. The case then stands thus—the whole of the Kachaura property has been swallowed up by the first mortgage and consequently the burden of the second mortgage falls entirely on the Agrana property. The owner of the latter property has under the circumstances no right of contribution against the owner of the Kachaura property.

The case went on appeal to the Privy Council,²¹⁴⁹ and their Lordships said:

As Kachaura was sold and purchased by N in execution and part satisfaction of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage of 1868, the courts in India properly overruled the appellants' contention which has not been pressed before this Board.

Another illustration of the rule is the case of Sesha Ayyar v Krishna.²¹⁵⁰ The facts, omitting irrelevant details, were:

X and Y were mortgaged to R and X and Z were mortgaged to P

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

R executed his decree for sale on the first mortgage by the sale of X. P then sued to enforce his mortgage, but as X had been sold by the prior mortgagee, the whole burden of P's mortgage fell on Z. In this case, P sought not only to realize his mortgage by the sale of Z, but he also claimed contribution against Y, which had been sold to D. This claim was not admitted and the reason given in the judgment is as follows:

In the present case, the plaintiffs who certainly cannot be in a better position than they would be if they had simply bought part of the mortgaged property subsequently sold under R's decree, had their opportunity, and they might by paying off the debt and saving the property from sale, have acquired a right of contribution secured by a lien on the other property. They would then have stood in a position analogous to that of one of several mortgagors who has redeemed the whole property and claims to take advantage of section 95 of the Act. But the plaintiffs did nothing and, therefore, no right to contribution arose and the other property stood free from any lien.

This passage has been criticized by Ghose as suggesting that no right of contribution arises in the case of an enforced sale. However, it is doubtful if the judge meant any more than indicating that the case did not fall under the doctrine of subrogation. In Raghavachari v Venkatanarayana,²¹⁵¹ J Madhavan Nair relying on Rambhadrachar v Sreenivasa,²¹⁵² doubted the correctness of the above passage. It is difficult to see why payment in cash by a puisne mortgagee to discharge the prior mortgage should be treated differently from discharge of the prior mortgage by sale of part of the mortgaged property in which the puisne mortgagee is interested. This view was expressed by J Banerji in Ibn Hasan v Brijbhukan.²¹⁵³ The judgment in Sesha Ayyar's case also contains the following passage:

In our opinion section 82 does not justify the notion that a man who has bought a property which at one time was, with other property, subject to a mortgage, may, after the mortgage debt has passed into a decree and after the decree has been satisfied by the sale of that other property, be held responsible for part of the mortgage debt.

This passage was referred to in a Bombay case²¹⁵⁴ by J Chandavarkar who hesitated to follow it. The decision in Sesha Iyer v Krishna has since been overruled by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Narayan v Nallamal.²¹⁵⁵ The Full Bench held that in deciding Sesha Iyer's case, the learned judges did not have sufficient regard to the wording of section 82 even as it stood before the amending Act of 1929. The Full Bench expressed the view that a second mortgagee did not stand in the shoes of the mortgagor, that he held a mortgagee's interest in the property and the fact that some other person had previously received a mortgagee's interest did not detract from the nature of his interest, that when a person agreed to lend money on the security of a second mortgage of a portion of the property, he knew that the first mortgagee had the benefit of the whole of the property; and that the first mortgagee, if he called in the mortgage loan, would have the right to cause the whole of the hypotheca to be sold, and that if the first mortgagee did not cause the whole of the hypotheca to be sold, the second mortgagee had the right to call upon the holder of the unsold portion to contribute his share of the principal debt. It was held, therefore, that when a portion of the mortgaged property was sold and the sale proceeds were sufficient to pay off the mortgage over the entire property, the subsequent mortgagee of the portion sold was entitled to sue the holder of the unsold portion for contribution, irrespective of whether he pays cash to discharge the first mortgage. According to the Bombay High Court, the principle of section 82 can apply where the mortgage is subsisting. It applies even more when the mortgage has been paid off out of only some of the properties mortgaged and the owner or the person interested in the properties from which the mortgage has been paid off then, has a right to claim contribution from the owner of other properties which were liable under the mortgage, but which were not called upon to pay off.²¹⁵⁶

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

Cases in the footnote²¹⁵⁷ are further instances of a prior mortgagee's sale removing property from the scope of a second mortgage. A puisne mortgagee may claim for contribution in a suit for sale. Such claim is not premature.²¹⁵⁸

[s 82.6] Mortgagor Sells Part and Retains a Share

If the mortgagor sells part of the mortgaged property and retains part, and the mortgage debt is realized by the sale of the part retained by the mortgagor, the mortgagor's share cannot claim contribution.²¹⁵⁹ The reason for this is clear, for the mortgagor who has sold shares to others cannot derogate from his grant by calling upon the other to contribute to the discharge of the mortgage. But if the mortgagor has sold only the equity of redemption of part of the property, his vendee is in the position of a co-mortgagor, and the mortgagor can claim contribution against him.²¹⁶⁰

(1) A mortgages two properties X and Y to B. A sells X to C alleging that the mortgage to B has been discharged. Thereafter, B realizes his mortgage by the sale of Y only. A is not entitled to contribution from C.²¹⁶¹

(2) A mortgages 8 villages to B. A then sells his interest in 3 of the villages to C. B realizes his mortgage by the sale of two of A's villages. A is entitled to contribution from C.²¹⁶²

The principle of contribution to the mortgage debts has been discussed in Re Mainwaring, Mainwaring v Verden.²¹⁶³ The following propositions may be deduced from the decision of the Court of Appeal:

- (i) where the mortgagor transfers the whole of the mortgaged properties subject to the mortgage, the transferee may in the equity be called upon to indemnify the mortgagor who may have to pay the mortgage debt on his personal covenant to pay the same. This is how the dictum of Lord Eldon in *Waring v Ward*²¹⁶⁴ was explained;
- (ii) where the mortgagor transfers the whole mortgaged property, but not subject to the mortgage, ie, without disclosing that there is a mortgage or representing that the mortgage has been paid off, so far from the transferee being bound to indemnify the transferor, the transferor is bound to indemnify the assignee as was held in Re Best,²¹⁶⁵
- (iii) where the mortgagor transfers a part of the mortgaged property subject to the mortgage and retains the remaining properties, the prima facie rule is that the mortgage debt as between the transferor and the transferee should be borne ratably in proportion to the respective values of the items of the mortgaged properties;
- (iv) where the mortgagor transfers a part of the mortgaged property without reference to the mortgage and retains the remaining mortgaged properties, the mortgagor is not entitled to any indemnity or contribution as was held in Re Durby's Estate.²¹⁶⁶

[s 82.7] Not Applicable to Mortgagee

Contribution is only applicable between the mortgagors inter se. It does not affect the mortgagee's power to enforce his mortgage against all or any of the properties mortgaged to him.²¹⁶⁷ Section 60 recognises the integrity of the mortgage security, and the section does not empower the mortgagors to require the mortgagee to split his lien, and distribute the debt among the mortgagors ratably.²¹⁶⁸ The mortgagee cannot, by the act of parties entitled to the equity of redemption, be deprived of his right to resort to any estate comprised in the

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

mortgage—so long as he has not released or given it up, and so long as the mortgage is legally kept alive. This principle was enunciated in the case of Chinnery v Evans,²¹⁶⁹ and was followed by the Calcutta High Court in a case²¹⁷⁰ where a suit on the mortgage would have been time-barred, but for payments made by the original mortgagor, and it was held that the remedy not being time-barred, the mortgage could also be enforced against a part of the property which was in the possession of a purchaser. This right of the mortgagee can only be curtailed under the equity of marshalling, either under section 56 or section 81. However, the courts have sometimes controlled this right by directions under the repealed section 88, now the Code of Civil Procedure O XXXIV, rule 4.²¹⁷¹

[s 82.8] Mortgagee Purchasing Share in Equity of Redemption Liable

The mortgagee, however, may become liable to contribution when he purchases a share in the equity of redemption, for he then splits his security and a co-mortgagor can redeem for a proportionate part. This is the principle enacted in the last clause of section 60, for the vesting of part of the equity of redemption in the mortgagee is tantamount to a discharge or satisfaction of a proportionate part of the mortgage debt;²¹⁷² and if the mortgagee after his purchase sues for sale of the remaining property, he must give credit for a proportionate part of the debt,²¹⁷³ and on the other hand the mortgagor is entitled to redeem the residue for a proportionate part of the debt.²¹⁷⁴ In *Bisheshur Dial v Ram Samp*²¹⁷⁵ the principle is stated as follows:

When the mortgagee buys at auction the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property, such purchase has, in the absence of fraud, the effect of discharging and extinguishing that portion of the mortgage debt which was chargeable on the property purchased by him, that is to say, a portion of the debt which bears the same ratio to the whole amount of the debt that the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the whole of the property comprised in the mortgage.

This principle has been followed in Punjab where the TP Act, 1882 was not in force.²¹⁷⁶ In applying the principle, the ratio which the value of the items purchased bears to the value of the whole of the mortgaged property is to be taken into account, and not the amount of the debt discharged.²¹⁷⁷

The decree was extinguished pro tanto and C could only execute the decree for three-quarters of the amount against the residue of the property.²¹⁷⁸

(2) A mortgages a village to B and then mortgages one third of the same village to C. C brings a suit for sale on his mortgage and purchases one third of the village subject to B's mortgage. B obtains a decree for sale on his mortgage, C pays the amount of the decree and set aside the sale. C has a right of contribution in respect of two third of B's decree.²¹⁷⁹

(Note that the second illustration is a case of subrogation under section 92 of the present Act. B's mortgage as to one third share is extinguished and C is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee B as to two third of the village.)

(3) A mortgages, properties X and Y to B. A sells X to C subject to B's mortgage. A then mortgages Y to D. B obtains a decree for sale on his mortgage. D pays the amount of the decree and averts the sale. D is entitled to contribution against C.²¹⁸⁰

(4) A, a mortgagee, purchased one-fourth of one of the mortgaged properties for ₹3,800. The value of that portion was ₹18,000. It was held that A's mortgage debt was satisfied to the extent of ₹14,200 and he could enforce the unsatisfied portion of the debt against the other parts of the security.²¹⁸¹

However, if the mortgagee buys a share in the equity of redemption but not a share in the property itself, he has paid a higher price and the liability to discharge that share of the mortgage debt is on the mortgagor, and not on him. In such a case, he can enforce the whole of the mortgage debt against the rest of the property.²¹⁸²

If there are successive mortgages of two properties to the same mortgagee and he realizes first one and then the other in successive suits, his first purchase is only of the equity of redemption, and he is liable to contribution in the second suit.²¹⁸³ In *Kaliprosunno v Kamini Soonduri*²¹⁸⁴ there were two mortgages by conditional sale of several villages. The plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption of one village, and then took an assignment of the mortgages. He then sought to escape contribution by foreclosing the first mortgage as to the remaining villages, and suing for a personal decree on the second mortgage. This, however, was not permitted and the foreclosure of the first mortgage was reopened, and he was made to contribute to both mortgages. The case of *Fakiraya v Gadigaya*²¹⁸⁵ is a good illustration of a mortgagee on purchasing part of the equity of redemption, being liable to contribution. Three fields and a house were mortgaged to the plaintiff's uncle for ₹2,000. The uncle got a money decree against the mortgagor and sold the property. The fields he purchased himself and the house was purchased by the first defendant. The plaintiff who had succeeded to his uncle's rights sued on the mortgage, and at the time of the suit the mortgage debt had increased to ₹4,000. The fields were valued at ₹3,600 and the house at ₹340. The first defendant was, therefore, liable for $340/3940 \times 4000 = ₹345$. In this case, J Fulton in a dissenting judgment said that as the mortgagee had brought to sale the equity of redemption instead of enforcing his mortgage and bringing the property to sale free of encumbrance, there was an equity requiring satisfaction of the mortgage debt primarily out of the share purchased by the mortgagee. The sale was before the TP Act, 1882 came into force in Bombay, but even if the principle of section 99 (now the Code of Civil Procedure, O XXXIV, rule 14) were applied, the only equity was that of the mortgagor to treat the plaintiff mortgagee's purchase as of a trustee. However, the defendant could not avail himself of this equity, for he held the house under the same title.

It was at one time supposed that the mortgagee was accountable to the mortgagor if he paid less than the full value for the property; but it is now settled that even if the value of the property exceeds what is due on the mortgage, yet, in the absence of fraud, the mortgage debt is not discharged but only a portion of it which bears the same proportion to the whole amount of the debt as the property purchased bears to the whole property mortgaged.²¹⁸⁶ The fact that the property was purchased at a low price does not affect the case in any way.²¹⁸⁷

If the mortgagee releases any part of the property mortgaged, he only diminishes his own security, and the rest of the property remains subject to the mortgage for the full amount.²¹⁸⁸

So when a part of the property mortgaged was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and by consent of the mortgagors the compensation money was applied in discharge of an unsecured debt due by the mortgagor to the mortgagees, subsequent transferees of the equity of redemption could not claim credit for the amount.²¹⁸⁹ If the interest in the equity of redemption has been divided either by partition or part-sale before the release, the burden on the shares not released is increased. The holders of such shares have a right of contribution against the share released.²¹⁹⁰

Before that section was amended by the insertion of the word “only,” it was generally thought that a release by a mortgagee of part of the property mortgaged had the same effect as if the mortgagee had himself bought the property released, and apportioned the mortgage debt,²¹⁹¹ and that the mortgagee was liable to contribution and must abate a proportion of the mortgage debt,²¹⁹² though of course, part payment of the debt did not have that effect.²¹⁹³ The reason was that the mortgagee could not release his lien upon one so as to increase the burden upon the others without the privity and consent of the persons affected,²¹⁹⁴ but the obligation is not personal. The burden is upon the property and though the mortgagee may release his claim, the liability of the property released towards the mortgagors of the other shares is not affected, and they can enforce contribution against it.²¹⁹⁵

ILLUSTRATION

A mortgaged a Three anna share to B. In execution of a money decree against A, the Three anna share was sold and a purchase worth of one anna by C, one anna by D and one anna by E. B sued on his mortgage and got a decree for ₹15,533-54. B entered into a compromise with C and released C's share for ₹1,333-54 and agreed to indemnify C for any further sum he might be required to pay under the decree. B then brought D's share to sale and it realized ₹4,200. B then brought E's share to sale and it realized ₹10,000 and the mortgage was discharged. E then sued for contribution. As C's share had been released for less than the rateable proportion, it was liable to contribute. D's share could not contribute as it has been sold. But as the sale of D's share realized only ₹4,200, the burden on the shares of C and E was ₹11,333-54, ie ₹5,666-108 each. E had therefore a right to recover ₹5,666-10-8 less ₹1,333-5-4, ie ₹4,333-5-4, from C's share. The first court however dismissed the suit against C and gave E a decree against B on the indemnity. This was wrong, as E was not a party to the agreement of indemnity, E appealed against the dismissal of his suit against B but not against the dismissal of his suit against C and so he got no relief. If E's case had been properly conducted he would have had a decree against C for ₹4,333-5-4 and C could then have sued B on the indemnity.²¹⁹⁶

If the mortgagee releases part of his security, his right to proceed for the whole debt against the remainder is not affected. Therefore, if the remainder is not sufficient to discharge the whole debt, he is still entitled to a personal decree in cases in which the mortgagor is personally liable.²¹⁹⁷ The decisions of Calcutta High Court to the contrary²¹⁹⁸ proceed on the mistaken view that by such release the mortgagee makes himself liable to contribution. The mortgagee's remedy under O XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not impaired when he releases one of several mortgagors, for the liability for the debt in India is joint and several.²¹⁹⁹

[s 82.10] Laches of the Mortgagee

It is no part of the duty of the mortgagee to keep an account of what the mortgagor himself was doing with his equity of redemption. It is, therefore, fundamentally erroneous to talk of a mortgagee who is out of time in discovering that an equity of redemption has been assigned as a person who is guilty of negligence or laches.²²⁰⁰

[s 82.11] Suit for Contribution

The extension of the doctrine of subrogation under section 92 of TP Act, 1882 to the case of redemption by a co-mortgagor has limited the scope of suits for contribution. Thus, if three brothers A, B and C mortgage their joint property and then effect partition in equal shares and A redeems the whole mortgage, then A would have a right of suit for contribution out of the sharers of B and C for two-third of the mortgage money. But under the doctrine of subrogation enacted in section 92, the mortgage of A's one-third share is extinguished, and he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as to two-third on the shares of B and C. It would make no difference if A instead of redeeming the whole mortgage paid the whole mortgage money in order to avoid a sale by the mortgagee, for in that case also he would, before the present section 92, have had a right of contribution,²²⁰¹

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

while now he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. However, there would be no right of contribution or of subrogation as to the 5% paid to the disappointed purchaser, for that is not a charge on the property.²²⁰²

[s 82.12] After the Enactment of section 92

Cases of contribution arise only when the mortgagee realizes his debt from different parcels of the property unequally, and not when one co-mortgagor redeems or pays the amount of the mortgage to avert a sale. The liability to contribute which arises when the mortgagee realizes his debt unequally is by the joint effect of sections 82 and 100, so that limitation is 12 years under Article 132²²⁰³ from the time when the excess payment was made.²²⁰⁴

This was so held by the Allahabad High Court. The point was referred to, but not decided when the case went on appeal to the Privy Council.²²⁰⁵ The Patna High Court has held that where a purchaser of a part of the mortgaged property deposits the whole of the mortgage debt in court to secure the whole property being sold in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee, he is entitled to a right of contribution under this section, but was subrogated to the right of the mortgagor under section 92 and had a charge under section 100.²²⁰⁶ The remedies under section 82 and section 95 are independent and mutually exclusive, and a co-mortgagor who pays the mortgage money has a right of contribution in addition to the right of subrogation.²²⁰⁷

When one co-mortgagor redeemed the whole mortgage, there were conflicting decisions as to his rights over the other shares. In some cases it was held that he had a charge—on the analogy of the charge that was given in the old section 95.²²⁰⁸ However, in a case where one of several representatives of the deceased mortgagor paid the mortgage debt, the Calcutta High Court held that he had no charge,²²⁰⁹ but this was dissented from in a later case in which a charge was allowed when a purchaser of one of two properties mortgaged, paid off the mortgaged debt.²²¹⁰

The same court also held that though a co-mortgagor paying off a mortgage debt had a charge, that charge cannot be claimed when an assignee of a mokurrari interest created by the mortgagor paid off the mortgage debt,²²¹¹ a distinction which is not intelligible. In some cases the Calcutta High Court allowed a charge as a matter of equity.²²¹² A charge would be enforceable against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, but the Allahabad High Court nevertheless held that a redeeming co-mortgagor was entitled to priority over a subsequent mortgagee.²²¹³ All these cases have been rendered obsolete by the extension of the doctrine of subrogation to co-mortgagors.

It is no defence that the co-mortgagor against whom contribution is sought, was improperly omitted from the mortgagee's suit.²²¹⁴ In Shanto Chandar v Nain Sukh,²²¹⁵ the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale against the karta of a joint Hindu family, and brought the property to sale. The mortgage was discharged by the price paid by the auction purchaser. Four sons, who were not parties to the suit, were bound by the mortgage, but not by the decree. The sons' shares in the property were exempted from the sale. The auction purchaser was not entitled to recover any part of the purchase money from the decree holder; but as he had relieved their shares from the mortgage he was entitled to a charge for four-fifths of the mortgage money.

[s 82.15] Parties

The claim must be preferred against each party liable to contribute, and not against all collectively.²²¹⁶ However this may be, all persons in whom the mortgaged property is vested should be made parties to the suit.²²¹⁷ If apart from any question of non-joinder of parties, the materials placed before the court are not sufficient to work out the account, the suit should be dismissed.²²¹⁸

[s 82.16] Scope of the Suit

The owner of property sold on two separate occasions may bring a single suit as to both sales.²²¹⁹ In a suit to enforce a mortgage, the decree may settle questions of contribution between the mortgagors inter se.²²²⁰ But in a redemption suit, the Allahabad High Court refused to determine questions of contribution between the holders of the equity of redemption.²²²¹ A suit for contribution is not barred by res judicata or by O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground that the claim was not included in the suit for redemption.²²²² This was a suit by the owner of one of several properties mortgaged and such a case is now not one of contribution, but of subrogation, and there would be no subrogation until the mortgage was discharged. In the case of Sesha Ayyar v Krishna Ayyangar,²²²³ the Madras High Court said that if P had a right of contribution against Y, he could not join that in a suit to enforce his mortgage against Z. As stated above, this case has been overruled by a Full Bench on the main point. It is doubtful whether this case can be supported on the present point as to a claim for contribution being premature in a suit on the mortgage. That such a claim is not premature has been definitely held in Chunilal v Srinivas cited above. Questions of contribution are sometimes referred to execution proceedings;²²²⁴ but the practice is improper,²²²⁵ for a claim to contribution cannot said to relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree,²²²⁶ and should be enforced by an independent suit.

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

[s 82.17] Contribution if Mortgage Debt Not Fully Discharged

Prior to the enactment of the doctrine of subrogation, it was a point of controversy whether a suit for contribution was maintainable by a co-mortgagor who had paid more than his ratable proportion, but without fully satisfying the mortgage debt. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has by a majority held that it is not,²²²⁷ and this is also the view taken in Calcutta.²²²⁸ The cases decided by Madras High Court are not consistent.²²²⁹ Ghose suggests that there may be a personal claim for reimbursement, when the mortgage is not fully satisfied, but no charge until the mortgage is fully paid off.²²³⁰ This view has not been accepted in a subsequent decision of the Madras High Court. In Munjappa v Pacha,²²³¹ it was held that in section 92 the legislature had taken care to provide that the right of subrogation did not arise, unless the mortgage in respect of which the right was claimed had been redeemed in full. It was remarked that there was no such provision in section 82. In an Allahabad case,²²³² a suit for contribution was held to be maintainable when further realization of the mortgage decree had become time-barred. The new section 92 excludes the right of partial subrogation, and it is submitted that contribution when the mortgage debt is not fully discharged must also be excluded, for it would give rise to complications and multiplicity of actions, if claims for contributions were allowed, while further realizations of the mortgage debt were pending.

[s 82.18] Redemption by One Mortgagor of the Entire Mortgage—Remedy of a Co-mortgagor

Where one of the co-mortgagors redeems the entire mortgaged property and enters into possession, the other mortgagors can bring a suit for possession, and for partition without bringing a suit for redemption.²²³³

[s 82.19] Valuation

The section requires that the valuation of the properties should be made as at the date of mortgage. There was no such express provision in the old section, but the courts had held that valuation should be made as at the date of the mortgage, irrespective of the price that may have been paid by a purchaser.²²³⁴ This rule has the support of a decision of the Judicial Committee which in assessing contribution to a decree for mesne profits, assessed liability as at the date of the decree.²²³⁵ When a mortgagor died and one of his three sons sold his share of the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, the latter had to give credit for one third share of the mortgage debt.²²³⁶ In a Bombay case, the valuation was made as at the date of sale, but there does not appear to have been a change in the value.²²³⁷ In Mardan Singh v Thakur Sheo Dayal,²²³⁸ a simple money decree holder purchased in execution of his decree a two-thirds share of two mortgaged villages, and paid off the mortgage in order to avert a mortgagee's sale. He claimed contribution on the basis of the value at the time of his purchase, but the court held that the valuation should be made as at the time of mortgage. Hence, if a mortgagee purchases some items of the property mortgaged, for a sum equal to the amount of the mortgage debt, the mortgage will not be extinguished, for the value of the portion purchased will be assessed as at the date of the mortgage.²²³⁹

The proportion of contribution has to be worked out with reference to the value of the hypotheca at the date of mortgage, and not with reference to any other date.²²⁴⁰

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

The liability to rateable contribution imposed by this section may be modified by the terms of the mortgage.²²⁴¹ If the mortgage specifies one property as the primary security for the debt, the liability will be thrown entirely on that property to the exoneration of the ancillary security.²²⁴² However, the description of a property as collateral security does not necessarily imply that it is a secondary security so as to be exonerated.²²⁴³ The contract to the contrary is one between the mortgagor and mortgagee,²²⁴⁴ and not necessarily at the time of the mortgage.²²⁴⁵ It is not a contract between the mortgagor and their representatives inter se.²²⁴⁶ It was, however, held by the Allahabad High Court that the contract to the contrary is general, and may refer to any contract such as an implied agreement between the surety and the principal debtor.²²⁴⁷ In Ramabhadrachar v Srinivasa,²²⁴⁸ a sharer in the equity of redemption, sold his share in the property to the plaintiff with an indemnity bond, authorizing him to proceed against other properties of the vendor in case his share was sold by the mortgagee. The mortgagee realised his debt by sale of the share sold to the plaintiff who thereupon recovered the amount on the indemnity bond. The plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to contribution because the indemnity bond merely represented the difference between the value of the property and the value of the equity of redemption, so that the net result of the transaction was a sale of the equity of redemption. The right to contribution was, therefore, not affected by the indemnity bond. In Kunchithapatham v Palamalai,²²⁴⁹ a contract between a vendor and a purchaser of a share in the equity of redemption was held not to be a contract to the contrary; but the contrary has been held in a Patna case.²²⁵⁰ But no doubt, the statutory liability could be altered by a subsequent contract between the contributories.²²⁵¹

The following case²²⁵² was decided as an instance of a contract to the contrary under the law before the enactment of section 92. There was a first mortgage of village K and L to A, a second mortgage of village K to B, and a third of village L to C. B enforced his mortgage by sale and purchased village K. B then paid off A's mortgage of villages K and L. B then sued C for contribution as he had relieved L of the first mortgage. It was held that there was no right of contribution as by agreement, the whole burden of the first mortgage had been put upon K. Under the new section 92, this was a case of subrogation. B when he paid off the first mortgage was subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee as against C. But as the whole burden of the first mortgage had been placed upon K, there was no prior mortgage of L and, therefore, no subrogation as against C.

The Judicial Committee have said that the statutory liability to contribution under this section is not subject to any extrinsic principle.²²⁵³ If there is no contract to the contrary, the right cannot be controlled by equitable considerations.

ILLUSTRATION

A in 1906 mortgaged properties X and Y to B for ₹8,000. Various creditors of A attached his interest in both properties. Nevertheless, A in May 1914 purported to sell X to C and left ₹17,000 part of the price, with C to discharge B's mortgage. Y was then brought to sale by an attaching creditor and purchased by D in July 1914. X was then brought to sale by an attaching creditor and purchased by C in November 1914. This sale overrode the sale of May 1914 which was contrary to the attachment. C was therefore, purchaser of X by the execution sale of November 1914 and D was purchaser of Y by the execution sale of July 1914, both subject to B's mortgage. B in 1918, obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage for ₹31,939. C paid off this decree and claimed contribution against Y which had been purchased by D. It was held that he was entitled to contribution for a ratable proportion of ₹31,939, although if he had performed in 1914 his contract with A, the mortgage might have been paid off for ₹17,000.²²⁵⁴

[s 82.21] One Debt

There is no liability to contribute unless the properties are subject to a common debt. Thus, if property X is mortgaged to A, and property Y to B, and then properties X and Y to C, and A and B agree to give priority to C's mortgage then if C's mortgage is realized by the sale of X and Y, and the surplus sale proceeds of X are

82. Contribution to mortgage debt.—[

insufficient to pay A's mortgage, he has no right of contribution against B.²²⁵⁵

Nor is there a right of contribution when one property is mortgaged and the other property is subject to a general lien for debt.²²⁵⁶

[s 82.22] Subject to Marshalling

The last para of the section is somewhat cryptic, but it apparently means that the right of contribution is subject to the right of marshalling. Thus, if the owner of two properties X and Y:

mortgages.....	to	A
..... X
mortgage	to	B
Y mortgages.....	to	C
.... X and Y mortgages.....	to	D
..... X

then, X and Y both contribute to C's mortgage in the proportion to their values after deducting from X the amount of A's mortgage and from Y the amount of B's mortgage; but under the right of marshalling, D could require C to proceed first against Y. This right of D to marshal would prevail against the right of contribution.

[s 82.23] Equal Equities

There is no liability to contribution unless the equities are equal; in other words, both the properties must be equally liable for the debt. If a person mortgages and subsequently assigns part of the mortgaged property without mention of the mortgage, he is not entitled to call on the assignee to contribute.²²⁵⁷

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Deposit in Court

83. Power to deposit in Court money due on mortgage.—

At any time after the principal money ²²⁵⁸[payable in respect of any mortgage has become due] and before a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property is barred, the mortgagor, or any other person entitled to institute such suit, may deposit, in any Court in which he might have instituted such suit, to the account of the mortgagee, the amount remaining due on the mortgage.

Right to money deposited by mortgagor.—The Court shall thereupon cause written notice of the deposit to be served on the mortgagee, and the mortgagee may, on presenting a petition (verified in manner prescribed by law²²⁵⁹ for the verification of plaints) stating the amount then due on the mortgage, and his willingness to accept the money so deposited in full discharge of such amount, and on depositing in the same Court the mortgage-deed ²²⁶⁰[and all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property], apply for and receive the money, and the mortgage- deed, ²²⁶¹[and all such other documents] so deposited shall be delivered to the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid.

²²⁶²Where the mortgagee is in the possession of the mortgaged property, the Court shall, before paying to him the amount so deposited, direct him to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor and at the cost of the mortgagor either to re-transfer the mortgaged property to the mortgagor or to such third person as the mortgagor may direct or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of the mortgagor's interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished.

Three amendments have been made in this section by Act 20 of 1929.

[s 83.2] Deposit in Court

This section is a survival from the repealed Bengal Regulation 1 of 1778, which enabled the mortgagor to redeem by payment into court, and Bengal Regulation 17 of 1806 required the mortgagee to make an application in court if he intended to foreclose a mortgage by conditional sale, and allowed the mortgagor a year's grace for redemption.

83. Power to deposit in Court money due on mortgage.—

A mortgagor, after the mortgage money has become due and before his right to redeem has become barred, may either (1) pay or tender at the proper time and place the amount due on the mortgage under section 60; or (2) deposit the amount due on the mortgage under section 83; or (3) sue for redemption under section 91 of the TP Act, 1882.²²⁶³

Under the Regulations, the proceedings of the judge were ministerial.²²⁶⁴ Similarly, this section provides a summary procedure for redemption which is not a suit. The provisions of section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, now O XXIII, rule 3, do not apply, and an agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the mortgagee should accept the deposit as a discharge of his mortgage on the mortgagor conveying part of the mortgaged premises to him, is not a compromise of a suit, and is enforceable though not recorded in the court.²²⁶⁵ The function of the court being ministerial, it is submitted that it is not for the court to ascertain the amount due on the mortgage or the sufficiency of the deposit, or to decide the rival claims of contending mortgagees.²²⁶⁶ So in an Allahabad case,²²⁶⁷ as also in a Madras case,²²⁶⁸ and a Patna case,²²⁶⁹ it was held that a mortgagor could not make a deposit to the account of a mortgagee, and a third person. This is because the association of a third person would make it impossible for the mortgagee to withdraw the money without his consent, and it makes no difference if the mortgagor acted bona fide. But as a sub-mortgagee is an assignee of a mortgagee, the deposit may be in favour of a legal representative of the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee.²²⁷⁰ However, the Madras High Court has gone to the length of saying that a mortgagor should not deposit the money in the court if there is no dispute,²²⁷¹ and that he should deposit the money when he is in doubt as to who is the rightful claimant and that by so doing, he absolves himself from liability as to the person entitled to receive it.²²⁷² The Patna High Court followed the decisions of Madras High Court in the case of a deposit made to credit both of the beneficial owners and the benamidar mortgages, but at the same time held that ordinarily, it is the duty of the person interested to find out who the mortgagee is and to make the deposit to his account.²²⁷³ Again, when one of the mortgagees was dead, the Allahabad High Court held that the court was competent to inquire who were the mortgagees on the date of the application.²²⁷⁴ A deposit, however, made to the account of the estate of the deceased mortgagee is a good deposit, although one of the heirs may have been wrongly named.²²⁷⁵

It is submitted that this is wrong for the summary procedure under this section, and is not applicable to contentious cases. For instance, in an Allahabad case,²²⁷⁶ when there was a dispute as to who was the legal representative of a deceased mortgagee, the mortgage was held to be discharged, although the court had ordered the deposit to be paid to the claimant with the worse title. The mortgagor should make the deposit on account of the person whom he alleges to be the mortgagee. If the mortgagee is willing to accept the deposit and returns the mortgage deed, the court pays him the money; otherwise the deposit should be returned to the mortgagor, and the parties referred to a regular suit.²²⁷⁷ Therefore, apart from deposit of the money, the other necessary ingredients of this section are: mortgagee should also express his willingness to receive the amount in full discharge of the mortgage amount, and that he shall deposit the mortgage deed and all other documents. However, if a dispute is raised, section 83 would not entitle the court to resolve the dispute.²²⁷⁸ Where the mortgagor deposits the amount towards the mortgage due, and the mortgagee refuses to accept the amount, the mortgagor should institute a suit for redemption with a plea therein that the entire mortgage due has been deposited, and that the mortgage stood redeemed. The mortgagee cannot be compelled to accept the deposit.²²⁷⁹ The mortgagee cannot be allowed to withdraw a deposit conditionally without prejudice to further contentions that he might raise. When a mortgagor successfully opposed a mortgagee's application to withdraw on such terms, the opposition did not invalidate the deposit.²²⁸⁰

[s 83.3] Or Any Other Person Entitled

The summary procedure for redemption is available not only to the mortgagor, but to any person entitled to redeem under section 91; and so a person under contract to purchase cannot make a deposit.²²⁸¹ A prior mortgagee who has foreclosed without making the puisne mortgagee a party may make a deposit in court to redeem the puisne.²²⁸² In a Patna case,²²⁸³ the court said that section 83 deals with the right to deposit the mortgage money in court and not with the right to redeem'. If this means that a person not entitled to redeem may make a deposit, it conflicts with the express words of the section.

83. Power to deposit in Court money due on mortgage.—

[s 83.4] At Any Time After the Principal Money has become Due

These are the same words as in section 60, and indicate that the summary procedure for redemption is available only when the mortgagor's right to redeem arises. A premature deposit is ineffectual. When the terms of a consent decree provided that the mortgagee was to enter into possession in default of payment of certain installments of the mortgage money, a deposit after default and before the mortgagee had taken possession was held to be premature, and the mortgagee was entitled to take possession in spite of the deposit.²²⁸⁴ The reason is that the section presupposes that the mortgagor is not exercising the right of redemption in a manner contrary to the contract between the parties.²²⁸⁵ A mortgage deed provided that the mortgage could be discharged only by payment after the expiry of the fruit season. A deposit made during the fruit season was not considered premature in the absence of proof that immediate withdrawal was made a condition for the deposits, for it was quite open to the mortgagee to wait till the fruit season was over, and then take out the money forthwith.²²⁸⁶

Where a mortgage was redeemable only in Chaitra (13 March to 14 April) and the usufruct thereof was to be appropriated towards interest, a deposit of the principal sum by the mortgagor on 4 April 1967 complied with all legal requirements, and was valid.²²⁸⁷

[s 83.5] Before a Suit for Redemption is Barred

If a suit for redemption is barred, the summary procedure for redemption is, of course, not available. But it is also not available if the mortgagee has instituted a suit on his mortgage, and in that case the deposit would be treated as one made under O XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure.²²⁸⁸ This would be so even if the mortgagor had not received notice of the mortgagee's suit.²²⁸⁹ A deposit in court pending a suit by the mortgagee was treated by the Privy Council as a deposit under O XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, in Shib Chandra v Lachmi Narain,²²⁹⁰ although the judgment of the Judicial Committee refers to section 83.

[s 83.6] In Any Court In Which He Might Have Instituted Such Suit

The deposit must be made in the same court in which the suit for redemption would have to be instituted, ie, the lowest competent court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situated.²²⁹¹ The deposit cannot be made in any other court.²²⁹²

[s 83.7] Deposit

Under section 83, the amount of the deposit must be the whole amount due on the mortgage, including interest.²²⁹³ Mesne profits cannot be claimed if the amount deposited is not proper.²²⁹⁴

The fact that the mortgagee has obtained decree for interest will not justify tender of principal only.²²⁹⁵ A mere readiness on the part of the mortgagor to pay is not sufficient.²²⁹⁶ Sums which the mortgagee is entitled to tack to the mortgage money under section 72 should also be included.²²⁹⁷ The deposit may be for more than is due on the principle that *omme majus continet in se minus*²²⁹⁸ but it must not be less even if the deficiency is very small;²²⁹⁹ though a small deficiency has been excused when the mortgage included penal interest, and the amount due could not be calculated with accuracy.²³⁰⁰ Again, the deposit must not be conditional and a deposit accompanied with a prayer that the mortgagee be called upon to produce certain documents is invalid,²³⁰¹ unless the documents are those which the mortgagee is bound to produce under the section.²³⁰² In a case under the regulations, a deposit accompanied with a threat of legal proceeding was held to be invalid.²³⁰³ A deposit accompanied with a denial of the mortgage is invalid,²³⁰⁴ but when the application making the deposit contained a statement that moneys were due by the mortgagee in respect of a different transaction of which the mortgagor would sue after redemption, this was not a conditional deposit.²³⁰⁵ The section does not provide for an inquiry by the court as to the amount due by the mortgagor to the mortgagee.²³⁰⁶ When a defendant makes a deposit in the court and then applies for its transfer to the credit of the suit, it was held that it was not a valid deposit under section 83.²³⁰⁷ The deposit operates as tender as soon as the mortgagor has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of court. This includes service of notice as the mortgagee.²³⁰⁸ In the case of the mortgage of an agricultural tenancy redeemable only on a fixed date, a deposit which did not give the court time to serve notice by that date was held to be ineffectual.²³⁰⁹

Section 67 shows that after a valid deposit, the mortgagee cannot sue for foreclosure, or for sale. It has been observed that after a valid deposit, there is a subsisting mortgage which can be enforced or redeemed.²³¹⁰ However, this, it is submitted, is incorrect. The deposit does not per se operate to discharge the mortgage, and the relationship of mortgagor and the mortgagee does not cease with the deposit.²³¹¹ The deposit does not become the property of the mortgagee until he has presented a petition expressing his willingness to accept it, and has deposited the mortgage deed in court. Unless these two conditions have been complied with, the deposit cannot be attached by the mortgagee's creditors,²³¹² and if the mortgagee has refused to accept the deposit, it stands to the credit of the mortgagor only.²³¹³ The mere fact of making a deposit or tender does not merge the money in the mortgaged property, and the money does not cease to be the property of the mortgagor.²³¹⁴ Withdrawal of the deposit by the mortgagee has the effect of discharging the mortgage,²³¹⁵ and the mortgagee is thereafter estopped from disputing the validity of the tender.²³¹⁶ If the mortgagee withdraws a deposit which does not include money spent by him under section 72 in payment of arrears of government revenue, he cannot recover it under the mortgage,²³¹⁷ though he might sue the mortgagor personally for reimbursement.²³¹⁸ In Ram Chandra Marwari v Rani Keshobati,²³¹⁹ the mortgagor made a deposit of a sum which he claimed to be the whole balance due under the mortgage, and it was then withdrawn by some contrivance or manoeuvre by the mortgagee's agent without complying with the conditions of section 83, and without depositing the mortgage bond. The mortgagees then sued on their bond giving credit for the amount withdrawn as part payment. The Privy Council dismissed the suit holding that the onus was on the mortgagees to show that their agent acted under such conditions that the statutory result of a full discharge had not ensued. However, if the mortgagee refuses to accept the deposit, and the plaintiff sues in redemption and obtains a decree, and the mortgagee then withdraws the deposit, he is not estopped from prosecuting an appeal, for he has withdrawn the money in execution.²³²⁰ It is submitted that this is correct, but in *Dal Singh v Pitam Singh*²³²¹ the mortgagee at first refused to accept the deposit, and then after the mortgagor filed a redemption suit, and obtained a decree, the mortgagee changed his mind and withdrew the amount pending his appeal. The Allahabad High Court then held that the mortgagee was not competent to prosecute his appeal. But it is submitted that the proceeding under section 83 terminated with the mortgagee's refusal to accept the deposit and the court had no jurisdiction to allow the mortgagee to withdraw, under that section, the money which then belonged to the mortgagor. This has been so held by the Patna High Court.²³²² However, a contrary view has been taken by the Madras High Court.²³²³ No doubt the mortgagee might with the mortgagor's consent be allowed to change his mind and withdraw a deposit, or the mortgagor might make a fresh deposit. In a case in which the deposit was insufficient, the court, with the consent of the mortgagor's pleader, endorsed payment on the deed and returned it to the mortgagee as discharge pro tanto.²³²⁴ In another case,²³²⁵ the mortgagor was allowed to supplement an inadequate deposit.

If the mortgagee refuses to accept a valid deposit, not only does interest cease to run, but he must under section 76(i) account for his gross receipts from the mortgaged property from the time when he could have withdrawn the deposit.²³²⁶ The mortgagee continues in possession as mortgagee, and is not a trespasser.²³²⁷

[s 83.8] Amount Remaining Due on the Mortgage

This is the whole balance due on the mortgage, including interest²³²⁸ and sums which the mortgagee is entitled to add under section 72,²³²⁹ but not penal interest.²³³⁰ Where a mortgagor is liable to pay cesses or taxes, the amount due on these cesses or taxes must be included in the deposit.²³³¹ The deposit must include interest for the day on which the deposit is made,²³³² but not interest from that day till the service of notice on the mortgagee.²³³³ This was the position before 1929. Now section 84 has been amended by Act 20 of 1929. If the mortgage is an usufructuary mortgage in which profits are taken in lieu of interest, there would be no occasion to deposit interest, and in a case where an usufructuary mortgagee was, by the terms of his mortgage, entitled to interest for the period for which he was out of possession, it was held that a purchaser of the equity of redemption who was not aware that interest was due, made a valid deposit when he deposited only the principal.²³³⁴ If the amount of deposit is less, the mortgagee is entitled, unless he has agreed otherwise, to appropriate it first to the satisfaction of his claim to interest.²³³⁵

83. Power to deposit in Court money due on mortgage.—

Under section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, a mortgagee who pays money due for arrears of rent to avert a sale acquires a statutory charge, and such money is not part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, and need not be deposited.²³³⁶

Compensation under the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act, 1900, cannot be brought under the expression “amount remaining due on the mortgage”.²³³⁷

[s 83.9] Notice

Until the mortgagee gets the notice under this section or is in the knowledge of the deposit, he has the right to sue to enforce his security.²³³⁸ Where a mortgagor makes a deposit under this section, it is the duty of the court to see that the notice of the deposit is duly served upon the mortgagee; it is not the business of the mortgagor to see that this is done.²³³⁹

Where the serving peon hands over the notice to the mortgagee who reads it, but refuses to grant a receipt, the notice is deemed to have been duly served, even if the peon did not suspend a copy as required by O V, rule 17, Code of Civil Procedure.²³⁴⁰ So long as a guardian ad litem is not appointed for a minor, there cannot be any valid service of notice upon the minor.²³⁴¹ Where there is a covenant in a usufructuary mortgage that the mortgagor would redeem the mortgage on the last day of Jeth (22nd June), then, if the mortgagor deposits the mortgage-money in court, the notice must reach the mortgagee on or before 22nd June. If, therefore, the deposit was made on 17th June and the notice of deposit was ineffectual, and the mortgagee was entitled to possession till the last day of Jeth of the next year.²³⁴² Deposit made under this section will operate as a valid tender of the mortgage money only when the notice of the deposit is given to the mortgagee.²³⁴³

[s 83.10] Delivery of Possession

Third paragraph of section 83 inter alia provides that where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, the court, before paying to him the amount so deposited, may direct him to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor. However, the court under this provision can direct delivery of possession only if possession is found to derive from mortgage, and not under any other capacity like that of a tenant. In the case of Nirmal Chandra v Vimal Chand,²³⁴⁴ the Supreme Court has held that the tenant-mortgagee cannot be directed to deliver possession on redemption of mortgage because the tenant-mortgagee was entitled to continue in possession as a tenant. Relying on its earlier judgments,²³⁴⁵ the Apex Court has held that, “... there is no automatic merger of two rights where mortgage is executed in favour of a tenant and on redemption of mortgage, the tenancy rights kept in abeyance would revive and entitle the tenant to continue in possession even after the redemption of the mortgage. On execution of mortgage, tenancy rights would terminate only if it is clear expressly or impliedly by conduct or other related circumstances that the parties had intended so, which would be a question of fact. Thus, as a normal rule except in intention being to the contrary, mortgage and lease operate independent of each other, and on mortgage coming to an end by redemption, tenancy would revive.”²³⁴⁶

Despite redemption of mortgage, delivery, of possession can be denied if possession was obtained on prior tenancy and there was no merger.²³⁴⁷ However, if the recitals in the mortgage deed stipulate that on payment of

83. Power to deposit in Court money due on mortgage.—

the mortgage amount actual physical possession shall have to be delivered by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, it was held that tenancy rights would not revive.²³⁴⁸

[s 83.11] Tender or Deposit not a Pre-condition to the Suit

Tender or deposit under section 83 is not a pre-condition to a redemption suit, and such a suit cannot be dismissed on the ground of absence of previous deposits, or of non-service of notice of tender.²³⁴⁹

The mortgagor's deposit of the mortgage money into court, operates as a continuous tender, and the mortgagee is at liberty to accept it at any time before the mortgagor rescinds the tender by withdrawing the amount from the court. If the mortgagee files a verified statement accepting the deposit, it is sufficient compliance with the section.²³⁵⁰ Where the borrowed money is not deposited by borrower before the stipulated date and the property is sold and purchased by the auction purchaser, it is not open to the borrower to enter into a subsequent agreement with the mortgagee bank and return the amount to auction purchaser. The auction purchaser would not be bound by such settlement. The right of redemption having come to an end cannot be exercised after the sale of the property at the court auction and the auction purchaser having acquired the title.²³⁵¹

[s 83.12] Charges

This section applies to charges.²³⁵² Depositing money in court is one of the three ways available to the mortgagee before filing a suit for redemption (the other two are tender under section 60 and suit under section 91). The mortgagor is free to choose any one of them, and his suit for redemption cannot fail because of non-deposit.²³⁵³

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Deposit in Court

84. Cessation of interest.—

When mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has tendered or deposited in court under section 83 the amount remaining due on the mortgage, interest on the principal money shall cease from the date of the tender or ²³⁵⁴[in the case of a deposit, where no previous tender of such amount has been made] as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court, ²³⁵⁵[and the notice required by section 83 has been served on the mortgagee:

Provided that, where the mortgagor has deposited such amount without having made a previous tender thereof and has subsequently withdrawn the same or any part thereof, interest on the principal money shall be payable from the date of such withdrawal.]

Nothing in this section or in section 83 shall be deemed to deprive the mortgagee of his right to interest where there exists a contract that he shall be entitled to a reasonable notice before payment or tender of the mortgage-money ²³⁵⁶[and such notice has not been given before the making of the tender or deposit, as the case may be].

[s 84.1] Cessation of Interest

A deposit under section 83 operates as a valid tender, but in regard to the cessation of interest, the amendment makes a distinction, which was not expressed in the old section, between (1) deposit in court after tender out of court; and (2) deposit in court without previous tender out of court. This distinction is necessary, as the deposit in court is usually made after a tender out of court has been refused, and the deposit then becomes a judicial record of the tender. If there has been a valid tender previous to the deposit which has been refused, such tender operates under the general law to stop the running of interest, provided there is a continued readiness to pay.²³⁵⁷ In such a case, it is submitted that the withdrawal of the deposit by the mortgagor would indicate that the mortgagor was no longer ready and willing to pay, and interest would be payable from the date of withdrawal. This is in accordance with the general rule that a plea of tender before action is ineffectual to stop interest, unless accompanied by a payment into court after action.²³⁵⁸ However, where after such withdrawal, the money is re-deposited, interest would not run.²³⁵⁹ If there has been no previous tender, the deposit in court stops interest running only when the mortgagor has done all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of court, and when the notice under section 83 has been served upon the mortgagee.

84. Cessation of interest.—

In both cases, therefore, the effect of withdrawal is the same, and the mortgagor who withdraws a deposit becomes liable for interest, and it seems reasonable that if the mortgagor has the benefit of the money withdrawn, he should not be relieved of interest on the mortgage debt.

In order that the deposit in court should operate to stop interest running, two conditions must be satisfied:

(1) The mortgagor must have done all that has to be done to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of the court.

(2) Notice under section 83 must have been served on the mortgagee.

Interest does not cease on the mere giving of a notice unaccompanied by any actual tender of the mortgage amount.²³⁶⁰ But interest only ceases to run if there is a valid unconditional tender; a conditional tender does not have that effect.²³⁶¹

The section only relates to a tender; and it has been held that the filing of a suit for redemption of an usufructuary mortgage is not tantamount to a tender within the meaning of this section.²³⁶²

[s 84.2] Done All that has to be done to Enable the Mortgagee

If the mortgagee is a minor, the deposit does not have the effect of stopping interest, unless the mortgagor has procured the appointment of a guardian ad litem.²³⁶³ According to the Allahabad High Court, it is open to the person making the deposit to pay the difference of interest between the date of the deposit, and the date of the appointment of the guardian ad litem.²³⁶⁴ It cannot be laid down as a general rule that a tender must be in money. If the creditor by his own conduct dispenses with the production of money, he cannot contend that there was no valid tender on account.²³⁶⁵ Where the mortgagor had applied under section 83 and thereafter, actually deposited in court the amount of the principal only of the mortgage and offered to pay the amount in respect of the cost of repairs and interest, but the mortgagee refused the money on the ground that the mortgage could not be redeemed, it was held that there was a legal tender, and the interest ceased to run.²³⁶⁶

[s 84.3] Notice

The requirement of service of notice under section 83, overrules cases which held that it was the duty of the court to serve notices and that it was sufficient if the mortgagor had applied to the court for service of notice, and had given a correct address.²³⁶⁷ Service of notice must be in accordance with sections 102 and 103, which provide for service on the agent of an absent person, or on the curator or guardian of a person under a disability to contract.

[s 84.4] Stipulation for notice before redemption

Some mortgages contain a stipulation for notice before redemption after the due date in order to enable the mortgagee to find another investment. Subject to certain exceptions, a mortgagor in England who redeems after due date must give six months' notice. If such notice is not given, the mortgagee is entitled to six months' interest in lieu of notice.²³⁶⁸ The right to interest in lieu of notice is not subject to the provisions of this section as

2369 Suits for Foreclosure, Sale or Redemption

2371 [91. Persons who may sue for redemption.—

Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property, namely:—

- (a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) who has any interest in, or charge upon, the property mortgaged or in or upon the right to redeem the same;
- (b) any surety for the payment of the mortgage-debt or any part thereof; or
- (c) any creditor of the mortgagor who has in a suit for administration of his estate obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.]

[s 91.1] The Old Section

The above section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 in place of the old section.

[s 91.2] Mortgagor

The word “mortgagor” means a mortgagor who has a subsisting interest in the mortgage.

This clause follows the English rule that the mortgagor and all persons having any interest in the property subject to the mortgage are entitled to redeem.²³⁷³ It has been held that any interest, however small, in the property gives a right to redeem,²³⁷⁴ and that the words “interest in... the property mortgaged” have a broader meaning than “interest in the mortgage security” in O XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure.²³⁷⁵ Such an interest would exist in an alienee of property, even though the alienation is later found to be defective.²³⁷⁶ The sub-section excludes the mortgagee because the right to redeem is exercised against him. The right to redeem represents the mortgagor’s interest in the property, and the mortgagor or any person who has any interest in or charge upon that estate can redeem. The interest must be a proprietary interest.²³⁷⁷ It must be a present interest, not a contingent interest;²³⁷⁸ as in the case of a Hindu reversioner.²³⁷⁹ In a Patna case, the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption of agricultural land before 1 January 1923 without notice of the landlord. Thereafter, in a rent suit filed by the ex-intermediary against the mortgagor raiya, a decree was passed, and there was auction sale of the suit land in execution of the decree. The plaintiff, however, was not impleaded in the rent suit. It was held that the auction sale could not extinguish the mortgage, as the decree was not legal, since the equity of redemption had been validly transferred. The plaintiff, as the purchaser of the equity of redemption, was entitled to redemption.²³⁸⁰

[91. Persons who may sue for redemption.—

[s 91.4] Landlord

The landlord of the mortgagor may redeem if the tenancy is vested in him on the tenant's death without heirs.²³⁸¹ If the tenancy is subsisting, the landlord has no present interest, and so he cannot redeem a mortgage by an occupancy tenant.²³⁸² In deciding the question whether, in section 91(a), the words "any person who has any interest in the property mortgaged" include the landlord, the test to be applied is whether some residuary interest remains with the landlord. If there is no full transfer, the landlord can redeem a mortgage created by a tenant.²³⁸³

[s 91.5] Lessee

A lessee of the mortgagor has a right to redeem. Even when the lease is not binding on the mortgagee, it has been held in England that the mortgagor's lessee has a right to redeem.²³⁸⁴ This has been followed in the case of a permanent tenant,²³⁸⁵ who came on the land subsequent to the mortgage, but not one who is on the land before the execution of the mortgage,²³⁸⁶ an ex-proprietary tenant,²³⁸⁷ a verumpatam tenant²³⁸⁸ and tenant for a term of years.²³⁸⁹

It is immaterial whether such a lease is valid and binding on the mortgagee.²³⁹⁰ In a Nagpur case, however, it was held that when, after a mortgage has been executed, the mortgagor grants a lease of the mortgaged property in the ordinary course of the management of the property and the lease is binding on the mortgagee, the lessee, not being a person whose interests are in any way jeopardised by the mortgage, is not entitled to redeem the mortgage.²³⁹¹ However, this case has been explained as being limited to a lease governed by local revenue laws.²³⁹²

The patnidar of the whole,²³⁹³ or part²³⁹⁴ of the property mortgaged can redeem. In other agricultural tenancies, the right to redeem depends upon the nature of the interest created by the holding. If it is not a proprietary interest, the tenant cannot redeem. Thus a Bengal ryot cannot redeem,²³⁹⁵ nor can a cultivating tenant in Oudh.²³⁹⁶ Junior members of a Malabar tarwad have a proprietary interest in the property, but are, in the absence of special circumstances, disentitled by their personal law from redeeming.²³⁹⁷ A junior member of a Malabar tarwad cannot file a suit for redemption of mortgage of tarwad property. Where, however, a junior member has obtained possession of tarwad property by redeeming an earlier mortgage and subsequently mortgaged the same, it is his interest that he has mortgaged, and not that of the tarwad. Hence, a suit for redemption by other members is not maintainable.²³⁹⁸ An ex-proprietary tenant in sir land in Allahabad has an interest which entitles him to redeem.²³⁹⁹ If the succession to the tenancy is governed by statute, it is the statutory heir—and not the heir according to the personal law of the tenant—who is entitled to redeem.²⁴⁰⁰ A tenant in occupation of a non-residential building paid the municipal property tax on behalf of the landlord and sued for recovery of tax, claiming a charge as subrogee of the municipality. It was held that on the principle that any tenant in occupation of property subject to a simple mortgage had an interest in the equity of redemption, it should follow that he would be one of the persons entitled to subrogation under section 91.²⁴⁰¹ Where there was a mortgage by an occupancy tenant, and subsequently the tenant, with the landlord's consent, transferred his rights to other persons, the transferee can redeem the mortgage. The mortgagee, by remaining in possession for over 12 years, does not extinguish the mortgagor's right to redeem.²⁴⁰²

[s 91.6] Auction Purchaser

Any person who is having any interest in or charge upon the property mortgaged is competent to redeem mortgage. An auction-purchaser of the property has got interest in the property, and hence, can redeem the mortgage.²⁴⁰³

[s 91.7] Purchaser Under section 88, Code of Criminal Procedure

[91. Persons who may sue for redemption.—

When property subject to a mortgage has been attached and sold under section 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898, the purchaser has a right to redeem the mortgage.²⁴⁰⁴

[s 91.8] Hindu Illegitimate Son

The right of maintenance of an illegitimate son in Hindu law is a personal right, and will not support a suit for redemption.²⁴⁰⁵

[s 91.9] Hindu Reversioner

The interest must be a present interest so that a reversionary heir in Hindu law is not entitled to redeem.²⁴⁰⁶ In some cases, however, it has been suggested that the reversioner may redeem in case of waste, or of necessity for the preservation of the property.²⁴⁰⁷

[s 91.10] Co-mortgagor or Purchaser of the Equity of Redemption

Any of several co-mortgagors can redeem.²⁴⁰⁸ A co-sharer in mortgaged property is a “person interested” in such property, and is entitled to redeem the mortgage.²⁴⁰⁹ So can a purchaser or execution purchaser of the whole²⁴¹⁰ or part of the equity of redemption,²⁴¹¹ or a purchaser in execution of a decree in a rent suit.²⁴¹² But a contract to purchase does not create an interest in or charge on the property, and a person who has merely contracted to purchase the equity of redemption has no right to redeem.²⁴¹³ An assignee of the equity of redemption during the pendency of the mortgagee’s suit may redeem before the sale is confirmed,²⁴¹⁴ and may be brought on the record for that purpose.²⁴¹⁵ A donee of the equity of redemption can redeem,²⁴¹⁶ and under section 59A all persons who derive title from the mortgagor, are included in the term “mortgagor,” and, therefore, entitled to redeem. A person erroneously believing himself to stand in the shoes of the mortgagor and paying off the mortgage-debt was held to have sufficient interest within the meaning of the section to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.²⁴¹⁷ Where a person who has absolutely no title to the property mortgaged, sells it, then the purchaser’s position is no more than that of an intervenor between the mortgagor and the true owner of the equity of redemption, and he will not be entitled to the equitable doctrine of subrogation by paying off the mortgage.²⁴¹⁸ A prior mortgagee who purchases the mortgaged property becomes entitled as assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem the subsequent mortgages.²⁴¹⁹ In a Madras case, A and B were each owners of half shares in certain property. A mortgaged the entire property to X. B took an assignment of the mortgage right from X. It was held that A can sue B for redemption of his share.²⁴²⁰

The redeeming co-mortgagor can merely claim to be re-imbursed for the moneys he has spent. He does not become a “mortgagee” for the purposes of section 4A of the Kerala Land Reforms Act.²⁴²¹

Redemption suit against a redeeming co-mortgagor is maintainable if filed within 60 years from the date of the original mortgage.²⁴²² Two brothers M and S after the death of their father, effected usufructuary mortgages of certain properties during 1881-1884 which were redeemed by obtaining release deeds from the mortgagee-in-interest by P being the son of S (co-mortgagor) and father of the defendants in 1913 and 1918, by paying the entire redemption money, and alone obtaining possession thereof. The plaintiff, the successor-in-interest and grand-daughter of the non-redeeming co-mortgagor M, instituted in 1946, a suit for partition and possession of her one-half share of the suit properties, and claimed possession on contribution of her share of the mortgage money that had been paid by the redeeming co-mortgagor to the mortgagees. The High Court (by a majority judgment) held that the suit was barred by limitation under the Travancore Limitation Regulations, or the corresponding Limitation Act, 1908. One of the questions for determination by the Supreme Court was whether the articles of the Travancore Limitation Regulation will govern a suit by a non-redeeming co-mortgagor, to recover possession of his share of the hypotheca on payment of the proportionate amount of the mortgage debt discharged by the redeeming co-mortgagor. It was held that where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force and a mortgage with possession is made by two persons only, one of whom redeems the mortgage by discharging the whole of the common mortgage debt, he has, in equity, two distinct rights: first, to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee discharged, vis-à-vis the non-redeeming co-mortgagor, including the right to get into possession of the latter’s portion or share of the hypotheca. Secondly, to recover contribution towards the excess paid by him on the security of that portion or share of the hypotheca which belonged not to him, but to the other co-mortgagor. It follows that where one co-mortgagor gets the right to contribution against the other co-mortgagor by paying off the entire mortgage debt, a co-related right also accrues to the latter to redeem his share of the property, and to get its possession on payment of his share of the liability to the former. This corresponding right of the non-redeeming co-mortgagor is purely an equitable right, which exists irrespective of whether the right of contribution which the redeeming co-mortgagor has against the other co-mortgagor amounts to a mortgage, and subsists as long as the latter's right to contribution subsists.

A suit for possession of his share or portion of the property by a non-redeeming co-mortgagor (on payment of the proportionate amount of the mortgage debt), may be filed either within the limitation prescribed for a suit for redemption of the original mortgage, or within the period prescribed for a suit for contribution by the redeeming co-mortgagor against the other co-mortgagor.²⁴²³

Section 92 does not provide that the redeeming co-mortgagor shall be deemed to be a mortgagee, or shall be substituted to the full rights of the mortgagee for all purposes. The section is careful enough to provide that he shall have the same rights as the mortgagee redeemed, only for the limited purpose of redemption, foreclosure or sale.²⁴²⁴

A puisne mortgagee is an assignee of the equity of redemption and is, therefore, entitled to redeem a prior mortgage.²⁴²⁵

Thus, let us suppose that A, the mortgagor, executes successive mortgages as follows:— First mortgage by A to..... B

Second mortgage by A to.....C

Third mortgage by A to..... D

Now C, is assignee of part of the equity of redemption of A against B and has, therefore, the right to redeem B. For the same reason, D can redeem C and B. On the other hand, B can foreclose or bring to sale A, and, as part of A's equity of redemption is transferred to C and to D, B can foreclose or bring to sale C or D. This is the familiar rule "redeem up and foreclose down." This clause, therefore, is a statement of the first part of the rule "redeem up". The second part of the rule is enacted in section 94.

If the puisne mortgage is invalid, the puisne mortgagee has no right to redeem a prior mortgage.²⁴²⁶ So also, if the puisne mortgage is time-barred, or if the puisne mortgagee has lost all remedies of foreclosure or sale on his own mortgage, he has no right to redeem a prior mortgage.²⁴²⁷ If the mortgagor has made a tender of the mortgage money which the prior mortgagee has wrongfully refused, the puisne mortgagee redeeming the prior mortgagee will not be liable for interest from the date of the tender.²⁴²⁸ The rights of a second mortgagee, who was not impleaded in the suit by the first mortgagee, are not affected by the decree or sale in execution thereof, and he is entitled to redeem the first mortgage.²⁴²⁹ If the second mortgagee files a suit on his mortgage without impleading the first mortgagee, and pays off the encumbrance which is not barred by limitation, he is subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee. The second mortgagee who purchases the mortgaged property in execution of a decree acquires not only the interest of the mortgagee, but also the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, and he is entitled to redeem other mortgages on the same property created by the mortgagor.²⁴³⁰

[91. Persons who may sue for redemption.—

An execution purchaser of the whole or part of the equity of redemption has the right to redeem the mortgaged property.²⁴³¹ In a Calcutta case, a prior mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption in a sale held in execution of his decree. The puisne mortgagee was not made a party to the suit. It was held that, the decree, and consequent purchase by the prior mortgagee, did not affect the right of the puisne mortgagee to sue for sale subject to prior mortgage, or to redeem the mortgage before putting the property for sale, to satisfy his own claim.²⁴³²

[s 91.12] Sub-mortgagee

As a puisne mortgagee can redeem a prior mortgage, a sub-mortgagee of the puisne mortgagee, being an assignee of the puisne mortgagee, can also redeem the prior mortgage.²⁴³³

A prior mortgagee who has purchased the equity of redemption stands in the shoes of the mortgagor, and can redeem a puisne mortgagee.²⁴³⁴ Otherwise, a prior mortgagee holds by title paramount to the puisne mortgagee, and cannot redeem it. However, the Calcutta High Court has held that if he is a party to the puisne mortgagee's suit, he may pay off the puisne mortgage in order to save the property from sale.²⁴³⁵

[s 91.13] Charge

A charge upon the property or upon the equity of redemption will give a right to redeem. This may be illustrated by a Madras case,²⁴³⁶ where a mortgagor was allowed to redeem, although he had sold the equity of redemption, because he had a charge for unpaid purchase money.²⁴³⁷ A charge holder can file a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property.

[s 91.14] Clause (b)

A surety has a right to redeem, as he is liable for the debt and is entitled on payment of the debt to avail himself of the creditor's securities.²⁴³⁸ He cannot, of course, redeem a mortgage for a different debt or a mortgage for a part of a debt, of which he is only surety for another distinct part.²⁴³⁹ This subject is also discussed under section 92.

[s 91.15] Clause (c)

A plaintiff who had obtained a decree for sale in a suit for the administration of a mortgagor's estate, was held to have a right to redeem so as to get the benefit of the decree.

[s 91.16] Repealed clause (f)

Before the passing of the TP Act, 1882, an attaching judgment creditor was not entitled to redeem.²⁴⁴⁰

The question of entitlement cannot be raised after a preliminary decree has been passed.²⁴⁴¹

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

2369 Suits for Foreclosure, Sale or Redemption

2442 92. Subrogation.—

Any of the persons referred to in section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

The right conferred by this section is called the right of subrogation, and a person acquiring the same is said to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems.

A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full.

[s 92.1] Amendment

This section was inserted by the Amendment Act 20 of 1929.

[s 92.2] Scope of the Section

The first para of the section deals with subrogation by the operation of law, and the third para with subrogation by agreement. The Nagpur High Court holds that the first para is not subject to the third paragraph.

²⁴⁴³ According to the Allahabad High Court, the two paragraphs do not overlap, and are mutually exclusive.²⁴⁴⁴

The principle of subrogation as embodied in the section applies to Punjab.²⁴⁴⁵

[s 92.3] Subrogation

Subrogation means substitution, for the person redeeming is substituted for the encumbrancer whom he has

paid off.²⁴⁴⁶ Subrogation is either conventional, or legal.²⁴⁴⁷

Subrogation is conventional when there is an agreement, express or implied, that the person making the payment shall exercise the rights and powers of the original creditor,²⁴⁴⁸ and that very slight evidence is sufficient to establish such an agreement.²⁴⁴⁹ The law as to conventional subrogation has been amended by the third para of this section which requires (1) that the agreement of subrogation should be in writing; and (2) that the writing should be registered.²⁴⁵⁰

Legal subrogation, or subrogation by operation of law, arises when a person, who has, in the property an interest of his own to protect, discharges a prior encumbrance.²⁴⁵¹ The principle cannot, therefore, avail a mere volunteer where there is no obligation to repay.²⁴⁵² He has no equities in his favour, and is not subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.²⁴⁵³ Subrogation by operation of law rests, therefore, on the same equity of reimbursement as is enacted in section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, that “a person who is interested in the payment of money, which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other.” Such a payment sometimes carries with it an equitable charge.²⁴⁵⁴ Hence, there may arise:

- (1) A personal right of reimbursement.
- (2) An equitable charge.
- (3) Subrogation by operation of law.
- (4) Personal Right of Reimbursement

This arises in cases to which section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 applies. The right of reimbursement under section 69 of the Contract Act, 1872 is personal, while the right of subrogation affects the property.²⁴⁵⁵ An officious or voluntary payment carries with it no right of reimbursement, or of subrogation. This was settled by the Privy Council in the case of *Ram Tuhul Singh v Biseswar Lal*²⁴⁵⁶ where their Lordships said:

It is not in every case in which a man has benefited by the money of another that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice considerations of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support a suit, there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay. It is well settled that there is no such obligation in the case of a voluntary payment by A of B's debt.

Again in *Gurdeo Singh v Chandrikah Singh*²⁴⁵⁷ J Mookerjee said:

The principle is, that subrogation, as a matter of right, is never applied in aid of a mere volunteer. Legal substitution into the rights of a creditor for the benefit of a third person takes place only for his benefit, who, being himself a creditor, satisfies the lien of a prior creditor, or for the benefit of a purchaser, who extinguishes the encumbrances upon his estate, or of a co- obligor or surety, who discharges the debt, or of an heir, who pays the debt of the succession. Any one, who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt, is a stranger, and, if he pays the debt, he is a mere volunteer.

This principle was followed in an Allahabad case,²⁴⁵⁸ where the plaintiff purchased property from a minor and, discharged a prior mortgage. The minor's sale was invalid and, therefore, the plaintiff was treated as a volunteer, and neither subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, nor held entitled to reimbursement. In cases to which section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 applies, the right of reimbursement is available even though there be in addition an equitable charge, or an assignment of the surety by subrogation.²⁴⁵⁹

92. Subrogation.—

[s 92.5] Equitable Charge

An equitable charge is analogous to a salvage lien in maritime law, but differs from it in that it is not available to a volunteer. The doctrine of salvage lien was recognized by the Privy Council in Nugenderchunder Ghose v Sreemutty Kaminee,²⁴⁶⁰ where their Lordships said in the case of a mortgagee paying revenue to prevent a taluk from being sold “that they would find it difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the “Talook as entitled him to pay the revenue due to the government, and did actually pay it, was thereby entitled to a charge on the Talook as against all persons interested therein, for the amount of the money so paid.” Again, in Dakhina Mohan Roy v Saroda Mohan Roy,²⁴⁶¹ a person in possession under a decree of a court paid money to prevent a sale of the estate for arrears of revenue and was entitled to reimbursement, even though the decree was afterwards set aside. The Judicial Committee said that the claim was in the nature of salvage, and that the law relating to sales for arrears of government revenue recognizes an equity of repayment in the case of a person who not being a proprietor pays the government revenue in good faith to protect a claim which turns out to be unfounded. However, this doctrine is said to have been repudiated in England in the case of *Falcke v Scottish Imperial Insurance Co.*²⁴⁶² This was a case in which a mortgagor was claiming against his own mortgagee a charge for premiums paid by him, and had no bearing on claims made against a mortgagor in respect of payments made to protect the property. But this supposed repudiation has influenced the Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay High Courts, but not the Madras High Court. Thus, when one of the two co-sharers in a revenue paying estate pays the whole revenue to save the estate, he is entitled to a charge on the share of the defaulting purchaser in Madras,²⁴⁶³ Nagpur,²⁴⁶⁴ and Kerala,²⁴⁶⁵ but not in Calcutta,²⁴⁶⁶ Allahabad,²⁴⁶⁷ and Patna,²⁴⁶⁸ Rangoon²⁴⁶⁹ or Bombay.²⁴⁷⁰ The law on this point is, therefore, unsettled, and there is no clear line of demarcation showing when the personal right of reimbursement carries with it also an equitable charge.

[s 92.6] Subrogation by the Operation of Law

The distinguishing feature of subrogation is that the encumbrance that is paid off is not extinguished, but is treated as kept alive and assigned to the person making the payment. But just as there is no clear line of demarcation showing when the charge comes to the assistance of the personal right of reimbursement, so until this section was enacted, there was no clear line of demarcation between cases of equitable charge, and cases of subrogation.

The TP Act, 1882 recognized the equitable rule of intention in section 101 in connection with the rule of merger when the owner of an encumbrance acquires full ownership, but made no provision for its application to cases of subrogation. The only case of subrogation provided for was the one case of a puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage, and under section 74 of the TP Act, 1882 he was subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee irrespective of any question of intention; and it has been expressly held that no question of benefit or intention arises under section 74 when a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgagee.²⁴⁷¹

Cases of legal subrogation occur in four ways—

- (1) A puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgagee.
- (2) A co-mortgagor redeeming the mortgage.
- (3) The mortgagor's surety redeeming the mortgage.
- (4) A purchaser of the equity of redemption redeeming a mortgage.

92. Subrogation.—

The distinction between legal subrogation and conventional subrogation is that in the case of the former, the person having the pre-existing interest discharged the prior mortgage to protect his interest and by meeting an obligation in excess of his liability, whereas in the latter case he would be discharging only an obligation he had undertaken under a specific agreement.

The foundation of the right of legal subrogation is the equitable principle of reimbursement. If a person is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and, therefore, pays it, he is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other. The personal obligation arising under the circumstances is embodied in section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and the equitable right of subrogation, under section 92 of TP Act, 1882. In either case, the right of subrogation or re-imbursement will arise only on the discharge of the prior mortgage, and not earlier.

Before the TP Act, 1882, the subrogation of a puisne mortgagee paying off a prior mortgagee was determined under the rule of intention. Thus, in a Madras case,²⁴⁷² a third mortgagee paid off the first mortgagee in ignorance of a second mortgage represented by a registered decree, and he was held entitled to a first charge on the ground that he must be presumed to have intended to keep the first mortgage alive in accordance with the ruling of the Privy Council. But in a Bombay case,²⁴⁷³ the plaintiff paid off a prior mortgage and retained the title deeds becoming an equitable puisne mortgagee, yet it was held that he was not subrogated to the prior mortgagee as that mortgage had not been assigned to him. The TP Act, 1882 did not apply to the case, but under the TP Act, 1882, even before the amendment, he would have been subrogated. According to the old section 74, a puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgagee was always subrogated,²⁴⁷⁴ unless he was under covenant to discharge the prior encumbrance.²⁴⁷⁵ The next case before the Privy Council of redemption by a puisne mortgagee seems to have been a case of conventional subrogation, and not of subrogation by operation of law. This was the case of Dinobundhu Shaw v Jogmaya Dasi.²⁴⁷⁶ The Privy Council held that as there was no intention to extinguish the two mortgages to A and B, and as the mortgagor had paid his debts in pursuance of an agreement with C for the benefit of C and not for the benefit of the attaching creditor, there was no subrogation. The case seems, therefore, to be one of subrogation by agreement rather than by operation of law. But if the case be considered as one of subrogation by operation of law, ie, if there was no agreement with the mortgagor and the payment be treated as made by the puisne mortgagee, the conclusion is consistent both with section 74 and the rule of intention.

The last case of subrogation of a puisne mortgagee decided by the Privy Council was the case of Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v Ambika Persad Singh.²⁴⁷⁷ where the fifth mortgagee paid off the first mortgagee, and as there were three intervening mortgages, the Privy Council held that he must have intended to keep it alive, and to stand in the place of the first mortgagee. Both the Privy Council cases of Dinobundhu Shaw v Jogmaya Dasi and Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v Ambika Persad Singh were decided after the TP Act, 1882, but no reference was made to the said Act. If the puisne mortgage is collusive or fraudulent, there is of course, no subrogation.²⁴⁷⁸ If the mortgagor has sold the equity of redemption before execution of the puisne mortgage, the latter is not entitled to subrogation.²⁴⁷⁹ An attachment renders a subsequent alienation void only so far as it prejudices the attaching creditor, and if there is no prejudice, a puisne mortgagee (by a mortgage subsequent to the attachment) can claim to be subrogated.²⁴⁸⁰ Subrogation was refused under section 74 in the undermentioned case on the ground that the section implied a tender by the subsequent mortgage on his own account, and not as an agent of the mortgagor.²⁴⁸¹ However, it would be otherwise under the present section. There can be subrogation more than once. If C by redeeming off A can be subrogated to his right, there is no reason why D by paying off C cannot be substituted to the same right, provided the security of A is legally alive at the time.²⁴⁸² Subrogation cannot be refused to a puisne mortgagee who may have paid a prior mortgage on the ground that the mortgagor's liability would be increased.²⁴⁸³

It is a mistake to suppose that a new charge comes into existence with the decree, and that a puisne mortgagee who discharges the decree of a prior mortgagee is subrogated to the position of decree holder. The fact that a decree has been passed makes no difference, and the puisne mortgagee is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee even though the debt has merged in the decree.²⁴⁸⁴ This is well illustrated by a case of redemption by a co-mortgagor. The prior mortgage was by A and B to C, and the puisne mortgage was by A alone to C. C realized the puisne mortgage by sale and bought the property himself. C then obtained a decree on the prior mortgage, this decree being of a date later than his decree on the puisne mortgage. A paid off the later decree on the prior mortgage and had priority over C. It was the date of the mortgage, not the date of the decree that determined priority.²⁴⁸⁵ A mortgagee who has obtained a decree for sale which he has not executed may use the mortgage as a shield even after execution of the decree has become time-barred. In the language of a Nagpur judge “because the mortgagee can no longer wield his mortgage as a sword, it does not follow that he cannot use it as a shield to protect his own interests”.²⁴⁸⁶ In an Allahabad case,²⁴⁸⁷ a puisne mortgagee paying off a decree obtained by a mortgagee was held to be entitled to a charge only. However, this was a case of subrogation as pointed out by the Patna High Court.²⁴⁸⁸

Although the repealed section 89 professed to extinguish the equity of redemption after a decree absolute for sale, yet when a puisne mortgagee discharged a decree absolute for sale obtained by a prior mortgagee, he was subrogated, and entitled to priority over mesne mortgages.²⁴⁸⁹

[s 92.8] Where Co-mortgagor Redeems

A co-mortgagor redeeming a mortgage is a simple case of subrogation,²⁴⁹⁰ for a co-debtor is a principal debtor in respect of his own share and surety in respect of his co-debtor's shares, and when a surety has paid the debt, he is entitled to avail himself of all the creditor's securities.²⁴⁹¹ In Jagan Nath v Abdulla,²⁴⁹² there was a prior mortgage by A and B, and a puisne mortgage by A. A paid off the prior mortgagee's decree and when the puisne mortgagee brought the property for sale, A was entitled to set up the prior mortgage as a shield. The co-mortgagor's right to subrogation was admitted even before the TP Act, 1882.²⁴⁹³

In Punjab, where the TP Act, 1882 was not in force, rules of justice, equity and good conscience applied. Applying those principles, the Supreme Court held in *Ganeshi Lal v Joti Pershad*²⁴⁹⁴ that when one of several co-mortgagors redeems the entire mortgage by paying a sum less than the full amount due under the mortgage, he is entitled to receive from his co-mortgagors only proportionate shares of the amount actually paid by him; and the same principle has been applied where the TP Act, 1882 is in force.²⁴⁹⁵ The High Court of Punjab and Haryana held that a redeeming co-mortgagor will be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee, only to the extent necessary for his own equitable protection. The view that a co-mortgagor who redeems the entire mortgage is to be subrogated or treated as a mortgagee for all intents and purposes qua the non-redeeming mortgagors, is not a correct enunciation of the law.²⁴⁹⁶

Where one co-mortgagor, by paying off the entire mortgagee debt, gets a right to contribution against the other co-mortgagor, a co-related right also accrues to the non-redeeming co-mortgagor to redeem his share of the property and to get possession thereof on payment of his share of the liability, to the redeeming co-mortgagor. This right subsists as long as the redeeming mortgagor's right to contribution subsists.²⁴⁹⁷ Redeeming co-mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in respect of the rights of the defaulting co-mortgagor.²⁴⁹⁸

A plain reading of this section does not warrant a construction that the substitute becomes a mortgagee. The rights that are created in favour of a co-mortgagee as a result of discharge of debt are “so as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems”. The section confers certain rights on the co-mortgagor and provides for the manner of its exercise as well. The rights are of redemption, foreclosure, and sale. And the manner of exercise is as a mortgagee. Thus, a co-mortgagor in possession, of excess share redeemed by him, can enforce his claim against the non-redeeming mortgagor by exercising his right of foreclosure or sale as is exercised by mortgagee under section 67 of the TP Act, 1882. However, that does not make him a mortgagee. Thus, a co-mortgagor or a junior member of the tarwad who continued in possession over the excess share got redeemed by him, could not be deemed to be a mortgagee so as to acquire right of a tenant under section 4A(1)(a) of the Kerala Land Reforms

Act, 1963.²⁴⁹⁹

[s 92.9] Where Mortgagor's Surety Redeems

There was one case before the TP Act, 1882 in which a mortgagor's surety was subrogated on redemption.²⁵⁰⁰ There were no cases under the TP Act, 1882, and before the amending Act of 1929, he would probably have been treated in the same way as a redeeming co-mortgagor. Under the TP Act, 1882 as amended, he would of course, be subrogated. It has been held that even before payment of debt by the guarantor to the creditor, the guarantor by invoking the equitable doctrine of subrogation can apply for temporary injunction.²⁵⁰¹ Where the sureties paid the mortgagee amount due under the preliminary decree during the pendency of proceedings for final decree, it was held that they had the right of subrogation.²⁵⁰²

[s 92.10] Where Purchaser of Equity of Redemption Redeems

Where the purchaser of the equity of redemption redeems or pays off a mortgage, the encumbrance may be merged or drowned in the estate of ownership. This is the case of merger referred to in the old section 101 when the rights of the mortgagee and of the owner meet in the same person. As per that section and the Privy Council case of Gokuldas v Puranmal,²⁵⁰³ already referred to, it was purely a question of the intention, express or implied, of the person paying off the mortgage. The rule of intention on which the case was decided by the Privy Council is implied in section 92, for it is when there are other mortgages that it is to the benefit of the person redeeming to keep the mortgage alive for future defence. If the auction purchaser in execution of a decree obtained on the foot of a prior mortgage without impleading the subsequent mortgagee, acquires at least the rights of the mortgagor who was a party to the action, then he has got the right to redeem the puisne mortgagee. The auction purchaser holds a double capacity of a prior mortgagee as well as the equity of redemption. In the first capacity, he can use his prior mortgage as a shield against the puisne mortgagee, and in his second capacity, he can redeem the second mortgage.²⁵⁰⁴

[s 92.11] Purchaser's Covenant Excludes Subrogation

The last sentence from the passage cited from the judgment in Malireddi's case refers to an important exception which will be discussed later in notes "Other than the mortgagor" and "Covenant excludes subrogation" below. For the present, it is sufficient to say that when a mortgagor himself pays off the mortgage, he cannot use it as a shield against a subsequent mortgage of his own, and this, for the simple reason that he cannot derogate from his own grant.

[s 92.12] Redemption by Claimant Under Invalid Purchase

If the purchase is invalid, the purchaser is a volunteer, and there is no right of subrogation.²⁵⁰⁵ So also, a purchaser from a benamidar who has no title to sell the equity of redemption.²⁵⁰⁶ This judgement may not be applicable any more after the enactment of the Benami Transaction (Prohibition) Act.

After A's death his widow in 1920 purports to sell the property to D who retains part of the consideration and pays off B's mortgage. D had acquired no interest in the property by his professed purchase from A's widow. His payment was that of a volunteer and he was not subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee B.²⁵⁰⁷

the purchase is subsequently set aside, the purchaser may still claim the benefit of the securities he had discharged. Thus, in Mahomed Shumsool v Shewukram,²⁵⁰⁸ a reversioner set aside a sale by a Hindu widow, but the purchaser was held to be entitled to claim redemption of a prior mortgage that he had discharged. In Nasiruddin v Ahmad Husain,²⁵⁰⁹ when a sale was set aside in a suit for specific performance of a prior contract of sale, and the purchaser had discharged mortgages on the property, the Privy Council said:

92. Subrogation.—

It seems that the appellants have, in virtue of their claim to be purchasers, discharged mortgages upon the property. In respect of any money paid by way of such discharge they are entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagees who they have paid off.

Other instances are cited below.²⁵¹⁰ A very extreme instance of the application of this rule was the case of Syamalarayudu v Subbarayudu.²⁵¹¹ In that case, the owner agreed to sell land to the defendant, but the plaintiff got the owner to give him an antedated deed and took possession. The defendant sued for specific performance, and pending the suit the plaintiff paid off a mortgage in order to strengthen his title. The defendant succeeded in the suit and dispossessed the plaintiff, who then sued to recover the amount of the mortgage. The suit was decreed on the ground that the payment of the mortgage debt was not illegal. In Karupan v Sakuth,²⁵¹² a collusive transferee was refused subrogation as he did not come to court with clean hands. Also in Gulzari Lal v Aziz Fatima,²⁵¹³ a prior mortgage was paid off by a collusive and fraudulent puisne mortgagee.

[s 92.14] Rule of Intention Implied in the Section

Under the present section, the rights of the purchaser of the equity of redemption when he redeems are the same, but they are stated more simply and directly. Under the TP Act, 1882, a purchaser of the equity of redemption redeeming is a case of subrogation under section 92, but the mortgagee acquiring the ownership, or the mortgagor's interest, is a case of merger or non-merger under section 101, and in neither section there is any reference to the rule of intention. In India, there is no common law rule of merger so it is unnecessary to state the case of non-merger as an exception. Again, the equitable rule of intention is an artificial one, for it is applied even when the party does not know that non-merger would be beneficial to him, as, for instance, in Dinobundhu Shaw v Jogmaya Dasi,²⁵¹⁴ where the third mortgagee was not even aware of the existence of the attachment when he supplied the money to discharge the first and second mortgages. The only case in which non-merger is beneficial, and when it is necessary to apply the equitable rule of intention is when the property is subject to other encumbrances.²⁵¹⁵ So, section 92 gives rights of subrogation only as against a mortgagor or any other mortgagee. In the case of a purchase of the whole of the equity of redemption, there are no rights of subrogation against the mortgagor, for the purchaser is himself the mortgagor.²⁵¹⁶ In the case of a purchase of a share of the equity of redemption, the purchaser has a right of subrogation against his co-mortgagor recognized in section 95. There would be no right of subrogation against a mortgagee, unless there was another mortgage. The result is, therefore, the same that the purchaser of the equity of redemption redeeming a mortgage is subrogated only when there is a co-mortgagor or when there are other encumbrances. So also, in the case of a puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage, there is no charge in the law, for under the TP Act, 1882, subrogation is irrespective of the existence of other encumbrances. A puisne mortgagee who has redeemed a prior mortgage would have the rights of a prior mortgagee against a mortgagor. In the case of the mortgagee purchasing the rights of the owner or mortgagor, section 101 expressly says that this does not effect merger as between such mortgagee, and a subsequent mortgagee. The law remains the same, but the fiction of intention which is not necessary in India has been dispensed with.

[s 92.15] Redemption by Benamidar

A benami purchaser is treated as a volunteer, and is not subrogated,²⁵¹⁷ and as he has acquired no interest in the property, he has not even a personal right of reimbursement.²⁵¹⁸ But when a person erroneously believes that he is entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagor, and pay off the mortgage, he was held entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.²⁵¹⁹

[s 92.16] "Other than the Mortgagor"

These words indicate that a mortgagor is not subrogated. The discharge of a prior encumbrance by a mortgagor stands on a different footing to redemption by a purchaser, or by a puisne mortgagee. When a mortgagor pays a mortgagee debt for which he is liable, he is not allowed to set up the charge against a subsequent encumbrancer.²⁵²⁰ The rule rests upon the same principles as section 43 of TP Act, 1882, for the mortgagor cannot use his subsequently acquired interest to defeat his grant to the puisne mortgagee,²⁵²¹ and the enlarged estate ensures for the benefit of the puisne mortgagee increasing the value of the security.

The rule was applied in an obiter dictum in an Allahabad case,²⁵²³ where a puisne mortgagee paid off a prior mortgage at the mortgagor's request, and it was said that he paid as the agent of the mortgagor and such payment could not be regarded as tender by him under section 74 and, therefore, he could not be regarded as the representative of the mortgagee within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may be mentioned that the above case was dissented from in a later case.²⁵²⁴ In a suit for foreclosure, the mortgagee claimed recovery of the mortgage amount. The suit was decreed. The judgment-debtor transferred the equity of redemption relating to the mortgage to J, for a certain sum J paid the decree-holder and satisfied the decree for the mortgage amount. It was held that the money paid belonged to the mortgagor, and not to the mortgagee, J paid it for, and on behalf of, the mortgagor. Being the mortgagor, J was not entitled to subrogation.²⁵²⁵

Section 70, Indian Contract Act, 1872 is applicable even if the contract is void. Liability in such cases is not contractual. The foundation for the claim made under section 70 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 is not a contract expressed or implied. The liability is quasi-contractual; it may resemble a contract, but in reality, it does not rest upon a contractual obligation. It is, therefore, immaterial, that there is no contract executed in such a case, or that the alleged contract is found ab-initio void, or rendered void subsequently by any circumstance.

The rule that a mortgagor cannot derogate from his grant, has no application when the second mortgage is made expressly subject to the first, and in such a case if the mortgagor redeems the prior mortgage he is not estopped, for the second mortgage was made expressly of what was left after the first was satisfied.²⁵²⁶ In a Nagpur case,²⁵²⁷ the puisne mortgagee had expressly covenanted to redeem the prior mortgage, but failed to do so. The prior mortgagee foreclosed, and made a grant of a rent free tenancy of part of the property to the mortgagor. The court held that the mortgagor was entitled to retain this tenancy against the puisne mortgagee. If a puisne mortgagee retains part of the mortgage money to redeem a prior mortgage and fails to do so, he is liable in damages to the mortgagor.²⁵²⁸ If the mortgagor has sold the property itself, ie, free from encumbrances, he is under a liability to discharge the mortgage for the benefit of his purchaser, and cannot claim subrogation when he does so. On the other hand, if the mortgagor has sold the equity of redemption, the purchaser buys subject to the mortgage and although as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the liability to pay the debt is still on the mortgagor. He (the mortgagor), is entitled to be subrogated if he is afterwards compelled to pay it.²⁵²⁹ It has to be considered whether, in view of the section as it now stands, these principles can be given effect to. Under the section, the disability of the mortgagor appears to be absolute, and it is doubtful if any exception may now be made in favour of the mortgagor as regards subrogation.

Although the word "mortgagor" includes a purchaser of the equity of redemption, yet the purchaser of an equity of redemption is not excluded from the right of subrogation. This is because: (1) he is under no covenant or personal liability to the mortgagee whose mortgage he discharges; and (2) the principle that the mortgagor cannot derogate from his grant has no application to him. A vendee from a mortgagor who pays off a prior mortgage out of money left with him by his vendor, which money he is bound to pay under the terms of the contract for sale cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, unless a registered instrument expressly creating such right of subrogation was executed.²⁵³⁰

[s 92.18] Covenant Excludes Subrogation

The rule against the subrogation of a mortgagor is extended to any purchaser of the equity of redemption or encumbrancer who discharges a prior encumbrance, which he is by contract, express or implied, bound to discharge. A person cannot claim subrogation when he simply performs his own obligation or covenant.²⁵³¹ So also, if the purchaser has covenanted to discharge the puisne mortgagee, he cannot on redeeming the prior mortgage, use it as a shield against the puisne mortgagee;²⁵³² and this rule has been applied to a transferee from the purchaser with notice of the covenant.²⁵³³ If a prior mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption covenants to discharge a puisne mortgage, he cannot use the prior mortgage as a shield against the puisne mortgagee.²⁵³⁴

The rule that a covenant excludes subrogation was applied in the following case:²⁵³⁵

A and B effected a partition of property subject to a mortgage of ₹11,000. By the terms of the partition, A covenanted to pay ₹1,000 and B covenanted to pay ₹10,000 of the mortgage debt. B also covenanted that if any excess over ₹1,000 were levied from A, he would pay the excess and that A should have a charge for the excess on B's share. B sold his share to C and paid part of the mortgagee's decree. There was a deficit of ₹5,000 which A paid. A then sued to enforce his charge for this amount from C who had purchased with notice of the charge. C claimed to be subrogated to the mortgage which had been partly discharged with the purchase money. The court held that as C had notice of the covenant in the partition deed to pay the excess, he could not claim subrogation. Apart from this, it is submitted that subrogation was excluded by the rule against partial subrogation.

Bisseswar Prosad v Lala Sarnam Singh,²⁵³⁶ this exception to subrogation was explained to be on the ground that the doctrine of subrogation being a doctrine of equity jurisprudence, it "will never be permitted, where the application of it would work injustice to the rights of those having equal or superior equities." In Malireddi Ayyareddi v Gopalakrishnayya,²⁵³⁷ the Privy Council said that the rule of subrogation would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later debt. In Muhammad Sadiq v Ghaus Muhammad,²⁵³⁸ the purchaser of the equity of redemption undertook to discharge two mortgages, but discharged only the prior, and not the puisne mortgage. When the puisne sued, it was held that the purchaser was not entitled to use the prior mortgage as a shield.

Out of the consideration for the third mortgage, B retained ₹499 for the discharge of the first mortgage and ₹790 with which he agreed to pay off C's mortgage. B did not pay off C's mortgage. C sued on his mortgage and B was not entitled to use the first mortgage as a shield.²⁵³⁹

(2) A purchased a half share in certain villages and covenanted to pay half the amount due on a mortgage of those villages, and retained part of the price for that purpose. He did not pay until the mortgagee had brought the villages to sale ie then paid the whole decretal amount plus 5% to set aside the sale. He was subrogated as to the half share he had not covenanted to pay. But he was not subrogated as to the half he had covenanted to pay, nor as to the 5% paid to the auction purchaser.²⁵⁴⁰

The rule that covenant excludes subrogation was overlooked in some cases decided under section 74 in which a puisne mortgagee was subrogated to a prior mortgage he had covenanted to discharge.²⁵⁴¹ In a Calcutta case,²⁵⁴² property subject to three mortgages was sold on a false representation that it was subject only to the second and third mortgages. The purchaser covenanted to pay these, and retained part of the price for that purpose. However, when he discovered the first mortgage, he paid the first and second, but not the third mortgage. When the third mortgagee sued to enforce his mortgage, the purchaser was allowed to use the first mortgage as a shield, but not the second. In this case, the purchaser was allowed to use a prior mortgage as a shield against a later mortgage which he had covenanted to discharge, but this was an exceptional case, for the judgment shows that the third mortgagee was a privy to the fraud on the purchaser.

A purchaser at a court sale of property subject to a mortgage is not under an implied covenant to discharge the mortgage and when he pays it off, he is entitled to subrogation.²⁵⁴³

[s 92.19] Advance to Pay Off a Mortgage: Third Paragraph

This paragraph makes a very important alteration in the law. "A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed" may come within one of three categories; namely, he may be (a) a simple money creditor; (b) a person who has an agreement with the mortgagor that the mortgage redeemed with the money will be kept alive for his benefit; or (c) a purchaser or puisne mortgagee by the same transaction. As will be seen presently, the rights of such a person are different accordingly as he comes within one or the other of the categories.

[s 92.19.1] (a) Simple money creditor

The rule in India as stated by the Privy Council is that an officious, or voluntary payment carries with it no right of reimbursement, or subrogation.²⁵⁴⁴ There is no law in India by which a creditor who had advanced money is entitled to a charge on the property acquired by the debtor with the money advanced.²⁵⁴⁵ In Ram Het v Pokhar,²⁵⁴⁶ the lender advanced money for the discharge of a mortgage decree. He made the advance on an agreement of mortgage, but accepted a promissory note in lieu of a mortgage. He was not entitled to subrogation, although two years later he made a fresh advance on a mortgage for the consolidated amount of the fresh note and the promissory note. The court held that the mere fact that money is borrowed, and is used for the purpose of paying a previous charge does not entitle the lender to the benefit of the discharged security. In such a case, the right to the benefit depends upon the existence of an agreement between the borrower and the lender.²⁵⁴⁷

Where there is no agreement, the ordinary rule is that a man having the right to act in either of the two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest. Where a tenant for life pays off a charge upon his inheritance, he is presumed to have intended to keep the charge alive.²⁵⁴⁸ This presumption can, of course, be displaced by evidence to the contrary.²⁵⁴⁹

[s 92.19.2] (b) A person who has an agreement with the mortgagor that the redeemed mortgage should be kept alive for his benefit

It was said in an English case,²⁵⁵⁰ that very slight evidence is sufficient to establish an agreement that the lender is subrogated to the rights of the original creditor; and J Mookerji, in Gurdeo Singh v Chandrikah Singh,²⁵⁵¹ spoke of conventional subrogation as arising by agreement, express or implied. Such an agreement was presumed in Dinobundhu Shaw v Jogmaya Dasi,²⁵⁵² and in Dinobundhu Shaw v Jogmaya Dasi,²⁵⁵³ and seems also to have been presumed in a case²⁵⁵⁴ from Punjab where TP Act, 1882 was previously not in force. It has also been implied in cases where the money has been advanced under a contract of sale or mortgage,²⁵⁵⁵ but not if the sale goes off for the purchaser's default.²⁵⁵⁶ In a Patna case,²⁵⁵⁷ an invalidly registered sale deed was admitted as evidence of a covenant to pay off a mortgage and subrogation was allowed, though if the deed had been validly registered, subrogation should have been refused on the ground that it was excluded by the purchaser's covenant. However, these cases so far as they refer to subrogation by agreement are no longer law, for under the third clause of the section, the agreement of subrogation must be express, and in writing and registered.²⁵⁵⁸ In a Oudh case,²⁵⁵⁹ subrogation was refused as there was no written and registered agreement. The old doctrine of conventional subrogation was opposed to section 54 of TP Act, 1882 that a mere contract does not create any interest in or charge on property.

Three mortgages X, Y and Z were executed successively by the member of a joint Hindu family. Then there was a partition between the two brothers, G and V who were the coparceners at the time of the partition. At this partition a larger share was allotted to G's branch in consideration of his paying all the family debts, and relieving V's branch of all liability in respect of them. After this, G executed mortgages P and Q for paying off mortgages X and Y respectively. Both the mortgages P and Q contained covenants by G that the mortgages under them should be subrogated to the rights under X and Y respectively, X and Y were accordingly discharged. The mortgagee under Z then sued on his mortgage. The mortgagees under P and Q set up their right of subrogation under mortgages X and Y, and claimed priority over Z. It was held that the agreement inter se between G and V would not in any way affect the rights of the mortgagees under P and Q, as there was no personal obligation on "their" part to pay off the mortgage Z. It was held that the contention that where there are more than one mortgagor, the agreement under section 92, para 3, must be with all of them, is not tenable. Hence, the covenant by G alone in this case would give the right of subrogation though in regard to the mortgages redeemed, he was only a co-mortgagor.²⁵⁶⁰

[s 92.19.3] (c) A purchaser or puisne mortgagee by the same transaction

Very often when a person advances money to a mortgagor to pay off an earlier mortgage, he secures the loan by a puisne mortgage or he becomes the purchaser. Usually in such cases, the purchaser or puisne mortgagee retains in his own hands out of the consideration money the sum required for redeeming the prior mortgage, and a covenant or acknowledgment is inserted in the deed of sale or puisne mortgage that the money so retained will be paid over to the prior mortgagee. When such a purchaser or puisne mortgagee pays the money either himself, or through the mortgagor to the prior mortgagee, the question arises whether he is entitled to the benefit of the prior mortgage. If there is an express writing and a registered agreement contained in the deed of sale or mortgage, or in a separate written and registered instrument, that he shall have the right of subrogation then clearly, he comes under the third para of the section. The difficulty arises where there is no such agreement in writing registered. The question arises whether such a person can claim to be entitled to subrogation as a purchaser of the equity of redemption or as a puisne mortgagee under the first paragraph of the section. Further question is, whether such a person can be said to have redeemed the mortgage at all. When money retained in the hands of such a person is paid to the prior mortgagee, is such payment made by such person on his own account or as agent of the mortgagor. Even before the new section came into force when a registered agreement was not necessary, many of these questions arose giving rise to a conflict of judicial opinion.

If the person advancing money to redeem a mortgage secures the loan by a puisne mortgage or if he is a purchaser and the money is part of the price, he is subrogated either as puisne mortgagee, or as purchaser of the equity of redemption.²⁵⁶¹ It does not matter if the puisne mortgage,²⁵⁶² or deed of sale was executed after the discharge of the prior mortgage with the money advanced, unless, of course, the person advancing the money was not aware of the prior mortgage, or the purpose for which the money was being utilized.²⁵⁶³ However, in an Allahabad case,²⁵⁶⁴ it was said that when a puisne mortgagee paid at the mortgagor's request, he paid as agent of the mortgagor and was not subrogated and there is a similar observation as to a purchaser advancing money to redeem a mortgage in a Calcutta case.²⁵⁶⁵ This has been held to be incorrect in the some cases,²⁵⁶⁶ for the object of the puisne mortgagee or purchaser in providing money to pay off a mortgage is to benefit himself, and not any mesne encumbrancer. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar, said that what must be taken into account is not the hand which pays the money, but the intention,²⁵⁶⁷ and in *Dinobundhu's case*²⁵⁶⁸ it was the mortgagor who paid the prior mortgagee the money provided by the puisne mortgagee.

[s 92.20] Allahabad High Court

In Totaram v Ramlal,²⁵⁶⁹ a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court consisting of three judges had held that a third mortgagee who had retained in his hand moneys to pay off the earlier mortgages, but had paid off only the first mortgage, was entitled to be subrogated to the first mortgagee as against the second. The court distinguished Muhammad Sadiq v Ghaus Mahomed,²⁵⁷⁰ and Mohesh Lal v Mohunt Bawan Das,²⁵⁷¹ and rejected the argument that in such a case the third mortgagee was a mere agent of the mortgagor who, of course, is not entitled to be subrogated. The court also observed that in any event the third mortgagee was a person entitled to the right under the amended section 92. A subsequent Full Bench of five judges in *Hira Singh v Jai Singh*²⁵⁷² disapproved of the reasoning in Totaram's case, and pointed out that section 92 itself demonstrated the difference between a person redeeming a mortgage, and a person advancing moneys by which the mortgage is redeemed:

... Where a person with whom money has been left for payment to a prior mortgagee pays it off, he is really not himself redeeming the mortgage but redeeming it as the agent of the mortgagor and has in substance advanced money to the mortgagor with which the mortgage has been redeemed. He cannot get the rights of subrogation unless there is a written and registered agreement to that effect. But where a person has had to pay off a prior mortgage out of his own funds and pays money in addition to any money that might have been left in his hand by the mortgagor or vendor, he himself has redeemed the mortgage, he comes under the first para of the section.

The court also held that the words “who has advanced to a mortgagor money ... “ in the third para were very wide, and included both a simple money creditor, and a mortgagee who took a mortgage of the property for his advance. This decision, and the distinction drawn in it between the first and the third para of the section, has been specifically approved by a later Full Bench of seven judges in Lala Sita Ram v Sharda Narain,²⁵⁷³ a case in which it was held that a purchaser who was bound by a contract to pay off the mortgage with the money left with him by the mortgagor, and who does so, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he has paid up.

In Abdul Hamid v Ram Kumar,²⁵⁷⁴ a Full Bench of the Oudh Chief Court (J Bennett, dissenting) had held following Totaram's case,²⁵⁷⁵ and certain earlier decisions, and dissenting from Hira Singh's case,²⁵⁷⁶ and Lakshmi Amma's case,²⁵⁷⁷ that a subsequent mortgagee who redeems a prior mortgage with money left with him for the purpose by the mortgagor is subrogated to the rights, even though there is no registered agreement to that effect. This view is not likely to be followed in view of the decision in Lala Sita Ram's case.²⁵⁷⁸

[s 92.21] Madras High Court

In Lakshmi Amma v Shankara Narayan,²⁵⁷⁹ a Full Bench recognised the distinction between paras 1 and 3 of section 92, and held that a usufructuary mortgagee who had undertaken to pay off three prior mortgages, but had only paid off two, was not subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees in the first two mortgages, as against the third mortgagee. This decision has been followed, and clarified in Subbarayudu v Lakshminarasamma.²⁵⁸⁰

[s 92.22] Bombay High Court

In Narayan v Parameshvarappa,²⁵⁸¹ the court followed its own earlier judgment in Vithaldas v Tukaram,²⁵⁸² and the judgments of the Madras High Court in Lakshmi Amma's case, and of the Allahabad High Court in Hira Singh's case,²⁵⁸³ and held that a purchaser paying off a prior mortgage with money retained for the purpose is not entitled to be subrogated. The court disagreed with Totaram's case.²⁵⁸⁴ This decision has been followed in Bishnu Balkrishna v Sankarappa Wagarali.²⁵⁸⁵

[s 92.23] Other Courts

The Calcutta High Court in Mukaram Marwari v Muhammad Hosain,²⁵⁸⁶ the Patna High Court in Rai Bahadur Bansidhar Dhandhanian v Kairoo Mandar,²⁵⁸⁷ Dhulin Kamlapati v Jageshar,²⁵⁸⁸ and Tika Sao v Hari Lal,²⁵⁸⁹ the Nagpur High Court in Taibai v Wasudeorao,²⁵⁹⁰ and the Gujarat High Court in *Laxmidas v Lohana Ba*²⁵⁹¹ have all accepted the same view as the Allahabad High Court in Hira Singh's case, and the Madras High Court in Lakshmi Amma's case.

In Lala Manmohan Das v Janki Prasad,²⁵⁹² the Privy Council also recognised the same distinction between the first and third paras of section 92, the former dealing with persons having an existing interest in property, and the latter with strangers who acquire an interest in property.

The weight of authority clearly seems to be in favour of the view that the two paragraphs are mutually exclusive, and that the first paragraph deals with a person who having pre-existing interest in the property redeems a prior mortgage to protect his own interest, and that a person who acquires interest only by advancing money with which the prior mortgage is satisfied does not come within the first paragraph even though he secures his advance by a mortgage or becomes a purchaser. Such a person comes within the third para, and can only claim subrogation if there be an written and registered agreement between him and the mortgagor. The right of subrogation is denied to such a person on a variety of grounds, eg that such a person when he pays over the retained money either himself or through the mortgagor, does not pay his own money and cannot be said to redeem the prior mortgage himself, or that he only performs his own obligation under his covenant, and covenant includes subrogation, or that he pays the mortgagors money as his agent and the redemption is by the mortgagor. However, the real reason seems to be that such a person having no pre-existing interest does not come within the first para and that although he is a person who comes within the third para, he cannot claim subrogation because there is no registered agreement giving him that right as required by that section. Prior to the amendment, such a person could only claim not legal, but only conventional subrogation, ie, based on agreement express or implied and after the amendment, he cannot claim legal subrogation as laid down in the first para, but can only claim conventional subrogation as modified by the third para if he satisfies the requirements of that para. The third paragraph, by requiring the agreement to be written and registered, has restricted the application of the doctrine of equitable or conventional subrogation.

The section gives the puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage the same rights as regards redemption, foreclosure, and sale as the prior mortgagee. In the old section 74, the same idea was expressed by the words “all the rights and powers of the mortgagee as such.” The rights are the same rights as the prior mortgagee had at the time he was redeemed.²⁵⁹³ He is entitled to the same rate of interest as the prior mortgagee,²⁵⁹⁴ and if any part of the property mortgaged to the prior mortgagee has ceased to be subject to his mortgage, the subrogated mortgagee acquires only the prior mortgagee’s rights in what is left.²⁵⁹⁵ The case of *Delhi and London Bank v Bhikar*²⁵⁹⁶ is an illustration of the section. Two properties X and Y were mortgaged to A, and then Y was mortgaged to B. A and B each sued for sale without making the other a party, and purchased at the sale. B then redeemed A. B having purchased Y and cleared off the mortgage, he is the owner of Y; but he has only the mortgagee rights of A in X, and not the rights of A as the purchaser of the equity of redemption of X. Therefore, B is liable to be redeemed by A as to X. When a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgagee, he acquires the rights of the prior mortgagee qua mortgagee. If the prior mortgagee has granted a lease, the puisne mortgagee does not acquire by subrogation any rights as landlord. Any subsidiary rights such as leasehold rights created by the mortgagee come to an end ipso facto on redemption.²⁵⁹⁷

[s 92.26] Interest

The purchaser of the equity of redemption paying off a prior mortgage is subrogated not only as to the principal sum paid for redemption, but also as to interest on that sum. It has been said that the fact of his taking possession does not prejudice his right to interest.²⁵⁹⁸ In other cases, it has been said that if he is in possession, his claim to interest is inadmissible,²⁵⁹⁹ or only admissible to the extent the profits fall short of the interest.²⁶⁰⁰

[s 92.27] “Against the Mortgagor or Any Other Mortgagee”

The effect of these words is that a puisne mortgagee or a co-mortgagor redeeming is always subrogated, and a purchaser of the equity of redemption is subrogated if there is another mortgagee, while a purchaser of part of the equity of redemption is subrogated as against the mortgagor. This as explained above, bears the same result as is achieved in the case of a purchaser by the rule of intention enacted in the old section 101, and applied in the case of Gokuldas v Puranmal.²⁶⁰¹

[s 92.28] Mortgages of a Different Class

In the case of a puisne mortgagee redeeming a prior mortgage of a different class, there was, under the repealed section 74, some difficulty in applying the doctrine of subrogation. In an Allahabad case²⁶⁰² the puisne mortgagee was a usufructuary mortgagee who paid off a prior simple mortgage and the court dealt with the case under section 72, and held that having preserved the security he was entitled to tack the amount paid onto his usufructuary mortgage, and retain possession until the whole amount was discharged. Until this section he would have the rights both of simple and usufructuary mortgagee. He could enforce these rights separately, for, the remedies being different, section 67A would not apply. He could sue for sale on the simple mortgage, subject to his right of possession under the usufructuary mortgage.

In a Madras case,²⁶⁰³ the court said that subrogation is not applicable when the mortgagor gives two successive usufructuary mortgages. However, it is submitted that the puisne usufructuary mortgagee can redeem the prior usufructuary mortgage and take possession until he is paid the amount due on both mortgages. In the case cited, however, the puisne mortgagee had covenanted to discharge the prior mortgage, and the court omitted to notice that he was excluded from subrogation by his own covenant.

Prior to the enactment of section 92, there was considerable divergence of decisions on the question as to whether the right of subrogation was available even though the mortgage liability was only partially discharged. In Gurdeo Singh v Chandrikah,²⁶⁰⁴ J Mookerjee had held that there could be no subrogation unless the prior encumbrancer was fully satisfied. A contrary view had been taken by the Allahabad²⁶⁰⁵, Madras,²⁶⁰⁶ and Nagpur²⁶⁰⁷ High Courts. Though in theory much can be said for the Allahabad view, it would in practice lead to much complication and difficulty in apportioning claims arising out of subrogation. The matter was put beyond doubt, however, by two decisions of the Privy Council²⁶⁰⁸ in which the opinion of J Mookerjee was approved. The fourth para of section 92 now accepts that view, and makes a redemption in full of the prior mortgage a necessary condition which must be satisfied before the right to subrogation can be claimed.

In some cases, subrogation has been allowed when the prior mortgage has been discharged, but only a part of the money has been advanced by the subrogee.²⁶⁰⁹ What is essential is that the whole debt must be paid up, and not that the whole debt must be paid up by one person. In such a case, all persons making the payment are entitled to the benefit of the right.²⁶¹⁰

Under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. Under the first para of section 92 of the TP Act, 1882, any of the persons referred to in section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems, may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee. The third paragraph gives a right of subrogation to a person who advances to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage is redeemed, but subject to certain conditions. Two things are clearly noticeable, namely, (1) that section 69 gives only a right personally against another person, whereas section 92 gives a right against the mortgaged property; and (2) that the person making the payment gets, under section 69, a right of reimbursement in his own right and independently of anybody else's right, whereas the person paying up the prior mortgage is, under section 92, subrogated into the rights of the prior mortgagee. A person making the payment may well come under both sections, in which case he gets both rights. The time within which such a person may enforce his two rights is, however, different and it may well happen that at the time he takes proceedings, one of his rights is barred. The period of limitation for enforcing the right of reimbursement under section 69 is three years from the date of payment under Article 23 of the Act of 1963. No limitation would apply if the mortgage is not for a fixed period and such a mortgage can be redeemed under the provisions of "once a mortgage always a mortgage".²⁶¹¹ The question of limitation for a suit to enforce the right of subrogation under section 92 is of some difficulty. This right of subrogation may arise at two distinct stages, namely, (i) when the prior mortgage is paid off before mortgagee has put the mortgage in suit and got a decree, thereon; and (ii) when after the prior mortgagee sued upon his mortgage and got his decree, the decretal amount is paid off. Although section 92 in terms refers to “mortgage”, “mortgagor”, “mortgagee” and “mortgaged property”, it is now well settled, since the decision of the Privy Council in Gopi Narain Khanna v Bansidhar,²⁶¹² that the right of subrogation is available even after the prior mortgage has been put in suit, and a decree has been passed thereon. The question of limitation will, therefore, have to be considered in respect of the two situations, namely, when the prior mortgagee is paid up before suit, and when he is paid up after decree.

[s 92.31] Before Suit

The leading case is that of Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v Ambika Persad Singh.²⁶¹³ In that case, the last mortgagee paid off the first mortgage in 1888, the first mortgage also being due for redemption in that year. The successors in interest of the last mortgagee claimed priority as subrogees to the rights of the first mortgagee in a suit filed by the fifth mortgagee in 1900, more than 12 years after the date of redemption and after the paying off the first mortgage. The Privy Council held that the claim was barred by Article 132 of the Limitation Act, 1908, which corresponds to Article 62 of the Limitation Act, 1963. The Privy Council computed the period from the expiry of the first mortgage, and that date for the accrual of the cause of action has been accepted in some cases,²⁶¹⁴ as the correct starting point in cases where the prior mortgage has been paid off before suit. In Munna Lal v Chuni Lal,²⁶¹⁵ the majority of a Full Bench of Allahabad High Court held that limitation would run from the date of payment of the prior mortgage or the decretal amount. It is submitted that, so far at least as subrogation before decree is concerned, this statement of the law is contrary to principle, as well as weight of authority.

[s 92.32] After Decree

It is well settled that where a subsequent mortgagee pays up the amount of the decree obtained by a prior mortgagee on his prior mortgage, the subsequent mortgagee is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee. The question is as to how, and within what time the subrogee is to enforce his rights.

In Gopi Narain Khanna v Bansidhar,²⁶¹⁶ the Privy Council laid down that a subrogee must file a separate suit to enforce his claims, and the decisions in earlier cases²⁶¹⁷ that the subrogee could continue the suit and execute the decree are no longer good law. The next question is that of limitation, and there has been considerable divergence of judicial decisions on this point. Three different views have been expressed:

(1) Time runs from the date of accrual of the cause of action on the mortgage deed itself, and not from the date of payment of the decretal amount;²⁶¹⁸

(2) time runs from the date of payment of the decretal amount;²⁶¹⁹

(3) time runs from the date fixed for payment by the decree which is paid up.²⁶²⁰

The first view was based on the observations of the Privy Council in Gopi Narain Khanna's case,²⁶²¹ viz that the decree is discharged on the payment of the decretal amount, and cannot be revived by section 92. In that case, the decree was in the form provided by section 86 (now O XXXIV, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure) and was a preliminary decree. It was never made absolute as the decretal amount was paid. There had, therefore, been no reconveyance of the property to the mortgagor. There are two things in a mortgage, the mortgage debt, and the mortgage security. The debt may be satisfied, but the security would be kept alive, and that is the very foundation of the doctrine of subrogation. This distinction has been recognised by the Privy Council in Janaki Nath Roy v Pramatha Nath Malia.²⁶²² Similarly, in Batey Krishna v Parsotamdas,²⁶²³ the Privy Council recognised that the rights of the subrogee had merged in the decree in the suit. It is submitted that on the same principle the right of the original mortgagee merges in the mortgage decree, and the person who is subrogated is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the form they have assumed when the subrogation takes place. When the mortgage decree is passed, the mortgage charge is thus transformed and assumes a new garb and a new life as regards its enforceability. If the decretal debt is paid up, the debt is discharged, but what has been called the decretal charge does not perish with it, for if it does, there will be no shoe into which the puisne mortgagee paying up the decretal debt, can get into. The payment of the decretal debt can on no sound principle revive the mortgage which has merged into the decree, and has become extinct as a mortgage. What has been stated above is in accordance with the views of J Wallace in Parvati Ammal v Venkatarama Iyer,²⁶²⁴ J Chatterji in Babu Lal v Bindhyachal Raj,²⁶²⁵ and J Mukherjee in Shyamisuddin v Asadulla.²⁶²⁶ It is true that J Wallace changed his view in Kotappa v Raghavayya,²⁶²⁷ but the reasons for the change do not appear convincing. A further factor which lends support to the view expressed above is the distinction to be borne in mind between the substantive right to subrogation conferred by section 92, and the procedural or adjectival provisions of the laws of limitation. The latter may in some cases bar the remedy, but do not generally extinguish the right. If this distinction is kept in mind, there can be no difficulty in giving full effect to the doctrine of subrogation, namely, that if at the time of payment the mortgage is alive as a mortgage, the subrogee's right is on the mortgage, and his remedy is a suit brought within 12 years of the accrual of the cause of action on the mortgage. If, however, at the time of payment the mortgage, had merged in a decree, the subrogee gets the mortgagee decree-holder's right and his remedy if the decree is not in form 9 of appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure, is by way of a suit which must be brought, under Article 62 of the Limitation Act, 1963, within 12 years from when the money due under the decree becomes payable.

The second view is based on the theory of a fresh charge or a statutory right giving the subrogee a charge. This has been accepted in Shib Lal v Munni Lal,²⁶²⁸ Alam Ali v Beni Charan,²⁶²⁹ and Munna Lal v Chuni Lal,²⁶³⁰ and it has been held that time runs from the date of payment. The acceptance of this view may well result in the subrogee having better rights than the mortgagee decree-holder, for he may be able to file a suit even before the date of payment under the decree. In Sheosaran v Amia Co-operative Credit Society,²⁶³¹ and Brij Bhukhan v Bhagwan Dutt,²⁶³² the Patna High Court and Oudh Chief Court have taken the view that on subrogation the subrogee has a charge in addition to his rights of subrogation, and that even if his rights as a subrogee are barred, his rights to enforce the charge will remain alive for 12 years after the date of payment.

It is submitted that the third view is, as stated above, the correct view. If that view is accepted, it will be unnecessary to have recourse to the theory of a fresh or statutory charge, or to extract, as done in Patna and Oudh, a statutory charge in addition to the right of subrogation, by a process of interpretation of the provisions of the TP Act, 1882 on the basis of the supposed intention of the legislature.

A suit for specific performance was instituted by the purchaser in respect of a mortgage property. The suit was decreed and purchaser was directed to pay consideration amount to the owner/mortgagor. The purchaser failed to pay the amount as per the directions in the judgement, the purchaser continued to remain in adverse possession of property for over 12 years. It was held that the purchaser had no interest in equity; and redemption cannot be subrogated to the right of mortgage.²⁶³³

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

2369 Suits for Foreclosure, Sale or Redemption

93. Prohibition of tacking.—

No mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his original security; and, except in the case provided for by section 79, no mortgagee making a subsequent advance to the mortgagor, whether with or without notice of an intermediate mortgage, shall thereby acquire any priority in respect of his security of such subsequent advance.

[s 93.1] Amendment

This is the same as section 80 before the amending Act of 1929. The section has been renumbered 93, and placed after section 92, as the principle of tacking is closely allied to that of subrogation.

[s 93.2] Tacking

If there are successive mortgages thus:

A mortgages to B

A mortgages to C

And A mortgages to D

D may redeem B and be subrogated to the rights of B; but he only takes priority over C in respect of B's

93. Prohibition of tacking.—

mortgage, and not in respect of his own mortgage.²⁶³⁴

The section was considered in *Mittu Lal v Kishan Lal*²⁶³⁵ with reference to a question of ratable distribution under section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, corresponding to section 73 of the Code of 1908. The first and third mortgages were to B, and the second to C. B obtained two decrees for sale on his mortgages and received payment of the sale proceeds. C obtained a decree for sale and claimed that, after deducting the amount due on the first mortgage only, the balance of the sale proceeds should be paid to him. C's claim was allowed on the ground that neither the rule of rateable distribution under the Code of Civil Procedure, nor section 80 (now section 93) of TP Act, 1882 gave priority to a subsequent encumbrancer.

[s 93.3] With or Without Notice

It does not matter whether the mortgagee making the subsequent advance has notice of the intermediate mortgage.²⁶³⁶

[s 93.4] Salvage Payments

When a prior mortgagee makes payments of arrears of government revenue to protect the property from forfeiture and sale, such payments are in the nature of salvage payment on behalf of all persons interested, and are added to the prior mortgage either under section 72 of TP Act, 1882 or section 9 of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act, 1859, and have priority over puisne encumbrances.²⁶³⁷

[s 93.5] Mortgagor Not Affected

The section refers to the rights of successive mortgagees inter se, and has no bearing on the question which may arise between the mortgagor and mortgagee with reference to consolidation, or tacking or adding expenses to the mortgage debt under sections 61 or 72. In a case where the mortgagor had been in possession and a suit was compromised on terms that the mortgagor should pay the arrears of rent with the mortgage debt, it was held that a transferee of the equity of redemption was not bound to pay the arrears, as the rent could not be tacked on to the mortgage debt.²⁶³⁸

94. Rights of mesne mortgagee.—

Where a property is mortgaged for successive debts to successive mortgagees, a mesne mortgagee has the same rights against mortgagees posterior to himself as he has against the mortgagor.

[s 94.1] Amendment

This section corresponds partly to the repealed section 75 and the repealed O XXXIV, rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, as originally enacted.

[s 94.2] Redeem Up, Foreclose Down

This familiar rule was expressed in the repealed section 75. In the TP Act, 1882 as amended, it is divided between sections 91 (a) and 94. Section 91 (a) gives a puisne mortgagee a right to redeem a prior mortgage, and this section gives a prior mortgagee a right to foreclose a puisne mortgagee. It is not easy to understand why the section refers to a mesne mortgagee, as it does not refer to rights against anterior mortgagees. The word “prior” would have been more appropriate and possibly the word “mesne” is a survival of the repealed O XXXIV, rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908.

The rule arises in the case of successive mortgages, and is best explained by an example. Thus if there are three successive mortgages—

A mortgages toB

A mortgages to C

94. Rights of mesne mortgagee.—

A mortgages to D

C as assignee of part of the equity of redemption of A, has the right to redeem B. For the same reason D can redeem C or B. On the other hand, B can foreclose A, and as portions of A's equity of redemption have been transferred to C and to D, B can foreclose C or D or both.

It is recognized in Indian cases that the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem a prior mortgagee is ancillary to his right to work out his remedy by sale of the property.

²⁶³⁹ For this reason, the Madras High Court has held that the limitation for a puisne mortgagee's suit to redeem a prior mortgage is not 60 years under Article 148, but 12 years under Article 132,²⁶⁴⁰ although the other High Courts applied the 60 years' period under Article 148 of the Limitation Act, 1908.²⁶⁴¹ Under the Limitation Act, 1963, Article 61 (a) corresponds to Article 148, and provides a period of 30 and not 60 years, and Article 62 corresponds to Article 132, the period continuing to be 12 years.

[s 94.3] Effect of Prior Mortgagee's Decree on Puisne Mortgagee

If the prior mortgagee forecloses his mortgage, and makes the puisne mortgagees parties to the suit, liberty is given under the decree to the puisne mortgagees to redeem the prior mortgage and foreclose or bring to sale the mortgagor, though the decree does not operate as res judicata between the mortgagor and the puisne mortgagee.²⁶⁴² In a case where the decree was not in proper form and did not give this liberty, the Privy Council held that the puisne mortgagee could not pay off the prior mortgagee and adopt the decree as his own.²⁶⁴³ This was on the ground that payment satisfied the decree and there was nothing left to execute, and so the puisne mortgagee's remedy was by another suit.²⁶⁴⁴ When the decree is in a proper form and gives the puisne mortgagee a right to redeem which he exercises and the mortgagor makes default in payment, the court may substitute the puisne mortgagee as decree holder, and pass a preliminary decree in his favour.²⁶⁴⁵ However, if the puisne does not exercise his right to redeem, the property after sale passes to the auction purchaser free from encumbrances, and the rights of the puisne mortgagee are transferred to the surplus sale proceeds.²⁶⁴⁶ In a case where the prior mortgage was of property in Calcutta and the puisne mortgage of that property and another property in the mofussil, the prior mortgagee sued for sale and the sale proceeds were not enough to satisfy the puisne mortgage—yet the puisne mortgagee was not allowed to bring to sale the mofussil property which was not in suit.²⁶⁴⁷

[s 94.4] Rights of Auction Purchaser at Sale in Execution of Mortgagee's Decree

In this connection, it is important to note that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree is in a much stronger position than a purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor. The sale in execution of the mortgagee's decree passes the rights of the mortgagee as well as of the mortgagor as they existed at the date of the mortgage.²⁶⁴⁸ If the mortgagor has no title so that the equity of redemption is not represented in the mortgagee's suit, the mortgage decree is so far as the property is concerned, a nullity.²⁶⁴⁹

[s 94.5] Rights of Auction Purchaser at Sale in Execution of Mortgagee's Decree if Puisne Mortgagee not a Party

If the prior mortgagee suing to enforce his mortgage does not make the puisne mortgagee a party to the suit and brings the property to sale, it has been held that the auction purchaser acquires the rights both of the mortgagee and mortgagor. As assignee of the mortgagor, he may sue to redeem the puisne mortgage,²⁶⁵⁰ or as assignee of the mortgagee's rights, he may sue to enforce the puisne mortgage.²⁶⁵¹ It has been held that the purchaser acquires the rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee free from subsequent encumbrances, but is still

94. Rights of mesne mortgagee.—

liable to be redeemed by the puisne mortgagee,²⁶⁵² or by an assignee of the equity of redemption who has not been made a party.²⁶⁵³ In a suit to redeem the auction purchaser, the decree is ignored and the auction purchaser is entitled to the interest upto redemption.²⁶⁵⁴ The auction purchaser cannot sue for possession, but may sue for sale to compel redemption.²⁶⁵⁵

[s 94.6] Omission to Implead Puisne Mortgagee Does not Affect his Rights

The omission to implead a puisne mortgagee does not in any way affect his rights,²⁶⁵⁶ although the first mortgagee may obtain a decree on his mortgage, and the property may be sold in execution of such decree.²⁶⁵⁷ Not only has the puisne mortgagee the right to redeem the prior mortgage after he has brought the property to sale,²⁶⁵⁸ but his right to sue for sale, subject of course to the first mortgage, is not affected.²⁶⁵⁹ Even if the puisne mortgage is of a part, yet the puisne mortgagee has a right to redeem the prior mortgage of the whole.²⁶⁶⁰ The puisne mortgagee may redeem the prior mortgage although a suit to enforce the puisne mortgage is barred by limitation. This is because limitation for a suit for redemption is 30 years under Article 61(a) of the Limitation Act, 1963, while limitation for a suit to enforce a mortgage is 12 years under Article 62 of the Act of 1963.

Redemption of the prior mortgage will not give the puisne mortgagee a right to possession if the prior mortgage is not usufructuary.²⁶⁶¹ In a Nagpur case,²⁶⁶² a puisne mortgagee was not made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit. After the decree, but before the equity of redemption was extinguished by the sale, the mortgagor sold the equity of redemption and his vendee redeemed the puisne mortgage. The vendee, standing in the shoes of the puisne mortgagee, was entitled to redeem the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser. The Privy Council have repeatedly said that the proceedings in the prior mortgagee's suit are not binding on the puisne so as to affect his right under the puisne mortgage.²⁶⁶³ In Sukhi v Ghulam Safdar Khan,²⁶⁶⁴ the Judicial Committee said:

The general principle is stated rightly by the High Court. It is this: The plaintiff is a puisne mortgagee seeking to enforce her mortgage, the prior mortgagee in his suit having failed to make her a party. It is the duty of the court to give the plaintiff the opportunity of occupying the position she would have occupied if she had been a party to the former suit.

Chief Justice Willis in a Madras case,²⁶⁶⁵ said that the mortgagee has a right to sell the mortgagor's interest as it stood at the date of the mortgage subject to this, that he must make all subsequent mortgagees parties if he wishes the sale to be free of their encumbrances. This, it is submitted, is a correct statement of the law, but in an earlier case from Allahabad,²⁶⁶⁶ J Turner said:

Of course such subsequent encumbrancers, if they are not made parties, might at any time before the sale may come in and redeem, and they will not be bound by the decree, but if they do not redeem and a sale takes place, their liens will be defeated unless they can show something more than the existence of their subsequent encumbrances, some fraud or collusion which entitled them to defeat the first encumbrance or to have it postponed to their own.

It is submitted that this is not a correct statement of the law. It is difficult to see how the lien can be defeated if the puisne mortgagee was not a party to the suit, or how property can be said to be taken by the purchaser free from encumbrances if the puisne mortgagee still has a right to redeem him.

This difference of opinion as to the precise effect of a prior mortgagee's sale without impleading the puisne has led to many conflicting decisions, when the right of possession of the property has been in issue. It has been held in some cases that a puisne mortgagee in possession, though not impleaded in the prior mortgagee's suit, may be evicted by the auction purchaser at the prior mortgagee's sale, and that the puisne mortgagee must redeem him or give up possession.²⁶⁶⁷ The same rule has also been applied to an assignee of part of the equity of redemption who has been in possession,²⁶⁶⁸ though in some cases it has been held that if the mortgagee's omission to join the purchaser of part of the equity of redemption was intentional, his suit for possession should be dismissed.²⁶⁶⁹ It is submitted that the right of redemption is a right, and not a liability, and a person holding such right cannot be compelled to enforce it on pain of eviction. Again, these cases offend against the principle that a puisne mortgagee should not be prejudiced by the omission of the prior mortgagee to join him as a party. In other cases, however, it has been held that the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser cannot dispossess the puisne mortgagee,²⁶⁷⁰ or a sharer in the equity of redemption²⁶⁷¹ who has not been joined, unless as assignee of the equity of redemption he redeems him; and the auction purchaser is not entitled to evict a lessee of a lease subsequently granted by the mortgagor if the lessee had not been made a party to the suit.²⁶⁷²

Conversely, an assignee of a part of the equity of redemption was held entitled to recover possession from the auction purchaser at the mortgagee's sale.²⁶⁷³ However, these cases have been dissented from on the ground that his only right is that of redemption.²⁶⁷⁴

[s 94.7] Possession as between Auction Purchasers at Sales of Prior and Puisne Mortgagees Who Have Not Made Each Other a Party

Again, the dispute for possession may arise between the auction purchaser of the prior, and that of the puisne mortgagee who have each brought the property to sale without making the other a party. Many cases proceeded on the view that after the sale by one mortgagee there was nothing left for the other mortgagee to sell, and the right of possession was decided according to priority of sale.²⁶⁷⁵ In some cases, the right of possession was determined according to the priority of the mortgages.²⁶⁷⁶ In one case, the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser sued the puisne auction purchaser for possession, and the court gave him a decree for sale in default of redemption.²⁶⁷⁷ In a Madras case, the court said that the prior mortgagee not having joined the puisne mortgagee, the right of the purchaser to be treated as the owner of the equity of redemption, which is an estate of ownership, is imperfect, and the puisne mortgagee who represents the ultimate equity of redemption is entitled to retain possession.²⁶⁷⁸ But in another case,²⁶⁷⁹ the Madras High Court held that although the prior mortgagee not having joined the puisne, his suit was imperfectly constituted, yet he was entitled to use the prior mortgage as a shield, and that the puisne mortgagee's purchaser is not entitled to dispossess him, unless he pays him off. The Allahabad High Court holds that if the prior mortgage is not usufructuary, the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser gets no right of possession. A qualified decree for possession unless redeemed, is in effect a decree for foreclosure, and the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser is not entitled to such a decree either against the auction purchaser of a puisne mortgagee who has not been made a party,²⁶⁸⁰ or against an assignee of part of the equity of redemption who has not been joined.²⁶⁸¹ On the other hand, the right of foreclosure is recognized in the following passage from Jones,²⁶⁸² which is approved by Ghose,²⁶⁸³ and which has been followed in many cases:

When a party in interest other than the owner of the equity of redemption, is not made a party to the bill, the foreclosure is not generally for this reason wholly void. It is effectual as against those persons interested in the equity of redemption who are made parties. The sale vests the estate in the purchaser subject to redemption by the person interested in it who was not made a party to the proceedings. His only remedy, however, is to redeem. He cannot maintain ejectment against the purchaser. He cannot have the sale set aside by petition in the foreclosure suit. His only right is the right of redemption. The sale, though it fails to be effectual in every other respect, operates as an assignment of the mortgage and all the mortgagee's rights to the purchaser, who may proceed de novo to foreclose.

It would follow that an assignee of part of the equity of redemption or a puisne mortgagee who has not been made a party cannot dispossess a prior mortgagee's auction purchaser.²⁶⁸⁴

The question, however, is one which seems to admit of a simple solution. If either of the mortgage is usufructuary, the auction purchaser at that mortgagee's sale is entitled to possession. If neither mortgage is usufructuary, each auction purchaser is equally entitled to possession, and he who secures possession is entitled to keep it until redeemed, and if both are willing to redeem, the auction purchaser from the prior mortgagee has the prior right to redeem. This subject is discussed in a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court,²⁶⁸⁵ where the conclusion is partly based on the doctrine of lis pendens. However, as pointed out by J Mukerji in the same case and by the Madras High Court in a subsequent case,²⁶⁸⁶ this is an incorrect application of the rule of lis pendens, for the puisne mortgagee's title relates back to the date of the mortgage.

[s 94.8] Priority of Rights of Redemption

When a prior mortgagee has brought the property to sale and has himself purchased it, he is entitled as assignee of the equity of redemption to redeem the puisne.²⁶⁸⁷ If the two rights to redeem, viz the right of the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior, and the right of the prior mortgagee to redeem, the puisne takes priority.²⁶⁸⁸ In a Calcutta case,²⁶⁸⁹ there was a first mortgage to A of 33 bighas and then a second mortgage to B of 8 of these 33 bighas and 4 other bighas. A obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage without making B a party, and purchased the 33 bighas himself. B then sued to redeem A and he had the right to redeem the 33 bighas, but if this had been allowed, A as assignee of the equity of redemption could have again redeemed the eight and the four bighas of the puisne mortgage. The court to avoid complications allowed B to redeem only the eight bighas. Similar decrees were made in some other cases.²⁶⁹⁰ In Amba Prasad v Wahidullah,²⁶⁹¹ the puisne mortgage was of two-thirds of the property in the prior mortgage, and each mortgagee had sued for sale, and purchased without joining the other. The prior mortgagee was in possession, but the court allowed the puisne mortgagee to redeem two-thirds of the property for a proportionate amount of the mortgage money. The court said:

Where the rights of the mortgagors have vested, as in this case, partly in a prior mortgagee and partly in a subsequent mortgagee, after a suit had been brought by each of them to enforce his mortgage, neither the former can be compelled to redeem the whole nor can he compel the latter to give up his interest in the share of the mortgagor which he has acquired.

uisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or sale on his own mortgage only. In that case, the prior mortgagee is not a necessary party—O XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908—and the property will be sold subject to the prior mortgage.²⁶⁹² He may do so even after the prior mortgagee has brought the property to sale and purchased it without making him a party,²⁶⁹³ and in such a case, he should make the prior mortgagee's auction purchaser a party.²⁶⁹⁴

94. Rights of mesne mortgagee.—

If he merely joins the prior mortgagee in a suit on his own puisne mortgage and claims no relief against him, the position of the prior mortgagee will be that of a paramount title holder outside the controversy, and he will not be affected by the decree which the puisne obtains. This occurred in the Privy Council case of Radha Kishun v Khurshed Hossein.²⁶⁹⁵ The prior mortgage was of 1892 to A whose interest devolved on B, who assigned it in September 1906 to the plaintiff. The puisne mortgage was of 1894 to C, who sued for sale in August 1906 making B a party, but claiming no relief against him. After C had obtained the decree for sale, the plaintiff sued on his prior mortgage and was met by the plea of res judicata on the ground that this predecessor B might and ought to have enforced the security in the former suit. The defence failed as C had not in his suit sought to displace B's title, and to postpone it to his own.

The prior mortgagee may consent to the property being sold free from his prior mortgage giving him the same interest in the sale proceeds as he had in the property—Code of Civil Procedure, O XXXIV, rule 12. In such a case it is not open to the mortgagee to contend that the rate of interest in the prior mortgage is excessive.²⁶⁹⁶ Such a contention would, however, be open to the puisne mortgagee if he had exercised his right of redemption. The Allahabad High Court at one time held that the puisne mortgagee could not enforce his own mortgage without redeeming the prior mortgagee.²⁶⁹⁷ This case known as Mata Din's case was overruled in 1907 by a Full Bench in Ram Shankar v Ganesh Prasad.²⁶⁹⁸ and in the next year section 85 was replaced by O XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. Mata Din's case was in conflict with previous decisions of the same High Court,²⁶⁹⁹ and with those of other High Courts.²⁷⁰⁰ It involved an obvious hardship to the puisne mortgagee, for his period of redemption might be shorter than that of the prior mortgagee.²⁷⁰¹ About the same time that Mata Din's case was decided the Privy Council, *Umesh Chunder v Zahoor Fatima*²⁷⁰² upheld an order for sale in a case where the puisne mortgagee had sued in the alternative for sale subject to a prior mortgage, or for redemption of the prior mortgage. The Allahabad High Court has since held that even if the puisne mortgagee makes the prior mortgagee a party, he may sell the property subject to the prior mortgage, and is not bound to redeem him;²⁷⁰³ though it may sometimes be convenient to direct redemption of the prior mortgage as tending to prevent multiplicity of actions.²⁷⁰⁴

The puisne mortgagee may redeem up mortgages prior to his own and foreclose the mortgagor. The form of decree is that in form 10, appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908. He may also foreclose down mortgages subsequent to his own.

If the puisne redeems a prior mortgagee who has brought the property to sale without joining him as a party, he acquires the rights of the prior mortgagee, and steps into his shoes by subrogation. In that case, it has been held that the mortgagor's right to redeem revives.²⁷⁰⁵ This is because the redemption of the prior mortgage discharges that mortgage, and vacates the sale so that the equity of redemption comes again into the hands of the mortgagor.²⁷⁰⁶

These observations have, however, been fully considered and disapproved in a judgment by the Kerala High Court,²⁷⁰⁷ where it was observed that the Patna judgment overlooks the effect of O XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure.

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

2369 Suits for Foreclosure, Sale or Redemption

2708[95. Right of redeeming co-mortgagor to expenses.—

Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property, he shall, in enforcing his right of subrogation under section 92 against his co-mortgagors, be entitled to add to the mortgage-money recoverable from them such proportion of the expenses properly incurred in such redemption as is attributable to their share in the property.]

[s 95.1] Amendment

This section was substituted for the original section by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 95.2] Defects in the Old Section

The old section led to much confusion, for it had the effect of repealing the doctrine of subrogation and giving the redeeming co-mortgagor not the same rights as the mortgagee, but a mere charge which, however, was not available against bona fide purchasers for value without notice.²⁷⁰⁹

[s 95.3] Subrogation

All the defects of old section now disappear, and under the combined effect of sections 91 and 92, the case of one co-mortgagor redeeming is merely an instance of subrogation.²⁷¹⁰ The redeeming mortgagor has not merely a charge, but the mortgage as to his share is extinguished, and, as to the shares of the other mortgagors, he stands in the shoes of the mortgagee. He may stand on the mortgage he has redeemed, if he can and, if he cannot, may rely on his charge;²⁷¹¹ limitation to enforce his right of contribution against the co-mortgagor, and for the co-mortgagor's suit to redeem him, is the same as in a suit to enforce or to redeem the mortgage.²⁷¹² Where a co-mortgagor redeems the entire mortgage, his right as a mortgagee relates back to the date of the mortgage which he has redeemed, while considering the benefit of priority over subsequent mortgages.²⁷¹³

[s 95.4] Expenses

As the right of subrogation is provided for by sections 91 and 92, this section is limited to the costs of redemption. For this purpose the word “expenses” which excludes the mortgage debt and items which the mortgagee is entitled to tack on the mortgage debt under section 72, is more appropriate than it was in the old

section. The mortgagee's costs are tacked on to the mortgage debt, and are covered by the doctrine of subrogation. This section allows the redeeming mortgagor to tack a proportionate share of his costs also to the mortgage debt as against the co-mortgagor. Under the old section, interest from date of redemption has been allowed,²⁷¹⁴ but at the discretion of the court.²⁷¹⁵ It has also been said that the redeeming mortgagor is not entitled to interest, unless he has given express notice claiming it.²⁷¹⁶ When the sale of the mortgage property is set aside, the fee chargeable for poundage, so also compensation payable to the auction purchaser, do not form part of the expenses.²⁷¹⁷

[s 95.5] Mortgage Decree

This section applies when one mortgagor discharges a mortgage decree.²⁷¹⁸

[s 95.6] Mortgagors

Even before the enactment of section 59A, it was held that the word "mortgagors" included successors in title to the mortgagor, assignees of parts of the equity of redemption, and representatives of the original mortgagor.²⁷¹⁹ A Calcutta case²⁷²⁰ doubted whether representatives of the mortgagor were included in the term. Another Calcutta case²⁷²¹ refused to admit to the benefit of the section an assignee of a leasehold interest created by one of the mortgagors. But a benamidar who has executed a mortgage with authority of the real owner and paid it off with his own money, was allowed a charge under the old section.²⁷²²

*Mahomed Fariduddin v Nand Ram*²⁷²³ is an interesting instance of the application of the section to an assignee of part of the equity of redemption. A gave a usufructuary mortgage to B and then seven years later, a simple mortgage also to B. B got a decree for sale on the simple mortgage, and during execution proceedings, A got a decree for redemption of the usufructuary mortgage and paid the amount in full. B sold three-fourth of the property in realization of his simple mortgage and purchased it himself. B thus became assignee of three-fourth of the equity of redemption of the usufructuary mortgage. He was treated as co-mortgagor of A in respect of the usufructuary mortgage, and A was entitled to recover three-fourth of the mortgage money from him. In a Madras case,²⁷²⁴ A mortgaged two properties X and Y to B, and then mortgaged Y to C. C obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage and himself purchased Y. He then obtained an assignment of the first mortgage from B and sued to enforce that mortgage. The court held that such a suit was not maintainable, and that he was only entitled to contribution against A as co-mortgagor of the first mortgage. It is submitted that when C took the assignment of the first mortgage, he became full owner of Y, and was entitled to recover the proportion of the mortgage debt on X from A. In Jagan Nath v Abdulla,²⁷²⁵ there was a first mortgage by A and B of two houses X and Y to C; and then a second mortgage of Y to B also to C. C obtained a decree for sale on the first mortgage which A paid off. A was subrogated to the rights of C as first mortgagee as against his co-mortgagor B. C sued for sale on the second mortgage and purchased Y. But as assignee of B, C was still subject to the rights of A as first mortgagee. The fact that the decree on the second mortgage was passed before the decree on the first mortgage did not affect A's priority, for subrogation is to the mortgage, and not to the decree. The debt merges in the judgment, but not the security.

[s 95.7] Redeems

A mortgage is redeemed when the balance due on it is paid. If the redeeming mortgagor has done that, he is within the section, even though part has been previously paid.²⁷²⁶

[s 96.1] Mortgage by Deposit of Title-deeds

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

A mortgage by deposit of title-deeds have been put on the same footing as a mortgage by deed by section 58 of TP Act, 1882 as explained in the Privy Council decision in Imperial Bank of India v U Rai Gyaw Thu.²⁷²⁸ The right transferred by such a mortgage is the same right that is transferred by a simple mortgage, ie, a right of sale. Such mortgage might be deemed to be a mortgage in which the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money.²⁷²⁹ In a suit of mortgage by deposit of title deeds, a decree as may be passed in a suit of a simple mortgage can only be passed. A decree for foreclosure cannot be passed in a suit of mortgage by deposit of title deeds. Thus, an amendment seeking to add a relief for debarring the defendants “from all rights to redeem the mortgaged property” was disallowed on the ground that it amounted to a relief of foreclosure which clearly was an affront to sections 76 and 96 of the TP Act, 1882.²⁷³⁰

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Anomalous Mortgages

98. Rights and liabilities of parties to anomalous mortgages.—

In the case of ²⁷³²[an anomalous mortgage,] the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage deed, and, so far as such contract does not extend, by local usage.

[s 98.1] Amendment

The above section was amended by Act 20 of 1929.

The definition of anomalous mortgages is now given in section 58. In this connection note “Anomalous mortgages” under section 58 may be referred.

[s 98.2] Rights and Liabilities

The rights and liabilities of the parties are governed by the contract as evidenced by the terms of the mortgage-deed.

²⁷³³ However, the section does not altogether exclude the operation of the other relevant provisions of the TP Act, 1882 in so far as they are not embodied in the deed.²⁷³⁴ This was at one time thought to imply that a condition which would be invalid as a clog on redemption would be enforced in an anomalous mortgage.²⁷³⁵ But the Privy Council has settled this point in Mohammed Sher Khan v Seth Swami Dayal,²⁷³⁶ holding that section 98 is subject to section 60, for the provisions of one section cannot be used to defeat those of another, unless it is impossible to effect a reconciliation between them. Indeed this must be so, for if there were no right of redemption there would be no mortgage, and this was recognized in a case decided on an anomalous mortgage executed before the TP Act, 1882.²⁷³⁷

98. Rights and liabilities of parties to anomalous mortgages.—

Section 67 enacts rights and liabilities in the absence of a contract to the contrary. Therefore, if the terms of an anomalous mortgage show that the parties never contemplated a sale, the anomalous mortgagee has no right of sale.²⁷³⁸ Section 67 is applicable to simple mortgages usufructuary, and to mortgages usufructuary by conditional sale, and the inclusion of these mortgages in the definition of anomalous mortgages makes no difference in this respect. In a simple mortgage usufructuary there is a time limit and a personal covenant which imports a power of sale. In a mortgage usufructuary by conditional sale, the condition imports a power of foreclosure. This is recognized in proviso (i) to section 67. A decree for redemption of an anomalous mortgage of the class simple mortgage usufructuary may provide that in default of payment, the mortgagor is debarred from all right to redeem.²⁷³⁹

Section 68 is not subject to a contract to the contrary, and it is submitted that it does not conflict with section 98. There would of course be no remedy under section 68(a) if there were no personal covenant, but this would be the same in the standard type of mortgage. Before anomalous mortgages were included in section 58, it was held that section 98 excluded the application of section 68(d), and that an anomalous mortgagee who is entitled to possession is not entitled to sue for the mortgage money when the mortgagor fails to give him possession.²⁷⁴⁰ It is submitted that this is erroneous, for the suit under the section is in the nature of a suit to obtain compensation. On the other hand, the Oudh Court has held²⁷⁴¹ that in these circumstances an anomalous mortgagee is not only entitled to sue for the mortgage money, but is also entitled under a decision of the Privy Council,²⁷⁴² to a decree for sale. This is because the right to sue for the mortgage money imports a right of sale. He is also entitled to sue for possession.²⁷⁴³ In Chand Bihari v Shyam Nandan,²⁷⁴⁴ the Patna High Court held that the absence of a stipulation in an anomalous mortgage could not deprive the mortgagee of the statutory right conferred by section 68(l)(b).

The principle of substitution of some other property for the mortgaged property as in the case of a mortgage of an undivided share by a member of a joint Hindu family, being a general principle of law, is not provided by the TP Act, 1882, and is not affected by section 98.²⁷⁴⁵

A document styled as a possessory mortgage was held to be in effect anomalous mortgage, the mortgagee having been given the right to realise the mortgage money by bringing the right, title and interest of the mortgagor to sale.²⁷⁴⁶

Under the terms of an anomalous mortgage, a separate suit for the recovery of interest may be maintainable.²⁷⁴⁷

[s 98.3] Kanom

This is a form of anomalous mortgage customary in Madras. In this connection note “Kanom” under section 65A may be referred.

[s 98.4] Otti

Otti is a customary form of mortgage prevalent in Kerala. A person borrowing money under it is under a personal obligation to repay the amount, even if no express provision is made for the same. A suit for recovery of the mortgage money by sale of the property is enforceable.²⁷⁴⁸

CHAPTER 4 Of Mortgages of Immovable Property and Charges

Sections 58 – 104, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Charges

100. Charges.—

Where immovable property of one person is by the act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property; and all the provisions hereinbefore contained ²⁷⁵⁰ [which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge].

Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust- property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust, ²⁷⁵¹ [and, save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, no charge shall be enforced against any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge].

The difference between a mortgage and a charge has already been explained in note “Transfer of an interest” under section 58. In a charge there is no transfer of an interest in the property, but the creation of a right of payment out of property specified, ²⁷⁵² and as such it cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value.²⁷⁵³ The Supreme Court in *JK (Bombay) Pvt Ltd v New Kaiser-I-Hind Spinning and Weaving Co Ltd*²⁷⁵⁴ while pointing out the distinction between charge and mortgage made it clear that:

While in the case of a charge, there is no transfer of interest of property or any interest therein, but only the creation of a right of payment out of the specified property, a mortgage effectuates transfer of property or an interest therein. No particular form of words is necessary to create a charge and all that is necessary is that there must be a clear intention to make a property security for payment of money in praesenti.

Justice Das in a Patna case²⁷⁵⁵ said:

100. Charges.—

The broad distinction between a mortgage and a charge is this that whereas a charge only gives a right to payment out of a particular fund or particular property without transferring that fund or property, a mortgage is in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. A mortgage is a jus in rem, a charge, a jus ad rem and the practical distinction is that a mortgage is good against subsequent transferees and a charge is only good against subsequent transferees with notice.²⁷⁵⁶ A charge is a “transfer” within the meaning of section 9(2) of the Electricity Act.²⁷⁵⁷ A clause in a compromise decree by which the judgment debtor was prevented from disposing off his stock-in-trade until the entire decretal amount was paid was not held as creating a charge.²⁷⁵⁸ A charge created in favour of a creditor continued to subsist until it was extinguished or abandoned by an express view to that effect.²⁷⁵⁹ A charge on future property is valid and operates on such property when it comes into existence.²⁷⁶⁰

Several questions relating to charge came up for consideration in a Supreme Court case.²⁷⁶¹

The Datar's (one of the parties) became indebted to the Mote's. In a compromise decree in a suit filed by the Mote's, three sets of the properties of the Datar's were made subject to a charge. The decree was registered, but, by inadvertence, the charge on one property (K mansion) was not shown in the index. Sale of the other two properties did not satisfy the claim of the Mote's, and the Mote's filed an application for execution for recovery of the remaining amount. In the meantime, the third property (K mansion), had been made subject to two simple mortgages to one of the respondents who had no notice of the charge created in favour of the Mote's on that mansion. The issue was whether the charge had priority over the subsequent simple mortgagee. The principal legal question was—

Does the protection given by the proviso to section 100 against the enforcement of a charge extend to a simple mortgagee as a transferee for consideration without notice of the charge?

The following propositions were laid down by the majority judgment of the Supreme Court—

- (i) A compromise decree is an act of parties within section 100. It is not the result of a decision of a court, but is an acceptance by the court, of something to which the parties have agreed.
- (ii) A charge does not amount to a mortgage. In every mortgage there is a charge, but every charge is not a mortgage. The declaration in section 100 that the provisions applicable to a simple mortgage apply as far as may be to a charge does not have the effect of changing the nature of the charge to one of an interest in property.
- (iii) The expression “transfer of property” in section 100 connotes a transfer of the whole property and not a mere interest in, or over, the property, such as mortgage.
- (iv) The expression “property in the hands of a person...” in section 100 also does not cover a mortgage. It is confined to a case where the person has sufficient control over the property, so as to enable that person to do whatever he can do with the property as far as the nature of the subject matter would admit.
- (v) The proviso to section 100 does not apply to a mortgage. Since a charge is not a “transfer of an interest”, the charge-holder gets no security as against the subsequent mortgagee, unless the subsequent mortgagee had notice of the existence of the prior charge. In this particular case, the finding was that the respondent had no notice of the charge. Hence, the charge could not have priority over the subsequent mortgage without notice. On this ground, the appeal was dismissed.

100. Charges.—

The ratio decidendi of this judgment seems to be that priority between a charge and a subsequent mortgage is determined not by section 100, but by general principles, and that according to those general principles, the charge-holder has no priority if there is no notice on the part of a subsequent simple mortgagee. Thus, the same result is reached as would have been reached by applying section 100, though on a different reasoning.

Charge can be created in respect of immovable property, and charge can be created in respect of movable property. A charge is nothing but a devise to create security which is enforceable in a court of law. In order to create a charge in respect of immovable property, it is necessary that the same is required to be embodied in a document. However, in order to create a charge, relating to movables, it need not be in writing. Further, in order to create a charge, it is not necessary to employ any technical, or any particular form of expression. All that is required is that there should be a clear intention to make a particular property as a security for the payment of money. In other words, creation of enforceable security is the essence of charge either in respect of immovable property, or in respect of movables.²⁷⁶²

A charge created as a result of collusion over a third person's property, that too without his consent would be illegal and even a decree creating such a charge would not be binding on the owner of the property.²⁷⁶³

[s 100.2] Immovable Property of One Person

No charge can be created if the immovable property is not owned by the person from whom payment of money is due. Where the wife sought for a charge on a house property in a maintenance suit and it was found that the husband had neither any contribution in the purchase and construction of the house, nor was the property in his name, the Madras High Court declined to create any charge on the said property.²⁷⁶⁴

[s 100.3] Does not Amount to a Mortgage

The words indicate that in the case of a charge there is no transfer of the property, or of any right in the property. A mortgage which is invalid for want of attestation cannot take effect as a charge.²⁷⁶⁵ A sale deed invalid for want of registration will not operate as a charge.²⁷⁶⁶ A sale deed which is not intended to operate until the vendee executes an agreement of reconveyance, does not, on the vendee's default, become effective as a charge.²⁷⁶⁷ A transaction intended to be a mortgage, but not reduced to writing and registered so that it cannot operate as a mortgage, will not be effective as a charge.²⁷⁶⁸ In a Calcutta case,²⁷⁶⁹ J Mookerjee said:

If an instrument is expressly stated to be a mortgage, and gives the power of realization of the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged premises, it should be held to be a mortgage. The fact that the necessary formalities of due execution were wanting would not convert the mortgage into a charge. If, on the other hand, the instrument is not on the face of it a mortgage, but simply creates a lien, or directs the realization of money from a particular property, without reference to sale, it creates a charge.

However, in a case where a judgment-debtor bought back his property at a court auction in the name of a benamidar, and the benamidar raised the purchase money by himself giving a mortgage of the property, it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to a charge.²⁷⁷⁰ The Supreme Court in R M Arunachalam v CIT,²⁷⁷¹ Madras, held that the creation of a charge under section 74(1) of the Estate Duty Act cannot be construed as creation of an interest in property that is the subject matter of the charge. The creation of the charge under section 74(1) only means that in the matter of recovery of estate duty which is the subject matter of the charge, the amount recoverable by way of estate duty would have priority over other liabilities of the accountable person. In that sense, the claim in respect of the estate duty would have a precedence over the claim of the mortgagee because a mortgage is also a charge. A security bond to the court will not operate as a mortgage as the court is not a juridical person;²⁷⁷² and for the same reason, it will not create a charge under this section.²⁷⁷³ However, the security bond creates an encumbrance and a purchaser of the property subject to the encumbrance, must indemnify the judgment debtor if the liability is enforced against him. This was so held in a Madras case²⁷⁷⁴ in which the bond was said to create a “charge”, but no reference was made to section 100.

It is apparent from the provisions of the above section that a charge does not amount to a mortgage, though all the provisions which apply to a simple mortgage contained the preceding provisions shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. While a charge can be created either by act of parties or by the operation of law, a mortgage can only be created by act of parties. A charge is thus a wider term as it includes also a mortgage, in that every mortgage is a charge, but every charge is not mortgage. The legislature while defining a charge in section 100 indicated specifically that it does not amount to a mortgage. It may be incongruous and in terms even appear to be an antithesis to say on the one hand that a charge does not amount to a mortgage, and yet apply the provisions applicable to a simple mortgage to it as if it has been equated to a simple mortgage, both in respect of the nature and efficacy of the security.²⁷⁷⁵

[s 100.4] Kinds of Charges Dealt with in the Section

The charges that have been dealt with in the section are:—

- (1) Charges created by act of parties.
- (2) Charges arising by operation of law.

The Nagpur High Court had held that a charge which is created by a decree is not created by acts of parties, nor can it be said to have been created by the operation of law. Such charge does not fall under the section, nor does the principle underlying it apply to it.²⁷⁷⁶ But in a later decision, the same High Court has held that a charge created by a compromise of a money decree is a charge created by the act of parties, and is thereof governed by this section.²⁷⁷⁷ The Patna High Court has, however, held that where a charge is created by a decree which was passed in pursuance of an agreement between the parties, it is a charge by act of parties and consequently, one contemplated by section 100.²⁷⁷⁸ The point raised by the Nagpur High Court above was held not to arise in that case. The Calcutta High Court held that a charge created by a consent decree over certain property of the husband for maintenance of the deserted wife for his life was in the nature of a charge contemplated by section 100 of the TP Act, 1882, and will not lapse by death of the husband.²⁷⁷⁹ But a charge created by an ordinary decree would not be a charge created by the acts of parties, and the provisions of section 100 would not apply.²⁷⁸⁰ The Bombay and Oudh Courts have held that a charge created by a decree of a competent court is created by the operation of law.²⁷⁸¹ The Madras High Court had taken the same view,²⁷⁸² but in Thangavelu v Thirumalswami,²⁷⁸³ a contrary view was expressed; and a Full Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court has also held that a such a charge is not by the operation of law.²⁷⁸⁴ A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that a charge created by a decree was not a charge created by the operation of law,²⁷⁸⁵ and the same view has been expressed by the Calcutta,²⁷⁸⁶ Patna,²⁷⁸⁷ Madras²⁷⁸⁸ and the Punjab²⁷⁸⁹ High Courts. In an earlier Calcutta case, it was held that a charge on immovable property created by a decree could be enforced against the transferee of such property, even though the transferee had no notice of the charge. This legal position follows from the law of estoppel.²⁷⁹⁰

The Supreme Court has held that a compromise decree creating a charge is an “act of the parties” within the meaning of section 100. It is not the result of a decision of the court, but is an acceptance by the court of something to which the parties have agreed.²⁷⁹¹

[s 100.5] Charge by Act of Parties

No particular form of words is necessary for the creation of a charge.²⁷⁹² It is sufficient, if, having regard to all the circumstances of the transaction, the document shows an intention to make the land as security for the payment of the money mentioned therein.²⁷⁹³ However, there must be a clear intention to make a property security for money in praesenti. If there is an intention to create a charge in praesenti, an agreement to mortgage may amount to a charge.²⁷⁹⁴ A mere undertaking to discharge an obligation or liability is not enough if the intention to make a specified property or fund liable, is absent.²⁷⁹⁵ An encumbrance is a charge or burden created by transfer of any interest in a property. It is a liability attached to the property that runs with the land.²⁷⁹⁶ Mere execution of an MOU, agreeing to enter into an agreement to sell the property does not amount to encumbering the property. Nor does a mere undertaking that a person would not dispose of properties mentioned, during currency of loan, confer any charge on the immoveable properties mentioned therein.²⁷⁹⁷ Receiving advances or amounts in pursuance of an MOU would also not amount to creating an encumbrance.²⁷⁹⁸ An agreement which gives immovable property as security for the satisfaction of a debt,²⁷⁹⁹ or for the payment of a maintenance allowance in perpetuity,²⁸⁰⁰ without transferring any interest in the property or an agreement by which an owner of a share in a village receives in lieu of his share a lump sum out of the income,²⁸⁰¹ constitutes a charge on the property, and is not a mortgage. A provision in a partition deed that a common family debt should be proportionately discharged by the respective sharers and that if any sharer defaults, his share shall be liable constitutes a charge on the defaulting share in favour of the sharer who has paid in excess.²⁸⁰² But a creditor who is not a party to the partition cannot avail himself of this charge.²⁸⁰³ Mortgages by some classes of agriculturists are forbidden by the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1901, but when a mortgagor took a further advance after TP Act, 1882 on the same terms as a mortgage before the TP Act, 1882, the fresh transaction was construed as a charge.²⁸⁰⁴ When a charge is created by act of parties, the specification of the particular fund or property negatives a personal liability. The remedy of the holder of the charge is against the property charged only. Where there is in addition a personal covenant, the security becomes collateral to that personal covenant. In such cases, the transaction is generally but not necessarily a mortgage. A mortgage is for a fixed term and redeemable, while a charge may create a liability in perpetuity not capable of redemption.²⁸⁰⁵ The right of reimbursement of a power of attorney holder does not amount to creation of interest in the property which is sine qua non to make the power of attorney an irrevocable one. It only creates a right incidental to the agency to get reimbursement of the expenses incurred in managing and improving of the property.²⁸⁰⁶ Where a mortgage is created on the property of an insolvent, the amount recoverable by the mortgagee will be above the priority contemplated under section 61 of the Insolvency Act.²⁸⁰⁷

100. Charges.—

By the joint operation of this section and of O XXXIV, rule 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure, both the substantive and the adjective law as to simple mortgages applies, so far as may be, to a charge. A chargeholder has, therefore, a power of sale, but that power is only exercisable “so far as may be”. It is not exercisable against a transferee for value without notice. The power of sale is merely a matter of procedure, ie, the mode in which the court enforces the charge.

A charge is different from the word “detained”.²⁸⁰⁸ An encumbrance or a burden caused by an act or omission of man and not that created by nature is the requirement for a charge. It means charge or burden upon property or a claim or lien on the land which is a legal liability and constitutes a burden on title which diminishes value of the land. Hence, encumbrance must be a charge on property and must run with the property.²⁸⁰⁹ Mere undertaking that the party will not dispose of the properties mentioned in an undertaking, during the currency of the loan, will not create any charge over those properties, unless charge is created by deposit of title deeds or through a registered document. Even if the purpose of the decree obtained in between the respondents was fraudulent and collusive, that would not confer any charge over the properties, unless the undertaking is registered.²⁸¹⁰

Some cases distinguish a charge from the possibility of a charge. Thus, the words “If I do not pay the money according to the stipulation, then I declare in writing that I shall lose my right to one bhiga seven cottas of guzashta land,” were held to create not a charge, but a possibility of a charge.²⁸¹¹ But these cases have been dissented from,²⁸¹² and the proposition is obviously incorrect, for, as soon as the promise is made, the promisee is entitled to look to the land as security for the performance of the promise. Section 5 recognizes a future transfer as a transfer, and future crops may be the subject of a mortgage or of a charge. Again, a charge may be given in the present to secure an indemnity, or other contingent liability.²⁸¹³ A charge may be created on the property which is to come into existence in future and may be enforced when it comes into existence. The charge holder in whose favour it is created will be entitled to priority over a person who attaches the property after that date.²⁸¹⁴

100. Charges.—

[s 100.7] Floating Charge

A floating charge on a company's assets is a present charge, although it does not finally attach or crystallize upon any specific property until the happening of some event which puts an end to the right of the company to deal with the property in the course of its business.²⁸¹⁵

It is a floating mortgage applying to every item comprised in the security, but not specifically affecting any item until some event occurs or some act on the part of the mortgagee is done, which causes it to crystallize into a fixed security.²⁸¹⁶ The most familiar example is to be found in the debentures of companies. Such a debenture is a floating security reaching over all the trade assets of the mortgagor company for the time being, but intended to fasten upon and bind the assets in existence when the mortgagee intervenes.²⁸¹⁷ The governing idea of a floating charge is that the mortgagor should carry on his business in the ordinary way. Therefore, if the assets are not fluctuating or if no act or intervention of the mortgagee is necessary for the charge to crystallize, the charge is not floating, but specific. A charge on the leasehold property, the plant and machinery of a coal mine imposed to secure the payment of royalties to the lessor, is not a floating but a specific charge.²⁸¹⁸ If the charge holder is entitled to possession and control of the assets of the company, the charge, even though it includes future movables, is not a floating charge.²⁸¹⁹ The question whether a floating charge over immovable property requires registration was raised before the Privy Council, but not decided.²⁸²⁰

[s 100.8] Specified Property

The property to which the charge attaches must be specified; otherwise the charge would be void for uncertainty.²⁸²¹ A provision in a partition deed that the parties should pay certain debts and that the parties in default should pay the others twice the loss from their shares of the property, was held to create a valid charge because the shares of the properties concerned were described in the schedules to the deed.²⁸²² An undertaking in a deed to segregate certain property so that it would be answerable to another person, should the executant of the deed fail to give a charge bond, has the effect of making the property a security for the payment and creating a charge.²⁸²³ A charge created by a Mahomedan on the unknown and uncertain share which one of his heirs may succeed to is not only invalid as a charge, but void as an attempt to defeat the Mahomedan law of inheritance, as it burdens one share while keeping the other shares free.²⁸²⁴ A charge created by a decree over "all the property of the judgment debtor both movable and immovable" cannot be said to be void for uncertainty.²⁸²⁵

[s 100.9] Attestation

A charge does not require to be attested, and proved in the same way as a mortgage.²⁸²⁶

[s 100.10] Registration

The section does not lay down any particular mode of creating a charge, and it need not be in writing.²⁸²⁷ But if it is reduced to writing, registration is necessary in the case of a non-testamentary instrument of the value of ₹100 or upwards, under section 17(l)(b) of the Registration Act, which applies to rights not only in, but also to, immovable property.²⁸²⁸ As a charge in writing requires registration if of the value of ₹100 or upwards, the assignment of such a charge would also need to be registered. In Shiva Rao v Official Liquidator,²⁸²⁹ the Madras High Court held that a deed assigning a mortgage decree required registration, and in the absence of registration would not create a charge. The words "so far as may be" in the section do not exclude section 59, for there is no incompatibility between the two sections.²⁸³⁰

[s 100.11] Instances of Charges by Act of Parties

The following are illustrations of charges by act of parties:

100. Charges.—

ILLUSTRATIONS

(1) A inherited an estate from his maternal grandmother and executed an agreement to pay his sister B a fixed annual sum out of the rents of the estate. B has a charge on the estate.²⁸³¹

(2) A sued B for a sum of money, and the compromise decree directed that the immovable property specified herein shall be hypothecated for the realization of the said money and B shall not be able to create any encumbrance on the same. A has a charge on the property for the amount decreed.²⁸³²

(3) A sued to recover certain immovable property. The suit ended in a compromise decree under which the property was awarded to A with a provision that A should pay B a monthly sum for maintenance and that if A should fail to pay the aforesaid monthly sum at the end of each month, B shall have power to recover the monthly sum with interest at 1% per mensem from the property decreed. B has a charge for maintenance on the property decreed.²⁸³³

(4) An arbitrator was appointed by A and B to make a partition of their properties and to do all that was necessary to secure their rights. The arbitrator allotted some properties to A and some to B, as those of A were of greater value, directed A to pay B ₹1,400 to make up the difference within a month, and further directed that if such payment was not made, B should have a charge on A's properties for that sum and interest at 10 annas per month. Held that a valid charge was created.²⁸³⁴

(5) A sued B on a promissory note. The compromise decree directed the payment of the money and further directed that B shall not dispose of his share in a factory until satisfaction of the entire decretal amount. Held that A had a charge on the property specified.²⁸³⁵

A creditor advancing money does not, apart from special arrangement, acquire a charge over property purchased with the money.²⁸³⁶ A covenant in a lease empowering the lessee to retain part of the rent in satisfaction of a previous loan to the lessor, has been held to constitute a charge on the lessor's interest.²⁸³⁷ In Hakam Chand v Radha Kishan,²⁸³⁸ the Privy Council has observed that an agreement between A and B providing that the executant A should give a regular mortgage of his immovable property for money advanced by B, cannot constitute a mortgage or charge upon such property.

Passing of an arbitral award on consent would not result in the annulment of hypothecation and the party would retain its character as a secured creditor in a case where there is a hypothecation of movable property as the principles applicable to movable and immovable property are distinct.²⁸³⁹ Where goods were hypothecated to bank by borrower without delivery of possession and were subsequently transferred by him, the legal rights of Bank continue to survive and charge of Bank remains binding on transferee.²⁸⁴⁰ A secured creditor may choose to realise its securities outside of winding up of the concern in liquidation. In creating a charge, such immovable asset must be identified to discharge liabilities.²⁸⁴¹

[s 100.12] Charge by Operation of Law

The inclusion, in the definition, of charges by the operation of law has been criticised as inconsistent with the scheme of the TP Act, 1882 which relates to transfers by act of parties.²⁸⁴² But, as the Supreme Court observed in Laxmi Devi v Mukand Munwar,²⁸⁴³ a plain reading of section 2(d) leaves no doubt that the provisions of chapter IV of the TP Act, 1882, and, therefore, of this section, govern charges created by operation of law. The TP Act, 1882, however, itself creates such charges, for a charge by the operation of law arises in TP Act, 1882 under section 55(4)(b) in the case of an unpaid vendor, under section 55(6)(b) for purchase money paid in advance; and under section 73 in favour of a mortgagee on surplus sale proceeds of a revenue sale. Arrears of government revenue are a paramount charge on the land,²⁸⁴⁴ but nevertheless a co-sharer who pays assessment to avert a sale does not get a charge on the other shares according to High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad, Bombay, Patna and Rangoon,²⁸⁴⁵ although he does in Madras.²⁸⁴⁶ The charge given by the decisions of Madras High Court is on the other shares as they stood at the time of the payment, and is subject to mortgages then existing on those shares.²⁸⁴⁷

The charge for arrears of rent under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been held not to be a charge under TP Act, 1882;²⁸⁴⁸ so also kattubadi which is a rent payable by the tenant in Madras.²⁸⁴⁹

However, the courts in Madhya Pradesh treat the word “charge” in their Revenue Acts as the equivalent to a charge under the TP Act, 1882.²⁸⁵⁰ The decisions in Madras are conflicting as to whether the charge for rent under section 5 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, is not a charge under this section.²⁸⁵¹

Section 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act makes the consolidated rate as it becomes due from time to time a first charge on the property, subject to the payment of land revenue.²⁸⁵²

It had been held that the saving clause did not apply to an auction purchaser as he was not a transferee within the meaning of section 5;²⁸⁵³ but a contrary view was taken by the Allahabad and Patna High Courts.²⁸⁵⁴ In Laxmi Devi v S M Kanwar,²⁸⁵⁵ the Supreme Court has expressly approved of the latter view, holding that the provisions of section 2(d) prevail over the definition contained in section 5.

[s 100.13] Save as Otherwise Provided

A charge can be enforced against a purchaser without notice if any law expressly so provides; a law which merely makes municipal taxes a first charge on the property, but does not expressly provide for the priority of such charges over transferees for consideration without notice is not saved, and such a charge would not prevail over a transferee for consideration without notice.²⁸⁵⁶ Earlier decisions²⁸⁵⁷ which did not note this distinction are no longer good law.

[s 100.14] Notice of Charge

Charges as already explained, are not enforceable against transferees for consideration without notice or a volunteer with or without notice.²⁸⁵⁸

An oral non-possessory charge would, therefore, not have priority over a subsequent mortgage, if the mortgagee did not have notice of it. Irrespective of this section, this would also be the effect of section 48 of the Registration Act.²⁸⁵⁹ There are some cases in which it was held that a charge created by a decree was enforceable against a transferee for consideration without notice.²⁸⁶⁰ They are based on a misconception of the nature of a charge which was erroneously supposed to be an interest in property, and to reduce full ownership to limited ownership.²⁸⁶¹ These decisions have been superseded by the express provisions of this section.

In case of a decree for payment of money against an industrial unit, though it contained a stipulation that the judgement debtor should not create a charge on machinery of unit, it did not say that a charge was created in favour of the plaintiff, or that the decretal amount could be realised by sale of machinery. It was held under these circumstances, that the decree does not create a charge on the machineries of the industrial unit.²⁸⁶² Where the property was purchased by an auction-purchaser in a public auction in execution of mortgage decree obtained by state financial corporation against the owner-mortgagor, and the said purchaser had notice of property tax due in respect of property purchased by him, the first charge of the municipal corporation in respect of the property purchased by the purchaser with prior notice of the property tax dues, can be enforced against him by initiating the recovery proceedings permissible under the law, namely, by attaching and putting to auction the property on which the first charge was created.²⁸⁶³ Where the property was auctioned on “as is where is basis”, but the purchaser, despite being the lowest bidder, did not buy it at the auction but did so by private negotiations and only after satisfying himself regarding assets and liabilities incurred on the property, he would be deemed to have constructive notice of the fact that the property was charged to commercial tax dues and therefore such a purchaser cannot wriggle out of the liability expressly owned by him.²⁸⁶⁴

A charge is enforced by sale²⁸⁶⁵ as in the case of a simple mortgage under this section and O XXXIV, rule 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and if the charge carries with it a personal liability (as in the case of the seller's charge for price not paid) the charge holder is entitled under O XXXIV, rule 6 to a personal decree.²⁸⁶⁶ A charge given in a security bond under the Code of Civil Procedure is enforced by order of sale under the procedure adopted by the Allahabad High Court in *Janki Kuar v Sarup Rani*²⁸⁶⁷ approved by the Privy Council in Raghubar Singh v Jai Indra Bahadur Singh,²⁸⁶⁸ and section 67 is not applicable.²⁸⁶⁹ A person who purchases a portion of a property which is subject to charge with notice of the charge is liable to pay the whole amount. He may sue for contribution.²⁸⁷⁰

A charge is an obligation to make payment out of the property specified. In the present case, in the security bond given to vacate attachment before judgement, there is no clear recital in the document of having created an obligation to make payment of the decretal amount out of the property in question. All that it states is that in the event of the decree being passed against alienation of the property till the decree is discharged, is a mere undertaking without creating a charge.²⁸⁷¹

[s 100.15] So far as may be

These words also occur in O XXXIV, rule 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure which applies to charges, the provisions of O XXXIV apply as to the enforcement of simple mortgages. A charge is not exactly identical with a mortgage and a suit for the enforcement of a charge is not necessarily the same as a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage deed. Thus, in the case of a recurring charge, a charge is not extinguished by a decree for sale.²⁸⁷² The principle of O XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure may be applied to the execution of a decree which created a charge.²⁸⁷³ In a suit for the enforcement of a charge, the Privy Council observed that under section 100 read with O XXXIV, rule 15, a preliminary decree for sale, as in a suit on a mortgage, should have been parted.²⁸⁷⁴ Limitation for the enforcement of a charge is, under Article 132 (g), the Act of 1908, 12 years from the time when the money is due. If the suit is for the enforcement of the charge by sale, the words “so far as may be” in this section and in O XXXIV, rule 15 indicate that the property cannot be sold if in the hands of a transferee without notice. It has been held that a charge declared in a decree must be enforced under section 67 by a suit.²⁸⁷⁵ Again, the doctrine of subrogation has been applied to a charge. A puisne mortgagee paid off a decretal charge anterior to the prior mortgage, and he was subrogated to the charge and had priority over the prior mortgagee, and as the prior mortgage was affected by lis pendens (having been effected while execution of the decree was pending) it did not matter that the prior mortgagee had no notice of the charge.²⁸⁷⁶ Other provisions of the TP Act, 1882 are not applicable to charges except those of sections 81 and 82 as to marshalling and contribution; and a charge holder cannot avail himself of section 68;²⁸⁷⁷ nor does the principle of consolidation of securities enacted in section 67A apply to charges.²⁸⁷⁸ Where a portion of the property charged has been relieved thereof without the consent of the holder of the charge, the charge-holder can proceed against the whole property for the enforcement of the charge, and the principle of rateable distribution is inapplicable.²⁸⁷⁹ Again, a charge may be in perpetuity, and then it cannot be redeemed.²⁸⁸⁰ An agreement providing that in default of a certain payment for the maintenance by one party to the other, the latter would be at liberty to cultivate the field and maintain herself, clearly created a charge. Such a provision does not affect the effect of the agreement as a charge, although it cannot be enforced by sale of the land.²⁸⁸¹

100. Charges.—

So also when two properties are burdened with a charge and one of the properties is relieved of the liability of paying the charge as a result of its transfer by the owner to a person for consideration and without notice of the charge, the charge holder can recover the entire amount from the remaining property.²⁸⁸²

[s 100.16] Decretal Charge

If a decree is executory, a charge created by it can be enforced in execution. This has been dealt with in the note “Charge” under section 67.

[s 100.17] Trustee’s Charge

A trustee is entitled to a charge on the income as well as the corpus of the trust estate for all moneys properly expended in performing the obligations of the trust.²⁸⁸³ This charge has priority over the returns of the beneficiaries.²⁸⁸⁴ However, as long as he is a trustee, his remedy for enforcing his charge is limited by section 32 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. He may, therefore, only reimburse himself for such expenses and interests out of the income and profits of the trust estate, and prohibit any disposition of the trust property without previous payment of his expenses. While he is a trustee he cannot destroy the trust by bringing it to sale. But after he has ceased to be a trustee, or after he has lost possession of the trust property, he may enforce his charge by sale.²⁸⁸⁵

[s 100.18] Transferee for Consideration and Without Notice

A purchaser at an auction is a transferee within this clause. It has been held in Madras²⁸⁸⁶ that a simple mortgagee cannot be a transferee within this clause as the property cannot be said to be “in the hands” of such a person. The contrary view has been expressed in a Division Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court,²⁸⁸⁷ in which it was held that a mortgagee with or without possession is a transferee within the clause.

[s 100.19] Integrity of Charge

Just as the integrity of a mortgage cannot be broken, so the charge cannot ordinarily be split up by apportioning liability amongst various persons.²⁸⁸⁸

[s 100.20] Electricity Dues

The auction purchaser of a premise is not liable to make payment of outstanding dues for consumption of electricity supplied to that premises prior to such auction sale. There is no charge over the property for such electricity dues. The Supreme Court has held that where the premises came to be owned or occupied by the auction-purchaser, when such purchaser seeks supply of electricity energy, he cannot be called upon to clear the past arrears as a condition precedent to supply. What matters is the contract entered into by the erstwhile consumer with the electricity Board. The Board cannot seek the enforcement of contractual liability against the third party.²⁸⁸⁹ The provisions of the Indian Electricity Act or the Electric Supply Act, 1948 also nowhere make the outstanding dues of the licensee for the energy supplied to a person, a charge on the premises, or the property to which the electricity was supplied.²⁸⁹⁰

Charges

2891[101. No merger in case of subsequent encumbrance.—

Any mortgagee of, or person having a charge upon, immovable property, or any transferee from such mortgagee or charge holder, may purchase or otherwise acquire the rights in the property of the mortgagor or owner, as the case may be, without thereby causing the mortgage or charge to be merged as between himself and any subsequent mortgagee of, or person having a subsequent charge upon, the same property; and no such subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder shall be entitled to foreclose or sell such property without redeeming the prior mortgage or charge, or otherwise than subject thereto.]

[s 101.1] Amendment

This original section was substituted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 101.2] Extinction of Mortgage Security

Merger is only one of the several ways in which a mortgage security may be extinguished. For the security may be extinguished:

(i) By a decree for foreclosure, or by a decree for sale after the sale is confirmed (note under section 60 “By order of a court”).

(ii) By payment of the mortgage debt by the mortgagor or by a person under covenant to pay. Such a payment extinguishes the mortgage and does not operate as an assignment (notes under section 92 “Mortgagor not subrogated”, “Covenant to pay excludes subrogation”).

When the mortgage debt is paid by one of the several co-mortgagors, it is extinguished as to his share, and assigned to him as to the shares of the other co-mortgagors (section 95).

When the mortgage debt is paid by a puisne mortgagee, the mortgage is not extinguished, but assigned to the puisne mortgagee (section 92).

When the mortgage debt is paid by a purchaser of the equity of redemption the question of extinction of the mortgage depends upon the existence of a subsequent encumbrancer (section 92).

(iii) By release by the mortgagee of the debt or of the security. If the mortgagee releases the debt, the mortgage is extinguished. If the mortgagee releases the security the mortgage is extinguished, but the debt subsists and the mortgagee becomes an unsecured creditor. (note under section 82 “Release by mortgagee”).

(iv) By merger. (v) By novation.

The first three modes of extinction have already been discussed. The last two will be dealt with in the commentary under this section.

[s 101.3] Merger

A security may be extinguished by merger. This occurs— (i) by the merger of a lower in a higher security; and (ii) by the merger of a lesser estate in a greater estate.

The section only deals with the second head of merger. A merger of estates takes place when two estates held in the same legal right become united in the same person. Where the capacity in which a person is in possession of the mortgagee's rights is something quite different from the capacity in which he is in possession of the equity of redemption, the mere fact that the two capacities are united in the same physical person, cannot result in a merger.²⁸⁹²

[s 101.3.1] Merger of lower in higher security

The acquisition by a person of a security of a superior nature in law to the one he has, merges or extinguishes his legal remedies on the inferior security. So when a person recovers judgment on a contract debt, the debt is extinguished being merged in the judgment.²⁸⁹³ An equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds is extinguished when a formal mortgage is executed for the debt;²⁸⁹⁴ such merger is, however, excluded by express words indicating a contrary intention, eg by a recital that the subsequent security is given by way of further or additional security.²⁸⁹⁵ Again, there is no merger if the remedies on the two securities are not co-extensive.²⁸⁹⁶ Thus, a promissory note enforceable by summary procedure will not merge in a mortgage for the same debt.²⁸⁹⁷ However, though a debt merges in a judgment, yet if it is secured by a mortgage, the collateral security of the mortgage does not merge.²⁸⁹⁸ The Calcutta High Court held that a mortgagor can redeem even after decree for sale under the repealed section 89 has been passed, and this he may do at any time until confirmation of the sale,²⁸⁹⁹ for the mortgage security is not merged, in the judgment, and subsists until satisfaction of the decree.²⁹⁰⁰ Therefore, if the mortgage decree for sale is not executed and the mortgagee is in possession, the mortgagor and the mortgagor's purchasers cannot dispossess him except by suit for redemption.²⁹⁰¹ The fact that the mortgagee had sued on a prior mortgage and obtained a decree does not show that he did not intend to keep that mortgage alive,²⁹⁰² unless of course satisfaction of the decree is certified to the court, and a second mortgage is taken afterwards for the balance.²⁹⁰³ It is in recognition of this principle that the clause providing for the extinction of the right of redemption in decrees absolute for sale has been omitted from sections 89 and 93 of the TP Act, 1882 when re-enacted as O XXXIV, rules 5 and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908.²⁹⁰⁴

If the higher security fails, the lower revives. If the mortgagee purchases the property mortgaged and the sale deed fails for want of registration,²⁹⁰⁵ or because the property was under attachment,²⁹⁰⁶ or if the sale is avoided as a fraud on creditors,²⁹⁰⁷ he can still fall back on the mortgage. A mortgagee in possession under an invalid sale is still a mortgagee, and may bring the property to sale,²⁹⁰⁸ or may be sued for redemption.²⁹⁰⁹ On the other hand, if the later security is inoperative, there can be no merger. Thus, an oral agreement before the Registration Act, 1864 is not merged in a subsequent written agreement which fails for want of registration.²⁹¹⁰ Nor is there a merger if there is no subsisting prior encumbrance at the relevant time.²⁹¹¹ In a Madras case, the defendant had obtained a registered mortgage on 7 May 1963, and subsequently purchased the equity of redemption in a court auction on 15 February 1967. On that date, two encumbrances were subsisting, namely, the mortgage deed of the defendant, and a registered security bond obtained by the plaintiff in July 1963. In view of the intervening charge in favour of the plaintiff (subsequent to the mortgage), there could be no merger of equity of redemption.²⁹¹²

When after the mortgage, there is sale of the equity of redemption or purchase of the property by the mortgagee himself, the mortgage merges with the sale, and is extinguished, unless contrary intention is proved.²⁹¹³ The doctrine of merger does not apply in the case of a lease followed by a mortgage to the lessee.²⁹¹⁴

[s 101.3.2] Merger of lesser estate in greater estate

In Tharne v Cann,²⁹¹⁵ Lord Macnaghten said:—

Nothing, I think, is better settled than this, that when the owner of an estate pays charges on the estate which he is not personally liable to pay, the question whether those charges are to be considered as extinguished or as kept alive for his benefit is simply a question of intention. You may find the intention in the deed, or you may find it in the circumstances attending the transaction, or you may presume an intention from considering whether it is or is not for his benefit that the charge should be kept on foot.

The Privy Council seemed to put this construction on the section in Malireddi Ayyareddi v Gopala Krishnayya,²⁹¹⁶ for they said:

It is further to be presumed, and indeed the statute so enacts (Transfer of Property Act, section 101), that if there is no indication to the contrary, the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit.

[s 101.4] Rule of Intention

The fact that the mortgage deed was retained by the mortgagee after the purchase of the equity of redemption was held to indicate an intention to keep the mortgage alive,²⁹¹⁷ but in these cases there was a puisne mortgage. If the purchasing mortgagee has granted a sub- mortgage, that also is evidence that he intended to keep the mortgage alive.²⁹¹⁸ On the other hand, the fact that the mortgagee purchased in the name of the other son was held not to be evidence of an intention to keep the mortgage alive, because there was no puisne mortgage.²⁹¹⁹

When a mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption at a sale in execution of a money decree, he did not lose priority over a puisne mortgage, although by mistake no mention was made of it in the sale proclamation.²⁹²⁰ It has been held that a contract which operates to deprive the prior mortgagee of his charge upon the property when he became the owner of it under a sale, must be clear one.²⁹²¹

The presumption has been held to be a rebuttable presumption,²⁹²² and no doubt, even under the present section, the purchasing mortgagee may by express declaration extinguish the mortgage despite the existence of a puisne mortgage. A mere mention in a sale deed of the amount due upon a prior mortgage is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that the merger was intended.²⁹²³ In Chanda Bibi v Mohanram Sahu,²⁹²⁴ there was a mortgage of 1899. The mortgagee died in 1905, and his widow purchased the equity of redemption in 1908. Her son succeeded to the property in 1909 and the court held on the evidence, that the presumption of an intention to keep the mortgage alive and so have priority over a charge of 1905, was not rebutted. The presumption is, of course, rebuttable, but this is a question of fact and evidence must be led.²⁹²⁵

The benefit which gives rise to the presumption must be a benefit accruing to the vendee on the date of the sale, and not a possible benefit which may arise in future on the happening of a possible contingency. This logic has been followed in cases in which the mortgagee after the purchase has been sued by a pre-emptor.²⁹²⁶ The conclusion would be the same under the present section which refers only to a puisne mortgage or charge in existence at the date of the purchase. The Privy Council has laid down the rule in Gokuldas v Puranmal.²⁹²⁷ In Bhawani Kumar v Mathura Prasad,²⁹²⁸ the mortgagee purchased the property on 19 March 1900 and nine days later, a charge for arrears of land revenue arose for non-payment of which the land was sold by the Collector. The revenue sale purchaser sued to recover possession, and the mortgagee set up his mortgage as a defence. The Privy Council held that the mortgage was extinguished by merger, for on 19 March, the crucial date in question, there were no interest of any kind to enter into account or consideration so as to impede the full and complete transfer of ownership of the estate as such. In this case, there was a merger, for the charge was not in existence on the date of the purchase. On the other hand, the words of the old section “or such continuance as would be for his benefit” do not limit the benefit to a benefit accruing at the time of the sale. It has, therefore, been held under that section that if the continuance is for the benefit of the purchaser, no question of intention need be considered.²⁹²⁹ When the charge for rent is in existence at the date of the mortgagee's sale, the mortgage is not extinguished by merger.²⁹³⁰

The rule of intention was applied in many cases before the TP Act, 1882 as in the case of a mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption.²⁹³¹ But the application of this rule must depend on the circumstances present at the time of the mortgagee's acquisition of full ownership.²⁹³² There are instances in which, on a mortgagee purchasing, the security was held to be merged under the rule of intention;²⁹³³ and in all these cases there was no puisne mortgage. In some cases, it has been held that section 101 is not applicable and the equitable rule of intention to keep alive the mortgage should be applied, even though there is no puisne encumbrance.²⁹³⁴

If the mortgagee after filing a suit on his mortgage, purchases the equity of redemption at a sale in execution of a simple money decree, the mortgage is extinguished by merger, and the suit must be dismissed.²⁹³⁵ The case of *Lachman Prasad v Lachmeshwar*²⁹³⁶ was a case of the purchase of the equity of redemption by a mortgagee. There was a mortgage in 1908 to a son, and then a sale of the equity of redemption in 1914 to the father of a joint and undivided family who was for all intents and purposes, the mortgagee himself. The father retained part of the price to pay off the mortgage, but a few days before his purchase, a part of the equity of redemption was sold in execution of a money decree to the defendant. The father's purchase as to this part of the property failed, and the court held that the father could not enforce any part of the mortgage against the defendant on the ground that he had redeemed the mortgage at the time of his purchase. In other words, the mortgage as to part was extinguished by merger and as to the part sold in execution, the father's covenant to pay off the mortgage excluded his right of subrogation. The principle of this decision was followed by the Patna High Court in Kedar Nath v Bhagwat Prasad in which it was held that a partial failure of consideration did not avoid the sale and the sale extinguished the mortgage security.²⁹³⁷ *Daso Pillai v Narayan Patro*²⁹³⁸ was a case in which a mortgage was extinguished by merger in a sale which could not be enforced.

There was a mortgage by A to B. C obtained a money decree against A, but before execution, B purchased the equity of redemption. When C attached the property, B objected that he had purchased it. B's objection was dismissed and the property was sold, and purchased by C. B omitted to sue under O XXI, rule 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 for a declaration of his title; but sought to enforce his mortgage against C. The court held that the mortgage was extinguished by merger in the sale. B's omission to file a suit for a declaration of his title was disastrous, for he lost his remedy both under the sale and the mortgage. It should be noticed that at the time of B's purchase, there was no encumbrance outstanding.

Instances in which on the mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption, the security has been held not to be merged under the rule of intention,²⁹³⁹ and in all these cases, there was a puisne mortgage.

ILLUSTRATIONS

(1) A mortgages property to B. B sues A to realize the mortgage debt. During the pendency of the suit, B purchases the equity of redemption in execution of a money decree against A. The mortgage is extinguished by merger and B's suit must be dismissed.²⁹⁴⁰

(2) A mortgages property first to B and then to C. B obtains a decree on his mortgage, and instead of bringing the property to sale makes a further advance to A and takes a fresh mortgage for the decretal amount plus the further advance. C claims priority over B. But B's first mortgage is not extinguished by merger as there is a subsequent mortgage, and B is entitled to priority over C, in respect of the decretal amount.²⁹⁴¹

(3) A mortgaged property to B in 1915. A then sold the property to C in 1916, and a month later professed to sell the property to B. B took possession but was evicted by C. B then sued C on the mortgage and C contended that the mortgage was extinguished by merger. Held that there was no merger (i) because B got nothing by his purchase, for A had already parted with the equity of redemption; and (ii) because at the time of purchase C's interest was outstanding.²⁹⁴²

When a landlord in execution of a decree for rent purchases his tenant's holding, he is entitled to use his rent-charge as a shield against a mortgagee of the tenant.²⁹⁴³

[s 101.6] As between Himself and Subsequent Mortgagee

When the mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption and acquires ownership, he may keep the mortgage alive for his own defence as against a puisne encumbrancer. He is entitled to remain in possession until the subsequent mortgagee has redeemed the prior mortgage, irrespective of the question of limitation on the prior mortgage.²⁹⁴⁴ He can use the equity of redemption also by way of an attack.²⁹⁴⁵ However, the mortgage is nevertheless extinguished as between the mortgagee, and the mortgagor, or as between the mortgagee and a stranger. Thus, the purchasing mortgagee has no claim for interest after the date of his purchase,²⁹⁴⁶ and he cannot enforce his mortgage by suit.²⁹⁴⁷ It has been said that the rights of the mortgagee merge in those of the mortgagor, or remain in suspension until they are needed for purposes of defence against the puisne mortgagee.²⁹⁴⁸ Where a mortgagee purchases part of the mortgaged property in full satisfaction of his claim, the equities between the prior and puisne mortgagee are to be worked out by the executing court when the properties are directed to be sold or the sale proceeds are to be worked out. Although the prior mortgagee cannot claim the benefit of subrogation, he is entitled to keep his mortgage alive as against the puisne mortgagee.²⁹⁴⁹ He can claim from him the amount due under the mortgage.²⁹⁵⁰

[s 101.7] Where Purchasing Mortgagee is also Puisne Mortgagee

If the purchasing mortgagee is also the puisne mortgagee, no estate intervenes and there is a merger of both mortgages in the estate of ownership. This occurred in the case of Laxman Ganesh v Mathurabai.²⁹⁵¹ There was a first mortgage in 1886 to G, and a second mortgage in 1894 also to G. In 1895, G brought a suit for sale on the first mortgage and purchased with leave of the court subject to the second mortgage. At a partition in 1905 between G's grandson and G's widowed daughter-in-law, the second mortgage was allotted to the grandson, and the sale certificate to the daughter-in-law. The grandson sued to enforce the mortgage and the suit was dismissed on the ground that, since G as puisne mortgagee could not have sued himself as owner, those claiming under him could have no higher right. The effect of the judgment was that after G's purchase, both his mortgages merged in the estate of ownership, and the sale certificate and the puisne mortgage deed were both deeds of the same title. Where a subsequent usufructuary mortgagee paid off a foreclosure decree obtained by a prior mortgage to save the property from foreclosure and later sued the mortgagor to recover the amount so paid, and obtained a foreclosure decree, it was held that he had no intention of keeping his own mortgage alive.²⁹⁵²

[s 101.8] Novation

Novation differs from merger in the sense that the securities are of equal degree, and one security is accepted for the other, eg in Badri Prasad v Daulat.²⁹⁵³ where the second mortgage bond was to different obligees. When this occurs, the old security is extinguished. But if the new security fails, there is no substitution and, therefore, no extinction of the old security. Thus, in Har Chundi Lal v Sheoraj Singh,²⁹⁵⁴ a Hindu mortgaged his five-sixths share of a village, and his separated nephew mortgaged his one-sixth share to the same mortgagee. After the Hindu's death, his widow and the nephew mortgaged the whole village for the same debt to the same mortgagee. The mortgagee sued on the last mortgage, but it was held not to be binding on the widow. After the widow's death, the nephew succeeded to the five-sixth share, and was held to be liable on the first mortgage. The intention to substitute a new mortgage of the five-sixth share having failed, the Privy Council said it was not consistent with equity and good conscience that the new mortgage should operate as a release of the old. In such a case, the remedy on the old security might become barred by estoppel or res judicata. In Sheoraj v Harchandi Lal,²⁹⁵⁵ an earlier stage of the litigation in the case last cited, when the mortgage on the whole village was held to be not binding on the widow, the mortgagee sued on her late husband's mortgage, but the suit failed as he might and ought to have sued her on an earlier mortgage.

[s 101.19] Renewal

Renewal differs from novation in that a new security is taken without extinguishing the old. Under the doctrine of subrogation, a third mortgagee redeeming a first mortgage acquires the rights of the first mortgagee, and has priority over the second mortgage only as regards the first mortgage, but not as regards the third mortgage.²⁹⁵⁶ Conversely, a first mortgagee making a fresh advance after a second mortgage, on a renewed mortgage, even if that fresh advance is to pay off the first mortgage, retains priority over the second mortgagee as regards the first mortgage, but not as to the fresh advance in respect of which he is in the position of third mortgagee.

The best illustration is the case of Gopal Chunder v Herembo.²⁹⁵⁷ The first mortgage was in 1882 by Herembo to the plaintiff of his one-third share of a property for ₹1,000, with interest at 12%. The second mortgage was also by Herembo of the same share to the defendant for ₹1,000, with interest at 18%. The third mortgage was by Herembo and his two brothers, to the plaintiff of the whole property for ₹3,400, with interest at 18%. The consideration was the balance due on the first mortgage, plus a further cash advance of ₹100, and with reference to the first mortgage it contained the following recital:

Now in order to liquidate the said debt, and on account of other necessities of ours, we three brothers do this day mortgage to you whatever right, title and interest we have in the said two properties and take the loan of ₹3,400; out of this money we have also liquidated the said debt, therefore, for interest of the said money, we will pay at the rate of ₹1-8 per month and within 12 months from this date, we will repay the whole amount in full, principal as well as interest.

Upon these facts, the transaction was held to be a fresh advance and a fresh security, given both for the old debt and the fresh advance, and that the first mortgage remained alive for the protection of the plaintiff against the second mortgagee. A prior mortgagee taking another mortgage in renewal of his own does not on that account lose priority over a mesne mortgage even though the renewed mortgage includes other property, and varies the rate of interest.²⁹⁵⁸ But if the first mortgage is time-barred, the mortgagee making a fresh advance on a renewed mortgage has no right of priority over the mesne mortgagee.²⁹⁵⁹ The renewal of a mortgage by a person with a limited interest, ie, the son having only a life interest under the will of his father, the deceased mortgagor, cannot operate as a discharge of the first mortgage,²⁹⁶⁰ and when a mortgagor gave a third mortgage consolidating two prior mortgages, and the third mortgage was found invalid for want of registration, he was allowed to redeem the prior mortgages.²⁹⁶¹ In an Allahabad case,²⁹⁶² there were two mortgages, the first to K and the second to NR. K obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage, but the mortgagor gave a usufructuary mortgage to K, which K accepted in satisfaction of the decree. The court held that K could not use his first mortgage as a shield against NR. This was incorrect, for the existence of the subsequent encumbrance showed that K could not have abandoned his prior security. On the similar facts, a contrary conclusion was arrived at in a Madras case.²⁹⁶³

However, the creditor can if he chooses, abandon his original security in favour of the new one. Thus, if he gets a decree on the first mortgage and certified satisfaction of the decree,²⁹⁶⁴ or admits in a recital in the subsequent mortgage that the first mortgage has been satisfied,²⁹⁶⁵ he will not be allowed to fall back on it. However, the mere fact that the mortgagee has filed a suit on the first mortgage does not show that he has abandoned it.²⁹⁶⁶ Again in Shankar v Mejo Mai,²⁹⁶⁷ the Privy Council held that a suit on a second mortgage incorporating the first does not, apart from abandonment, necessarily have the effect of releasing the earlier security. In that case, there was a first mortgage to the plaintiff of certain villages for ₹15,500, a second mortgage to the defendant of the same villages for ₹7,000, and a third mortgage again to the plaintiff of the same and other villages for ₹20,000 inclusive of ₹15,500 due on the first mortgage. Decrees for sale were obtained on the second and third mortgages only, and in distributing the sale proceeds, the court gave priority to the defendant as the plaintiff had not sued on his first mortgage. The plaintiff then sued for recovery of the sale proceeds on the ground of priority under the first mortgage. The Privy Council held that the distribution was not conclusive of the rights of the parties, that the third mortgage did not impair the effect of the first, and that the fact of the plaintiff suing on the third mortgage alone did not lead to the inference that he had abandoned his rights on the first, for it was not necessary for him to do so in order to recover the whole debt.

Notice and Tender

103. Notice, etc., to or by person incompetent to contract.—

Where, under the provisions of this Chapter, a notice is to be served on or by, a tender or deposit made or accepted or taken out of Court by, any person incompetent to contract, such notice may be served on or by, or tender or deposit made, accepted, or taken, by the legal curator of the property of such person; but where there is no such curator, and it is requisite or desirable in the interests of such person that a notice should be served or a tender or deposit made under the provisions of this Chapter, application may be made to any Court in which a suit might be brought for the redemption of the mortgage to appoint a guardian ad litem for the purpose of serving or receiving of such notice, or making or accepting such tender, or making or taking out of Court such deposit, and for the performance of all consequential acts which could or ought to be done by such person if he were competent to contract; and the provisions of Order XXXII in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908) shall, so far as may be, apply to such application and to the parties thereto and to the guardian appointed thereunder.

Sections 102 and 103 deal with matters of procedure. Notice would be under sections 69 and 83, and tender on redemption under section 60. The third paragraph in section 102 was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929 to make it clear that the application for service of notice under section 83 should be made to the court in which the deposit has been made. This notice is consequent on the deposit having been made.²⁹⁷² Power to apply to the court for directions as to service of notice, and as to tender by deposit in court is now limited to cases in which the whereabouts of the mortgagee or his agent are entirely unknown to the mortgagor. Under the old section 102, it was sufficient if they could not be found in the district. The amendments in section 103 are merely clerical.

The High Court may, from time to time, make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out, in itself and in the Courts of Civil Judicature subject to its superintendence, the provisions contained in this Chapter.

Rules have been framed under this section by the various High Courts. It has been held that such rules prevail over the general terms of the Code of Civil Procedure.²⁹⁷³

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

105. Lease defined.—

A lease of immovable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms.

Lessor, lessee, premium and rent defined.—The transferor is called the lessor, the transferee is called the lessee, the price is called the premium, and the money, share, service or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent.

[s 105.1] Lease

The relationship of lessor and lessee is one of contract, and a lease is defined as a contract between the lessor and the lessee for the possession and profits of land, etc, on one side and the recompense by rent or other consideration on the other. Hence, it has been held that a mere demand for rent is not sufficient to create the relationship of landlord and tenant which is a matter of contract assented to by both parties.¹ When the agreement vests in the lessee a right of possession for a certain time, it operates as a conveyance or transfer, and is a lease. The section defines a lease as a partial transfer, ie, a transfer of a right of enjoyment for a certain time. The essential elements of a lease are:

- the parties;
- the subject-matter, or immovable property;
- the demise, or partial transfer;
- the term, or period;
- the consideration, or rent.

An agreement to lease or an agreement merely defining the terms of tenancy,² is not a lease; nor is it a licence.

105. Lease defined.—

Under section 105 of the TP Act, 1882, a lease creates a right or an interest in the enjoyment of the demised property and a tenant or a sub-tenant is entitled to remain in possession thereof until the lease is duly terminated, and eviction takes place in accordance with law.³ A contract awarded by the corporation to A, to recover tolls (fees) from squatters, vendors, kiosks and for parking vehicles at specified places would be a lease as it creates rights and liabilities in favour of contracting parties qua each other. It is a lease as defined in section 2 (12) of the Stamp Act and 2(16) (c) and is accordingly chargeable to pay stamp duty as per the specified rates.⁴

The provisions of chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, shall in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Tenancy Act, apply to the tenancies and leases of land to which this Act applies.⁵

The Supreme Court has held that a renewal of a lease is really a grant of a fresh lease though it is called a renewal because it postulates the existence of a prior lease. Where the initial term is 90 years, it cannot co-exist with a renewal of that very lease within 90 years. If enhancement of rent is made conditional upon the grant of a fresh lease, renewal could take place only on the expiry of the initial lease, and not before. The English rule that a grant should be construed most favourably to the sovereign does not apply where the grant is made for consideration. There is no just ground why the state, as the lessor, with all its resources, should enjoy the benefit of some nebulous and unjust rule of construction so as to construe, in its favour, deeds drafted defectively.⁶

In a lease, the nature of the landlord-tenant relationship necessitates the possession to lie with the tenant.⁷ No right is created on any person on strength of a forged lease deed of public land executed by Estate officer.⁸ Where the ownership in land is not transferred and the rate of yearly ground rent and its terms were specified in the deed and the lessee was enjoined to pay all taxes, but not to make any excavation nor remove any stone, soil, sand, gravel or earth therefrom the transaction would be a lease and not sale.⁹

A lease deed the evidence of which was available through a certified copy cannot be ignored by oral evidence more so as it was sought to be set aside by filing a suit after nine years of its alleged execution and the fact that it existed was within the knowledge of the municipality. Thus an order declaring the lease to be void ab- initio would be set aside.¹⁰

[s 105.1.1] Sub-lease or Sub-let

A lease may be granted by a person, who is himself a lessee, and such a lease is commonly called an under-lease, sub-lease, or derivative lease, but it is still a lease within the section. The fact that the lessor is himself a lessee, and the transaction is called a sub-lease, does not in any way change the nature of the transfer as between them.¹¹

The term “sub-let” is not defined under the TP Act, 1882, but the definition of “lease” can be adopted mutatis mutandis for defining “sub-lease”. What is “lease” between the owner of the property and his tenant becomes a sub-lease when entered into between the tenant and the tenant of the tenant, the latter being sub-tenant qua the owner-landlord. A lease of immovable property as defined in section 105 is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property made for a certain time for a consideration of a price paid or promised. A transfer of a right to enjoy such property to the exclusion of all others during the term of the lease is sine qua non of a lease. A sub-lease would imply and stands discharged by adducing prima facie proof of the fact that the alleged sub-tenant was in exclusive possession of the premises or, to borrow the language of section 105, was holding right to enjoy such property. A presumption of sub-letting may then be raised and would amount to proof unless rebutted.¹² However, a tenant who himself has no right to occupy the premises after the determination of tenancy, such as a statutory tenant, has no right to create a sub-tenancy. He cannot grant a valid sub-lease in favour of another.¹³ Similarly, the mere fact that another person is allowed to use the premises while the lessee retains the legal possession is not enough to create a sub-lease. The thrust is on finding out as to who is in legal possession of the premises. So long as the legal possession remains with the tenant, the mere factum of the tenant having entered into partnership for the purpose of carrying on the business in the tenancy premises would not amount to sub-letting.¹⁴ In Parvinder Singh v Renu Gautam, the Supreme Court has devised the test in these terms: If the tenant is actively associated with the partnership business and retains the use and control over the tenancy premises with him, maybe along with the partners, the tenant may not be said to have parted with possession.¹⁵ As the legislature can modify, annul and substitute the contracts inter-vivos, therefore, when by a legislative provision parties to the lease are substituted, there is no assignment or transfer of the lease or subletting of the premises, by the lessee to the person or authority in whom the leasehold rights are vested by operation of law.¹⁶ Where the government had granted untransferable leasehold rights but later under a notification permitted transfer of leasehold rights subject to payment, a transfer of leasehold rights and an application for the same can be looked into by the concerned authorities.¹⁷

A sub lease created without the authority of the owner is merely voidable and not void.¹⁸

[s 105.1.2] Composite Tenancy and Single Tenancy for dual purposes

There may be several purposes for which the tenancy premises may be let out. Broadly speaking, the premises are let out either for the purpose of residence or for a non-residential or commercial purpose. A legislation may classify the purpose of letting into several categories by adopting some other criterion. In case of tenancy of type (a), for a composite or mixed purpose, the premises are let out for defined purposes, more than one, leaving the option open to the tenant to use the entire tenancy premises as one unit for either, or both purposes. The tenancy premises are not divided or demarcated separately into two so as to specify which part of the tenancy premises will be used for what purpose. In other words, in case of tenancy for composite purpose, the two diverse purposes for user of the premises are so blended or mixed up that they cannot be separated by dissecting the tenancy premises into compartments. However, in case of tenancy of type (b), which is a single tenancy for dual purposes, the contract of tenancy is no doubt an integrated one, but the premises are demarcated or divided by reference to the purpose for which they will be separately used. In an integrated contract of tenancy for dual purposes, different portions are earmarked for different types of user. The contract of tenancy is one, but it clearly sets out that out of the two rooms let out under one tenancy agreement, the tenant shall use the room in the front for non-residential purpose, and the room at the back side for the purpose of residence. The entire tenancy premises cannot be used interchanging the users, nor can the entire premises be subjected to simultaneous user as residence and commerce—both, without defining which part of the premises shall be used for what purpose. The legal implication is that in case of tenancy for composite or mixed purpose, ie, type (a) the need may arise for determining the dominant purpose of letting. However, the theory of dominant purpose or principle of predominant purpose of letting is irrelevant in the case of tenancies of type (b) when it is known, as previously agreed, that a particular portion of the premises shall be used for one purpose, while another portion shall be used for another purpose.¹⁹

[s 105.1.3] Splitting of Tenancy

It is well settled that it is not permissible for the court to split up a contract of tenancy in eviction proceedings.²⁰ A tenancy can be split up by operation of law, or by contract between the parties. In cases governed by rent control legislation, if a ground for eviction in respect of part of the tenancy premises is made out, the decree shall be for eviction from the entire tenancy premises, unless the law permits a partial decree of eviction being passed.²¹

[s 105.1.4] Concurrent leases

With respect to the same property two lease agreements cannot be executed between the same parties.²² If two lease agreements are executed one after the other, without cancelling the first agreement, such agreement would automatically come to an end upon the execution of the second agreement.²³

[s 105.1.5] Suit for eviction

One of the co-owners can file a suit for eviction, according to the Rajasthan High Court in Ratan Lal v Gopal.²⁴

105. Lease defined.—

[s 105.2] The Parties

The parties are the lessor and the lessee. They must be persons who are competent to contract.²⁵ The lessor is called the landlord. The word “tenant” means a lessee, especially when used in opposition to landlord.²⁶

In one decision,²⁷ the House of Lords considered the question whether a person can grant a lease to himself. It was argued, relying on section 72(3) read with section 205(l)(ii) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, that it was possible for a person to grant a lease to himself. Section 5 of TP Act, 1882 also contemplates a transfer by a person to himself. A majority of the law Lords, Viscount Simonds, Lord Reid and Lord Denning, held that notwithstanding those provisions, a man could not grant a lease to himself. Lord Denning pointed out that at common law, a person could not grant a lease to himself. Nemo potest esse tenens at dominus. The Act of 1925 had not altered the position for the simple reason:

that every tenancy is based upon an agreement between two persons and contains covenants expressed or implied by one person with the other. Now, if a man cannot agree with himself and cannot covenant with himself, I do not see how he can grant a tenancy to himself... The tenancy must stand or fall with the agreement on which it is founded and with the covenants contained in it: and as they fall so does the tenancy.

It is submitted that the same view would be taken in India, and for the same reasons.

Thus, there cannot be a contract by a person with himself—section 2 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872; and the mutual covenants between lessors and lessees stipulated in section 108 are insensible between the same person. Further, section 111(d). enacts statutorily the rule of merger, ie, if any such lease is created by a person, in the same right, it would immediately determine. Where, however, the land belonging to co-owners was leased out to a sole proprietary concern, of one of themselves which was subsequently converted into a partnership firm of that co-owner and his four sons, the Supreme Court held that there was a valid lease between the quondam owners and the tenant, and the finding of the trial judge that the lease executed by the co-owners of the property in favour of one of them was invalid, was erroneous. Section 5 of TP Act, 1882 clearly envisages transfer of property by a person to “one or more living persons or to himself, or to himself and one or more other living persons”. Whatever may be the position, despite the purported transfer by a person to himself alone (which is very often the position in the case of trusts), which was considered by the House of Lords in Rye v Rye, there is no reason to hold that a contract between a person with himself and others is invalid.²⁸

The provisions of the TP Act, 1882 do not apply to any transfer of land by or on behalf of the government. Where the corporation public land was leased out to a school for being used as a play ground, the rules of natural justice would not operate and the school would not be entitled to any opportunity to show cause notice against the cancellation of the same.²⁹ Similarly, where the leasehold vests in the government, it follows that a suit for possession at the instance of the (original) lessor (or his successor in interest by private alienation) is not maintainable.³⁰ Where the lease is effected by the government as the owner of the property, an agreement of sale cannot be entered into of such land by the lessor in violation of the terms of the lease agreement.³¹ The legal effect of the terms of old government grants are to be understood as conveying a lease of the building standing on the cantonment land with the power of resumption in the granting authority subject to payment of compensation of cost of building and not as a lease of land itself.³² A lease of property of a private temple without obtaining the sanction of the government is invalid.³³ An ordinary lease agreement between sovereign parties i.e., between Crown, through Secretary of State and Travancore State, does not lend any change to the character of the contract and it does not become a political agreement.³⁴

[s 105.2.1] Lessor

Competency to grant a lease depends upon competency to transfer under section 7. The lessor must, therefore, be competent to contract and have a title or authority. A lease is void when the purported lessor does not have any interest in property sought to be leased.³⁵ The conferment of patta as such does not confer title in a suit for declaration of title and possession.³⁶ Where a person claimed title that was proved to be false or fabricated, then the burden to prove actual, exclusive, open, uninterrupted possession will be upon him.³⁷ An absolute owner, who is under no personal incapacity, can grant a lease for any term he pleases. A limited owner can grant a lease only to the extent permitted by law. Thus, a lease by a tenant for life will not endure beyond his death, unless he is especially empowered under the terms of the deed of settlement. A lease can be executed by a person who is competent to execute the same. Where the property belonging to the temple could be transferred only in case of a legal necessity, but the Mohatmim, executed a lease without authority of law, such lease deed would be void ab initio and no right over this property under the void lease can be claimed by any person in whose favour such a lease is carved out. Even the issuance of notice prior to the order of cancellation of the lease would not be necessary in such cases.³⁸

In English law, a minor cannot hold a legal estate in land.³⁹ Before the Law of Property Act, 1925, a lease by a minor was voidable, but could be ratified on his attaining majority, but as a minor's contract is void in India, it follows that a minor is not competent to be a lessor. A lease by a minor has been held to be void even though it was made by an instrument executed only by the lessee.⁴⁰ Restrictions on the power of the owner to grant leases have been imposed in the case of disqualified land owners, and of encumbered estates under management by various local Acts. Under section 29(b) of Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, the guardian of the property of a minor has authority without the permission of the court to grant a lease for a term not exceeding five years or enuring for more than one year after the minor attains majority. In terms of section 28 of the said Act, the powers of a testamentary guardian or a guardian appointed by a deed are limited by the terms of the will or of the instrument of appointment. The power of an executor or administrator to grant a lease is regulated by section 307 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

A lease by joint tenants operates as a lease by each and by all as joint tenants have unity of title. On the death of any one of the joint tenants, the lessee holds under the survivors. A lease by tenants in common however, operates as a separate demise by each of his share, and a confirmation by the others;⁴¹ and each tenant in common may by separate demise lease his own share only,⁴² as tenants in common have unity of possession, but not of title. But their lessees do not have unity of possession, and are not tenants in common inter se.⁴³ It is now well settled that after the death of the original tenant, subject to any provision to the contrary either negating or limiting the succession, the tenancy rights devolve on the heirs of the deceased tenant. The incidences of the tenancy are the same as those enjoyed by the original tenant. It is a single tenancy which devolves on the heirs. There is no division of the premises or of the rent payable therefore. That is the position as between the landlord and the heirs of the deceased tenant. In other words, the heirs succeed to the tenancy as joint tenants.⁴⁴

Landlord and tenant relationship has to be proved for maintaining a suit for eviction and for payment of arrears of rent. Where it was proved that the property was ancestral in character and the defendant had one fourth share in it and there was no proof that there was ever any tenancy created in his favour, it was held that since the landlord tenant relationship is not proved no suit for eviction or for arrears of rent can be passed.⁴⁵

Leases may be granted to any person who is competent to contract at the date of execution. Where the shops were allotted on lease to ex-servicemen and dependants of the deceased defence personnel for a period of five years and the procedure/policy limited maximum period of lease only to five years, the lessees would have no right to continue in possession of the property after five years. These leaseholders would not be entitled to a renewal of the lease.⁴⁶ A lease may be granted to several persons who may take as tenants-in-common, or as joint tenants. In the case of joint tenants, the interest of each person passes upon death to the survivors. In the case of tenants-in-common, the interest of a deceased lessee passes at his death to his representatives. Thus, in a lease to a partnership, the surviving partners are trustees for the representatives of the deceased partner in respect of the latter's share. However, if two or more persons hold a demise under one lease, then, in the absence of a clear provision to the contrary, the entire body of tenants constitutes a single tenant qua the landlord.⁴⁷ Where a person convicted of permitting disorderly conduct in a cafe subsequently under a different name took a lease of premises in the neighbourhood for conducting a restaurant, it was held that the identity of the person with whom the landlord was entering into the lease was a vital element in that agreement so that the landlord having been mistaken with regard to the identity of the lessee, the lease was void ab initio.⁴⁸

Section 7 does not apply to transferees; and the general scheme of the TP Act, 1882 is that minors may be transferees, but not transferors.⁴⁹ Both a sale to a minor and a mortgage to a minor are valid.⁵⁰ But it has been held that a lease to a minor is void as the lease imports a covenant by the minor to pay rent and other reciprocal obligations.⁵¹ This was so decided before the amending Act of 1929, and the present section 107 makes it clear that a lease to a minor must be void, because it is to be executed both by the lessor and by the lessee. If the lease is granted by a minor, it is void even if the deed is executed by the lessee.⁵²

A lease is a contract whereunder the transferee accepts certain obligations. The transferee must, therefore, be one who is capable of contracting. An unregistered association is not a legal entity, and is not so capable. Where the tenancy was in favour of an unregistered association, and there was no evidence to show that some members of the association undertook the lessee's obligations to the lessor, no valid tenancy could be said to have been created in favour of the association. The association was merely a licensee and, on termination of the purported tenancy, the association became only a trespasser liable to be ejected. Consequently, persons claiming through the association were also liable to ejectment.⁵³ The written rent note or a fresh lease is not an essential requirement of attornment; it may come into being by payment of rent, or by the recognition of a person as landlord. A tenant who has attorned in favour of a person is estopped from challenging the title of that person as his landlord.⁵⁴ The assignee of a lease, though entitled to enjoy the benefit of leased property, does not have a privity of contract with the lessor.⁵⁵ It is settled by the Supreme Court that though leasehold interest may be bequeathed by a testamentary disposition, the landlord is not bound by it, nor a stranger be thrust as tenant against the unwilling landlord.⁵⁶ Where the mother of the landlord purchased property in 1994, the tenancy was created in 1995 and the tenant defaulted since 1996 claiming non-service of notice and adverse possession, while the service of notice proved by the landlord, the plea of adverse possession would be negated.⁵⁷

[s 105.3] Subject-matter

The subject-matter of a lease must be immovable property as defined in section 3. The subject-matter is, therefore, not only land, minerals and buildings, but also benefits to arise out of land such as fisheries,⁵⁸ ferries,⁵⁹ and market dues.⁶⁰ A right to carry on mining operations in land to extract a specified mineral and to remove and appropriate that "mineral" is a "right to enjoy immovable property" within the meaning of section 105.⁶¹ There is no law prohibiting a composite lease of a building along with the equipment, or fixtures,⁶² or the lease of a mill which includes building and machinery, or the lease of a factory similarly, which includes lease of building along with machinery and other equipments. All these leases are recognised by law and accepted by the court.⁶³ Where tools, equipment and a special type of furniture suitable for running a barber's shop were leased for an amount fixed for running the business, the court held that the dominant intention of the parties was to create a lease of business, and not of the shop.⁶⁴ Though ordinarily a house/shop would include not only the superstructure but also the site.⁶⁵ Law does not provide that lease of building above is impermissible, or that it necessarily takes in the site underneath as well.⁶⁶

The "lease" within the meaning of Indian Stamp Act, 1899 has much wider meaning than the "lease" defined in TP Act, 1882, and the definition of "lease" in TP Act, 1882 cannot be imported into definition as it is in the Stamp Act. A document by which the right to collect the toll is given is an "instrument" within section 2(14) of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899 and, therefore, is a lease within the said Act.⁶⁷

Case

A haat, which is a right to collect certain dues;⁶⁸ a right to tap toddy palms;⁶⁹ or a right to fell trees for a term of years so that the transferee derives benefit from further growth, amount to a lease.⁷⁰ But if trees are sold with the object of being cut and removed within a reasonable time, it is the sale of movable property, and not a lease.⁷¹ Grass is not immovable property and in Re Hormusji Irani,⁷² a contract for grazing was held not to be a lease. A transfer of a right to pluck trees for fruits is also not a lease.⁷³ A yagman vritti is not immovable property, and an assignment of a right to collect offerings for a period of years, is not a lease.⁷⁴ Composite lease of cinema with equipments is valid, and lease of cinema cannot be considered separately from the lease of a building which would be tenable.⁷⁵

It has been held in England that in the absence of provisions to the contrary in a lease, the demise of a part of a building divided horizontally or vertically, includes the external walls enclosing the part so demised.⁷⁶ This principle extends to all leases, and includes portions of an external wall not structurally necessary to enclose the premises.⁷⁷ In the absence of a contract, tenants of flats in a multi-storeyed building cannot claim to have ipso facto become simultaneously the tenants also of terrace and air space above it. There is no such provision in the TP Act, 1882.⁷⁸ A similar opinion was expressed by a division bench of Delhi High Court in Peter George v Janak J Gandhi.⁷⁹ On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that where the dominant intention of the parties was to create a lease of only a cinema building, it was held that there was no lease of costly cinema equipment namely, the projector, the generator and the screen.⁸⁰

If the subject-matter is property not only in the possession of the lessor, but property to which he may never establish title, the so-called lease will be construed as an agreement to lease upon the happening of a contingency.⁸¹ A mining lease is to be regarded in India as a lease, and not as a sale of minerals. The annual payment of royalty would be rent.⁸² Where a person leases a building together with land, it seems impermissible in absence of clear intention spelt out in the deed, to dissect the lease as (a) of building and appurtenant land covered by the Rent Control Act, and (b) of the land above governed by other relevant statutory provisions. What the parties have joined, one would think, the court cannot tear as under.⁸³ Where there is a lease of a building, such lease would normally take in the site, unless the same is specifically excluded from the definition of land in the lease deed.⁸⁴ The right of the lessee in the leased property subsists even if the leased property has been destroyed by fire, tempest, flood or violence of an army or of a mob or other irresistible force, unless the lessee exercises his option that on happening of such an event, the lease shall be rendered void.⁸⁵ Where a godown that was subject of a rent agreement was destroyed by fire, the plea that since the subject matter of the lease was in itself not in existence and it would lead to frustration of contract and therefore the question of payment of rent would not arise is not tenable as section 56 of the contract is not applicable and the rights and liabilities of the parties would be subject to the application of the TPA, and the lessee would be liable to pay the rent.⁸⁶

[s 105.4] The Demise [s 105.4.1] Demise

The word “demise” is not used in the TP Act, 1882, but it is a term of English law commonly used by conveyancers in India to denote a transfer by lease. The strict technical import of the word (from the Latin demitto) is any transfer or conveyance, but by force of habit, it is used to denote a partial transfer by way of lease.⁸⁷ A lease contemplates, as per J Shah (as he then was) in Byramjee Jeejeebhoy Pvt Ltd v State of Maharashtra,⁸⁸ a demise or a transfer of a right to enjoy land for a term or in perpetuity in consideration of a price paid or promised or services or other things of value to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor.

If ownership is transferred, with or without restrictions, it is not a lease. The words “transfer of a right to enjoy such property” indicate that all rights of ownership are not transferred. The significance of these words as indicative of the limited estate transferred is apparent if contrasted with those in section 54, where a sale is defined as a “transfer of ownership in exchange for a price.” In *Giridhari Singh v Megh Lal Pandey*⁸⁹ Lord Shaw said:

105. Lease defined.—

The essential characteristic of a lease is that the subject is one which is occupied and enjoyed and the corpus of which, does not in the nature of things and by reason of the user, disappears.

His Lordship explained that this was the reason why, in the absence of express words, a lease does not include mineral rights. In a Supreme Court case, the landlord and the tenant entered into a compromise in an eviction suit, in which the tenant agreed to vacate the premises, but was allowed to retain one portion for five years. At the end of five years, proceedings were commenced by the landlord to obtain the possession of the portion. It was held that there was no intention to create a lease of any portion, and that there was no question of registration of the decree.⁹⁰

A lease, therefore, is not a mere contract, but is a transfer of an interest in land and creates a right in rem.⁹¹ Such an interest of a tenant is a right to property within the meaning of Article 19(1) (f) of the Constitution.⁹² It is good against the whole world, irrespective of notice, and cannot be affected by any subsequent disposition by the lessor. The estate transferred to the lessee is called the leasehold. The estate remaining in the lessor is called the reversion. Even when the lease is in perpetuity, there is an interest still remaining in the lessor. In Kalty Dass Ahiri v Monmohim Dassee,⁹³ Sir Lawrence Jenkins said:

A man who being owner of land grants a lease in perpetuity, carves a subordinate interest out of his own and does not annihilate his own interest. This result is to be inferred by the use of the word “lease”, which implies an interest still remaining in the lessor. Before the lease the owner had the right to enjoy the possession of the land, and by the lease he excludes himself during its currency from that right, but the determination of the lease is the removal of that barrier, and there is nothing to prevent the enjoyment from which he had been excluded by the lease.

The estate of the lessor and lessee are estates of inheritance and the interest of the lessor and the lessee after their death vest in their heirs, executors, or devisees.⁹⁴ This is not so expressly stated in the TP Act, 1882, for the Act does not deal with the subject of succession.⁹⁵

If a company has a subsisting interest in a permanent lease on the date of its dissolution, such interest must vest in the government on dissolution of the corporation, by escheat or bona vacantia. Property of a dissolved corporation passes to the government, subject, of course, to the trust and charges, if any, by which the property was affected prior to dissolution. If the leasehold vests in the government, it follows that a suit for possession at the instance of the (original) lessor (or his successor in interest by private alienation), is not maintainable.⁹⁶ A person, who obtains a share of a leasehold either by assignment or by inheritance, becomes a co-tenant in the whole tenure; and so far as the relations between him and the landlord are concerned, he cannot be held to hold any estate in severalty. Each such person becomes a tenant in common of the whole estate by reason of the rule of the indivisibility of the estate without the landlord's consent, and has privity of estate with the landlord in respect of the whole estate.⁹⁷ In case of joint tenants, each tenant is liable to the landlord for the whole rent, and all covenants running with the land.⁹⁸ A kharposh grant made by a zamindar for the maintenance of the junior members of his family is not a lease, although such grant provides for the payment of government revenue and road cess.⁹⁹ It has been held that a mere permission to an advertising agency by a municipal corporation under an agreement for installation and displaying of ornamental “grill work poles” to provide for outdoor displays of advertisements and civil slogans for charges described as “ground rent”, is not a demise of that portion of land covered by the poles “so as to bring in notions of TP Act, 1882”.¹⁰⁰

[s 105.5] The Terms [s 105.5.1] Commencement

The commencement of a lease must be certain in the first instance, or capable of being ascertained with certainty afterwards, so that both the time when it begins and the time when it ends, is fixed. The word “certain” under this section cannot mean certain on the date of the lease. It is enough if it is capable of being made certain on a future date.¹⁰¹ Section 110 enacts that if the day of commencement is not stated, the lease begins from the day of execution. However, this does not apply to an executory agreement of lease; and such an agreement is void for uncertainty if the commencement of the term is not mentioned, or if there are no materials for ascertaining it.¹⁰² However, if possession is taken under such an agreement, the term will commence from the date of entry.¹⁰³

A lease may commence either in the present or the future, eg on the determination of a prior lease for years.¹⁰⁴ If it is expressed to commence from a past day, that is only for the purpose of computation, and the interest of the lessee begins from the date of execution. Before execution, no interest passes;¹⁰⁵ and conversely, the lessee is not liable for breaches of covenants before execution.¹⁰⁶ If the lease commences in the future, it is sufficient if it is capable of being definitely ascertained when the lease takes effect. Until that time it may be contingent on a future event, for when that event happens the principle, id certum est quod certum reddi potest, applies. The meaning of this phrase is “that is sufficiently certain which can be made certain”. Therefore, it cannot be said that on the date of commencement of lease itself, the period must be certain. It is enough if the period is capable of being ascertained at a future date on the happening of a certain event.¹⁰⁷

[s 105.5.2] Duration

In India, a lease may be in perpetuity. However, in India as in England, a mere general letting, ie, a lease which is silent as to duration of the term, would be void as a lease,¹⁰⁸ though it would create a tenancy-at-will which would be converted by payment of rent into a tenancy from year to year or month to month. In the case of a benami kabulayet or agreement of lease without a term for an annual rent, the Privy Council held that it operated either as a permanent lease, or as a lease from year to year and that no intermediate position was open.¹⁰⁹ The Act lays down a rule of construction which is to be applied when there is no period agreed upon between the parties. In those cases, the duration of lease has to be determined by reference to the object or purpose for which the tenancy is created.¹¹⁰

The terms of a lease may provide for renewal or extension of the lease. The distinction between “renewal” and “extension” of lease is chiefly that in the case of renewal, a new lease is required, while in the case of extension, the same lease continues in force during the additional period by the performance of the stipulated act. In other words, the word “extension” when used in its proper and usual sense in connection with a lease means a prolongation of lease.¹¹¹ A covenant for renewal is not treated as a part of the terms prescribing the period of lease, but only entitles a lessee to obtain a fresh lease.¹¹² The renewal clause in a lease deed is an important term of the agreement. Ordinarily the court should be reluctant to ignore such a term of the lease, unless on a fair reading and reasonable construction no meaning can be attached to it. If the renewal clause is not clear and specific regarding the terms of renewal, the court is to ascertain the intention of the parties from the materials on record.¹¹³ Whether the option clause contained in a lease provides for renewal or extension is to be ascertained primarily from its terms and conditions. If there is uncertainty or ambiguity, the other covenants of the lease would be read to find out the intention of the parties. Oral evidence led by the parties at the trial would help to resolve the issue. But at interim stage the court has to find out the answer only from the lease and other undisputed pieces of admissible evidence.¹¹⁴

Renewal of lease is a creation of a fresh lease and a fresh lease is required to be registered according to law, but where no such fresh lease is created in terms of the renewal clause of the original registered deed of lease, no question of registering it arises. If in such a case, the lessee continues in possession in exercise of his option as per the renewal clause over the leased period after the initial period is over, his continuance in possession would be deemed to be under the original registered deed. The further period is to be treated in such a case as part of the period of the original registered deed of lease. Thus, in such a case, where a lease contains a renewal or extension clause, the period does not remain limited to the initial period only, but it breaks the limit to further flow for another term and the lease does not determine at the end of the initial period on exercise of unilateral option by the lessee, as in such a case, there does not arise any question of fresh assent by the lessor because the right to enjoy for a further period gets conveyed to the lessee under the original registered lease itself.¹¹⁵

Where the principal lease executed between the parties containing a covenant for renewal, is renewed in accordance with the said covenant, the question whether the renewed lease shall also contain similar clause for renewal depends on the facts and circumstances of each case, regard being had to the intention of the parties as displayed in the original covenant for renewal and the surrounding circumstances.¹¹⁶

An option of renewal, whether the option be of the tenant,¹¹⁷ or of the lessor,¹¹⁸ does not affect the duration of the term. This is because the option, until exercised, creates no interest in the superadded term.¹¹⁹ A covenant for a perpetual renewal of the lease must always be unequivocal.¹²⁰ Where by an agreement in writing, the owner of a furnished house let it to a tenant at a weekly rent for six months certain with an option “of continuing the tenancy for a further period of six months on the same terms and conditions including this clause,” it was held that the tenant had the right to renew for one further period of six months and no more.¹²¹ It is not, however, necessary that the term of the lease should be for a fixed period. It is sufficient if it is definite.¹²² The period of lease cannot be infinite by mere provisions of renewal every three years, when the lease was for a specific period.¹²³

A tenant cannot have a legitimate expectation to continue the occupation of the premises indefinitely.¹²⁴

[s 105.5.3] Leasehold estates

“Freehold land” and “leasehold land” are conceptually different. Freehold refers to the land that is under ownership, with liability to pay tax to the authorities while leasehold refers to the property that is subject to lease agreement with an obligation to pay rent. If a property subject to a lease and in the possession of a lessee is offered for sale by the owner to a prospective private purchaser, the purchaser being aware that on purchase he will get only title and not possession and that the sale in his favour will be subject to encumbrance namely, the lease, he will offer a price taking note of the encumbrances.¹²⁵

The duration of the tenancy determines the leasehold estate created. There are two estates which, strictly speaking, do not fall within this section. One is a tenancy at sufferance, which is merely a fiction of law to prevent what would otherwise be a trespass. The other is a tenancy at will, which does not fulfill the definition of a lease, as the term is uncertain. A lessee is liable for rent; but not so a tenant at sufferance, or a tenant at will. A tenant at will is not a trespasser, for his occupation is permissive, and so he is liable for compensation for use and occupation.¹²⁶ A tenant at sufferance is sometimes said to be liable for compensation for use and occupation.¹²⁷

[s 105.5.4] Tenancy at sufferance¹²⁸

A tenancy at sufferance is merely a fiction to avoid continuance in possession operating as a trespass. It has been described as the least and lowest interest which can subsist in reality.¹²⁹ It, therefore, cannot be created by a contract and arises only by the implication of law when a person who has been in possession under a lawful title continues in possession after that title has determined, without the consent of the person entitled.¹³⁰ But the TP Act, 1882, as already observed, is not exhaustive; and the term is a useful one to distinguish a possession, rightful in its inception but wrongful in its continuance, from a trespass wrongful both in its inception and in its continuance. A tenant holding over after the expiration of his term is a tenant at sufferance.¹³¹ He continues in possession after extinction of a lawful title, and does not create relationship of landlord and tenant.¹³² If he holds over against the landlord's consent, he is a trespasser,¹³³ and is liable for mesne profits.¹³⁴

105. Lease defined.—

A tenant at sufferance must establish some overt act in defiance of the title of the landlord, so as to change the character of his possession to the position of the trespasser, to enable him to claim adverse possession against his landlord.¹³⁵ A mortgagor left in possession under an English mortgage is a tenant at sufferance, and cannot grant a lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee and if it does, the mortgagee can treat the lessee as a trespasser.¹³⁶

A tenancy at sufferance does not create the relationship of landlord and tenant; and in a suit for the ejectment of a tenant holding over without the landlord's consent, limitation runs under Article 139 from the expiration of the term, and not from the termination of the tenancy at sufferance.¹³⁷

A tenancy at sufferance is determined at any time by the landlord entering without notice or demand, or by the tenant quitting. Thus, a tenant remaining in possession in defiance of his landlord after termination of the lease is a tenant at sufferance, and is not entitled to notice to quit.¹³⁸ So also, if a Hindu widow grants a lease and the reversioner after her death elects to avoid it, the lessee is a tenant at sufferance and can be evicted without notice.¹³⁹ A landlord cannot evict a tenant proprio motu. It has been held that a tenant continuing in possession after the termination of his tenancy, without the assent of the landlord being only in the position of a trespasser, necessarily, the rule relating to suits against trespassers by the co-owner must apply, eg a co-owner can in his own right sue for recovery of possession from such a person, without arraying the other co-owners as parties to the suit. However, an exception to this rule is made where the suing co-owner claims exclusive title to the property in derogation of the rights of other owners. In such an event, the other co-owner whose rights are denied is a necessary party to the suit.¹⁴⁰

[s 105.5.5] Tenancy at will

A tenancy at will is determinable at the will either of the landlord, or of the tenant. The law implies a tenancy at will of one party to be a tenancy at will of either party.¹⁴¹ A tenancy at will arises by implication of law in cases of permissive occupation when a person is in possession of premises with the consent of the owner,¹⁴² it may arise expressly by an agreement to let for an indefinite term for a compensation accruing from day to day, so long as both parties please.¹⁴³ Thus, a tenancy at will is terminable by either party and a demand by the landlord for possession is sufficient.¹⁴⁴ Notice, however, by the tenant is not effectual, unless he gives up possession. If the landlord seeks a decree of ejectment, it is necessary to have given to the tenant, a notice to quit.¹⁴⁵

Indian cases of tenancy at will have arisen when the tenant expressly agrees to vacate whenever possession is demanded by the landlord.¹⁴⁶ It had been held that a tenancy terminable at any time on 15 days' notice was a tenancy at will,¹⁴⁷ but a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view, holding that if notice is required to terminate a tenancy, it is not a tenancy at will.¹⁴⁸ Similarly, a lease for a certain term, in which the lessor is given an option to terminate at will, is not a tenancy at will,¹⁴⁹ nor where no rent is fixed,¹⁵⁰ or where there has been possession under an invalid or void lease before payment of rent,¹⁵¹ or where there has been permissive occupation.¹⁵² An utbandi holding in Bengal is merely a tenancy at will.¹⁵³

A tenancy at will is a new tenancy created by a bilateral act of offer and acceptance, ie, the lessee's offer of taking a new lease evidenced by the lessee remaining in possession after the expiry of the term and the lessor's acceptance of that offer, evidenced by a definite consent to the continuance of possession by the lessor. Such consent may be expressed by acceptance of rent or otherwise. Where the tenant agrees to vacate the premises whenever the landlord would desire him to do so, it is a tenancy at will. The mere fact that the rent note provides for the payment of rent at an annual rate does not constitute it a lease reserving a yearly rent. In such cases, no registered lease is required, and the rent note is admissible in evidence.¹⁵⁴ Under section 116, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the lease stands renewed from year to year or from month to month, according to the purpose for which the property was leased, as specified in section 106 of the TP Act, 1882. Both the statutory renewal under section 116 and the statutory deeming of duration under section 106 are, however, subject to any agreement to the contrary. Thus, if the parties create a tenancy at will terminable

at the will of either party, it would be a “contract to the contrary” within the meaning of sections 106 and 116.¹⁵⁵

(2) A sold his lease to B without a written assignment by merely handing over the lease to B. The lessor sued for rent. B was a tenant at will, liable only for compensation for use and occupation.¹⁵⁷

[s 105.5.6] Use and occupation

A tenant at will is not liable to pay rent because there has been no demise to him. He is not liable for mesne profits or damages like a trespasser because his occupation is permissive. But he is liable to pay compensation for use and occupation. There must be a contract of tenancy before a person can be a tenant. But if there be no contract and the possession of a person is permissive, then it is the case of an occupier. Rent is realised from a tenant. Profit, on the other hand, is payable by an occupier for the use of another's property with his consent. When the rent for the period is not fixed, the occupier is not a tenant; when the rent is fixed, the tenant pays the agreed rent.¹⁵⁸ If the rent is fixed, or there is an express agreement as to rent, the amount fixed or agreed is recoverable, the amount so fixed or agreed being evidence of the quantum payable. If there is no express agreement that he should pay, the mere fact of this occupation of the land of another implies an agreement to pay reasonable compensation.¹⁵⁹ If the defendant takes possession under an agreement of sale to him and the sale goes off, he is a tenant at will and liable for use and occupation from the time when the contract is at an end.¹⁶⁰

Compensation for use and occupation was also awarded when the occupants were really trespassers, and the plaintiff waived the trespass and treated them as tenants at will.¹⁶¹ Where there is a lease to one partner, the lessor is not entitled to recover compensation from the other partners, for they occupy not with his permission, but with that of the lessee.¹⁶² A suit for rent may not be converted into a suit for use and occupation, at the hearing, for it involves different issues.¹⁶³

The rights of lessee was discussed by the Supreme Court in the light of provisions in Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act, 2002, and it was held that until lease of an immoveable property gets determined, lessee has right to enjoy the property and this right to property cannot be taken away without the authority of law. There is no provision in section 13 of the SARFAESI Act that a lease in respect of a secured asset shall stand determined when secured creditor takes steps mentioned in section 13.¹⁶⁴

[s 105.5.7] Leasehold estates under this section

The leases recognised by this section are:

- (i) leases for a certain time;
- (ii) periodic leases;
- (iii) leases in perpetuity.

105. Lease defined.—

Chief Justice Jenkins in *Municipal Corp of Bombay v Secretary of State*¹⁶⁵ said:

It is a principle of general application that it is not within the power of a person to create whatever interests he may please in land; he is limited to such interests as are recognized by the system of jurisprudence governing his disposition.

Therefore, a lease until suitable land is provided for and six months' notice is given, is void.¹⁶⁶

(i) Leases for a certain time—The words “a certain time” seem inconsistent with the phrase “a lease of uncertain duration” which occurs in section 108(i) where it is used to describe yearly or monthly tenancies. Thus, a lease from month to month is a lease for uncertain duration.¹⁶⁷ But as Lord Kenyon said in Goodright D Hall v Richardson,¹⁶⁸ the certainty need not be ascertained at the time; for if in the fluxion of time, a day will arrive which will make it certain, that is sufficient. The lease deed is capable of being made certain on a future date. There cannot be anything more certain than death.¹⁶⁹ The term may, therefore, be defined either by express limitation or by reference to some event which will afterwards fix its exact length. In the first case, a certain time is expressed; in the latter, it is implied. However, the result must be certain, and a lease until suitable ground should be provided by the lessor is void.¹⁷⁰

A lease for life is a lease for a certain time, for it terminates with the death of the lessee.¹⁷¹ A lease for so long as the lessee pays rent has been construed as a lease for life.¹⁷² In a Bombay case,¹⁷³ CJ Macleod held that such a lease was a permanent lease, differing from an earlier Bombay case¹⁷⁴ where a lease for so long as the lessee pleases to hold the land was said to be determinable at the death of the lessee. Such a lease may be transferable, but is not necessarily heritable.¹⁷⁵ So a lease for which no term is fixed, with an agreement not to raise the rent so long as the tenant pays it regularly, has been held to operate as an agreement to lease for the life of the tenant.¹⁷⁶

(ii) Periodic leases—These are tenancies from year to year, or from month to month.¹⁷⁷ The period may be a year, a quarter, a month, or even a week, and the mode in which the rent is reserved may afford a presumption as to the period of the lease.¹⁷⁸ A tenancy from year to year differs from a tenancy at will in that it can only be determined by notice duly given, and the interest created is not terminated by the death of either party. An annual lease is a lease for one year, which confers no right of transfer or inheritance.¹⁷⁹ But a lease from year to year is a periodical lease, which continues from one period to another period. Such a lease is of uncertain duration which does not purport to be for a definite period, as the interest of the tenant does not terminate at the end of the period.¹⁸⁰

Duration of the term in periodic leases is continuous from period to period.¹⁸¹ Such a lease is described in section 108(i) as a lease of uncertain duration, and in Article 35 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899 as a lease which does not purport to be for any definite period. The interest of the lessee, therefore, does not terminate at the end of the period. A tenant from year to year has an interest for one year certain, with a growing interest during every year thereafter, springing out of the original contract and as a part and parcel of it.¹⁸² The characteristics of the periodic tenancy from year to year were laid down in the Court of Exchequer Chamber in *Candy v Juhber*¹⁸³ as follows:

105. Lease defined.—

There frequently is an actual demise from year to year so long as both parties please. The nature of this tenancy is discussed in 4 Bac Abr Lit Leases and Terms for years pp 838, 839, 7th ed and the article has always been deemed of the highest authority. It seems clear that the learned author considered that the true nature of such a tenancy is that it is a lease for two years certain, and that every year after it is a springing interest arising upon the first contract and parcel of it, so that if the lessee occupies for a number of years, these years by computation from the time past, make an entire lease for so many years, and that after the commencement of each new year, it becomes an entire lease certain for the years past and also for the year so entered on, and that it is not a reletting at the commencement of the third and subsequent years. We think this is the true nature of a tenancy from year to year created by express words, and that there is not in contemplation of law, a recommencing or reletting at the beginning of each year.

In Queen's Club Gardens Estates Ltd v Bignel,¹⁸⁴ J Salter said:

In the case of all periodic tenancies, whether from year to year, or from quarter to quarter, or from month to month or for any other period, the law, as I find it stated in the authorities, appears to be that the tenancy is from period to period, from one fixed date to another. It is a tenancy from so many years, or quarters, or months or weeks as the parties may think fit. If a new period be allowed to begin, the tenancy must, in the absence of course of any other arrangement between the parties, continue until the period ends, and neither party can, against the will of the other, put an end to the tenancy during the currency of the period.

Following this, CJ Beaumont in the undernoted case¹⁸⁵ said:

A monthly tenancy, that is a tenancy subject to a month's notice, creates in the first instance a tenancy for two months certain. But as soon as the third month commences, that is not a new tenancy; it turns the original tenancy into a three months' tenancy and when the fourth month begins, the tenancy becomes a four months' tenancy and so on so long as the tenancy continues, until, that is to say, notice to quit is given.

A month's notice is mentioned in this passage because according to local usage in Bombay, a month's notice is necessary. Justice Gentle in the undernoted case¹⁸⁶ said:

A monthly tenancy in my view is not a tenancy which commences or begins in one month and on its expiry a fresh tenancy is created in the following month or months but, is a tenancy for an unstated period which is determinable by one or other of the parties giving a notice to quit.

105. Lease defined.—

To the like effect are the observations of the court in Ganesdas Ramgopal v Jamuna.¹⁸⁷

A periodic tenancy is sometimes called a tenancy at will, regarding it as a tenancy at will with a restraint on the exercise of the will. A tenancy from year to year or from month to month arises by express agreement, or, in the absence of a contract, by presumption of law under section 106. A tenancy at will implied from holding over, or from entry under a void lease, becomes on payment of rent a tenancy from year to year, or from month to month, or from week to week.¹⁸⁸ A lease for an indefinite period is generally construed as a lease for life, but if the rent is payable yearly it would be taken to be a lease from year to year.¹⁸⁹ A lease for a year with a stipulation that it should remain in force until another lease is granted has been construed as a lease from year to year.¹⁹⁰

(iii) Leases in perpetuity—In India, such a lease is created either by an express grant, or by a presumed grant. Such leases are generally agricultural leases or they are leases executed before the TP Act, 1882. As section 107 of the TP Act, 1882 excludes the agricultural lease from the operation of the Act.

[s 105.5.8] Express grant

Words which suffice by themselves to import permanency are—miras or mirasdar,¹⁹¹ mourasi,¹⁹² mulgni,¹⁹³ nirantar,¹⁹⁴ patni,¹⁹⁵ so also, words indicative of a heritable grant such as *Ba Farzandan*¹⁹⁶ or Naslan bad Naslan.¹⁹⁷ The words istemari mourasi mokurari in a lease mean permanent and heritable.¹⁹⁸ The tenancy created by a taluka putta is presumed to be permanent, unless there are indications to the contrary in the surrounding circumstances.¹⁹⁹ On the other hand, the following words are not per se sufficient to import permanency of tenure: Paracudi and Ulavadi Mirasidar,²⁰⁰ Mokarari,²⁰¹ Istemari Mokarari,²⁰² Kyam and Saswatham,²⁰³ Mukkaddami.²⁰⁴ But these words do not exclude the notion of permanency, and when they occur, their effect is a matter of construction having regard to the other terms of the instrument, the object of the lease, the circumstances under which it was granted, and the subsequent conduct of the parties.²⁰⁵ Such considerations may show that a bemiadi lease, i.e., a lease without, a term, is a permanent lease.²⁰⁶ Where a contract of lease provided that the tenant was to continue in possession as long as he paid rent, it was a tenancy for the lifetime of the tenant and not a permanent tenancy.²⁰⁷ The precondition to establish a landlord and tenant relationship in a permanent lease is that the landlord should have reserved to himself a right to evict the tenant.²⁰⁸

The fact that the lease is a permanent lease does not exclude the Bengal zamindars' right to enhance rent up to the limit sanctioned by usage in respect of tenures created after the permanent settlement.²⁰⁹ The right of enhancement of rent is not inappropriate in case of a tenure which is perpetual.²¹⁰ Permanency of a lease does not necessarily imply both fixity of rent and fixity of occupation, and the fact of enhancement of rent does not necessarily militate against the tenancy being a permanent one.²¹¹ But if for a long time, the rent has not been enhanced in spite of an increase in the value of the tenure, the inference will be that the rent is fixed.²¹² A lease does not cease to be a lease in perpetuity because there is a forfeiture clause, for such a provision is merely a security for the payment of rent.²¹³ If the lease is a lease in perpetuity, a slight increase in rent will not by itself destroy the permanent character of the tenancy.²¹⁴ But a tenancy, though permanent in its inception, ceases to be permanent, if the tenant executes rent deeds for a specified period, and admits his ability to ejectment and enhancement of rent.²¹⁵

Presumed grant—If the tenant has been in possession long before the TP Act, 1882, the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case may show that the tenancy is permanent. Long possession is by itself insufficient to prove permanency,²¹⁶ as the only presumption from long possession is a yearly tenancy.²¹⁷ Where land has been held on rent which is variable, the mere fact that buildings have been erected on the land with knowledge of the landlord is not itself sufficient to raise the presumption that the tenancy is permanent.²¹⁸ In the absence of a provision in the terms of the grant that the tenancy is not to continue after the grantee's lifetime, a lease for a definite period does not terminate on the death of the lessee, but continues with the heirs for the remainder of the term. A lease for an indefinite period on the other hand, enures for the lifetime of the lessee only, unless there are words in the document, or other circumstances revealing an intention to grant a perpetual lease.²¹⁹

If the origin of the tenancy is known, long possession, even if coupled with payment of a uniform rent, is not sufficient²²⁰ unless a custom to the contrary is proved,²²¹ or unless other circumstances such as the sale of a building on the land by the lessee and the transfer of the land several times by the lessee show that the lease was perpetual.²²² However, if the origin of tenancy is not known, then the maxim optimus rerum interpret usus applies, and long possession coupled with a uniform rent raises a presumption of permanency.²²³

A presumption was made in favour of a lessee of a wakf property, who had held for a long period of time at an unchanged rent and as heritable property, even though a permanent lease could not have been granted without the permission of the kazi, and no such permission had been proved.²²⁴ Viscount Sumner said:

The presumption of an origin in some lawful title, which the courts have so readily made in order to support possessory rights, long and quietly enjoyed, where no actual proof of title is forthcoming, is one which is not a mere branch of the law of evidence. It is resorted to because of the failure of actual evidence. Hence, their Lordships cannot accept the appellant's contention that the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, section 114 prevent the inference of a consent by the kazi in the absence of any evidence of an application to the kazi for leave, or some other proved fact of that kind. The matter is one of presumption, based on the policy of the law. The presumption is not an "open sesame" with which to unlock in favour of a particular kind of claimant a closed door, to which neither the law nor the proved facts would in themselves have afforded any key. It is the completion of a right, to which circumstances clearly point where time has obliterated any record of the original commencement.

Again, the fact that the land is held for building purposes or for residence may raise a presumption of permanence.²²⁵ It had been held that in the absence of a contract to the contrary or local law or usage, a lease of land for putting up a permanent construction cannot be deemed to be a permanent lease, but must be regarded as a lease from month to month;²²⁶ but this was dissented from in *Bavasaheb v West Patent Press Co.*²²⁷ Such a tenancy could be for life or for a permanent tenancy. It could not be a tenancy at will. All these views have now been in terms approved by the Supreme Court in *Sivayogeswara Cotton Press v M Panchaksharappa*²²⁸ in which a lease for building purposes was construed to be a permanent lease. In Chapsibhai v Purushottam,²²⁹ the Supreme Court has considered Sivayogeswara's case and held that the lease in that case was permanent because the rights of the lessee were to be heritable; where an indefinite lease for building purposes is not heritable, it would be construed as enuring for the life-time of the lessee. The question of buildings generally arises in the case of homestead lands in Bengal; and in a Calcutta case,²³⁰ it was suggested that as to such land an inference of permanency could hardly arise unless a pucca structure had been erected. But the correctness of this conclusion has been doubted²³¹ and in several cases,²³² inference of permanency has been drawn in the case of homestead lands on which no substantial structure had been erected, when a uniform rent has been charged despite a great increase in the value of the land. The mere fact that permanent buildings have been erected on the land cannot in any way alter the incidence of tenancy.²³³

As regards tenancies in Bengal of which the origin was not known, CJ Rankin in *Kamal Kumar Datta v Nanda Lal Dule*²³⁴ said:

105. Lease defined.—

The principles applicable to cases of this class may be stated as follows:

- (1) when a person claims to hold land as a tenant under a landlord it is for him to prove the existence, the nature and the extent of the interest which the owner of the full rights has granted to him;
- (2) the terms of the holding as between landlord and tenant must in these cases be a matter of contract either express or implied;
- (3) the Legislature, as regards this province (Bengal), has regulated the terms of agricultural holdings. The letting of land for residential purposes is regulated by the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, but from the operation of this statute old tenancies such as those now in question, are excluded by section 2;
- (4) ordinarily the person who sets up a contract will be required to give reasonable particulars and direct proof of the contract relied upon, but in the case of tenancies proved to be of long standing this principle is inapplicable, and from the history of the tenancy and the circumstances of the case it is open to the tenant to show that the origin of the tenancy being unknown, the correct inference is to the effect that the right granted to the tenant and enjoyed by him is a permanent right.

Although this judgment has reference to Bengal, the principles enunciated are of general application. In Afzalunissa v Abdul Karim,²³⁵ the Privy Council quoted with approval the following head note to the case of Casperz v Kader Nath Sarbadhikari,²³⁶ and said that its application was not limited to Bengal:

Although the origin of a tenancy may not be known, yet if there is a proved fact of long possession of the tenure by the tenants and their ancestors, the fact of the landlord having permitted them to build a pucca house upon it, the fact of the house having been there for a very considerable time, of it having been added to by successive tenants, and of the tenure having from time to time been transferred by succession and purchase, in which the landlord acquiesced or of which he had knowledge, a court is justified in presuming that the tenure is of a permanent nature.

Whether the facts and circumstances of the case justify the inference of permanence has been said by the Privy Council to be a mixed question of fact and of law.²³⁷ But the courts hold firmly to the principle declared in *Secretary of State v Lurchmeswar Singh*²³⁸ that the burden of proving permanency of tenancy is on the tenant;²³⁹ and this view has been specifically approved by the Supreme Court in Hamidullah v Abdullah.²⁴⁰ Clear and unambiguous language is required for inferring a permanent lease. A lease with the right of renewal is, in the absence of clear language, construed as giving a right to one renewal, but not a right to a second or third renewal.²⁴¹ In an Oudh case,²⁴² it was held that although none of the following facts taken by itself were sufficient to establish the fact that the lease was a permanent one, the cumulative effect of all of them taken together was to establish that the land was held under a perpetual lease:

- (a) The land was given on lease at the same time as a building thereon was sold for residential purposes to the lessee; (b) no period was fixed for the lease; (c) the land was held at a uniform rent for 69 years; (d) several transfers had taken place; (e) the lessor never claimed that the lease was terminable.

Permanency by prescription—A permanent tenancy may be acquired by prescription, for it is a well-established rule that there can be adverse possession of a limited interest in property as well as of the full title of the owner.²⁴³ The Bombay case of *Datto v Babasahib*²⁴⁴ was, it is submitted, a clear case of a permanent tenancy acquired by prescription. The tenant came into possession in 1865 under a permanent lease, which was inadmissible as evidence of a lease for want of registration. This evidence was supported by a series of entries in the Record of Rights showing that the lessee claimed to be a permanent tenant. Nevertheless, the court held that a permanent tenancy could not be, and was not acquired. Though the court professed to follow Naina Pillai v Ramanathan,²⁴⁵ but that case had no application, for the tenant there had entered as a tenant at will, and his subsequent assertion of a permanent tenancy could not create title by adverse possession. That case was distinguished on this ground in Periyan Chetty v Govind Rao.²⁴⁶

When the possession is that of a trespasser, it is adverse from the time of the trespass. Thus, in a Bombay case,²⁴⁷ a permanent tenant encroached upon the other land of his landlord and claimed it as included in his lease and his possession was held to be adverse from the time of his encroachment. Again, in a Calcutta case,²⁴⁸ possession under an invalid lease granted by a wife in the belief that her husband was dead, was adverse in its inception. A typical case is Budesab v Hanmanta,²⁴⁹ where the tenant resisted eviction on the ground that he was a permanent tenant and remained in possession for 12 years thereafter. It was held that he was a trespasser after the original tenancy was determined, and his possession was adverse from that date. When a permanent tenancy is claimed by one who is already in possession as a tenant for years or from year to year, different considerations arise. The relationship of landlord and tenant, once established, is presumed to continue, and the tenant cannot, by the mere assertion of a title inconsistent with the real legal relationship between the parties, convert that relationship into adverse possession.²⁵⁰ Such assertions do not necessarily throw upon the landlord the onus of refuting them by suit.²⁵¹ In Vaman v Khanderao,²⁵² the plaintiff claimed a permanent tenancy as to two plots. He succeeded as to the plot where the origin of his possession was not proved, but failed as to the plot where it was shown that he had entered as tenant. In Tekait Ram Chunder Singh v Srimati Madho Kumari,²⁵³ the Privy Council held that the assertion by tenants, in suits against third parties, of a permanent tenancy was not sufficient to make their position adverse when there were no conflicting claims between themselves and the landlord; and again, in Beni Prashad Koeri v Dudhnath Roy,²⁵⁴ the Privy Council held that mere notice by a person holding for life that he held on perpetual tenure would not make his possession adverse. There are cases²⁵⁵ which apparently conflict with this statement of the law; but these have been explained in a Madras case,²⁵⁶ as being cases in which the possession was really that of a trespasser when the permanent tenancy was claimed.

Permanency by estoppel—A permanent tenancy may also be acquired by estoppel as in the case of Forbes v Ralli,²⁵⁷ or by implied contract as in Lala Beni Ram v Kundan Lall.²⁵⁸ These cases are discussed in the note “Estoppel by acquiescence” under section 51.

[s 105.6] The Consideration

The consideration is either premium, or rent.²⁵⁹ Premium is the price paid or promised in consideration of the demise. The term “money advanced” does not include the amount of security deposit as it is adjustable towards unpaid rent and the lessor is not bound to pay stamp duty on it.²⁶⁰ The definition of lease in section 105 was criticised in the case of *Re Uttar Pradesh Electric Supply Co*²⁶¹ as excluding a lease where the consideration is premium as well as rent. There is no doubt, however, that the consideration may be rent plus premium as well as rent alone or premium alone. The undernoted case,²⁶² is an instance of such a lease. The premium or price may be an outstanding debt.²⁶³ When there is a lease agreement that is executed upon the condition that in case of failure to deposit instalments within prescribed limit, agreement would become void, under section 105, such promised consideration not paid shall render the lease void automatically.²⁶⁴

Though section 105 of the TP Act, 1882 envisages even “services” rendered by the lessee as a consideration for the grant; the position would be different under the Rent Acts. The Supreme Court has held that in context of the provisions of Rent Act, services rendered in lieu of the right of occupation would not amount to receipt of rent so as to create a sub-tenancy.²⁶⁵

The transfer of right to enjoy immovable property may be made in lieu of money, a share of crops, service rendered or any other thing of value to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee; and the money, share, service or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent and therefore it is not difficult to conceive of a lease of an immovable property, with a landlord-tenant relationship between the parties, in lieu of a share of profits or in lieu of commission paid or even in lieu of a service rendered.²⁶⁶ Consideration in the form of generation of employment and industrial production for the welfare of the subject is not the “consideration” contemplated by section 105.²⁶⁷

[s 105.6.1] Premium

Premium means a sum of money paid as consideration for grant of lease. It represents capitalized rent and is different from the actual rent which otherwise be obtained by the lessee. It also includes any like sum whether payable to the intermediate or a superior landlord and any sum (other than rent) paid on or in connection with the granting of a tenancy.²⁶⁸ The difference between a premium and rent in the context, lies in the fact that premium is a sum paid in consideration of the conveyance implied in the lease and is quantified in lump, whether it is paid outright or by installments over a period told to be paid at a certain time. But a rent, while it is also in consideration of lease is in lieu of the enjoyment which the lessee has and particularly as consideration thereof. Another feature of rent is that it is payable as and when it accrues unlike a premium the liability for which arises at the time the contract is entered into.²⁶⁹

The distinction between premium and rent has also been considered in a number of cases arising under the Income Tax Act, 1961, and as discussed by the Supreme Court in *CIT v Panbari Tea Co.*²⁷⁰ If a payment is a consideration of being let in possession such as salami, it is a premium, even if it is to be paid in instalments.²⁷¹ But premium must be distinguished from advance rent.²⁷² If the consideration is premium alone, the transaction may be either a lease, or a usufructuary mortgage. The expression “zuripeshgi lease” means literally a lease for a premium. The premium was the original loan, and mortgages were given in this form to evade the prohibition against usury. In a zuripeshgi lease, the so-called lessee is actually a creditor operating the repayment of his debt out of the subject-matter of the so-called lease. If the indebtedness continues despite the grant of the lease, then the transaction is in effect a mortgage. However, the distinction is sometimes very fine. In Nidha Sah v Murli Dhar,²⁷³ there was a grant of land rent free, for 14 years in consideration of a debt to the grantee at the time of execution. The Privy Council said that it was not a mortgage, as no accounts were to be taken and the land was not security for the debt. Zuripeshgi leases are discussed in a note under section 58. There is no charge for unpaid premium corresponding to the charge of the unpaid vendor under section 55(4)(b); and this is so even though the lease be in perpetuity.²⁷⁴

[s 105.6.2] Rent

In Indian law, any payment by the lessee that is part of the consideration of the lease is rent.²⁷⁵ Thus, when the lease provides for collection charges in addition to rent, such charges are really a part of the rent.²⁷⁶ So also, a stipulation to pay assessment,²⁷⁷ or taxes payable by the lessor²⁷⁸ makes the assessment or taxes a part of the rent.²⁷⁹ However, in the absence of any lease deed or rent note, mere payment of house tax cannot by any stretch of imagination be equivalent to an agreement of tenancy.²⁸⁰ When the lessee agrees to pay rent to the lessor, and also to pay the head lessor a rent payable by the lessor, this latter sum is also rent.²⁸¹ On the other hand, if the payment is not made in consideration of the lease, it is not rent. Such are payments under the Bombay Land Revenue Code by inferior to superior holders between whom the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist;²⁸² or cesses levied for public purposes such as sanitation, education, or policing.²⁸³ Parties may agree that certain payments would not be regarded as rent. A personal agreement by a tenant to pay a certain sum or a certain quantity in kind to the landlord is not rent.²⁸⁴ A share of the first can be rent.²⁸⁵ Though section 105 envisages even “services” rendered by the lessee as a consideration for the grant, it has been held that services in lieu of the right of occupation would not amount to receipt of rent under the Rent Acts to create sub-tenancy.²⁸⁶

The expression “lease” in section 105 covers a lease accompanied with payment of advance rent.²⁸⁷

As in England, rent may not be only payment in money, but also the delivery of chattels,²⁸⁸ corn or the share of crop²⁸⁹ or the rendering of services,²⁹⁰ or partly in money and partly in kind.²⁹¹ Similarly, in the Bengal Tenancy Act, “rent” is defined as whatever is lawfully payable in money or deliverable in kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use and occupation of land held by the tenant. If the rent is fixed in perpetuity in money and measures of paddy, the tenancy is a fixed rate mukerari tenancy, although the price of paddy may vary.²⁹² But the mere description of a lease as mauroshi mukerari would not show that the rent was fixed in perpetuity. The terms of the deed may provide for its variation.²⁹³ Where a lease provides that the rent shall be paid in kind of a certain money value, the lessor can recover the market value of the produce. The lessee has no option but to pay the rent in money.²⁹⁴

Rent must be certain, but it is not necessary that the actual figure be determined if there is no uncertainty as to the way in which it is fixed.²⁹⁵ If it is certain or capable of being ascertained, it may fluctuate.²⁹⁶ So a renewal clause at a rent subject to “such fair and equitable enhancement as the lessor shall determine” is not void for uncertainty because the requirement “fairness and equity” meant that the final decision was not left to the lessor.²⁹⁷ Similarly, an option to renew at a rent to be fixed having regard to the market value of the premises at the relevant time is not void for uncertainty; a court is reluctant to hold void for uncertainty a provision intended to have legal effect, and as a formula was indicated for determining the rent, the court could determine it, even though no machinery for working out the formula was provided for,²⁹⁸ but an agreement to pay whatever rent the lessor may impose, is void.²⁹⁹

The payment and acceptance of an increased or diminished rent does not of itself import a new demise.³⁰⁰ But an agreement which varies the amount of rent or other essential terms of a lease amounts to a fresh lease, and must be registered as such.³⁰¹

When once the relationship of landlord and tenant is established, mere non-payment of rent is not enough to prove that the relationship has ceased.³⁰² Mere non-payment of rent in point of fact is not equivalent to absence of consideration in point of law.³⁰³ On the other hand, a mere demand of rent from a person found in possession operates only as an offer of a tenancy, and the relationship of landlord and tenant is not established until the rent is paid and accepted.³⁰⁴ A lease may provide for enhanced rent in case of alienation. Such additional rent, though sometimes called penal rent, cannot be relieved against.³⁰⁵

[s 105.6.3] Periodically or on specified occasions

Rent is a periodical payment, it is usually reserved yearly, quarterly or monthly, and if so, it becomes due at the end of each such period. If the occasions are specified, such as quarter days or feast days, it becomes due on the first of such days after the commencement of the term. Rent is not in arrear until after midnight of the day for payment.³⁰⁶ Rent falling due on a Sunday may lawfully be paid on that day, and is in arrears on Monday.³⁰⁷

[s 105.6.4] Agreement to lease or Agreement for lease

A contract for a lease is to be distinguished from a lease, because a lease is actually a conveyance of an estate in land, whereas a contract for a lease is merely an agreement that such a conveyance shall be entered into at a future date. A lease is a transaction which as of itself creates a tenancy in favour of the tenant. An agreement for a lease is a transaction whereby the parties bind themselves, one to grant and the other to accept, a lease. Whether an instrument operates as a lease or an agreement for a lease, depends on the intention of the parties, which intention must be ascertained from all the relevant circumstances.³⁰⁸

The TP Act, 1882 does not define an agreement to lease, but section 2(7) of the Registration Act, 1908 defines lease as including “agreement to lease”. The Supreme Court in the case of *Trivenibai v Lilabai*³⁰⁹ after interpreting the provisions of section 2(7) of the Registration Act and taking into consideration the decision of the Privy Council in *Hemant Kumari Devi v Midnapur Zamindari Co Ltd*³¹⁰ came to the conclusion that an

“agreement to lease” under section 2(7) of the Registration Act must be a document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease. An agreement between two parties, it was held, which entitles one of them merely to claim the execution of a lease from the other without creating a present and immediate demise in his favour is not an agreement to lease within the meaning of section 2(7) of the said Act. This view has again been reiterated by the Supreme Court in *V B Dharmyat v Shree Jagadguru Tontadrya*³¹¹ by further holding that such documents are not required to be registered under section 2(7) read with section 17(1)(c) of the Registration Act, 1908. An agreement to lease may affect an actual demise in which case it is a lease. On the other hand, the agreement to lease may be a merely executory instrument binding the parties, the one, to grant, and the other, to accept a lease in the future. An agreement to lease not creating a present demise is not a lease, and requires neither writing, nor registration.³¹²

As to an executory agreement to lease, it was at one time supposed that an intending lessee, who had taken possession under an agreement to lease capable of specific performance, was in the same position as if the lease had been executed and registered. These cases have, however, been rendered obsolete by the decisions of the Privy Council that the equity in Walsh v Lonsdale does not apply in India. The note under section 53A “Statutory Law of India excludes Walsh v Lonsdale” deals with this issue. If the agreement is in writing, the intending lessee may, however, defend his possession under section 53A.

[s 105.6.5] Actual demise

When a document, though in the form of an agreement to lease, finally ascertains the terms of the lease, and gives the lessee a right of exclusive possession either immediately or at a future date, the document is said to affect an actual demise, and it operates as a lease. Whether it operates as a lease or as an agreement to lease, is a matter of construction and intention.³¹³ The transferee need not be put in actual possession. The transfer of the right to be in possession amounts to the transfer of possession.³¹⁴ So also, the transfer of a right to the usufruct of the property without possession may amount to a lease.³¹⁵

Words of present demise are generally conclusive of a lease.³¹⁶ There is a present demise even if the leasehold interest is to commence in the future.³¹⁷ This is because a transfer may operate not only in the present, but in the future. In this connection, the note “In present or in future” under section 5 may be referred. In other words, the agreement must create an immediate right in the party to be a tenant either from that day or from a future day and before the execution of any formal lease.³¹⁸ Therefore, an agreement by which one of the parties to a suit to recover land agreed that in case of success he would grant a lease of the land to the other on specified terms, does not create a present demise.³¹⁹ If all the terms essential to a lease are not fixed, the agreement is not construed as a lease.³²⁰ In Ramjoo Mahomed v Handas Mullick,³²¹ the agreement was contained in two letters. The lessee’s letter set forth all the terms essential to a lease and the lessor’s letter of acceptance concluded with the words, “all terms will be settled in the agreement”. Justice Page held that this did not imply that the terms were not settled by the letters, but was merely an assurance that the terms mentioned in the lessee’s letter would be embodied in the formal lease. The letters were, therefore, construed as a lease. In Goodyear India Ltd v BB Jain, a division bench of Delhi High Court held that a lease cannot be created by way of a letter on account of non-registration. In the said case, the terms of lease were for three years, which required registration under section 107 of the TP Act, 1882.³²² An agreement is so construed, if the terms are fixed;³²³ especially if possession is to be taken under it;³²⁴ or if the lessee is already in possession;³²⁵ or if rent is to be paid before the execution of a formal lease.³²⁶ On the other hand, despite words of present demise, the instrument will be construed as executory if the terms are not settled,³²⁷ or if before granting the lease, the lessor has to do work of completion,³²⁸ or improvement.³²⁹ Again, the agreement may expressly provide either that it shall,³³⁰ or shall not,³³¹ operate as a lease. However, the courts should look into the dominant purpose of the relationship which the parties created while entering into the agreement. Clever phraseology and ingenuity must not be permitted to overshadow the real intention of the parties. The court must ascertain whether the agreement creates any interest in the property.³³² A dowlferist or rent roll is not even an agreement of lease, although the entries are signed by the tenants.³³³

(1) A gave B a memorandum setting forth terms of a lease for the reclamation of land in the Sundarbans jungle. B entered into possession on the strength of the memorandum. The memorandum was a lease, and was not admissible in evidence of want of registration.³³⁴

(2) By an agreement of 8 October 1882, A agreed to let his property to B for a term of five years, the rent to commence from 1 October 1882. B was regarded as a tenant at the date of the agreement, which operated as a present demise.³³⁵

(3) A by an agreement of 16 February 1915, agrees to let to B a building then under construction as from 1 April 1915, when it was expected to be completed. On 1 April the building is not completed, but with A's consent, B takes possession and pays rent. There was by reason of delivery of possession, a demise on 1 April, but not under the agreement which was merely executory.³³⁶

[s 105.6.6] Rent notes

These are agreements to lease which fall under the wider definition of lease in the Registration Act, which includes a kabulayet and an undertaking to cultivate or to occupy. The rent note or agreement to lease may be in counterpart signed by both parties, or it may be in correspondence;³³⁷ or it may be an application for a lease accepted by the endorsement of the word "granted",³³⁸ or it may be an application for a lease accepted orally or by the conduct of the lessor putting the applicant into possession.³³⁹ If there is no present demise, the agreement may be effected by an unregistered instrument or even orally. So when a tenant agreed orally to take three successive yearly leases after the expiry of his term, it was held that the agreement was valid as the oral agreement did not operate as a transfer of property.³⁴⁰ If there is a present demise, the rent note operates as a transfer by way of lease and if the term does not exceed one year, registration is not necessary.³⁴¹ But if the term exceeds one year, registration is necessary not under section 107, but, under the Registration Act. A transfer by way of lease must be made by a person who owns the interest to be transferred. A rent deed which is executed by the transferee of interest to be conveyed by a lease, and reciting that the transferee had taken the premises from the transferor and the transferee merely agrees by the terms of the deed to pay a certain rent for a certain period, cannot be considered to be a lease.³⁴²

A rent note, in the case of a lease deed is a vague document and may be rejected if it is incapable of furnishing any information, as regards who executed it and in whose favour it is executed, date of execution, tenure of lease and mode of payment of rent (per day, fortnightly, monthly etc).³⁴³ Where as per the leased deed it was provided that for settlement of any dispute between parties with regard to the agreement and the subject matter thereof including the existence and validity of the agreement, the same would be settled by arbitrators as per the Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996, it would not bar the filing of an eviction suit by the owner upon the determination of the lease on expiry of the lease agreement as with expiry of lease agreement such arbitration clause also comes to an end,³⁴⁴ but an application made for reference to arbitration shall not be entertained if the petitioner does not show any inclination to pay the deficit stamp duty on the lease deed, nor the penalty imposed by the Collector.³⁴⁵

Whether a rent note is a lease as defined in this section is a question on which there was a conflict of decisions. The Allahabad High Court held that a lease must be a deed signed by the lessor.³⁴⁶ This view was taken by the Madras and Calcutta High Courts in the earlier cases,³⁴⁷ but was abandoned in later cases by the Madras High Court,³⁴⁸ and by the High Court of Calcutta.³⁴⁹ The Bombay,³⁵⁰ Rangoon³⁵¹ and Patna³⁵² High Courts had followed the High Court of Allahabad.

The above conflict of opinions expressed by different High Courts regarding the validity of lease made through a rent note signed by lessee alone, has been settled by introducing third para in section 107 by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. A close reading of the third para indicates that there is no stipulation that the instrument must be signed by both the parties. The requirement is that when the lease is made by a registered instrument “such instrument shall be executed by both the lessor and lessee”. The underlying purpose is that the creation of a lease is not an unilateral exercise of one of the parties, but a bilateral endeavour of both the lessor and the lessee. An instrument is usually executed through multifarious steps of different sequences. Whether both the parties have executed the instruments will be a question of fact to be determined on evidence. Merely because the document shows only the signature of one of the parties, it is not that non-signing party has not joined in the execution of the instrument.³⁵³ A rent note or a kabuliyet signed only by the intending lessee is not a lease under TP Act, 1882, but would be a lease under the Registration Act, and the question of its registration would be decided under that Act.³⁵⁴ A rent note not compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act, executed by a tenant in favour of a landlord, if not registered, can be relied upon to establish the relationship existing between the parties.³⁵⁵

A rent note executed by the tenant alone is not a “lease” within the meaning of section 107, and does not require registration.³⁵⁶

[s 105.6.7] Lease or licence

In Associated Hotels of India v R N Kapoor,³⁵⁷ J Subba Rao set out the following propositions as well established for ascertaining whether a transaction is a lease or licence:

- (i) To ascertain whether a document creates a lease or a licence, the substance of the document must be preferred to its form;
- (ii) the real test is the intention of the parties—whether they intended to create a lease or a licence;
- (iii) if the document creates an interest in the property, it is a lease; but, if it only permits another to make use of the property, of which legal possession continues with the owner, it is a licence; and
- (iv) if under the document a party gets exclusive possession of the property, “prima facie”, he is considered to be a tenant; but circumstances may be established which negate the intention to create a lease.

A licence is defined in section 52 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882 as a right to do or continue to do, in or upon the immovable property of the grantor, something which would in the absence of such right be unlawful, and such right does not amount to an easement or an interest in the property.³⁵⁸ A licence may be created on deal or parole and it would be revocable. However, when it is accompanied with grant it becomes irrevocable. A mere licence does not create interest in property to which it relates. Licence may be personal or contractual. A licence without the grant creates a right in the licensor to enter into a land and enjoy it. Lease on the other hand would amount to transfer of property.³⁵⁹ The distinction between a licence and a lease is marked by the last clause of the definition, for a licence does not create any estate or interest in the property to which it relates.³⁶⁰

A licensee is not entitled to notice to quit before eviction.³⁶¹

Accordingly, a licence—

- (1) is not assignable (Indian Easements Act, 1882, section 56);
- (2) does not entitle the licensee to sue strangers in his own name;

105. Lease defined.—

- (3) is revocable by the grantor (Indian Easements Act, 1882, section 60);
- (4) is determined when the grantor makes an assignment of the subject-matter.³⁶²

The rights and obligations of the lessor as contained in the TP Act, 1882 are also subject to the contract to the contrary. Even the right of assignment of leasehold property may be curtailed by an agreement.

There is no simple litmus test for distinguishing a lease from a licence. The character of the transaction turns on the operative intent of the parties. If interest in immovable property, entitling the transferee to its enjoyment, is created, it is a lease; if permission to use the land without the right to exclusive possession is alone granted, the transaction is a licence.³⁶³ The test of exclusive possession, though not decisive, is of significance.³⁶⁴ Exclusive possession coupled with the transfer of a right to enjoy the property is an important test,³⁶⁵ and indicates an intention to create a lease.³⁶⁶ It may create a lease even though the sum is described as a “licence fee”.³⁶⁷

A finding on the question whether the defendant is a tenant or a licensee is a finding of fact.³⁶⁸ The Supreme Court has held that exclusive possession would not be conclusive evidence of the existence of a tenancy though that would be a consideration of first importance.³⁶⁹ It has further been held that exclusive possession itself is not decisive in favour of a lease and against a mere licence, for, even the grant of exclusive possession might turn out to be only a licence, and not a lease where the grantor himself has no power to grant the lease.³⁷⁰ Exclusive possession of the premises in the hands of a party is always crucial for ascertaining as to whether a lease has been created,³⁷¹ but even in the case of exclusive possession, sometimes, the court may upon consideration of the terms and conditions of documents and conduct of the parties, hold that the parties never intended to create a lease, and only leave and licence was granted. Where though exclusive possession of the premises was given to the company for an automobile showroom for five years, with liability to pay taxes, but no interest in property was created in their favour it would be a licence and not a lease.³⁷² Thus, exclusive possession by itself will not amount to creation of interest, and it will not militate against the concept of a licence if the circumstances negative any intention to create any interest.³⁷³ Mere exclusive possession by itself does not indicate a lease but if exclusive possession of suit property is not parted by owner, intention is to create a license not a lease.³⁷⁴ While interpreting the agreement Court has also to see what transpired before and after the agreement. Ex praecedentibus et consequentibus optima bit interpretation i.e the best interpretation is made from the context. If in fact it was intended to create an interest in the property, it would be lease, if it did not, it would be a licence.³⁷⁵ It is the creation of an interest in immovable property or a right to possess it that distinguishes a lease from a licence.³⁷⁶ Interest for this purpose means a right to have the advantage accruing from the premises or a right in the nature of property in the premises but less than a title. The real intention of the parties is to be deciphered not only from a complete and close reading of the document itself but also from the attendant circumstances. The conduct of the parties before and after the creation of this relationship is also of relevance to find out their intention.³⁷⁷ For the purpose of deciding whether a particular transaction is a lease or a licence, the question of intention of the parties is to be determined, and the intention has to be inferred from the circumstances of each case.³⁷⁸ It is essential, therefore, to look to the substance and essence of the agreement, and not merely to the form.³⁷⁹ Where the agreement was only for a short period (about nine months), and the respondents were granted merely the right to pluck, cut, carry away and appropriate the enumerated forest produces, no interest was created.³⁸⁰

The crucial test in each case is whether the instrument is intended to create or not to create an interest in the property and the subject-matter of the agreement. If it is in fact intended to create an interest in the property it is a lease, if it does not, it is a licence.³⁸¹

Similar views were expressed by Delhi High Court in the cases mentioned below.³⁸²

In cases where courts are required to consider the nature of transactions and the status of parties thereto, one cannot go on mere nomenclatures. In order to ascertain the substance of the transaction, one has to ascertain the purpose and substance of the agreement. In such cases, intention of the parties is the deciding factor.³⁸³ In order to ascertain the intention, we have to examine the surrounding circumstances including the conduct of the parties.³⁸⁴ In case of determining whether the transaction is a lease or licence, an effort should be made to find out whether the deed confers a right to possess exclusively coupled with transfer of a right to enjoy the property or what has been parted with is merely a right to use the property while the possession is retained by the owner. The conduct of the parties before and after the creation of relationship is of relevance for finding out their intention.³⁸⁵ The line between lease and licence is very thin. Mainly the intention is to be gathered from the meaning and the words used in the document, except where it is alleged and proved that the document is a camouflage.³⁸⁶ If there be a formal document, the intention is inferred from its terms. If the document is ambiguous, the question is to be decided with reference to parole evidence and attendant circumstances.³⁸⁷ However, parties to an agreement cannot contract out of the Rent Acts; if they were able to do so, the Acts would be a dead letter, because in a state of housing shortage, a person seeking residential accommodation may agree to anything to obtain shelter. A document which expresses the intention genuine or bogus, of both parties or of one party to create a licence will nevertheless create tenancy, if the rights and obligations enjoyed and imposed satisfy the legal requirements of tenancy.³⁸⁸ Whether a transaction is a licence depends on the intention of the parties, and the nature of the possession granted. The following circumstances, present in a Madras case³⁸⁹ were held to establish the transaction as a lease:

- (1) Exclusive possession of the premises;
- (2) The opposite party had no access to the portion of the premises occupied by the person in possession;
- (3) The portion occupied by the person in possession was provided with a sub-meter for electricity;
- (4) The monthly payment, though termed as “compensation and commission”, was, in reality, rent for the premises occupied by person in possession;
- (5) The demise was for a fixed term of five years;
- (6) No power was reserved for cancelling the contract before the expiry of the fixed term;
- (7) Provision was also made for extending the term of the contract by mutual agreement;
- (8) Penal provisions were incorporated, providing for enhanced payment of rent in case the person in possession continued after the term of five years.

However, the following facts led the Delhi High Court³⁹⁰ to hold that the transaction is a license:

- (1) Shop was to be run only for sale of a particular product;
- (2) Shop was to cater to the needs of a particular group of people;
- (3) License would not be heritable and assignable;
- (4) On expiry of two years and on expiry of any renewed period, possession was to be handed back;

Where the question arises as to whether an agreement is a lease or a licence, the intention of the parties must be gathered from the terms of the agreement, examined in the light of the surrounding circumstances. The description given by the parties may be evidence of the intention, but is not decisive. Mere use of words appropriate to the creation of a lease will not preclude the agreement from operating as a licence. A recital that the agreement does not create a tenancy is also not decisive. The crucial test in each case is, whether the instrument is intended to create an interest in the property. The subject-matter of the agreement, if it is in fact intended to create an interest in the property, is a lease; if it does not, it is a licence. In the course of granting permissive possession, the grantor may hand over the keys of the suit premises to the grantee, but that does not itself create exclusive possession.³⁹¹

A person permitted to occupy premises for safety and without payment, where no exclusive possession is proved, is a licensee, and not a lessee.³⁹² Where there was overwhelming evidence negating exclusive possession and the agreement also described the person in possession as a licensee, it was held that the parties did not intend to create an interest in the property, but only a licence.³⁹³ A similar view was expressed by the Delhi High Court.³⁹⁴ Where A, who had to leave for abroad for the purposes of her employment at the request of her friend B, permitted B's relative to occupy her furnished flat, with the condition that upon her return he would vacate it immediately, and after her return, she occupied part of the flat, retaining one key to the main entrance, but stayed in the official quarters allotted to her till her superannuation, it was held that the occupier was a licensee and not a lessee.³⁹⁵

The very definition of lease and licence indicates that the essence of the distinction lies in the creation of an interest in the property, as distinguished from a mere permission to use the property. Where the licensee, acting upon the licence, executes permanent works and incurs expense, the licence cannot be revoked by the grantor if the grantor stands by and allows the licensee to do such acts in the belief that he has a right to do so.³⁹⁶ Permission given to the tenant to enjoy the land in a particular manner does not mean that the legal possession has passed to the tenant.³⁹⁷ A bilateral instrument transferring the right to collect market dues for a certain period on payment has been held by the Allahabad High Court to satisfy the ingredients of a lease.³⁹⁸

In Pradeep Oil Corp v Municipal Corp of Delhi,³⁹⁹ the oil corporation was granted separate and distinct licences by President of India, under the government Grants Act, for the purposes of maintaining depots for storage of petroleum products and also the right to erect/construct petroleum installations buildings and other conveniences for receiving and storing therein petroleum in bulk pursuant to which, the corporation took exclusive possession that they retained undisturbed for around 50 years and raised huge construction. The agreement made it incumbent on the corporation to pay rent and stipulated service of three months' notice calling upon either party to terminate the agreement. In these circumstances, the apex court held that the document/agreement created a lease in favour of the Oil Corporation and not a licence. In cases where the landlord alleges that the tenant has sub-let the premises and where the tenant in support of his own defence sets up the plea of a mere licensee and relies upon a deed entered into, inter se, between himself and the alleged licensee, the landlord who is not a party to the deed is not bound by what emanates from the construction of the deed. The tenant and the sub-tenant, who jointly set up a plea of licence against the landlord may choose to camouflage the truth and substance of the transaction behind a facade of self-serving instrument. In such a case, the realities and substance of the transaction, and not merely the deed, become the basis for the determination of the legal nature of the relationship. The deed is a mere piece of evidence—the weight to be accorded to which will depend upon all the other circumstances of the case.⁴⁰⁰ Transfer for a fairly long period and coupled with exclusive possession may lead to an inference in favour of a lease.⁴⁰¹

Whether an instrument operates as a lease or as a licence is a matter not of words, but of substance.⁴⁰² There have been a large number of decisions on this question. It is submitted that the decisive consideration is the intention of the parties,⁴⁰³ but the intention must be gathered on a true construction of the agreement, and not merely from the description given by the parties.⁴⁰⁴ The intention of the parties to an agreement has to be gathered from the terms of the agreement construed in the context of the surrounding antecedent and consequent circumstances.⁴⁰⁵ But the description given is indicative of the intention of the parties. The mere use of words appropriate to a lease will not preclude its being held to be a licence; so even a document referring to “rent” may be a licence.⁴⁰⁶

Where, after the expiry of the original period of lease, the lessee continued in possession and the lessor accepted from him premium for the subsequent period, the lessee could not be ejected without the termination of the freshly created lease.⁴⁰⁷ Where the owner of the premises and the person in need of the premises execute a deed, labelling it as a licence deed to avoid the operation of rent legislation, the mask is to be removed or the veil is to be lifted, and the true intention behind a facade of a self-serving conveniently drafted instrument is to be gathered from all the relevant circumstances.⁴⁰⁸

Where in a permissive temporary possession of a plot for construction of a nursery, permanent structure were raised for which permission was not granted and consequently allotment was revoked, the licensee is not entitled to any compensation as temporary allotment does not create any right.⁴⁰⁹ Occupation of trust property in lieu of donations would not create any rights in favour of the occupants. Where the property belonged to the trust, and no instrument was executed in favour of the claimant, but they were permitted to use the premises and pay water and electricity expenses to the trust, they will be mere licensees.⁴¹⁰ Where pursuant to an agreement between the owner of a building and a company whereby the company was given the building in question for the purposes of establishing an automobile showroom for five years with the monthly fees of Rs 1 lakh with additional liability on the company to pay taxes, the grant would be a licence as no interest was created in favour of the company in the land.⁴¹¹ Where the agreement between the parties imposed restrictions against subletting and making modification in shops and provided for security deposits to be returned at the time of the vacating premises, the agreement creating a tenancy and not merely a licence.⁴¹² In a Bombay case, it was stated that if an interest in immovable property entitling the transferor to enjoyment is created, it is a lease; if permission to use land without a right to exclusive possession is alone granted, then it is a licence. Marginal variations of this broad statement are possible. On the facts, since an exclusive possession had been given and there was no other circumstance indicating to the contrary, the transfer was held to be a lease, though it was titled "leave and licence agreement".⁴¹³ An agreement styled as "agency" may still be a lease. In a Calcutta case, an agreement entered into by the tenant with a company was styled as an agreement of "agency" between the parties. But the occupation of a room in the demised premises was given to the company, and monthly payment was fixed. A durvan at the room could be employed by the company alone and the company could place, in the disputed room, any number of its employees it liked, and store in it any amount of goods, it liked. The goods lying in the disputed showroom were worth ₹70,000 to ₹80,000. It was held that the agreement contained all the elements of a document of lease.⁴¹⁴ An agreement was described as an agreement of "leave and licence". The parties had been described as the "licensor" and the "licensee". There were recitals that the licensor was seized and possessed of, and was otherwise well entitled as the monthly tenant of the workshop premises, being the premises in dispute; and whereas the licensee had approached the licensor to allow him to occupy and use the said premises of workshop for a period of five years, the licensor had agreed to allow the licensee to the premises under the said leave and licence of the licensor for a period of five years. It was permitted to the user only for 20 hours a day. It was held that in view of the intention of the parties in the document and the facts and circumstances of the case, the agreement was a licence, and not a lease.⁴¹⁵ Where exclusive possession of the suit property was with the defendant and not with the landlord, it was held to be a lease, and not a licence.⁴¹⁶ A person who is granted accommodation in a cattle shed at his request, on the condition of payment of repair charges, is a licensee and not a lessee.⁴¹⁷ In Uttam Chatterjee v UOI,⁴¹⁸ the grant of licence to use a particular land belonging to railway was for one year. There was no order extending the licence after completion of the period of one year, and no application was filed by the licensee for renewing the same. When the railway authority called upon the licensee to vacate the site after the expiry of one year, it was held that unilateral payment of licence fee by the licensee, without its acceptance by the appropriate authority, would not create any right in favour of the licensee, nor would it nullify the order of the railway authority.

In Quality Cut Pieces v M Laxmi & Co,⁴¹⁹ stalls were allotted to various traders in a departmental store. Surrounding circumstances, including want of facility to lock the stalls independently, inability of the stall holders to enter into the building or stores at will, requirement of having to seek management's permission to change the hours of business or merchandise, non-assignability of interest in the stalls, repeated recognition of the agreement to pay fixed percentage of commission, subject to minimum deployment of the stall, such as a watchman, accountant etc. by the management in order to monitor the sales etc., indicated that the stall holders were licensees for reward and not lessees. In a Patna case, the state road transport corporation allowed the plaintiff to run a refreshment room under an agreement that empowered the corporation to inspect and check the manner in which the refreshment room was being run by the plaintiff, and to remove the plaintiffs' employees. It was held that the agreement created no interest in the premises in favour of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was only a licensee. The fact that the premises were given to the plaintiff, for a term of one year made no difference, since a clause in the agreement required the giving of three months' notice on either side to terminate the agreement.⁴²⁰

Where it was provided in the deed that the licensee shall advance to the licensor a daily licence fee of ₹500 inclusive of electricity charges of one day, subject to a minimum of ₹3,500 per week, and that the licensee shall have no right, title or interest to possess the premises, it was held that the deed was of a licence and not a lease deed, more particularly when the surrounding circumstances indicated that the land on which the building was constructed could not have been transferred or parted with except by the previous consent in writing of the development authority from which it was taken on a perpetual lease.⁴²¹

If it only gives the use of the property in a particular way or on certain terms while it remains in the possession and control of the owner, it will only be a licence.⁴²² In other words, for a lease there must be a power and intention to hold the property to the exclusion of the grantor. The distinction is sometimes fine. In a Madras case,⁴²³ a document purporting to be a lease by a railway company of plots in a station yard for the purpose of stacking coal, was construed to be a licence. On the other hand, in a very similar Allahabad case,⁴²⁴ a document purporting to be a licence by a railway company to an oil company conferring a right of temporary occupation of plots of land for a petroleum installation was construed to be a lease. In the former case, however, a right of access was reserved by the railway company. It has been observed⁴²⁵ that genuine relationship of licensor and licensee can conceivably arise in the following circumstances:

- (1) A property owner may have an occasion to oblige a relation or friend in need of accommodation and in view of the special relationship may grant the premises for temporary lease without intending to create a lease so that the premises not needed by him at the moment may not remain idle whilst his needy friend or relative suffers avoidable hardship.
- (2) An owner of property may suddenly have an occasion to go to some other place for a temporary period and instead of allowing the premises to remain idle he permits someone in whom he has trust to occupy the same to meet the temporary need of the latter which may coincide with his own temporary period of absence.
- (3) A property owner may accept someone as a paying guest while he himself retains possession of the property as the principal occupant.
- (4) In such cases, even if some occupation fees is charged, it would not matter, as in essence the relationship of licensor and licensee can be spelt out in view of the backdrop.

(4) The premises belonging to a bank were used for the residence of a manager without obligation to pay anything in return. Held that the manager was a licensee.⁴²⁹

A lodger is a man who lives in the house of another, and lodges with him.⁴³⁰ A lodger is only a licensee if he has no separate apartment;⁴³¹ or even if he has a separate apartment, if the terms of the letting show that the landlord retains control over the whole house, e.g. when he provides attendance,⁴³² or where he has exclusive control of the front door.⁴³³ Normally, an occupier of an apartment in a hotel is in the position of a licensee as the hotel-keeper retains general control of the hotel including the apartment. But this is not a necessary inference, and if evidence of such control is lacking or not produced, he would be held to be a tenant.⁴³⁴ English decisions which had held that an inmate of a boarding house,⁴³⁵ and a guest in an inn⁴³⁶ occupy only as licensees, are good law if evidence of such control exists. In the case of a tenement house, the owner's residence on the premises and the fact that he pays the rates and taxes or that he retains control of the staircase and passages, are not in themselves sufficient to show that the occupier of a flat is not a lease.⁴³⁷ If the landlord at a tenement house maintains a privy for the common use of the tenants and which is not included in the lease of any one of them, each tenant is only a licensee in respect of the privy.⁴³⁸

Questions have arisen as to whether a servant occupying the premises of a master does so as a tenant or a licensee. In Lall v Dunlop Rubber Co.,⁴³⁹ the Supreme Court has held that where a servant is required to live in the premises for the better performance of his duties, it is a case of a license known as "service occupation". However, where a servant occupies premises for a purpose other than the better performance of his duties, it would be a case of tenancy.⁴⁴⁰ The quarter which is allotted by an employer to an employee is a personal privilege of the employee for greater convenience of the employer's work. As soon as the services are dispensed on account of retirement, the employee is required to hand back the quarter to the employer. It does not create any interest in the quarter as it is only a license.⁴⁴¹ The Supreme Court, however, held that a servant could be a licensee even though he was not in service occupation, and cited with approval the judgment of LJ Denning, (as he then was), in Torbett v Faulkner,⁴⁴² where it was observed that a servant could be a licensee even if he is permitted to occupy the premises for convenience, or pays the rates, or receives the premises as part of his remuneration. It was in each case a question of ascertaining whether it was intended to confer on the occupant an interest in land. In a case before the Supreme Court, the servant was entitled to occupy the premises free while he was in the service of the landlord in Calcutta, and the landlord was entitled to allot the premises to another if the occupant was absent. The court held it to be a licence.

The distinction between licence and lease came up for consideration in an English case, where it was laid down that the court would be reluctant to infer the grant of a tenancy where no rent is paid, and there exists a domestic relationship. In this case, the deceased landlord employed a woman as an office cleaner. Later, out of sympathy, he installed the woman and her husband in a cottage owned by him. No rent was paid. The landlord visited them daily, took meals with them, and told them that the house would be theirs after his death. On the death of the landlord, his executors took proceedings for possession and the question arose whether there was a lease or merely a licence. It was held that in the circumstance no grant of a tenancy by the landlord could be inferred. He had no intention to give to the woman or her husband, a right to exclude him from the premises. What had been granted was a licence, and not a tenancy. The cases considered included Cobb v Lane and Shell-mex v Manchester Garages.⁴⁴³

The decision of the Calcutta High Court,⁴⁴⁴ that a government servant occupying government premises does so as a tenant if residence in such premises is not compulsory, is, it is submitted, not consistent with the law now laid down.

A burgadar is a person who enters into a profit-sharing arrangement to cultivate land. He is generally a servant, unless the terms of the contract show an intention to create an interest in the land.⁴⁴⁵ A permission to cut or remove trees, or to tap coconut trees is only a licence.⁴⁴⁶ Merely because one has been collecting the usufructs from the coconut trees for a number of years, would not change the character of transaction from that of a licence to a lease.⁴⁴⁷ Where, however, a document confers for three years a right to cut grass and grants exclusive possession, it creates an interest in land, and is a lease.⁴⁴⁸ As intention is the decisive test, it has been held that possession by a former tenant under a compromise decree in an eviction suit would not be that of a lessee, even though the word “rent” was used.⁴⁴⁹ In a Madras case, the defendant had been specifically given the right to collect usufruct from 135 coconut trees for one year. At the end of the period, the defendant claimed that he was a lessee, and refused to deliver possession. The plaintiff issued a notice to the defendant to deliver possession and filed a suit. The defendant claimed that no notice under section 106 had been given by the plaintiff. It was held that if a right is created in respect of land for a specific time and the grantee is expected to exploit the land for purposes of his own, then the transaction is one of lease. But where, without creating an interest in land, only the right to collect usufruct from the trees standing on the land is given, the grantee cannot claim to be a lessee. The defendant in this case was not a lessee, but only a licensee.⁴⁵⁰ While it is true that the essence of a licence is that it is revocable at the will of the grantor, the provision in the licence that the licensee is entitled to a notice before being required to vacate is not inconsistent with a licence.⁴⁵¹ Other instances of licences are cited below.⁴⁵² The essence of a licence is that it is revocable at the will of the grantor. A licence by definition does not create any interest in the property.⁴⁵³ The question whether a transaction is a lease or licence is to be decided on the basis of pleadings of the parties.⁴⁵⁴

The Calcutta High Court in Tarak Nath Manna v Nithyananda Saha,⁴⁵⁵ had held that whether an agreement between the parties created the relationship of landlord and tenant or merely that of licensor or licensee was to be decided based on intention of the parties with reference to the relevant provisions of the agreement and other circumstances. Exclusive possession by itself was not a reason for treating the possession of person in possession as that of a tenant. Court has to consider all relevant circumstances of a case. In terms of section 92 of Evidence Act, the terms of a written agreement could not be varied by oral evidence unless the exceptions mentioned therein were fulfilled. The Apex Court in various cases held that when a document of licence was executed between landlord and an occupier, the Court should not be influenced by nomenclature of document and should ascertain the actual status of occupier from the overall circumstances of case as there was a tendency on part of landlords to create tenancy in garb of granting of licence.

In Radha Sharan Dubey v Ram Niwas,⁴⁵⁶ A, who through a registered deed, of assignment of managerial rights executed by the owner B, claimed an interest in the property and it was held that A is not entitled to continue in possession of the property as his possession was only permissive with the consent of the true owner. The court observed that a person claiming to be in possession of the property cannot seek injunction to continue in possession as against the wishes of the owner and the owner is entitled to mandatory injunction against the licencees, requiring them to remove themselves from the possession of the suit property and held,

1. No one acquires title to the property if he or she was allowed to stay in the premises gratuitously. Even by long possession of years or decades such person would not acquire any right or interest in the said property.
2. Caretaker, watchman or servant can never acquire interest in the property irrespective of his long possession. The caretaker or servant has to give possession forthwith on demand.
3. The Courts are not justified in protecting the possession of a caretaker, servant or any person who was allowed to live in the premises for some time either as a friend, relative, caretaker or as a servant.

105. Lease defined.—

4. The protection of the Court can only be granted or extended to the person who has valid, subsisting rent agreement, lease agreement or license agreement in his favour.
5. The caretaker or agent holds property of the principal only on behalf of the principal. He acquires no right or interest whatsoever for himself in such property irrespective of his long stay or possession.

Enhancement of licence fees is proper even without prior notice to the licensee in light of the agreement continued in the document to this effect.⁴⁵⁷

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

458[106. Duration of certain leases in absence of written contract or local usage.—

- (1) In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, a lease of immovable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice; and a lease of immovable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by fifteen days' notice.
- (2) Notwithstanding anything contained in other law for the time being in force, the period mentioned in sub-section (1) shall commence from the date of receipt of notice.
- (3) A notice under sub-section (1) shall not be deemed to be invalid merely because the period mentioned therein falls short of the period specified under that sub-section, where a suit or proceeding is filed after the expiry of the period mentioned in that sub-section.
- (4) Every notice under sub-section (1) must be in writing, signed by or on behalf of the person giving it, and either be sent by post to the party who is intended to be bound by it or be tendered or delivered personally to such party, or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or (if such tender or delivery is not practicable) affixed to a conspicuous part of the property.]

By the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 2002, section 106 was substituted. The section, inter alia, provides that the lease of immovable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, which may be terminated either by the lessor or the lessee by six months' notice expiring with the end of the year of the tenancy; and a lease of the immovable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month, which may be terminated either by the lessor or lessee by 15 days' notice expiring by the end of the month of the tenancy.

⁴⁵⁹ The legal position, which has also been reiterated by the Supreme Court in Mangilal v Sujan Chand,⁴⁶⁰ is that while computing the period of notice, the day on which the notice is served is required to be excluded. The Law Commission of India in its 181st Report on amendment to section 106 has examined the working of this section, and found that a number of suits have been filed in ignorance of this legal position, and these suits have been dismissed on this technicality alone. Such a position leads to serving of a fresh notice and filing of a fresh suit which amounts not only to serious injustice, but also to multiplicity of litigations despite the fact that the defendant had more time available to him than the prescribed period of notice by the date when the suit is filed to evict him, or even by the date of judgment dismissing the suit. Having also taken note of the fact that because of technical reasons, the landlords suffer and the suits are dismissed after long litigation, the legislature with a view to close the loophole and to redress the mischief intended to make appropriate changes in the law. Therefore if the notice was short of the specified period in sub section (1) the notice shall not be deemed to be invalid.⁴⁶¹ It was in the above context that the amendment has been brought about.

[s 106.2] Retrospective Operation

Section 3 of the amending Act of 2002 specifically provides that the amended provision shall apply to:

- (a) all notices in pursuance of which any suit or proceeding is pending at the commencement of the amending Act; and
- (b) all notices which have been issued before the commencement of the amending Act, but where no suit or proceeding has been filed before such commencement.

Therefore, the amendment applies to all present as well as future proceedings. “Suit or proceeding” would include appeals, revisions, etc. and hence, at no stage of litigation can the technical pleas as were available under the unamended section 106, can be raised.

[s 106.3] Local amendment

Note “Contract, local law or usage”, below may be referred.

[s 106.4] Nature of periodic tenancy

Note “Periodic lease” under section 105 may be referred.

[s 106.4] Implied Duration

The section enacts a rule for the duration of lease in a case not governed by the local law, contract or usage. The section lays down a rule of construction which is to apply when the parties have not specifically agreed upon as to whether the lease is yearly or monthly. On a plain reading of this section, it is clear that legislature has classified leases in two categories according to their purposes, and this section would be attracted to construe the duration of a valid lease in the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary. Where the parties by a contract have indicated the duration of a lease, this section would not apply.⁴⁶² What this section does is to prescribe the duration of the period of different kinds of leases by legal fiction—leases for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be lease from year to year, and all other leases shall be deemed to be from month to month. Existence of a valid lease is a prerequisite to invoke the rule of construction embodied in section 106.⁴⁶³

It applies to a case where no period is agreed between the parties,⁴⁶⁴ or where the lease being unregistered cannot be looked at to ascertain the agreed period.⁴⁶⁵ The presumption as to the period under this rule is not rebutted by the fact that the rent is paid at different periods.⁴⁶⁶ But where it appeared on a true construction, or a lease of immovable property that the first payment of rent was to be for a period of 15 months, the lease was for a period of 15 months at least; and there was no scope for applying the presumption contained in section 106.⁴⁶⁷ It applied when the tenant is in possession without evidence of the terms of the letting; and also in cases of an implied demise, where entry creates a tenancy at will, converted by payment of rent into a tenancy from year to year or month to month, according to the nature of the holding. In Ranee Sonet Kowar v Mirza Himmud Bahadoor,⁴⁶⁸ the Privy Council said that where the owner recognises the right of a person in possession by accepting rent from the latter, the tenancy created as such could be terminated by a notice to quit. In another case,⁴⁶⁹ a tenant in possession under a lease of a house for a term of years which was void for want of registration was described as a tenant at will. This expression was evidently used to denote a periodic tenancy,⁴⁷⁰ for the tenant had been in possession paying rent for 10 years, and was obviously a monthly tenant.

Section 106 raises a fiction and indicates a deeming provision in respect of leases which do not fall within the ambit of section 107, para 1. Where a lease is intended to be created for an immovable property for a period from year to year or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving yearly rent, it can be made only by a registered instrument and has, therefore, to be in writing. A lease can, however, be entered into and granted, even in cases where no writing is affected. It follows, therefore, that where no such writing is effected, there is no question of registration. Nevertheless, such a lease may be for a particular purpose, namely, for the purpose of agriculture or manufacture. In such a case, if the lease is not created by an instrument in writing, section 106 will be applicable, and the deeming provision in section 106 (that the leases shall be deemed to be leases from year to year terminable on the part of either lessor or lessee by six months' notice) is applicable. Where there is no written contract, the provisions of section 106 will operate, and section 107 will not be a bar to the raising of such a contention. The fiction or presumption of section 106, requiring the termination notice of a period of six months, will be attracted only where there is a lease for manufacturing purpose, or an agricultural purpose deemed to be from year to year. In other cases, the lease will be deemed to be a lease from month to month, terminable on the part of either the lessor or lessee by 15 days' notice.⁴⁷¹ However, a lease for the manufacturing process is deemed to be a lease from year to year, but the same is subject to the contract to the contrary between the parties. The landlord and the tenant can mutually agree to create a tenancy for manufacturing process for a period of less than a year. Only in the absence of this kind of contract the lease for manufacturing purposes would be deemed to a lease from year to year. The same can be created by a registered document in view of section 105.⁴⁷² A manufacturing lease which is not from year to year does not require six months' notice of termination. It will fall in the second half of section 106, requiring 15 days' notice of termination.⁴⁷³ An unregistered lease for manufacturing purpose cannot be deemed to be a yearly lease for the purpose of notice of termination, in view of the provisions contained in section 107 of the TP Act, 1882.⁴⁷⁴ For the purpose of section 106, what is relevant is the purpose for which the lease is obtained at the time when the lease was obtained. A subsequent change of use, would not entitle a lessee to take advantage of section 106. The purpose of the lease must be found, and ascertained with reference to the time when the lease was brought into existence.⁴⁷⁵

Where the lease was for a single cane crushing season for a period of nine months, and the rent stipulated was not annual rent reserved, it was held that, though the lease was for manufacturing process, the presumption under section 106, that the lease is from year to year, could not be raised.⁴⁷⁶

[s 106.6] Contract, Local Law or Usage

The presumption under this section is that the lease is from year to year or month to month, according to the nature of the property, and is terminable by six months' or 15 days' notice, as the case may be.⁴⁷⁷ A stipulation that the rent would be payable monthly would raise a presumption that the tenancy was from month to month,⁴⁷⁸ but no question of such presumption can arise where rent has not been accepted.⁴⁷⁹

Where a tenancy is created and the lessees enter into possession on payment of rent to the lessors, and the purpose of the tenancy is neither agricultural, nor manufacturing, such lease may be taken to be a lease from month to month.⁴⁸⁰ Unless there is some indication to the contrary, the term "ordinary tenant" would in Calcutta mean a monthly tenant, even though there were no references to payment of monthly rent.⁴⁸¹ However, this presumption may be rebutted by local usage, or local law, or express contract. Usage or local law, generally governs agricultural tenancies and to such tenancies the section does not apply, unless made applicable by notification under section 117. As to monthly leases of houses in Bombay, there is a usage requiring a month's notice to quit.⁴⁸² There is no such usage in Calcutta.⁴⁸³ In accordance with the provisions of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948,⁴⁸⁴ and the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1966,⁴⁸⁵ the landlord is required to issue a notice stipulating six months period and not three months period. A notice issued giving three months' time period would be illegal.⁴⁸⁶

There is a vast difference between rights of a tenant under the Rent Act and the rights of the landlord. The right of the statutory tenant to pay rent not exceeding standard rent or the right to get standard rent fixed is protective rights and not vested rights. On the other hand, the landlord has rights recognized under the law of contract and the Transfer of Property Act which are vested rights and which are suspended by the provisions of the Rent Act. The day the Rent Act is withdrawn, the suspended rights of the landlord would revive.⁴⁸⁷

In Punjab, where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force, it was held⁴⁸⁸ that a monthly tenant is entitled to 15 days' notice terminating with the month of tenancy. But, it has also been held in later decisions,⁴⁸⁹ that the rule embodied in section 106 is a technical rule, not applicable as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience. In a later case, it has been held that in Punjab, 15 days is the minimum reasonable period for notice to quit, but, it need not necessarily terminate strictly with the end of the month of the tenancy.⁴⁹⁰ The provision as to notice to quit applies to cases where the parties are not regulated by their own contract. So, a provision in a lease enabling the landlord to resume possession on payment of the cost of building, erected by the tenant, dispensed with the necessity of notice to quit.⁴⁹¹ Similarly, where the tenancy is created on basis of agreement specifying⁴⁹² the period of tenancy, such tenancy automatically gets terminated by efflux of time and no notice under section 106 is required to be served prior to the filing of the suit.

Both the period of the lease and the length of notice may be determined by the contract.⁴⁹³ If the contract provides for a different period, the requirement of 15 days' notice in section 106 does not apply.⁴⁹⁴ It has, however, been held that a term requiring the lessee to give a month's notice did not affect the right of the lessor to terminate the lease on 15 days' notice under this section.⁴⁹⁵ Again, the contract may provide that the tenancy may be terminated by notice before the end of the month, or other period of the lease.⁴⁹⁶ However, the contract must be a valid one. So where a lease of land from year to year was not registered, a clause requiring six months' notice to quit was inoperative.⁴⁹⁷ A condition in a lease that the land was to be vacated whenever needed without notice may be a superadded condition, and may not be a part of the contract.⁴⁹⁸ An undertaking by a tenant to vacate the premises by a fixed date is a "contract to the contrary" disentitling him to a notice of termination in the terms of section 106. If a notice is given by the landlord to the tenant to vacate as promised, it could not be construed as a notice to termination which should comply with section 106. The landlord was entitled to damages from the date when the tenant was to vacate as promised, and not merely from the date specified in the notice issued by him on the tenant's failure to vacate as undertaken.⁴⁹⁹

With reference to section 106, a Kerala ruling has laid down that, where there is a stipulation in the lease that the lessee shall surrender the premises on demand, then the lease is determinable at will, and there is "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of section 106,⁵⁰⁰ but a provision containing an undertaking by the tenant to surrender the premises on demand, is not a "contract to the contrary" within the section.⁵⁰¹

According to the Madras view, however, where the contract was that the tenant should surrender the property when required, the provision as to notice under section 106 cannot apply to it. In any case, the notice to quit in the instant case was valid.⁵⁰² Where the agreement between the parties is to the effect that the tenancy should be determinable by either party at any time, there is clearly a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of section 106.⁵⁰³ A tenancy terminating with efflux of time does not require a quit notice for its determination. Where the rent note was issued for a period of 11 months, insistence on giving of a notice terminating tenancy would be merely superfluous.⁵⁰⁴

[s 106.7] Contract to the Contrary

Where it was clearly stated in the rent note that the land was taken on lease for the manufacture of cotton cords for one year and the rent was to be paid according to the English calendar every month, it was held that even though the object of the lease was the manufacture of cotton cords, the parties intended to create a monthly lease, the duration of which was one year. Even if a fresh contractual tenancy had come into existence by the lessor accepting rent (after the expiry of one year), it could not be said that a lease from year to year came into existence. The provision for payment of monthly rent was a “contract to the contrary” within the meaning of section 106.⁵⁰⁵

Notice under this section is not necessary, and a mere demand will suffice if the lease is on condition that the land demised should be surrendered whenever required⁵⁰⁶ or under certain conditions.⁵⁰⁷ It has also been held that when the rent notice provides that in case the lessee fails to pay the agreed rent, the lessor would be entitled to evict the lessee, no question of notice arises.⁵⁰⁸ Such stipulations amount to a contract to the contrary, constituting a waiver of the lessee's right. It has been held in some cases that such waiver can be express, implied, or even oral;⁵⁰⁹ but, some cases have taken the view that to constitute a waiver such a stipulation must be express.⁵¹⁰ For proof of waiver of the landlord's notice to the tenant to surrender possession, clear evidence is required.⁵¹¹ Where a lease determines by efflux of time, and there is no allegation of holding over, the tenant remains merely a tenant at sufferance, and a notice under section 106 is not necessary.⁵¹² There are as many as eight modes given in section 111 of the TP Act, 1882 by which the tenancy is determined. There are seven other modes of determination of tenancy, apart from service of notice and determination “on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease” under clause (h) of section 111 in terms of section 106 of TP Act, 1882. Such a lease expires on the last day of the terms, and the lessor or defendant enabled to reversion, might enter without any notice or any other formality.⁵¹³ A similar view was also taken in another case, wherein it was held that, notice under section 106 is not required where the tenancy has come to an end by efflux of time.⁵¹⁴

[s 106.5] Notice

Notice to quit under section 106 is a technical rule. It should not be construed in a pedantic and impractical way so as to pick holes and find fault with the notice. The aim of the interpretation should be only to ascertain whether the person receiving the notice has understood the same. A liberal construction would always enable to do practical justice to the cause. The court should construe the quit notice, in such a way that it should not be defeated by inaccuracies in the language of the notice especially in matters of the description of the premises, the name of the tenant or the name of the landlord or the date of expiry of the notice. The rule has been to make lame and inaccurate notices sensible where the recipient cannot have been misled as to the intention of the giver. A liberal construction is put upon a notice to quit, so that it is not defeated by minor errors. Notice to quit may, notwithstanding erroneous particulars, be still good and effective so long as the recipient is not misled. Still it has to be remembered that it is for the benefit of lessees and so, the construction which deprives a tenant of the minimum period of notice stipulated in the section is not permissible.⁵¹⁵ A notice must be with respect to the leased property and should contain a sufficient and appropriate description of the same, but where the boundaries were correctly described but the area stated was incorrect due to a bonafide mistake, the notice would be valid.⁵¹⁶

Notice undoubtedly must furnish requisite basis on which the claim was made, but notice is not a part of cause of action although it is a condition precedent for the commencement of a suit. As a matter of fact, the notice is first step in litigation when the cause of action is complete. It only provides a mode of procedure for getting a relief in respect of cause of action, and does not constitute the relief itself. A statutory notice although essential provisionally for a valid suit does not make it a part of the cause of action in the suit itself.⁵¹⁷ Where the dispute related to whether the tenancy was as per the English calendar month or Bengal calendar month and the tenant had made an admission in his earlier title suit that rent was paid as per English calendar month, his subsequent assertion to resist eviction on the ground of improper quit notice by production of rent receipts issued by erstwhile landlady that tenancy was as per Bengal calendar would not be accepted more so as the landlady had died and she was not examined during her lifetime.⁵¹⁸

[s 106.9] Notice After Decree

In a suit for the ejectment of tenant, where the landlord obtains decree for ejectment, it amounts to the termination of tenancy. Notice under section 106 is not necessary.⁵¹⁹ In absence of grounds in advance notice would not debar the landlord from getting eviction and he would be entitled to a decree of eviction.⁵²⁰

[s 106.10] Notice Whether Necessary Where Rent Control Act Applicable

The Supreme Court, in its decision of 1979 by a judgment of seven judges, overruling a number of its earlier decisions and several rulings of the High Courts, have held that, in order to get a decree or order for eviction against a tenant under a state rent control Act, it is not necessary to give notice under section 106. Determination of the lease in accordance with the TP Act, 1882 is unnecessary and is a mere surplusage, because the landlord cannot evict the tenant even after such determination of the tenancy. Making out a case under the rent control Act for eviction of the tenant is, by itself, sufficient and it is not obligatory for the proceedings to be founded on a determination of the lease by notice under section 106. The object of the section is merely to terminate the contract, which the overriding rent Acts do not permit to be terminated.⁵²¹

The Supreme Court has held that,⁵²² even after the termination of the contractual tenancy, the landlord, under the definitions of the rent Acts, remains a landlord and a tenant remains a tenant because of the express provision made in the enactment that a tenant means “a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy”. Yet another important feature of the rent Acts is that either by way of a non obstante clause or by necessary implication, these enactments have done away with the law contained in section 108 of the TP Act, 1882 dealing with rights and liabilities of the lessor, and the lessee. The difference between the positions obtained under the TP Act, 1882 and the rent Acts in the matter of determination of a lease is that under the TP Act, 1882, in order to recover possession of the leased premises, determination of the lease is necessary, because, during the continuance of the lease the landlord cannot recover possession of the premises, while under the rent Acts, the landlord becomes entitled to recover possession only on the fulfillment of the conditions laid down in the relevant sections. He cannot recover possession by determining the tenancy. Nor can he be stopped from doing so on the ground that he has not terminated the contractual tenancy, unless such a requirement is also laid down in the rent Acts itself.

Where exemption was granted from the provisions of the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, to religious and charitable institutions, it was held that a civil suit could be filed by such institutions for recovery of possession on the basis of tenancy, after issuing notice to quit under the TP Act, 1882.⁵²³ A Full Bench of the Karnataka High Court considering the decision of the Supreme Court in Dhanpal Chettiar has held that the observations of the Supreme Court were only with reference to the mode of determining the lease by issuance of a notice in accordance with section 106 of the TP Act, 1882, and it is not possible to read this decision as laying down the principle that the entire contractual relationship stands substituted by the statutory relationship under the rent Acts for all purposes, and that the rent Acts have done away with the concept of lease, and the interest created by a valid contractual lease.⁵²⁴

[s 106.11] Uttar Pradesh Amendment

Section 106 has been amended in Uttar Pradesh by Uttar Pradesh Act 24 of 1954. The words “expiring with the end of a year of tenancy” and “expiring with the end of a month of tenancy” have been deleted, enabling termination at any time after giving the requisite notice. The period of notice of a tenancy from month to month has been raised to 30 days.

[s 106.12] Agricultural Purposes

The section, though it refers to agricultural leases, does not apply to them unless made applicable by notification under section 117.

Most agricultural tenures in India prevailed before the TP Act, 1882 and are regulated not by TP Act, 1882, but by local Acts or custom. A holding under the custom of utbandi in Bengal, is merely a tenancy at will which can be terminated by verbal demand for possession.⁵²⁵ Some agricultural tenancies are not derivative tenures at all. The Madras High Court said that there was absolutely no ground for laying down that the rights of ryots in zamindaris invariably, or even generally, had their origin in express or implied grants made by the zamindars.⁵²⁶ Again in Nidhee Kristo Bose v Nistarinee Dossee,⁵²⁷ J Markby compared a tenant in a Bengal zamindari to a freeholder paying a quit rent to the lord of the manor. In Bibee Sahadwa v Smith,⁵²⁸ J Phear said that the right of the occupancy ryot was similar to an easement or a profit a prendre. This description was applied by J Mahmud to a proprietary tenant in the United Provinces.⁵²⁹ In Ranee Sonet Kowar v Mirza Himmud Bahadoor,⁵³⁰ the Privy Council refused to treat a mokarari tenure as a lease, and held that on the death of the grantee without heirs, the estate did not revert to the zamindar.

[s 106.13] Manufacturing Purposes

The expression “manufacturing purpose” is used in its popular dictionary meaning and means the making of articles of trade and commerce by means of machinery.⁵³¹ There must be a transformation into a different article or material having a distinctive name, character or use, or even fabricating a previously known article by a novel process. The alteration in the material must be such, that a new and different article having a distinctive name, character, or use emerges.⁵³² If the main or substantial purpose was manufacturing, the lease is for manufacturing purpose; and whether it should be the exclusive purpose has been left open by the Supreme Court.⁵³³ Where the object of the lease, was the sale of sawn timber, the cutting of the timber with the aid of the saw, plays only a very minor part and it was held that this was not a lease for manufacturing purposes.⁵³⁴ Similarly, if a log of timber is sawn and made into different sizes of wood for sale on the suit land, it cannot be said that there has been such a transformation that the original character of the raw material is lost and thus this kind of operation is not a manufacturing process for the purpose of section 106 of the TP Act, 1882.⁵³⁵

The onus of proving that the lease is for manufacturing purposes is on the lessee. The Supreme Court has held that a lease granted for running a flour mill, wherein wheat was transformed by a process which involved both labour and machinery, is a lease for a manufacturing purpose.⁵³⁶ The judgment reviews the case law and approving the Calcutta⁵³⁷ and Mysore⁵³⁸ view, lays down the tests for determining whether a lease is granted for the purpose of “manufacturing process” as under:

- (i) A certain commodity must be produced.
- (ii) The process of production must involve either labour, or machinery.
- (iii) The end product which comes into existence after the manufacturing process is complete, should have a different name and should be put to a different use. In other words, the commodity should be so transformed as to lose its original character.

Where the manufacture of cards and card-board boxes is merely incidental to the main business of printing, the lease cannot be said to be for manufacturing purposes.⁵³⁹ A bakery⁵⁴⁰ or pottery business is a manufacturing process and hence, notice for six months is necessary.⁵⁴¹ A manufacturing process by which grain is ground into flour amounts to manufacture within the meaning of section 106.⁵⁴² Subsequent use to which the leased premises are put is not material; the nature of the tenancy for the purpose of section 106 is to be ascertained from the purpose for which the letting was originally made. The fact that the municipal licence states that the leased premises was used for storing iron does not lead to the inference that the storing was for the purpose of a manufacturing process.⁵⁴³ Where the issue is whether the lease is for residential or manufacturing purposes within section 106 the evidence regarding user at the time when the lease was brought into being is relevant. Evidence relating to a subsequent period, even if it shows a change in user, is of no avail for determining the purpose of the lease.⁵⁴⁴ The expression “manufacturing purpose” in the section means the purpose of making, or of fabricating articles or materials by physical labour or skill or by mechanical power usable as such. Where the manufacture of spare parts was incidental to the main purpose of disposal of vehicles in order to repair or re-condition, then the dominant purpose of the lease would still have to be regarded as storage and re-sale, and not as a manufacturing purpose.⁵⁴⁵

In Shivnarayan Laxminarayan Joshi v State of Maharashtra,⁵⁴⁶ the Supreme Court held that the retreading of old tyres does not bring into being a commercially distinct or different entity. Sounding a note of caution, it was observed that definitions of “manufacture” given in other enactments, such as, in the Factories Act or the Excise Act should not be blindly applied while interpreting the expression “manufacturing purposes” in section 106 of the TP Act, 1882. In some enactments, for instance in the Excise Act, the term “manufacture” has been given an extended meaning by including in it “repairs” also.

If the object of the lease is not exclusively manufacture, then six months’ notice is not required. Where the letting out of the premises was for a multiple purpose, it could be for manufacturing, residential or any other purpose (such as the carrying on of a trade), and there was no exclusive purpose of manufacturing involved in the lease and a monthly rent was settled from the very beginning, then the lease cannot be said to be one which falls under the first part of the section, and 15 days’ notice would be valid in the circumstances.⁵⁴⁷ If the lessee, to the knowledge of the lessor, required and used the land for manufacturing purposes, then, in the absence of a contract, he is a yearly tenant, and entitled to six months’ notice.⁵⁴⁸ A tenancy for residential purposes and for stacking timber, is a tenancy for a commercial purpose, and is governed by the TP Act, 1882.⁵⁴⁹ When a lease was taken for a store room, but the lessor started a manufacturing process on the premises, the lease was not held to be a lease for manufacturing purposes.⁵⁵⁰ The onus of proving it to be a manufacturing lease is on the tenant.⁵⁵¹ The preparation of sweets⁵⁵² has been held not to be a manufacturing activity. A lease for running a flour mill,⁵⁵³ or making steel trunks,⁵⁵⁴ or making bricks out of clay,⁵⁵⁵ have been held to be manufacturing purposes, but not where the stalks of the fodder were cut with the help of the fodder cutting machine into pieces of smaller size,⁵⁵⁶ or cut into chaff so that they may become readily marketable or easily eatable by the cattle.⁵⁵⁷ A lease partly for agricultural and partly for manufacturing purposes only requires a notice of 15 days.⁵⁵⁸

[s 106.14] Notice to Quit in Periodic Tenancies

A tenancy at will is terminated by a demand, express or implied, by a determination of the will, ie, by any act which is inconsistent with the will to continue the tenancy.⁵⁵⁹ If, on the terms of the kabuliyat, the tenant was at liberty to quit at will, it must be held that the tenancy was terminable at the will of the landlord also, and he can terminate it by a valid notice to quit.⁵⁶⁰

A tenant holding under a rent note, which is inadmissible for want of registration, is a tenant at will, and no notice is necessary to determine the tenancy. A demand for possession is sufficient.⁵⁶¹ A tenant at sufferance is not entitled even to a demand for possession. This distinction is based on the principle that ejectment can only be brought for unlawful or tortuous detention; and when possession of the land has been obtained by the consent of the owner, such possession cannot ordinarily be deemed wrongful until at least a demand for possession has been made and refused.⁵⁶² Notice is not necessary for leases for a fixed term which determine by the efflux of time,⁵⁶³ and that is so whether the time is absolutely certain,⁵⁶⁴ or certain with reference to some future event.⁵⁶⁵ Filing of eviction suit under the general law in itself is a notice to quit on the tenant.⁵⁶⁶ Where the lease for right of pisciculture was initially for seven years and during its continuance extended by two years, it was held that no notice under section 106 was necessary, and such lease would be determined by efflux of time under section 111 (a) of the TP Act, 1882.⁵⁶⁷

Section 106 does not apply where the lease is for a specific period of 11 months; in such a situation the notice is implicit in the rent note itself.⁵⁶⁸ The tenant in a Madras case was fully aware that the lease period expired on 31 May 1974. Therefore, the question of giving a further notice to vacate under section 106, TP Act, 1882, did not arise.⁵⁶⁹ The Supreme Court has held that once the period of lease expires, the relationship of landlord and tenant ceases, and the tenant becomes a trespasser and, therefore, there is no question of service of any notice under section 106.⁵⁷⁰ In V C Srinivasan v Kamaraj Charity,⁵⁷¹ the original lease agreement, that was renewable, was for a period of 11 months and provided three months intimation prior to vacate the premises. After the expiry of the lease agreement the tenant continued to occupy the property and kept on paying the rent which was received by the owner. It was held that the owner had therefore, waived the quit notice and by his act exhibited his intention to treat the tenancy/lease as subsisting, and the suit filed by him for his eviction was not sustainable in the eyes of law.

A tenancy from year to year or from month to month does not come to an end by the effluxion of time. It does not come to an end except on expiration of notice to quit.⁵⁷² An unregistered lease of a house for non-residential purposes for a term, may be presumed to be one from month to month.⁵⁷³ It has been held that a notice to quit is necessary where a tenant is holding over under section 116.⁵⁷⁴ However, the Andhra Pradesh High Court has held that in case of a tenant holding over, it is not permissible to raise the plea as to non-compliance of section 106 notice.⁵⁷⁵ The date of commencement of the tenancy is the most relevant factor in determining the validity of the notice of termination under section 106. Where there is clear proof of holding over after the expiry of the original term, notice is absolutely necessary.⁵⁷⁶ Where a lessee remains in possession of immovable property after the expiry of the term of the lease, and the lessor accepts rent from him, the tenant becomes a tenant holding over. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the tenancy so created under section 116 can be terminated in the manner provided by section 106, depending on the purpose of the lease.⁵⁷⁷ However, by mere acceptance of rent for the period subsequent to the notice without prejudice to the respective rights of the parties, notice to quit cannot be deemed to be waived.⁵⁷⁸ The above noted decision was based on a previous judgement of the Supreme Court wherein, it was held that mere acceptance of rent from a lessee would not manifest the intention of the lessor to renew the lease. Something more than mere payment and acceptance of rent would be necessary to assert that the lessor assented to the lessee continuing in possession, and the lessor intended renewal of the lease.⁵⁷⁹ Further, merely by accepting an amount of ₹14,000 for a period subsequent to the date of termination of tenancy when, in the body of the letter tendering the amount, it was not specifically stated to be on account of rent and not accompanied by any subsequent payment or acceptance till the date of filing of this suit, an inference of the notice of termination having been waived by the plaintiffs cannot be drawn.⁵⁸⁰

No question of notice under this section arises in the case of a permanent lease; or in the case of a lease which is determined by forfeiture.⁵⁸¹ However, under the amended section 111(g), the lessor must give notice of his intention to determine the lease. Where the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties has been created not by a lease, but by a decision of a court, no question of serving notice to quit arises.⁵⁸² In the case of a tenant holding under a periodic lease which has not been otherwise determined, a suit for eviction cannot be maintained, unless a valid notice to quit has been served before the suit.⁵⁸³ If the tenant falsely sets up a permanent tenancy in the suit, that will not cure the defect of want of notice to quit.⁵⁸⁴ But notice to quit is not necessary if the tenant has denied the landlord's title before suit,⁵⁸⁵ but not if such a denial is after the suit.⁵⁸⁶ This is not because the disclaimer works as a forfeiture, but because it is evidence of an election to put an end to the tenancy, and supersedes the necessity for notice.⁵⁸⁷

The fact that in a suit for eviction, the tenant denies the landlord's title does not dispense with notice,⁵⁸⁸ but where the tenant raises the question of the validity of notice and resists a suit for ejectment, the landlord is entitled to withdraw the notice even though he had given one, and is not estopped from doing so.⁵⁸⁹ If a tenant evicted without notice to quit, sues for possession claiming as full owner and that claim fails, he cannot turn round and claim to be restored to possession for want of notice.⁵⁹⁰ Where a tenancy was for a year, but the rent payable was six-monthly, and the tenancy was evidenced by a document which was unregistered, it was held that the tenancy was from month to month, and six months' notice was not necessary for its termination.⁵⁹¹

If the object of the lease is not a manufacturing one, then the holding over under section 116 creates a month to month tenancy terminable by 15 days' notice under section 106.⁵⁹² Where there is a lease for a fixed period which has expired, and there is no allegation of the lessee holding over, no notice under section 106 is necessary.⁵⁹³

Before going into the question of the validity of a notice under section 106, it is necessary for the court to decide first whether section 106 is at all attracted, and that, parties could not by their pleadings alter the intrinsic character of the lease, or bring about a change of the rights and obligations flowing therefrom.⁵⁹⁴ In case of joint tenancy, notice to one of the joint tenants is sufficient notice as against the other joint tenants and, it is not necessary to give any separate notice to each tenant.⁵⁹⁵ However, the notice to quit must be addressed to all in order to rope in all the other tenants in the ejectment suit.⁵⁹⁶

Once the proceedings initiated under Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act goes, all such steps taken towards instituting the eviction proceedings also would go including the notice issued. Therefore, when the plaintiff contemplates to initiate a fresh proceeding under the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure by filing a suit for eviction of the tenant, the specific notice as contemplated under section 106 is a must, and only in such event, the other side, ie, the tenant would be in a position to get ready within such time contemplated by law either for eviction acting in consonance with the notice, or for opposing the same.⁵⁹⁷

In a suit for eviction, since the relationship of the landlord and the tenant had already come to an end and was terminated with the help of the service of an earlier notice, the plaintiffs were not permitted to maintain a suit for eviction on the basis of a second notice under section 106 of the Act without cancelling earlier notice.⁵⁹⁸ Where the tenancy is duly terminated/determined between the parties after the service of notice and the tenant accepting the receipt of notice there is no illegality on part of the trial court in passing a decree of eviction against the tenant. Thus such a tenant is not entitled to any protection against such eviction.⁵⁹⁹ A mere service of notice ipso facto would not result in termination of lease on grounds of breach of conditions of lease deed. Where the lease was executed by the Waqf Board, the board is required to approach the civil court for ejectment of the lessee. The jurisdiction of the civil court is not barred in respect of a civil dispute relating to Waqf property. Thus, in case of a lease executed by the waqf board, suit for eviction of the lessee of waqf property can be adjudicated by the civil court.⁶⁰⁰

[s 106.15] Form and Construction of Notice to Quit

The section requires the notice to be in writing and signed.⁶⁰¹ Where the landlady was not sure which of the sister concerns was her tenant, and gave notice to one of the concerns with an endorsement that copy of the notice was also to be sent to the other concern but the endorsement was not signed, though the notice was signed by her counsel, it was held that non-signing of endorsement was only an irregularity which did not vitiate the notice.⁶⁰² The notice terminating the tenancy must be in respect of the property leased, and not in respect of only a portion of the lease. If the tenant occupies land or property other than the leasehold property, he is not to be treated as a tenant in respect of such excess land or premises, unless there is any such contract, and in the absence of any such contract, the said occupation would be that of a trespasser and, or an unauthorised occupant.

Splitting up of the tenancy by the unilateral act of the landlord or tenant is not permissible.⁶⁰³ The notice must extend to all the premises.⁶⁰⁴ The landlord cannot break up the tenure.⁶⁰⁵ A notice for a fraction of holding is ineffective.⁶⁰⁶ It is not even good for the portion concerned.⁶⁰⁷ However, an accidental omission to mention a part of the demised premises in a notice which has been clearly understood has been upheld.⁶⁰⁸ The question whether the whole of the premises occupied by the tenant is included in the notice or in the suit for ejectment, is one of fact and if the tenancy is not split up, the notice would be valid.⁶⁰⁹ The reference, in the notice to quit, to the leased premises would include a reference to any land appurtenant to the same, whether it is named as a fair (small compound) or described in any manner. Its non-mention will not render the notice invalid.⁶¹⁰ Where there was a substantial difference between the accommodation mentioned in the notice and the accommodation actually let to the tenant and it was not a case of mere mis-description of the accommodation let to the tenant, the Supreme Court held that the notice did not validly terminate the tenancy.⁶¹¹

The notice need not state to whom possession is to be given; but if it does, it should do so with certainty. Notice to quit does not require any ground to be stated.⁶¹² A notice to quit must not be construed strictly. A notice given on 12 September requiring the tenant to vacate on or before 30 September is valid, notwithstanding the fact that it should have required him to vacate on or before 1 October.⁶¹³ The rule has been to make lame and inaccurate notices sensible where the recipient cannot have been misled as to the intention of the giver. In a Calcutta case, the notice of ejectment mentioned that the notice was issued under section 102 of the TP Act, 1882 read with section 13(b) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. By mistake, section 102 of the TP Act,

1882 was mentioned instead of section 106. It was held that, the notice could not be regarded as invalid, merely because it was stated to be issued under section 102. A notice was to be viewed not with the purpose of giving it a meaning which would invalidate it, but with the purpose of seeing that the notice be properly interpreted as valid.⁶¹⁴ The Supreme Court has held that a notice to quit must be construed not with the desire to find faults in it, which would render it defective, but it must be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat,⁶¹⁵ (that an act may avail, rather than perish). “The validity of a notice to quit”, as pointed out by the LJ Lord Justice Lindley⁶¹⁶ “ought not to turn on the splitting of a straw”. It must not be read in a hyper-critical manner, nor must its interpretation be affected by pedagogic pendantism or over refined subtlety, but it must be construed in a common sense way.⁶¹⁷ A notice to quit should be interpreted in a way so as to ascertain whether the person receiving the notice understood the same,⁶¹⁸ and should not be construed in a hair-split manner so as to find out loopholes in such notice. From the notice it must be apparent that the landlord wants to terminate the tenancy and the minimum period of such notice has been complied with. Where on the facts, it was found that even though it was not specifically mentioned that the “tenancy was determined”, it was evident that the lessor wanted to determine the tenancy by giving notice and hence, the tenancy was validly terminated.⁶¹⁹ In a Calcutta case, the tenant, by his letter of termination of tenancy, informed the landlord that the lease of two years for the aforesaid flat will expire on 28 February 1977 and on the said date, “we would vacate the aforesaid flat and would deliver the same to you”. In an ejectment suit instituted by the landlord, it was argued on behalf of the tenant, that the tenant’s letter proceeded on the basis that the lease would expire on a certain date and that, in this particular case, the two years’ lease was effected by an unregistered instrument and therefore, amounted only to a monthly tenancy. The supposition on the basis of which the notice was given being wrong, it was not a valid notice. This argument was, however, not accepted by the court.⁶²⁰

A notice to quit is not to be constructed either liberally, or strictly. It must, however, clearly and unambiguously convey the intention of the landlord to terminate the tenancy, and that in case of tenancy from month to month, it will be terminable by 15 days’ notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy. The notice can certainly leave the choice with the tenant as to when he considers his tenancy to commence and end, and that it should be terminable by 15 days’ notice expiring with the end of that month of the tenancy.⁶²¹

In a notice under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882, two requirements must be fulfilled:

- (i) It should give 15 days’ notice;
- (ii) expiring with the end of the month of tenancy.

In the instant case, the notice terminated the tenancy from the date of issue of the notice which was held to be not valid. It also gave 15 days notice to vacate, this period of 15 days also did not expire with the end of the month of tenancy. Since both the conditions of section 106 were not fulfilled, the notice was held to be invalid. It was held that notice under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 is essential, and must be strictly complied with.⁶²² In M N Dastur v Dhruves Chandra Chakraborty,⁶²³ A was the owner of the suit premises and created a tenancy in favour of B in 1957 at a monthly rent of ₹475, with monthly rent payable according to English calendar month on and from 1 January 2009. B paid rent month by month and A accepted it. On 19 April 2010 A gave a notice to quit under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 wherein he asked the appellant to vacate the premises “by end of May 2010”. B did not comply and a suit for eviction was filed on 15 July 2010. He tried to point out that the notice required the tenant to “hereby” vacate the suit premises and therefore was contrary to the 15 day requirement under section 106, the Court observed that the notice was issued on 19 April 2010 and the appellant was requested to vacate the premises by the end of May 2010. The suit itself was filed after one and a half month on 15 July 2010. Therefore, even if it is assumed that there was inaccuracy in the language of the notice, there was no misleading construction of the same. Even otherwise, the Court pointed out that in view of the amended section 106(3) of the TP Act, 1882, merely because of a short fall in the period of notice, the notice shall not become invalid.

A liberal construction is, therefore, put upon a notice to quit in order that it should not be defeated by inaccuracies either in the description of the premises,⁶²⁴ or the name of the tenant,⁶²⁵ or the name of the landlord,⁶²⁶ or the date of the expiry of the notice.⁶²⁷ The Privy Council has said that these English authorities are applicable to cases arising in India and that they establish that notices to quit, though not strictly accurate or consistent in the statements embodied in them, may still be good and effective in law; that the test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the holding to which they purport to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances; and, further, that they are to be construed, not with a desire to find faults in them which would render them defective, but to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat.⁶²⁸ However, a liberal construction must not ignore the fact that the provision is for the benefit of lessees, and a construction which deprives the tenant of the minimum period of notice stipulated in this section, is not permissible.⁶²⁹

A had leased to B two bhigas, two and a half cottahs of bastu land in the char of standing in the name of “N bearing a yearly jamma of ₹2500. A gave notice to quit describing the land as bastu land in the char of R standing in the name of N and bearing a yearly jamma of ₹2500 describing the boundaries correctly but erroneously stating the area to be six cottahs. B must have known that A could not have intended to give a bad and ineffective notice for a fraction of the holding. It was a bona fide mistake which did not mislead B. The notice was therefore valid.⁶³⁰

The landlord who gives notice must manifest the intention that, from a certain date the relationship of lessor and lessee shall come to an end. Whether this was the intention, will by and large, depend on the tenor of the notice.⁶³¹

(1) A let a house to B on 1 July. On 11 December of the same year, A gave notice to B as follows:—“If the house you occupy is not vacated within a month from this date, I will file a suit against you for ejectment as well as for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate.” This was not a valid notice but merely a request to vacate accompanied by a threat.⁶³²

(2) A let three shops to B and then gave B notice saying that as other persons were offering a higher rent, “you are informed by this notice that if from the first Aswin, if you want to keep the shops you shall have to pay ₹2700 a month.” The notice was insufficient either to determine the tenancy or to enhance the rent.⁶³³

If the notice fixes a lawful date for the termination of the tenancy, it does not matter if the tenant is described as a trespasser,⁶³⁴ or that words of warning are added such as a threat by the landlord to increase the rent.⁶³⁵ This is because “a notice otherwise sufficient is not made insufficient by its being accompanied by something else”. If the intention of the notice is manifest, namely, to call upon the tenant to vacate premises, the fact that there is also a demand to pay the arrears of rent does not invalidate the notice.⁶³⁶ However, it is not necessary that there should be a default in the payment of rent for termination of tenancy and the requirement of section 106

would be satisfied if the lessor has given a notice expressing an intention that the lease shall stand terminated on expiry of period mentioned in the notice.⁶³⁷ A notice by the landlord that he is no longer willing to continue the tenancy and requiring the tenant to vacate the house and to give possession on the expiry of 30 days after receipt of the notice, and indicating that in default, a suit for ejectment will be filed, is not defective.⁶³⁸

In another case, the relevant portion of the notice to quit read that, in default of payment of rent during the period aforesaid after occupation of the shop for a period of full 30 days, you must vacate the shop and put it in possession of the plaintiff... On expiry of the said period, your status would be that of a trespasser only and you will be liable to ejectment. It was held that the notice was valid. It satisfied the requirements of section 106.⁶³⁹

A notice to a monthly tenant to come to fresh terms with the landlord by the end of Asar, failing which the tenancy will be determined from the first Sraban, has been held to be a good notice.⁶⁴⁰ A notice to quit or in default to pay an enhanced rent operates as a notice to quit with an offer of a new tenancy at an enhanced rent, and if the tenant continues in occupation, he is taken to have acquiesced in the proposal to pay enhanced rent,⁶⁴¹ but not where the lessee has replied contesting the demand.⁶⁴² A contrary view was taken in Sabir Hussain Khan v Serajul Huq,⁶⁴³ in which it was held that it could not be laid down that the tenant was liable to pay the enhanced rent. He would, however, be liable to pay damages for use and occupation. The Oudh court has held that even if a notice to quit is invalid to determine the tenancy, yet it may be effective to enhance the rent and if the tenant continues in possession, he is liable to pay enhanced rent.⁶⁴⁴ This view is supported by the decision of the Nagpur High Court.⁶⁴⁵ This case was approved in later case where the tenant was held not to be liable as he had protested.⁶⁴⁶ However, it is submitted that if the notice to quit is invalid and the tenant continues in possession under the existing lease, then, the tenant is not liable to pay enhanced rent.

[s 106.16] Length of Notice

The section fixes six months for yearly, and 15 days for monthly tenancies created by implied demise, and appears to assume that it is the proper notice for all yearly and monthly tenancies.⁶⁴⁷ The month is reckoned according to the calendar by which the tenancy is regulated.⁶⁴⁸ In the absence of any evidence suggesting that the date of commencement of a tenancy was altered on a transfer of the landlord's rights, it would be the date of tenancy as in force between the tenant and the previous owner. The mere fact that after purchase of the house, the tenant and the purchaser landlord entered into an agreement for an enhanced rent from a certain date, does not mean that the tenancy was to be governed by the date of purchase of property.⁶⁴⁹ Where the landlord gave one month notice to terminate the tenancy under section 106, the same would be valid.⁶⁵⁰

The year or month of the tenancy at the end of which a notice under section 106 should expire, is not the calendar year or month in which the notice is given. The period (whether it be the year or the month) is the period calculated with reference to the commencement of the tenancy. Where there is an express or implied contract that the period in a lease from year to year or month to month should be reckoned according to Bengali year and not according to British calendar, a notice expiring with end of the year or the month of the tenancy calculated according to the Bengali calendar will be sufficient to terminate the tenancy.⁶⁵¹ Payment of rent by calendar month may be some, or even an important, indication that the tenancy is month to month according to the calendar month. However, by itself, it is not sufficient for holding that the tenancy was from the first day of the month to the last day, when receipt has been given indicating that tenancy commenced from a particular day of the month.⁶⁵²

The 15 days must be clear days. So, a notice to quit on the 30th Falgun served on the 15th Falgun, is inadequate.⁶⁵³ In the case of a monthly tenancy, a notice of two months instead of 15 days has been held to be valid.⁶⁵⁴ Similarly, a notice issued for more than 15 days does not become invalid if coincides with the end of the month.⁶⁵⁵ The notice is given at the peril of him who gives it, and if it is given for the proper length of time, that need not be expressed on the face of the notice. A lessee is entitled to remain on the premises leased till the midnight of the last day of the tenancy.⁶⁵⁶ The notice in a Patna case purported to terminate the tenancy on 31 January 1965 and required possession to be delivered on or before 31 January 1965. The tenant would be entitled to continue in possession till the midnight of 31 January and the notice, it was held, fulfills the requirements of section 106.⁶⁵⁷

[S 106.17] Computation of Period

By the amending Act of 2002, a new sub-section (2) providing for computation of period has been inserted. Opening with a non-obstante clause, the section provides that the period of six months or fifteen days, as the case may be, shall commence from “the date of receipt of notice”. By the words, “Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force”, the provision has an overriding effect on the general rule embodied in other laws that for the purpose of computation of a period, the date from which such period is to be taken, shall be excluded.⁶⁵⁸

[S 106.18] Notice not to be Invalid

Sub-section (3) is a new provision which has been inserted by the amending Act of 2002. It provides for a legal fiction that a notice under sub-section (1) would not be deemed to be invalid merely because the period mentioned therein falls short of the period specified under that sub-section, if a suit or proceeding is filed after the expiry of the period mentioned in that sub-section. This sub-section is another attempt to eliminate technical pleas raised by the lessee to invalidate the notice and defeat the provisions of section 106. By this amendment, even though a notice might be for a period less than six months in a year to year tenancy or less than fifteen days in a month to month tenancy, yet it would be valid if the suit or proceeding is initiated after the expiry of the said six months or fifteen days, as the case may be.

[s 106.19] Date of Expiry of Notice

The entire law relating to date of expiry of notice has undergone change after the amending Act of 2002. Prior to the amendment, one of the technical pleas raised by the lessee was the failure of six months period expiring with the end of the year of tenancy, or fifteen days period expiring with the end of the month of tenancy. For instance, in a year to year tenancy from 1 January to 31 December, if a six-months notice was issued on 1 March, it would expire on 31 August which did not expire with the end of the year of tenancy, ie, 31 December. It was this technical plea alone that the notice was held to be invalid and hence, the entire process of issuing fresh notice and filing of suit was required to be started de novo. This caused grave injustice to the lessors.

To prevent this situation, the amending Act of 2002 has deleted the words “expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy” as regard year to year tenancy, and the words “expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy” with respect to month to month tenancy. The effect of the amendment is that the notice sent in the above instance would be a valid notice though it expires on 31 August itself, and the lessor can file a suit anytime thereafter. Further, the amendment, by virtue of section 3 of the amending Act of 2002, applies retrospectively and hence, is applicable to all suit and proceedings at any stage. Therefore, this technical plea is no more available to the lessee. The law in India, however, prior to the amendment as understood from the judicial pronouncements is given hereunder.

The notice must terminate the tenancy at the end of the year or month of the period of the lease. It should expire on the last day of that period, otherwise it is invalid.⁶⁵⁹ On the expiry of the period prescribed in the notice or in the statute, ie, section 106, the lease becomes inoperative and the lessor acquires the right to have the tenant ejected, and to take possession in due process of law.⁶⁶⁰ Where the monthly tenancy commenced on 20 September, the month of tenancy would be the 20th of each month to the 19th of the following month, and a notice which expires on 31 August is not valid.⁶⁶¹ Where a notice in writing had granted 15 days time for terminating the monthly tenancy, and also clearly stated that the period of notice would expire at the end of Kartik, ie, the end of tenancy month, the notice was held to be valid under section 106.⁶⁶² A notice purporting to terminate the tenancy at once, but giving the tenant a month's time to vacate has been held to be invalid.⁶⁶³ A notice stating that the tenancy is terminated “hereby” is valid, as it does not terminate the tenancy at once.⁶⁶⁴ The expression “hereby” used in a notice means “through this notice”; it does not mean “from today”. The word “hereby” used in business correspondence does not connote the point of time, but means “through” (this document). When it is said that the tenancy is “hereby” terminated, it means that the tenancy is terminated through the notice.⁶⁶⁵ According to the Rajasthan High Court also, “hereby terminated”, when used in a notice to terminate a tenancy, cannot be read to mean “terminated forthwith”. The notice in this particular case, in view of its ambiguous language, could only be interpreted to mean that the landlord indicated to the tenant that he wanted to synchronise the act of termination of tenancy with the act of delivery of vacant possession thereof—either on 31 October, or on the day on which the tenant considered that his month of tenancy expired.⁶⁶⁶ On the other hand, the Andhra Pradesh High Court has held that where the notice stated that the tenancy in favour of the tenant was “hereby” terminated and requested of the tenant to vacate by the end of the month by which date the tenancy expired, failing which, appropriate steps for eviction of the tenant would be taken in a court of law, the notice, was not according to law, and was in contravention of section 106 read with section 111 (h).⁶⁶⁷ Thus, if the tenancy is a monthly tenancy beginning with the first day of each month, a notice by the tenant on 9 June that he would leave in a month’s time is invalid, for although it gave more than 15 day’s notice, it did not terminate the tenancy at the end of the month.⁶⁶⁸ On the other hand, in the case of a tenant holding over on the expiry of a yearly tenancy according to the Bengali calendar, a notice on the 16th Baisak requiring the tenant to quit on the 31st Baisak is valid.⁶⁶⁹ This rule has been applied in Punjab.⁶⁷⁰ If the tenancy begins in the middle of the year, yet, if the rent is paid at the end of each calendar year, the tenancy will be according to that year, and a notice expiring with the end of such calendar year will be valid.⁶⁷¹

Where a lessee enters the premises in the middle of a quarter by agreement and pays for the broken quarter a proportionate rent, and thereafter, on the regular quarter days, the lease commences on the first day of such quarter which follows his entry and a notice to quit must be given accordingly. In this particular case, the quarters were according to the English calendar month, and a notice terminating the tenancy on the last day of September was valid.⁶⁷² However, in a monthly tenancy beginning on the 6th of each month with rent payable on the 5th of the next month, a notice to quit given on 30 June for the end of July was invalid, as it did not expire on the last day of the period of the tenancy.⁶⁷³ But, a lease which provides that a tenant may leave on a particular day or on such day on which he considers the tenancy to expire, is a valid condition.⁶⁷⁴

The date of expiry of a tenancy depends upon the date of its commencement, and that again depends upon whether the lease is expressed to begin from or on a certain day. But to avoid this subtlety, it has been held that a notice may be given expiring on anniversary of the commencement of the tenancy.⁶⁷⁵ This is the effect of section 110, and Privy Council has held that, when a lease for years commencing from the first day of a month ends, according to the rule in section 110, on the first day of a month, and the tenant holds over as a monthly tenant, the monthly tenancy expires at midnight on the first of each succeeding month, so that a notice of the 1 February 1928, which treated the tenancy as expiring on the 1 March 1928, is valid.⁶⁷⁶ But where a lease of seven years was expressed to commence from 1318 Bs and to end by the end of 1324 Bs, it has been held, that the lease ended on the last day of 1324 Bs. and not on the midnight of the first day of 1325 Bs and consequently, the holding over as a monthly tenant began on the first day of Baisak 1325 Bs, and a notice to quit on the last day of Asar was valid.⁶⁷⁷ A notice one day short of the proper time is invalid.⁶⁷⁸ A notice to quit on or before a date, being a date on which the tenancy expires, is a good notice to quit.⁶⁷⁹ So also, a notice to quit requiring a tenant to quit on a certain date or “on such date as your then current month of tenancy will end” was held a valid notice to quit.⁶⁸⁰

In State Bank of India v Ashok Kumar Gupta,⁶⁸¹ the last para of the notice stated as under:

I therefore call upon you to please vacate the premises and hand over for its vacant possession to my clients by the end of 31 May 1989 ie on the expiry of your tenancy month failing which legal action for your ejection from the premises will be taken against you at your cost and liability. If, however, according to you, your tenancy be ending on any other date than as mentioned above, then you should please treat your tenancy terminated on the close of such date of your tenancy month which will expire after the expiry of 15 days of the service of this notice on you and you should please vacate and deliver vacant position of the premises to my clients on the expiry of that date on which your tenancy comes to an end according to you.

It was held that the notice in question leaves a choice with the tenant. It meets the requirement of section 106 of the TP Act, 1882, the impugned notice, therefore, validly terminated the tenancy which was a tenancy from month to month.

The date of commencement of tenancy is not altered by the mere purchase of the premises by another person, and remains the same as it was between the lessee and the previous owner.⁶⁸² The effect of such a notice is, first, to give the tenant notice to determine the tenancy on the date named and, second, to make the tenant an offer to accept a determination of the tenancy on any earlier date of the tenant's choice, on which the tenant should give up possession of the premises.⁶⁸³

The expression “by” a certain date means “on or before” that date.⁶⁸⁴ Notice to quit “within” a month or “within” 30 days have also been upheld.⁶⁸⁵ A notice requiring the tenant to vacate the accommodation “within a month” means that he should not take more than a month to do so. It does not mean that he will vacate within less than a month. A notice calling upon the tenant to vacate premises within 30 days of the service of the notice is in accordance with section 106.⁶⁸⁶ It is not indispensably necessary that the notice must mention that the tenancy is being terminated. Calling upon the tenant to vacate the premises tantamounts to terminating the tenancy.⁶⁸⁷

It is usual after mentioning the date of the anniversary of the tenancy to add in the alternative some such general words as “at the end of the year of the tenancy which will expire next after the end of one-half year from the date of the service of this notice.”

[s 106.20] Notice by Whom and to Whom

Notice to quit may be given by the lessor or by the lessee. The lessor includes the person in whom the legal reversion is vested, ie, the heir, transferee, executor and administrator. The landlord who, during the currency of a yearly or monthly lease, grants a lease to a third person for a term of year, cannot give notice to quit after the commencement of such lease for years, as his immediate reversion is then transferred to the tenant for years.⁶⁸⁸

One of the co-owners is competent to serve notice terminating tenancy. He is competent to maintain a suit in pursuance of such notice. Where one of the co-owners was collecting rent on behalf of all owners and was functioning for all purposes as a landlord, a notice issued by him alone terminating the tenancy, was valid.⁶⁸⁹ Where all the trustees executed a mukhtarnama expressly authorising the mukhtar (agent), not only to institute legal proceedings, but also to give all notices on their behalf, and the lease was granted by the trustees of the land belonging to the trust through their mukhtar, a notice under section 106, terminating the tenancy, issued by the mukhtar, would be valid.⁶⁹⁰ Similarly, when an advocate sends the notice on behalf of the respondent, he acts as an agent on behalf of the respondent.⁶⁹¹

Notice enures for the benefit of the successor-in-title of the lessor or lessee giving it.⁶⁹² Where all the co-landlords gave the notice and one of them died before the expiry of the notice period, the lessees cannot ask for a fresh notice from the legal heirs of the deceased.⁶⁹³

One of the co-sharer cannot initiate action for eviction of the tenant from the portion of the tenanted accommodation, nor can he sue for his part of the rent. The tenancy cannot be split up either in estate or in rent, or any other obligation, by the unilateral act of one co-owner. If however, all the co-owners or the co-lessors split by partition amongst themselves the demised property by metes and bounds, and come to have definite, positive and identifiable shares in that property, they become separate individual owners of each severed portion and can deal with the portion, not only as the tenant, but also as individual owners/lessor.

The English rule as to joint lessors was followed in the Bombay case of Ebrahim Pir Mahomed v Cursetji,⁶⁹⁴ where the parties were not Hindus, but whereas, the English rule as to joint lessors is that the lessee holds the whole so long as he and all the lessors shall please, the rule under Hindu law was that the relation created by contract with several joint landlords continues, until there exists a new and complete volition to change it. Accordingly, one of several joint owners, whether joint tenants or tenants in common, cannot determine the tenancy, and notice to quit must be given by all.⁶⁹⁵ A notice is mandatory for terminating a single tenancy. Where a single tenancy devolves on multiple heirs, a notice of termination served on one of them acting on behalf of others is capable of terminating the tenancy.⁶⁹⁶ However, where one co-sharer has been acting as the manager on behalf of all the other co-sharers, and has been collecting the rent on their behalf, he can give a valid notice on behalf of all.⁶⁹⁷ Where the tenancy has been determined by a joint notice, the withdrawal of some of the joint lessors from a suit for possession will not prevent the other co-plaintiffs from obtaining their shares.⁶⁹⁸

A lessee includes the legal representative, or the assignee of the tenant.⁶⁹⁹ Upon the death of the original tenant, subject to any provision to the contrary either negating or limiting the succession, the tenancy rights devolve on the heirs of the deceased tenant. It is a single tenancy which devolves on the heirs, and there is no division of the premises or of the rent payable therefore. In such circumstances, notices terminating tenancy under section 106 of the TP Act, addressed to and served upon one of the heirs of the original tenant, who paid rent and acted on behalf of all the heirs of the original tenant could not be said to be insufficient.⁷⁰⁰ There is no provision contrary to the above noted principle of joint tenancy of heirs in case of death of the original tenant, in Muslim personal law.⁷⁰¹ A notice given by a landlord not in his own capacity, but on behalf of somebody else, is bad.⁷⁰² So also, a notice given by a tenant to his sub-tenant after his own tenancy is terminated.⁷⁰³

A landlord cannot give notice to a sub-tenant, but a person who comes into occupation in place of the tenant will be presumed to be an assign, and notice may be given to him. Notice may be given by an agent authorised in this behalf. Accordingly, notice to quit may be given by a general agent in charge of an estate, but not by a cestui que trust, unless he is in management of the estate; nor by a mere rent collector, unless he has been specially authorised;⁷⁰⁴ also by an agent having special authority; but the authority must appear on the face of the notice so that the tenant may know that he may safely act upon it.⁷⁰⁵ A notice given by the lawyer of the lessor, is valid.⁷⁰⁶ So also, is a notice given by the sons of a joint family lessor, where the father is dead.⁷⁰⁷ A notice by an unauthorized agent cannot be subsequently ratified,⁷⁰⁸ as it must be binding when served. The Calcutta High Court has held that an agent having power to sue in ejectment, has power to give notice.⁷⁰⁹ A notice directed to "RC Pal" who was the managing director of the lessee company called "RC Pal Ltd", is valid.⁷¹⁰

Where the tenants are joint, a notice to one is sufficient.⁷¹¹ In joint tenancy, notice on any one of the tenants is valid, and a suit impleading one of them as a defendant is maintainable. A decree passed in such a suit is binding on all the tenants.⁷¹² A notice to quit addressed to all the tenants, but served on one of them, is sufficient; the provision applies not only to joint tenants, but also to tenants in common.⁷¹³ Where the heirs of the lessee held over the lessee's death, it was held that even if a contractual tenancy came into existence, it was a joint tenancy in favour of all the heirs, and a notice to quit served on any one of them was a proper notice.⁷¹⁴ The position of the various heirs is that of co-tenants and not joint tenants, and if the landlord does not serve notice on all the heirs, the petition for ejectment cannot be maintained.⁷¹⁵ The Allahabad High Court however, has held, that the principle, that notice to one of the joint tenants validly terminates the tenancy, cannot be applied to tenants in common. The right of tenancy, being a property, passes on inheritance according to the share of each heir in the case of tenants in common.⁷¹⁶ Similarly, a notice could be served on the karta on behalf of all the members and a refusal by the karta should be treated as a refusal on behalf of all of them.⁷¹⁷

In a case from Andhra Pradesh, certain premises were let out to a company and were in the occupation of its director. Notice to quit was given to its director who replied to it without raising any objection as to its validity as a notice to the company. It was held that he could not contest its validity in the litigation.⁷¹⁸ A notice of terminating tenancy received by the tenant also in his capacity as a general power of attorney of other tenants was held to be service on all tenants.⁷¹⁹ There is no statutory pre-condition of service of a notice on an unauthorised occupant before bringing a suit for recovery of possession against him.⁷²⁰

[s 106.21] Acceptance of Defective Notice

A notice to quit, even if it is defective, can be accepted by the landlord. After such acceptance, the tenant will be estopped from challenging its validity.⁷²¹ This defective notice of termination of the lease would terminate the tenancy if accepted by the lessor, and the lessee is estopped from denying its validity on the ground that it was not a notice expiring with the month of tenancy,⁷²² or that the notice is invalid, and cannot be relied upon by the landlord as a ground for eviction. The Bombay High Court has however held that if the notice is invalid, it does not terminate the tenancy and the landlord, on discovering this invalidity on the allegations made in the defendant's statement, can withdraw the suit and file a suit without permission of the court.⁷²³ In Calcutta Credit Corp v Happy Homes,⁷²⁴ the Supreme Court considered the validity of a notice to quit accepted and acted upon by the lessor even though it was defective. Justice Shah (as he then was) held that a notice not in compliance with section 106 because it does not expire at the end of the period of the lease, or was of a shorter duration than that prescribed, may be accepted by the other party; and, if it is so accepted and acted upon, the party serving the notice will be estopped from denying its validity. It is submitted that the same principle would apply if the recipient of the notice, having accepted and acted upon a defective notice seeks to contend that it is invalid, provided, of course, that the party serving the notice can show that he acted upon such notice, and materially altered his position to his prejudice. A notice under section 106 can be waived by the tenant,⁷²⁵ but the plea of want of notice cannot be raised at a late stage of the litigation, and the failure to raise the objection at an early stage would mean that the notice has been waived by the tenant.⁷²⁶

[s 106.22] Service of Notice

Notice to quit may be served

- (1) personally; or
- (2) by post; or
- (3) at the residence; or
- (4) in the last resort by being affixed to the property demised.

[s 106.22.1] Personal service

Personal service may be on the agent of the party if duly authorized, such as an officer of a corporation, or the solicitor of the party.⁷²⁷ If served on a duly authorized agent it is immaterial that the agent does not communicate it to the party.⁷²⁸ If a notice to quit is sought to be delivered personally to the tenant but, the tenant refuses to accept the same, it is nevertheless valid service.⁷²⁹ It is not necessary that the notice should be served by delivery to a member of the tenant's family, or by affixation.⁷³⁰ Where the tenant evades the receipt of notice and hence the landlord sent the notice through speed post at the correct address, but the same was returned as not claimed, it would amount to service of notice.⁷³¹ Service on one joint tenant is prima facie evidence that it has reached the other joint tenant.⁷³² In a Calcutta case,⁷³³ the court seemed to think that the express provisions of this section superseded this presumption, and that it is necessary in order to bind even a joint tenant that the notice must be addressed to and served on him in one of the ways mentioned in the second clause of that section. However, this was dissented from in a later case,⁷³⁴ following a dictum of the

[106. Duration of certain leases in absence of written contract or local usage.—

Judicial Committee in Harihar Banerji v Ramsashi Roy.⁷³⁵

[s 106.22.2] Service by post

Service by post is a form of personal service which is expressly authorised by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The posting in due course of a letter raises a presumption that it has reached the addressee—section 114 illustration (f) of the Indian Evidence Act. Accordingly, the posting of a notice to quit raises a presumption of service. This was so held in cases⁷³⁶ before the amendment of the section. Section 27 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 enacts that, unless the contrary is proved, service shall be deemed to have been effected by properly addressing, preparing and posting by registered post, a letter containing the notice. Service may also be proved by proof of posting, and the production in court of the envelope with the endorsement of the postal officer stating the refusal of the addressee to receive the letter.⁷³⁷ If the letter has been delivered, it does not matter if postal receipt is signed by anyone other than the addressee.⁷³⁸ In an Allahabad case,⁷³⁹ notice was sent by post and left at the defendant's shop which was the subject of the demise, but not at his residence. This was not a valid service, for the letter did not reach the addressee.⁷⁴⁰ But it has been held that if posted to the correct address, it is valid and need not be sent to the residence of the tenant.⁷⁴¹

The words “sent by post” in section 106 do not mean sent by registered post alone, nor does section 27 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 provide that if the ejectment notice is sent by post, it must be sent by registered post alone. To a notice sent by ordinary post, the presumption under section 27 of the General Clauses Act does not apply, but the presumption under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 would apply, though the court would be at liberty to see if the presumption has been rebutted on the facts.⁷⁴² Even a notice posted by ordinary post would raise a presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act;⁷⁴³ this presumption is rebuttable, but is not rebutted by a mere denial of receipt,⁷⁴⁴ especially, when the similar notices sent on earlier occasions on the same address were admittedly received.⁷⁴⁵ Similarly, where a notice is posted by registered mail, due service would be presumed, or a notice terminating the tenancy sent by “Registered AD Post” at the correct address of the tenant, if received by somebody else other than the tenant himself, is still deemed to be duly served on the tenant⁷⁴⁶ even if the postman who made the endorsement is not examined.⁷⁴⁷ The presumption of service of notice cannot be raised, if the postal receipt does not contain the full address of the tenant.⁷⁴⁸ When the notice was issued specifying properly the door number of the suit premises without proper specification of boundaries, the notice would not be bad for want of proper description of property.⁷⁴⁹ In Mumtaz Khan v Bhanwar Lal,⁷⁵⁰ the landlord sent a notice dated 10 November 2003 by registered AD post to the tenant terminating the lease under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act with effect from 1 December 2003 but the said notice returned back with the postal remark that said “unclaimed”. The court held that mere tender of notice at his given address was thus sufficient to presume the “receipt” of the same or service of the same on the tenant. In a termination of tenancy by servicing notice, the landlord adopted various modes of services for effecting service of notice, ie, certificate of posting and by registered post, the tenant did not deny service of eviction notice neither in pleading nor in defence, the service of notice would be deemed to be valid and sufficient on account of failure of the tenant to prove that the notice was not duly served on him.⁷⁵¹ Where the notice was sent by speed post demanding payment of rent and house tax and the residential address of the tenant was not in dispute, this notice was re-directed to the place of business of tenant from residential address it was held that the virtue of speed post is no less than a notice send by registered post, and the plea of the tenant that there was no service would not be accepted.⁷⁵²

The presumption of service of a letter sent by registered post can be rebutted by the addressee, by appearing as witness and stating that he never received such letter, and that the acknowledgement due does not bear his signature, or by his statement on oath that the postman never came to him with a notice, nor did he refuse to accept it,⁷⁵³ if such statement of the addressee is believed, the burden would then shift on the plaintiff to satisfy the court of the service of such letter, by leading evidence in the court of law. The court in facts and circumstances of a case, may not consider such denial by the addressee as truthful, and in that case denial alone would not be sufficient to rebut the presumption. But, if there is nothing to disbelieve the statement of the addressee, then it would be a sufficient rebuttal of presumption of service of such a letter or notice, sent to him by registered post.⁷⁵⁴ Where it was found that registered notice sent to the office of the tenant was never returned and another registered notice sent to the residence was returned with the endorsement “refused”, it was held that notice was duly served.⁷⁵⁵ Similarly, if it is proved that the plaintiff sent three notices by registered post, and there was no rebuttal on behalf of the defendant company who was the tenant, as regards the notice

served on the company, the service of notice would be presumed.⁷⁵⁶ Where the postman went to the tenant's house with a registered notice, but was informed by the tenant's brother that the tenant was out of station and the brother refused to supply the address of the tenant and an endorsement of "refusal" was made by the postman, it was held that the endorsement was wholly illegal, as there was no tender of the service of the notice to the tenant himself. In the absence of a tender, it is illegal to hold that the notice had been "refused" by the tenant. There was, therefore, no service of the notice on the tenant under section 106.⁷⁵⁷ The Supreme Court, however, has upheld a finding that a notice received by a younger brother of the tenant, who used to sit in the demised shop, was validly served.⁷⁵⁸ Similarly, where the notice sent by registered post was tendered to the addressee and, at his request, it was delivered to his son, and it was accepted by the son, the service was good and sufficient.⁷⁵⁹

A registered letter was sent to the tenant at his correct address, but the letter was returned with the endorsement "not found". Having regard to the facts, it was held that the tenant had notice of the proceedings,⁷⁶⁰ but not where it came back with an endorsement "not present".⁷⁶¹

The question whether the presumption of service under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 or under section 27 of General Clauses Act, 1897, is rebutted or not, is always a question of fact and the court should decide having regard to all the surrounding circumstances, and the conduct of the parties concerned. A quit notice was sent by a registered post, and the tenant in his written statement, did not dispute the service of notice on him, and stated that the notice sent by the landlord was fictitious and without any basis, and did not satisfy the requirement of section 106. It was held that under the circumstances, half-hearted denial of service of notice by tenant was not sufficient to displace the onus to rebut the presumption of service.⁷⁶²

It has been held that the evidence regarding refusal of notice must be very clear and convincing having regard to the drastic consequences of deemed service of notice on the lessee. Thus, a notice sent under certificate of posting, though presumed to have reached the tenant, was held not to be a legal and valid service as contemplated by section 12(2) of the Bombay Rent Act, read with section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 and section 27 of the General Clauses Act.⁷⁶³ Where the statute does not specify additional or alternative mode of service beyond postal service, there can be no warrant for importing into the statute, a method of service on the lines of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. A notice sent through registered post was returned undelivered. Immediately thereafter, the landlord caused a copy of the notice to be affixed to one of the doors of the demised premises in the presence of two inhabitants of the locality. It was held that such a "substituted" service is not a necessary or permissible requirement of the statute. It would, at the most, show the landlord's bona fides. Therefore, it must be held that the landlord has complied with the statutory requirements if he sends a notice correctly addressed to the tenant by registered post.⁷⁶⁴ Where a notice by registered post is returned with endorsement "refused" it is not always necessary to examine the Postman who tried to effect the service. A bald statement that registered letter was not tendered to him without any material evidence in support would not be sufficient to rebut the presumption of law regarding service of letter. When there is no evidence to rebut presumption of service of notice, the notice was valid and presumed to be served.⁷⁶⁵ In another case, quit notice was served by registered post with acknowledgment due which was returned after seven days with endorsement "not claimed". Endorsement "not claimed" to be treated as due service as the tenant and his daughter worked at the post office and it was difficult to believe that the said notice had escaped their attention.⁷⁶⁶

[s 106.22.3] Publication in newspaper

Publication of a notice in a local newspaper is not sufficient service.⁷⁶⁷

[s 106.22.4] Telegraphic notice

Section 106 does not contemplate a telegraphic notice. Under section 106, the notice must be "signed" by the landlord or his agent, and it is that notice which must reach the tenant. In the case of a telegraphic notice, it is true that when it was tendered to the telegraphic office, the telegram must have contained the landlord's signature. But the copy which the tenant receives would not contain his signature. The name of the sender is only typewritten in the telegraphic notice. Hence, a telegraphic notice is not a valid notice under the section.⁷⁶⁸

[s 106.22.5] Service at residence

Service at residence is effected by delivery to a servant or a member of the other party's family. Under the section, such service is equivalent to service on the party himself. The words "or to one of his family or servants at his residence", provide an alternative mode of service, and not one available only if personal service is impossible.⁷⁶⁹ Merely leaving notice at the tenant's residence without delivery to his wife or servant is not sufficient;⁷⁷⁰ nor delivery to the wife at a place where she did not reside with her husband.⁷⁷¹

[s 106.22.6] Affixing to the property

Service of notice under section 106 by the affixation of a copy of the notice to a conspicuous part of the property let out, is permissible, only if tender or delivery of such notice personally to the tenant (or to one of his family members or servants at this residence) is not practicable. This is the last resort if the other modes of service fail, and this form of service is invalid if personal service or service at the residence is not shown to have been impossible.⁷⁷² Thus, where the tenant went out of India without a separate residential address, and service of the notice personally upon her, or one of her servants or relatives at her residence, was neither possible or practicable, it was held that service by affixation at the disputed premises was justifiable.⁷⁷³

In a suit for ejectment on the ground of the rent having fallen into arrears, the trial court held that the notice under section 106 had been validly served on the tenant, by affixing a copy of the notice to a conspicuous part of the property let out. However, there was no finding of the trial court that the tender or delivery of notice personally to the tenant (or to one of his family members or servants at his residence) was not practicable. It was held that the notice terminating the tenancy could not be said to have been validly served on the tenant. In the absence of a valid notice terminating the tenancy served on the tenant, the decree for ejectment (and also for mesne profits) could not be sustained.⁷⁷⁴

So long as the provisions of rent control Acts are not made applicable to a particular area, the rights and obligations of the landlord and tenant are to be governed by the provisions of the TP Act, 1882. In case the proceedings for eviction are initiated by filing a suit before the civil court before the provisions of the rent control Act become applicable to the suit premises, then the provisions of the Rent Act will have no application to such pending eviction proceedings.⁷⁷⁵ Thus, eviction can be sought just by delivering a notice under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882, even if the lessee pays rent with utmost promptitude as default in payment of rent is a ground for eviction under the Rent Control legislations.⁷⁷⁶

In the state of Sikkim, the relationship of landlord and tenant is governed by the provisions of rules of 1949 and the requirement of notice is prescribed under it, therefore the issuance notice under section 106 of the TPA is not necessary.⁷⁷⁷ Where the content of the lease deed revealed that purpose of creation of tenancy was for residential purpose and the premises were situated within the Kolkata Municipal Corporation, the tenancy would be governed by the provisions of the TPA and not by the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1997.⁷⁷⁸

The issue which arises for consideration is whether eviction can be sought on the ground of personal necessity set out in the rent control Acts to a subsisting fixed-term lease. A Full Bench Karnataka High Court in *Sri Ramakrishna Theatres Ltd v General Investments and Commercial Corp Ltd*⁷⁷⁹ had held that a landlord is not entitled to an order of eviction for reasons enumerated under section 21 of the Karnataka Rent Control Act, 1961 in case of a fixed-term lease where the lease has not expired on the date on which the application for eviction was filed. Subsequently, another Full Bench of the Karnataka High Court, in *Bombay Tyres International Ltd v K S Prakash*⁷⁸⁰ in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in *Shri Lakshmi Venkateshwara Enterprises Pvt Ltd v Syeda Vajhiunnissa Begum*⁷⁸¹ declared the decision in Sri Ramakrishna Theatres Ltd as no longer good law. The Supreme Court has now in *Laxmidas Bapudas Darbar v Rudravva*⁷⁸² while overruling Shri Lakshmi Venkateshwara Enterprises and Bombay Tyres and approving Shri Ramakrishna Theatres has laid down the following propositions:⁷⁸³

- (i) On expiry of period of the fixed-term lease, the tenant would be liable for eviction only on the ground enumerated in clauses (a) to (p) of sub-section (1) of section 21 of the Karnataka Rent Control Act.
- (ii) Any ground contained in the agreement of lease other than or in addition to the grounds enumerated in clauses (a) to (p) of sub-section (1) of section 21 of the Karnataka Rent Control Act shall be inoperative.
- (iii) Proceedings for eviction of a tenant under a fixed-term contractual lease can be initiated during subsistence or currency of the lease only on a ground as may be enumerated in clauses (a) to (p) of sub-section (1) of section 21 of the Karnataka Rent Control Act, and it is also provided as one of the grounds for forfeiture of the lease rights in the lease deed, not otherwise.
- (iv) The period of fixed-term lease is ensured and remains protected except in the cases indicated in the preceding paragraph.

Institutions, like trusts, which are exempted from the provisions of rent control legislations can file suits for evictions directly under section 106 after terminating the tenancy in the manner provided therein.⁷⁸⁴ The Supreme Court in *Bhatia Cooperative Housing Society Ltd v D C Patel*⁷⁸⁵ has held that exemption under rent control legislations is not conferred on the relationship of landlord and tenant, but on the premises itself making it immune from the operation of the Act. Following the Supreme Court decision, the Madhya Pradesh High Court⁷⁸⁶ has held that immunity from operation of the Madhya Pradesh Accommodation Control Act, 1961 is in respect of the premises, and not with respect to the parties. If a tenant in municipal premises, lets out the premises to another, a suit by the tenant for ejectment of his tenant and arrears of rent would not be governed by the said Act as the premises are exempt under section 3(i)(b) of the Act, though the suit is not between the municipality as landlord and against its tenant. This view has been affirmed by the Supreme Court in Parwati Bai v Radhika.⁷⁸⁷ The same court earlier, in *Lal Chand v District Judge, Agra*⁷⁸⁸ held that in case of reconstruction of a building, it is exempted from the provisions of the Uttar Pradesh Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1972 for a period of 10 years as mentioned in section 2(2) of the said Act and hence, suit for eviction can be filed after giving a notice under section 106.

[s 106.24] Applicability to Sick Industrial Undertakings

Section 22 of the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act, 1985 inter alia provides that notwithstanding any other law, no suit for recovery of money shall lie or proceeded with except with the consent of the Board, but the filing of an eviction petition on ground of non-payment of rent cannot be regarded as filing of a suit for recovery of money. If a tenant does not pay the rent, then the protection which is given by the rent control Act against his eviction is taken away and with the non-payment of rent, order of eviction may be passed. It may be possible that in view of the provisions of section 22, the trial court may not be in a position to pass a decree for the payment of rent, but when an application under section 11(4) is filed, the trial court in effect has given an opportunity to the tenant to pay the rent, failing which the consequences provided for in the sub-section would follow. An application under section 11(4), or under any other similar provision cannot be regarded as being akin to a suit for recovery of money.⁷⁸⁹

[s 106.25] Special Legislation

The effect of this section as of section 108(q) and section 111, has been for all practical purposes superseded by special legislation in certain places to give protection to tenants against enhancement of rent and eviction.

The provisions of section 106 of TP Act, 1882, being a part of general law, may be invoked to the extent, not in conflict with a provision in a special law such as West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956.⁷⁹⁰ The general principles under the Act are not applicable when there are statutory provisions under the special enactment for acquiring rights in the forest land. The general principles under the TP Act, 1882, cannot apply in view of the language of section 22 of the Forest Act.⁷⁹¹

[s 106.26] Objection as to Validity of Notice

An objection as to validity or infirmity of notice under section 106 should be raised specifically and at the earliest, else it will be deemed to have been waived even if there exists one. On facts, it was held that the notice does not suffer from any infirmity since the receipt of notice has been admitted in the written statement, and no objection as to its validity has been raised.⁷⁹² Where two valid notices were issued by the landlord for eviction, the tenant cannot refute eviction on the ground that landlord did not have exclusive title over the property, more so after admittance of the tenancy.⁷⁹³ Where the plea of want of notice under section 106 was raised four years after the parties had proceeded to trial and led evidence on the basis that no such notice was required, it was held that notice must be deemed to have been waived.⁷⁹⁴ Where no objection was taken in the written statement and no issue was framed in the trial court, the objection as to validity of notice was not permitted to be taken for the first time in the appellate court,⁷⁹⁵ or even at the stage of arguments.⁷⁹⁶ Prior to ascertaining the validity of a notice, the court has to ascertain whether section 106 is at all applicable.⁷⁹⁷ Service of notice under section 106 is not necessary in cases of lease of fixed duration since the tenancy expires by efflux of time, and in such cases mere denial of receipt of notice would not help the tenant.⁷⁹⁸ If a specific and definite time period is fixed as the term of the lease, the lease would automatically come to an end by efflux of time limited thereby as provided under section 111(a) and no notice is required to determine such a lease. After expiration of term fixed by the lease, a lessee continuing in possession in absence of an assent by lessor will only be a tenant by sufferance and can be sued for ejectment at any time without any previous notice or demand of possession, as being a trespasser and not as a tenant holding over.⁷⁹⁹ Where the notice to quit made a reference to section 106 and section 111(g), but if the substance was looked into, the appropriate section cited should have been section 111(h) instead of section 111(g), the mention of an incorrect provision would not exclude the jurisdiction of the Rent Tribunal and the notice would be deemed to be valid.⁸⁰⁰ Similarly, where the lessor issued a notice specifying the date of determination of lease and to vacate the property, the plea of the lessee that alternative case could not be made out in a single notice would not be tenable more specifically as the second part of the notice had mentioned that the lease is not determined by efflux of time.⁸⁰¹

[s 106.27] Alternative Pleas

It is open to the landlord to sue the tenant on alternative pleas.⁸⁰²

[s 106.28] Suppression of Decree

Where in the execution proceedings in a decree for eviction, the tenant pleaded that he had delivered the possession to the attorney of the landlord who permitted him to continue in possession as a licensee, the decree for eviction could not be said to be superseded by such an agreement, since the decree for eviction was passed against the tenant in his capacity as tenant of the premises in question, and he could have, if at all, avoided that decree only by getting a fresh lease of that premises, and not as a licensee which cannot have the effect of avoiding, superseding or substituting the decree.⁸⁰³

[s 106.29] Arbitration clause

If lease agreement having ended and there being no fresh agreement thereafter, arbitration clause contained in it shall not be held to operate as a bar to suit. In Master Pieces Furniture Pvt Ltd v K Lakshma Reddy,⁸⁰⁴ it was held that the dispute in suit was not covered by arbitration clause in lease agreements as those lease agreement themselves did not survive.

[s 106.30] Position of person holding on to possession after notice under section 106

When a tenant failed to exercise his right to get the renewal of lease in respect of the demised premises, the determination of tenancy of the demised premises under section 106 is perfectly legal and valid. After termination of the tenancy, if he continued in possession of the property as a tenant of holding over, his status is that of a trespasser and not as tenant, and he becomes liable to pay mesne profits by way of damages.⁸⁰⁵

458 Substituted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act 2002 (3 of 2003), section 2 (w.e.f. 31 December 2002). Prior to its substitution, section 106 read as under.—

106. Duration of certain leases in absence of written contract or local usage.—In the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, lease of immovable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy; and a lease of immovable property for any other purpose shall be deemed to be a lease from month to month terminable, on the part of either lessor or lessee, by fifteen days' notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy.

Every notice under this section must be in writing, signed by or on behalf of the person giving it, and either be sent by post to the party who is intended to be bound by it or be tendered or delivered personally to such party, or to one of his family or servants at his residence, or (if such tender or delivery is not practicable) affixed to a conspicuous part of the property.

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

806107. Leases how made.—

A lease of immovable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.

807[All other leases of immovable property may be made either by a registered instrument or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession.]

808[Where a lease of immovable property is made by a registered instrument, such instrument or, where there are more instruments than one, each such instrument shall be executed by both the lessor and the lessee:]

Provided that the State Government may 809[] from time to time, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that lease of immovable property, other than leases from year to year or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, or any class of such leases, may be made by unregistered instrument or by oral agreement without delivery of possession.]

[s 107.1] Amendments

The second paragraph of the section was substituted for the original by the amending Act 6 of 1904. The original paragraph was “All other leases of immovable property may be made either by instrument or by oral agreement.” That Act which made registration compulsory, came into effect on 11 March 1904.

The third paragraph was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

[s 107.2] Creation of Leases

Section 107 prescribes the procedure for execution of a lease between the parties. Under the first paragraph of this section, a lease of immovable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving yearly rent, can be made only by registered instrument, and remaining classes of leases are governed by the second paragraph, ie, all other leases of immovable property can be made either by registered instrument, or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession.^{810}

The section enacts the mode in which leases may be made, and for that purpose divides them into two classes:

107. Leases how made.—

- A.—Leases from year to year,
 Leases for a term exceeding a year,
 Leases reserving a yearly rent.
- B.—Other leases, ie, generally from month to month or for a term of a year or less than a year.

Leases in class A can only be made by registered instrument.⁸¹¹ Leases in class B may be made either by registered instrument, or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession. This section does not apply to an agreement for lease. It is sufficient if it is signed by the lessee only.⁸¹²

The Registration Acts of 1877 and 1908 make the same division, the registration of leases in class A being compulsory—section 17(l)(d)—and the registration of leases in class B being optional.

All leases not covered by section 107, first paragraph, may be made either by oral agreement on delivery of possession, or by registered document. A lease, the registration whereof is not compulsory under section 17(l)(d) of the Registration Act, becomes compulsorily registrable if reduced into writing by virtue of the second paragraph of section 107 read with section 4(2) of the Act.⁸¹³ A lease for a period of one year falls within the expression “all other leases” in section 107, and can be entered into by oral agreement, accompanied by delivery of possession.⁸¹⁴

Barring the proviso which enables the state government to relax the conditions, the above section consists of three paragraphs. The second paragraph contains an exception to the first paragraph. The wording of the first paragraph shows that it is mandatory that if a lease is to be created for any term exceeding one year, it can be made “only by a registered instrument”. If the instrument is not registered, the corollary is that no lease exceeding one year is created at all. Such an instrument, if not registered, cannot be admitted as evidence in view of section 17 of the Registration Act, either for proving the terms of the lease, or otherwise.

As for the third paragraph of section 107 of the TP Act, 1882, the only requirement is that execution of the lease through a registered instrument shall be a joint endeavour of both lessor and lessee. The said paragraph in the section was introduced by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929. The reason for introducing the aforesaid paragraph in the said section was to settle the conflict of opinion expressed by different High Courts regarding the validity of a lease made through a rent note signed by the lessee alone. The Allahabad High Court has held the view that a lease can be created only by an instrument signed by both the lessor and the lessee, while Madras High Court took a contrary view. Both views received approval by different High Courts. In the light of the said conflict, the legislature thought it fit to resolve it by introducing the third paragraph in this section. A close reading of the third paragraph indicates that there is no stipulation that the instrument must be signed by both parties. The requirement is that when the lease is made by a registered instrument, “such instrument shall be executed by both the lessor and the lessee.” What is underlined in it, is that the creation of a lease is not a unilateral exercise of one of the parties, but a bilateral endeavour of both the lessor and the lessee.

In Black’s Law Dictionary, the word “execute” means “to complete; to make; to sign; to perform; to do; to follow out; to carry out according to its terms; to fulfill the command or purpose of.” In Words and Phrases (permanent edition), the word “execute” means “to complete as a legal instrument; to perform what is required to give validity to.” An instrument is usually executed through multifarious steps of different sequences. At the first instance, the parties might deliberate upon the terms and reach an agreement. Next, the terms so agreed upon would be reduced to writing. Sometimes, one party alone would affix the signature on it and deliver it to the other party. Sometimes, both parties would affix their signature on the instrument. If the document is required by law to be registered, both the parties can be involved in the process without perhaps obtaining the signatures of one of them. In all such instances, the instrument can be said to have been executed by both parties thereto. If the instrument is signed by both parties, it is presumptive of the fact that both of them have executed it, of course it is only a rebuttable presumption. Similarly, if an instrument is signed by only one party, it does not mean that both parties have not executed it together. Whether both parties have executed the instrument will be a question of fact to be determined on evidence, if such a determination is warranted from the pleadings of the particular suit. Merely because the document shows only the signature of one of the parties, it is not enough to conclude that the non-signing party has not joined in the execution of the instrument.⁸¹⁵

Execution of lease would be doubtful when the deed was in nature of a rent receipt and the terms and conditions of lease were not stated and the boundaries of land leased were vaguely stated. Moreover, such a lease deed that is unregistered cannot be used for a collateral purpose thus it cannot be sued for proving the possession of the claimant.⁸¹⁶

According to a judgment of the Delhi High Court, from the mere fact that no registered instrument is available, one can immediately construe a “contract to the contrary” within the meaning of section 106, ie, a contract to create a lease of a kind that can be created without a registered instrument. Thus, if the lease is for agricultural or manufacturing purposes, and there is no registered instrument, that fact itself is conclusive to establish a contract to the contrary. On this line of reasoning, there can never be a conflict between sections 106 and 107. Section 106 is deemed to provide for a lease that (according to section 107) can be created only by a registered instrument. Non-existence of a registered instrument will itself attract the opening words of section 106, by implying a “contract to the contrary”, and in this manner, the two sections become fully reconciled. Further, in this case, rent was payable monthly and not annually, and from this also, the conclusion can follow that the tenancy was from month to month.⁸¹⁷ This view has been approved by the Supreme Court in *Samir Mukherjee v Davinder K Baja*⁸¹⁸ wherein it was held that there is non conflict between sections 106 and 107 and for application of section 106, a valid year to year lease shall be deemed to exist only when it is created by a registered instrument.

There can be no lease for fixed term for a period of more than a year, if the same is entered into orally or by any unregistered deed, and in those cases, the presumption about duration of lease under section 106 will apply.⁸¹⁹ Where the duration of the lease as depicted from the deed was eight years, but it was unregistered, it would be unenforceable in a court of law and would be presumed to be on month to month basis.⁸²⁰ Such a lease cannot be admitted in evidence but can be used for a collateral purpose.⁸²¹ In a proceedings for eviction against the tenant, the lease deed was executed for a period of 11 months and was further renewed for a period of four months. The tenant did not deny the execution of the tenancy and his own signatures, and it was held that mere absence of signatures of the landlord on the deed would not prove fatal for avoiding the terms and conditions of the lease. This unregistered lease deed, was not required by law to be compulsorily registered and therefore would be admissible in evidence. An eviction based on this unregistered lease deed would be proper.⁸²²

The reservation of a yearly rent creates a presumption that the lease is from year to year; but this presumption may be rebutted, having regard to the other parts of the instrument.⁸²³ As the sections, both of TP Act, 1882 and the Registration Act, refer to leases from year to year, as well as to leases reserving a yearly rent, it would appear that registration is necessary whenever the rent is reserved yearly.⁸²⁴ The section also has no application to a lease reserving a yearly rent, but containing a clause enabling the lessee to surrender possession at will, for this is a tenancy at will.⁸²⁵ However, it has been held that the expression “reserving a yearly rent” refers to a lease which, on its proper construction, is a lease from year to year.⁸²⁶ Lease of a fishery for more than one year must be registered, since fishery is immovable property.⁸²⁷

107. Leases how made.—

In view of section 107, para 1, a lease for a period exceeding one year, can be executed only by a registered instrument executed by both the lessor and the lessee. In the absence of a registered instrument, the lease shall be deemed to be “lease from month to month”.⁸²⁸ The provisions of this section cannot be circumvented by setting up a case of permanent tenancy on the basis of oral evidence, or under an unregistered instrument.⁸²⁹

A lease for 11 months on monthly rent, created on the basis of a kabuliyat signed by the lessee, need not be registered.⁸³⁰

A lease of immovable property from year to year or for a term exceeding one year, under section 107 can be made only by a registered instrument, and any lease of this kind would be void unless it is created by a registered instrument. All other leases of immovable property may be made either by a registered instrument, or by an oral agreement accompanied by the delivery of possession. An oral lease for manufacturing purposes cannot be deemed to be a lease from year to year for the purposes of notice of termination, in view of the provisions contained in section 107 of the TP Act, 1882. In the case of lease for manufacturing purposes, the absence of registration itself would imply that the parties entered into a contract to the contrary, and without any registered instrument tenancy would be deemed to be from month to month, and not from year to year for which 15 days’ notice will be a valid one.⁸³¹ A lease of a pond belonging to a gram panchayat for a period of 10 years by an oral agreement was held to be illegal as the lease was for a term exceeding one year, and could have been created only by a registered instrument.⁸³² In view of the specific provisions of the TP Act, 1882, the letter or any oral evidence in support of the letter spelling out any understanding between the parties cannot give rise to a lease for a period of three years, as a lease has to be through a registered document.⁸³³

Generally, the tenant is not expected to demand from the landlord, the issue of a rent receipt for payment of the amount. After all, it is a relationship of confidence between the landlord and the tenant, unless there is a specific contract in this behalf.⁸³⁴

If possession is given, an oral lease for a year is valid.⁸³⁵

A lease of immovable property for a term not exceeding one year and not reserving a yearly rent, can be made by an oral agreement accompanied by the delivery of possession. Even if the rent note is executed by the lessee in such a case and is not registered, the law does not require that it should be executed by both the lessor and the lessee. It may be that a unilateral act of the lessee may not create an interest in his favour and, therefore, no valid lease came into existence merely by the rent note. But if, pursuant to the rent note, the lessee is put in possession by the lessor, there will be a valid transfer of interest in his favour.⁸³⁶ An oral agreement of lease accompanied by delivery of possession, if valid for more than one year, by delivery of possession for the first year, and thereafter the lessee continuing in possession with the assent of the lessor, becomes a tenant by holding over under section 116 of TP Act.⁸³⁷ Such a lease being created by the operation of law is binding, even though the provisions of section 107 have not been complied with.⁸³⁸ When a lease is made by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession, no estate passes until the lessee enters into possession.

Where leases have been made by registered instrument or where the necessity for delivery of possession has been dispensed with by notification, terms take effect without actual entry.⁸³⁹ The delivery of possession need not be physical. Constructive delivery is sufficient.⁸⁴⁰ Thus, where a person is already in occupation as a licensee, and subsequently, he enters into a contract of tenancy with the owner, delivery will be deemed to have taken place, even though there is no actual delivery at the time of the contract of tenancy.⁸⁴¹ When an oral lease accompanied by the delivery of possession is established, a rent deed can be used to support the terms of the lease.⁸⁴²

Where a registered deed is not required by law and the rent note is admissible in evidence, the admission made therein by the tenant that he is in occupation of the premises, is good evidence.⁸⁴³ A rent deed executed by the lessee alone, and not registered, is not admissible to prove the creation of the lease by the instrument, but is admissible to prove the lease by oral agreement, accompanied by delivery of possession. It can be relied on to establish the jural relationship of the parties, and to prove an admission and acknowledgement by the lessee that he is a lessee, and this is the best evidence that one can possibly have as to the oral agreement of a lease. It is well known that documents relating to sale, lease, and mortgages come into existence only after an agreement is arrived at between the parties to that transaction. The terms are generally agreed upon by the lessor and the lessee beforehand, and are then reduced into writing. In such cases, according to the Kerala High Court,⁸⁴⁴ an oral agreement can be supported by the rent deed of the lessee, and there can be no bar for the court looking into such a document.

[s 107.6] Consequences of Non-registration

In the case of Anthony v KC Ittoop and Sons,⁸⁴⁵ a three-Judge bench of the Supreme Court relying on its earlier decisions⁸⁴⁶ has held that an unregistered instrument required to be compulsorily registered by virtue of section 107, read with sections 17(1)(d) and 49 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, cannot create a lease. The court is disabled from using the instrument as evidence. However, the court can still determine whether there was in fact a lease otherwise than through an unregistered instrument. In this case, it was found as of fact that the defendant was inducted into possession of the building by the owner, and he was paying monthly rent in respect thereof. As such it was held that the jural relationship between the parties was that of lessor and lessee falling within the purview of the second paragraph of section 107. The lacuna of registration had affected the validity of the document, but what had happened between the parties in respect of the property became a reality. The court has further held that such a case cannot be that of a licence or permissive possession.

A lease is void if unregistered in cases where registration is compulsory under this section. In Ariff v Jadunath,⁸⁴⁷ the Privy Council held that if registration of a lease is compulsory under section 107, the lease can only be made by a registered instrument, and if not so made, is void altogether. To the same effect are the undernoted cases.⁸⁴⁸ But if the tenant is in possession under an unregistered lease and the landlord recognises his right by acceptance of rent, there is a presumption of a lease under section 106, and a notice to quit before eviction is necessary. Although the unregistered lease is void as a lease, the person in possession under such a document may put it in evidence to protect his possession under section 53A.⁸⁴⁹ This situation, however, has changed after the amending Act of 2001 by which the words “the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or,” as appearing in para 4 of section 53A has been omitted. Simultaneously, sections 17 and 49 of the Registration Act, 1908 have been amended making it clear that unless the documents containing contract to transfer for consideration any immovable property for the purpose of section 53A are registered, they shall not have effect for the purposes of section 53A.⁸⁵⁰

In the undernoted case, it was held that though an unregistered lease is void as a permanent lease, it can be deemed to be a monthly lease terminable by 15 days' notice;⁸⁵¹ but in another case, it was regarded as a license.⁸⁵² If the lease is void for want of registration, neither party to the indenture can take advantage of any of the terms of the lease. Thus, the plaintiff cannot seek ejectment of the defendant solely on the basis of the duration clause in the unregistered deed.⁸⁵³ A lease from year to year requires registration, and in absence of registration, the document cannot be used as a piece of evidence in proof of the terms of the lease.⁸⁵⁴ However, an unregistered agreement of lease can be used as evidence for the breach of agreement in a suit for damages.⁸⁵⁵ A lease for a term exceeding one year, if not effected by a registered instrument, is void even though it be by a consent decree. But if, after delivery of possession, the rent is paid and accepted, it takes effect as a lease from month to month.⁸⁵⁶ Where an agreement does not alter the terms of a lease, but merely resolves a dispute, it does not require registration.⁸⁵⁷ In Technicians Studio Pvt Ltd v Lila Ghosh,⁸⁵⁸ a two-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court considered the effect of a compromise decree, which mentioned that the defendant would become a direct tenant on a monthly rent of ₹1000 and the lease would be for a period of sixteen years. But compromise decree was not registered, nor did the parties execute a lease deed pursuant thereto. The contention in that case was two-fold. First was that by payment and acceptance of rent during the period of sixteen years, the monthly tenancy had been created, and second, that the compromise decree can be treated as evidence of part payment under section 53A. The Supreme Court accepted the findings of the lower courts that payment of rent, and acceptance of the same did not create any tenancy but observed therein that:⁸⁵⁹

Whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties depends on whether the parties intended to create a tenancy, and the intention has to be gathered from the facts and circumstances of the case. It is possible to find on the facts of a given case that payments made by a transferee in possession were really not in terms of the contract but independent of it, and this might justify an inference of tenancy in his favour. The question is ultimately one of fact.

If a lease deed is inadmissible in evidence for non-registration, all its terms are inadmissible including the one dealing with the landlord's permission to his tenant to sublet, and the party cannot be allowed to rely upon that clause in the unregistered lease deed on the ground that consent of the landlord to sub-letting does not require registration.⁸⁶⁰ However, an unregistered lease deed would be admissible in evidence to protect possession of party as proof of part performance of contract.⁸⁶¹

Where the lease is required to be registered but is not, in a suit for specific performance, an unregistered and an unstamped lease deed would not be admissible in evidence but can be admitted as evidence for a collateral purpose. It can be looked into as evidence only for proving nature and character of possession of parties, ie, can be relied upon to establish jural relations between parties, to prove admission of defendant, in which capacity he is occupying tenanted premises, and the nature of such possession.⁸⁶² Further, in absence of any written lease, a question of relief against forfeiture does not arise.⁸⁶³ An agreement for construction of a commercial complex entered into between the corporation and developers on piece of land owned by the Corporation and where the terms and conditions of alleged instruments stated that the right to allot shops/offices is transferred to developer, the document is a lease and would require registration.⁸⁶⁴ Unless there is a registered document, a lease of duration of more than one year cannot be claimed by the parties, as in the absence of registered document the lease has to be construed as only a month-to-month lease beginning on the first day of the month and ending on the last day of the month. The said monthly lease, undoubtedly, can be terminated by a 15 days notice as provided under section 106 of the Act. Where shops were allotted on lease in an open public auction on payment of premium for period of three years and further subject to payment of monthly rent, such deed requires payment of stamp duty.⁸⁶⁵ A tripartite deed of land-cum-superstructure by way of sublease is chargeable with duty and registrable.⁸⁶⁶ A rent note on the basis of which a tenancy was created for month to month does not require registration and would be admissible in evidence.⁸⁶⁷ In an eviction suit, an unregistered rent deed cannot be accepted as evidence but a claim arising therefrom can be granted on the basis of other uncontroverted evidence available on record supporting the claim.⁸⁶⁸ In case of an unregistered lease deed, the attestation by notary public leads to genuineness of the document. A duly notarized document cannot be said to be fake document in absence of any other material.⁸⁶⁹ Where the lease though was for a period of eight years but was not registered, the terms of this lease would not be enforceable in a court of law and the tenancy would be on month to month basis, and as there was no evidence on record that the lessee had paid rent regularly as and when the same had fallen due, termination of tenancy for breach of terms of lease in payment of monthly rents would be valid and proper in law.⁸⁷⁰ The requirement of registered instrument to create a valid lease though necessary under section 107 is not necessary under the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (Act 18 of 1960 and a lease deed can be a basis to establish general relationship between the owner and tenant under the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (Act 18 of 1960). Where a tenant in occupation had paid rent directly to Bank which were so accepted by the Bank, the tenant can claim that he was a bonafide tenant in occupation irrespective of the fact

the lease is not registered under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.⁸⁷¹ In the case of agricultural leases, the oral settlement of agricultural land requires the vesting of title through the declaration based on unregistered hukumnamas.⁸⁷²

In Park Street Properties (Pvt) Ltd v Dipak Kumar Singh,⁸⁷³ T was let out the suit premises with a right to sublet the same. He entered into an unregistered agreement with B subletting the suit premises. As per the terms of the agreement, in case of breach of the agreement for three consecutive months, T could terminate the tenancy after serving a notice of thirty days' period. He issued a notice under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 terminating the monthly tenancy of B upon expiry of 15 days from serving the notice. B did not vacate the premises and T filed a suit for recovery of possession. Holding in favour of T, the High Court said, that in the absence of registration of a document, what is deemed to be created is a month to month tenancy, the termination of which is governed by section 106 of the TP Act, 1882. Further, the phrase "contract to the contrary" in section 106 of the Act cannot be read to mean that the parties are free to contract out of the express provisions of the law, thereby defeating its very intent. The contract between the parties must be a valid contract to render the statutory right under section 106 (of a lessor to terminate the tenancy at a notice of 15 days) to not be applicable.

In Vishal N Kalsaria v Bank of India,⁸⁷⁴ The debtor-landlords secured a loan from the bank against equitable mortgage of several properties belonging to them including the one in which the appellant was a tenant. They failed to pay the dues within the stipulated time. The question before the Court was: how can the right of a "protected tenant" be preserved where the debtor-landlord secures a loan by offering the very same property as a security interest to a bank? The Court observed that section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 was silent on the position of law in cases where the agreement of tenancy is not reduced into writing and held that if the two parties are executing their rights and liabilities in the nature of a landlord-tenant relationship and if regular rent is being paid and accepted, then the mere factum of non-registration of deed will not make the lease itself nugatory. In light of the same, neither the landlord nor the banks can be permitted to exploit the fact of non registration of the tenancy deed against the tenant.

[s 107.7] Possession Under a Valid Agreement of Lease

If the lessor seeks to evict the lessee, the latter may apply for a stay of the suit and himself sue for specific performance of the agreement to lease. If the suit for specific performance is time barred, the court cannot enforce the agreement. However, if the agreement is in writing, the lessee may defend his possession under section 53A.⁸⁷⁵ However, after the amending Act of 2001,⁸⁷⁶ the registration is a must for seeking protection under section 53A. Where a person is already in possession as a tenant at the commencement of a lease which is void by reason of non-registration, he would continue to be a tenant from month to month, and section 53A of the TP Act, 1882 would not be attracted in regard to the unregistered lease.⁸⁷⁷ In the absence of any writing, signed by the landlord or on their behalf, section 53 A of the TP Act, 1882 cannot be pressed into service. Where the letter relied upon by the tenant is written by the tenant himself and it is addressed to one of the landlords, section 53 A is not attracted.⁸⁷⁸

[s 107.8] By Both the Lessor and the Lessee

The third paragraph of the section was inserted by the amending Act of 1929.

The effect of this amendment is to settle a conflict of decisions as to whether a rent note signed by the lessee alone was a lease. These cases are cited in the note under section 105 under the heading "Rent notes." A close reading of the third paragraph indicates that there is no stipulation that the instrument must be signed by both the parties. The requirement is that when the lease is made by the registered instrument "such instrument shall be executed by both the lessor and lessee". The underlying purpose is that the creation of a lease is not a unilateral exercise of one of the parties, but a bilateral endeavour of both the lessor and the lessee. An instrument is usually executed through multifarious steps of different sequences. Whether both the parties have executed the instruments will be a question of fact to be determined on evidence. Merely because the documents show only the signature of one of the parties, it is not that the non-signing party has not joined in the execution of the instrument.⁸⁷⁹

In Asa Ram v Ram Kali,⁸⁸⁰ a kabuliat was executed by the lessee in favour of their lessors, but the latter did not execute any instrument in favour of the lessees. It was contended that the lessees could not claim the status of tenants solely on the strength of the kabuliat, which was only a unilateral undertaking. But the evidence showed that the lessors had accepted the kabuliat and received rent as prescribed therein. On the aforesaid facts, Supreme Court overruled the contention that the lessees could not claim the status of the tenant. The Allahabad High Court which adopted the contrary view prior to the introduction of the amendment in 1929, to section 107 of the TP Act, 1882, had occasion to consider a similar contention regarding one kabuliat executed after such amendment. In Gaon Sabha v Jagannath Singh,⁸⁸¹ the High Court, following the ratio of Asa Ram v Ram Kali, has held that there was no violation of section 107 of the TP Act, 1882. A letter addressed by the lessor to the lessee confirming that he had given to the lessee his land on a 10 year lease on the annual rent specified therein, was held not to be a lease deed in itself, and, therefore, there was no question of applying the provisions of section 107 of the TP Act, 1882 with regard to such a document.⁸⁸² Where an option to renew the lease is exercised by the lessor or the lessee, a valid lease does not automatically come into existence unless a registered renewed deed is executed, and the renewed deed satisfies the requirements of section 107. The option conferred is merely in the nature of pre-emption, and its exercise does not bring into existence a new lease, irrespective of other statutory provisions, such as the form, procedure, and modalities by which alone the lease can be brought into existence.⁸⁸³

[s 107.9] Decree or Order

The relationship of landlord and tenant may be created by a decree or order of a court. A decree operating to create a lease is not exempt from registration.⁸⁸⁴

A lease in violation of a scheme framed by the court may raise questions of validity.⁸⁸⁵

[s 107.10] Government Grants

Section 2 of the Government Grants Act, 1895 excludes government grants from the operation of the TP Act, 1882. This section, therefore, does not apply to a lease of government lands granted by the secretary of state, and the question of registration of such a lease is governed by section 90 of the Registration Act.⁸⁸⁶ Section 107 does not apply to leases granted by the government.⁸⁸⁷ Thus, the provisions of Government Grants Act and the TP Act, 1882 do not apply to any transfer of land by or on behalf of the government. The lease in such a case has to be construed as a tenancy at will, and the demand for possession by the landlord was sufficient.⁸⁸⁸ A lease of government distillery can be affected by inviting tenders.⁸⁸⁹ Where the original lease is registered, variation in the terms of a lease can be made only by another registered instrument. Any other communication purporting to introduce a variation in the lease is excluded by section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.⁸⁹⁰

An unregistered deed of lease in favour of the government of five years does not bring into existence the relationship of lessor and lessee, if possession has been delivered. In the case of a lease in favour of a party, delivery of possession under such a lease is sometimes regarded as a lease from month to month, rather than a licence simpliciter. However, where the purported lessee is the government, in view of Article 299 of the Constitution, the lease can be made only by a registered instrument. Hence, the government becomes only a licensee.⁸⁹¹ However, according to the Bombay High Court, a contract by the government, creating a monthly lease, must be in writing and must comply with Article 299 of the Constitution. The Constitution stands superimposed upon the general law. Even if section 107 permits an oral lease for creating monthly tenancy, the Constitution prohibits it.⁸⁹²

The transaction of lease is subject to levy of stamp duty under the Indian Stamp Act, 1899 and is governed by Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The subject matter of property and leasing are covered by field assigned to State legislature and thus, outside the purview of the General Legislature.⁸⁹³ A notice demanding transfer fee is valid if there is public interest involved for which consent of lessor was necessary.⁸⁹⁴

[s 107.11] Agricultural Leases

The provisions of this section have no application to a lease where the lease is for agricultural purposes, unless there is a notification to that effect in the state concerned under section 117,⁸⁹⁵ and any variation in rent does not make it registrable under the section.⁸⁹⁶ But the principle of the section can apply to such leases.⁸⁹⁷ It has, however, been held by Patna High Court,⁸⁹⁸ that though such a lease need not be in writing, if it is reduced to writing, it must be registered within section 17(l)(d) of the Registration Act.⁸⁹⁹ Payment and acceptance of rent would be sufficient to create a lease of agricultural land.⁹⁰⁰ A perpetual lease is required to be registered under the Act and where it is created, it amounts to transfer of ownership and necessary documents of the transfer of the property are to be executed.⁹⁰¹

[s 107.12] Punjab

Leases in Punjab where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force may be made by oral agreement, and the execution of a deed in writing is not necessary.⁹⁰² But this would no longer be so after the application of the TP Act, 1882.⁹⁰³ The Punjab and Haryana High Court has held that the provisions of section 107 of the TP Act, 1882 are not applicable to leases of agricultural land. Consequently, a lease deed even though unregistered would still be admissible in evidence.⁹⁰⁴

Under the power conferred by the proviso, some local governments have issued notifications enabling lease other than leases from year to year, or for a term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, to be made (as in the old Bombay state or Madhya Bharat)⁹⁰⁵ by an unregistered instrument, or (as in Sind) orally. For notifications by the state governments, different local rules and orders may be referred. The TP Act, 1882 is a central enactment which is traceable to entry 6 of List III, seventh schedule, of the Constitution of India. The Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, came into force and received the assent of the President in 1960, and therefore in the event if there is any inconsistency between the provisions of the Tamil Nadu Act and the provisions of the TP Act, to the extent of inconsistency, the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, shall prevail over the central Act and shall have overriding effect. Thus, the requirement of a registered instrument to create a valid lease though necessary under section 107 of the TP Act, 1882, is not necessary under the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, and a lease deed can be a basis to establish a general relationship between the owner and the tenant under the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960 irrespective of the fact that lease is not registered under it.⁹⁰⁶

The special benefit to which a tenant is entitled under section 106 of the Kerala Land Reform Act, 1964 can be claimed, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any law. Therefore, the inhibition contained in section 107 of the TP Act, 1882 (regarding a document of lease reduced to writing which is compulsorily registrable but not registered) cannot govern a case under the Kerala Land Reform Act. The rigour of section 107 cannot be applied to defeat the benefit conferred on the tenant. Courts have necessarily to act in furtherance of the object of the legislation enacted to ameliorate the weaker sections, and not to stifle the object of such legislation. The Kerala Land Reforms Act overrides section 107 of the TP Act, 1882. One is meant to safeguard the interests of the tenants, while the other is meant to deny the protection. When there is a conflict between the two, the tenant's interest should prevail.⁹⁰⁷

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, the lessor and the lessee of immovable property, as against one another, respectively, possess the rights and are subject to the liabilities mentioned in the rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property leased:—

(A) Rights and Liabilities of the Lessor

- (a) The lessor is bound to disclose to the lessee any material defect in the property, with reference to its intended use, of which the former is and the latter is not aware, and which the latter could not with ordinary care discover;
- (b) the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property;
- (c) the lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption.

The benefit of such contract shall be annexed to and go with the lessee's interest as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is for the whole or any part thereof from time to time vested.

(B) Rights and Liabilities of the Lessee

- (d) If during the continuance of the lease any accession is made to the property, such accession (subject to the law relating to alluvion for the time being in force) shall be deemed to be comprised in the lease;
- (e) if by fire, tempest or flood, or violence of an army or of a mob, or other irresistible force, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which it was let, the lease shall, at the option of the lessee, be void:

Provided that, if the injury be occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee, he shall not be entitled to avail himself of the benefit of this provision;

- (f) If the lessor neglects to make, within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself, and deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor;

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

- (g) if the lessor neglects to make any payment which he is bound to make, and which, if not made by him, is recoverable from the lessee or against the property, the lessee may make such payment himself, and deduct it with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor;
- (h) the lessee may ⁹⁰⁸[even after the determination of the lease] remove, at any time ⁹⁰⁹[whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards] all things which he has attached to the earth; provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it;
- (i) when a lease of uncertain duration determines by any means except the fault of the lessee, he or his legal representative is entitled to all the crops planted or sown by the lessee and growing upon the property when the lease determines, and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them;
- (j) the lessee may transfer absolutely or by way of mortgage or sub-lease the whole or any part of his interest in the property, and any transferee of such interest or part may again transfer it. The lessee shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease;

Nothing in this clause shall be deemed to authorise a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer or lessee;

- (k) the lessee is bound to disclose to the lessor any fact as to the nature or extent of the interest which the lessee is about to take, of which the lessee is, and the lessor is not, aware, and which materially increases the value of such interest;
- (l) the lessee is bound to pay or tender, at the proper time and place, the premium or rent to the lessor or his agent in this behalf;
- (m) the lessee is bound to keep, and on the termination of the lease to restore, the property in as good condition as it was in at the time when he was put in possession, subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force, and to allow the lessor and his agents, at all reasonable times during the term, to enter upon the property and inspect the condition thereof and give or leave notice of any defect in such condition; and, when such defect has been caused by any act or default on the part of the lessee, his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months after such notice has been given or left;
- (n) if the lessee becomes aware of any proceedings to recover the property or any part thereof, or of any encroachment made upon, or any interference with, the lessor's rights concerning such property, he is bound to give, with reasonable diligence, notice thereof to the lessor;
- (o) the lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell ⁹¹⁰[or sell] timber, pull down or damage buildings belonging to the lessor, or work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto;
- (p) he must not, without the lessor's consent, erect on the property any permanent structure, except for agricultural purposes;
- (q) on the determination of the lease, the lessee is bound to put the lessor into possession of the property.

[s 108.1] Amendment

In clause (h), the words “even after the determination of the lease” were inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. The words “whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards” were substituted by the same Act for the words “during the continuance of the lease.” In clause (o), the words “or sell” and the words “belonging to the lessor” were inserted by the same Act.

[s 108.2] Rights and Liabilities

The rights and liabilities of the lessor and lessee are determined—

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

- (1) by contract;
- (2) by local usage; and
- (3) by this section.

[s 108.2.1] Contract

These are the covenants expressed in the lease. An express covenant always overrides an implied covenant, ie, the covenants implied by this section.⁹¹¹ Thus, the covenant for quiet enjoyment under clause (c) may be excluded by a contract to the contrary. In a Calcutta case,⁹¹² there was an express covenant not to claim compensation for dispossession of any kind. This was valid, but did not relieve the lessor of his duty under clause (b) to put the lessee in possession.

In construing a lease deed the court must look at the words used in the contract, unless they are such that one may suspect that they do not convey the intention correctly. If the words are clear, there is very little the court can do about it.⁹¹³ Where under the express terms of the lease deed excavation of the demised premises was prohibited, it was held that digging of bore would amount to excavation.⁹¹⁴

[s 108.2.2] Local usage

A usage may still be in the course of growth and it may require evidence for its support in each case, but in the result it is enough if it appears to be so well known and acquiesced in that it may reasonably be presumed to have been an ingredient imported by the parties into their contract.⁹¹⁵ It need not be immemorial or universal if it is prevalent usage in the neighbourhood where the land lies.⁹¹⁶ When a usage is proved, it overrides the covenants implied by this section, and even express contracts are construed as subject to it.

[s 108.2.3] Section 108

This section, as said by J Coutts Trotter sets out in a convenient form the implied covenants usually subsisting in a lease.⁹¹⁷ Nearly all the clauses were said by CJ Rankin to be expressions of well settled principles, familiar to the law of England.⁹¹⁸ The section has no application to a tenancy at will, for a tenancy at will is not a lease as defined in the Act.⁹¹⁹

[s 108.3] Clause (a)—Lessor's Duty of Disclosure

This clause adopts the principle applied in the case of bailments by section 150 of the Indian Contract Act. The lessor is bound to disclose material defects with reference to the intended use of the property, but is not responsible for a defect of which he is himself unaware, or which the lessee is aware or could with ordinary care discover. The duty of disclosure is, therefore, limited to latent defects of which the lessor is aware. If the defect is patent, there is no duty and no occasion for disclosure. Therefore, there is no law against the letting of a tumble down house though this was doubted by J Kemp in a Bombay case.⁹²⁰

[s 108.4] Clause (b)—Duty to Give Possession

The lessor's implied covenant for title imports a duty to give possession. The lessor parts with his right to enjoy the property during the term of the lease, and it follows from it that the lessee gets that right to the exclusion of the lessor.⁹²¹ After possession is given, it is protected by the covenant for quiet enjoyment in clause (c). The lessee therefore has a statutory right to compel the lessor to put him in possession of the leased property,⁹²² as by granting a lease, the lessor undertakes to put the lessee into possession, and it does not matter that the lessor has not got possession himself. He, who lets, agrees to give possession, and not merely to give the chance of a law suit.⁹²³ An express covenant excluding the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment will not relieve the lessor of his duty to give possession.⁹²⁴ The lessor is not liable unless the lessee makes a request,⁹²⁵ and the lessor is not obliged to put an unwilling and recalcitrant lessee into possession.⁹²⁶ If the land is in the possession of a third person, possession is given by his attorning to the lessee.⁹²⁷ If the tenant hands over the possession to the lessor under an order of the Rent Controller for demolition, renovation and reconstruction, the tenant has an implied covenant for peaceful possession and enjoyment of the property.⁹²⁸

If the lessor fails to give possession, the lessee can maintain a suit on his lease for possession against the lessor and against any third person, who may be in possession.⁹²⁹ The lessee may also sue the lessor for damages.⁹³⁰ Under the Limitation Act, 1963, the period will be three years, whether the lease is registered or not, the special period for the breach of a registered contract having been deleted. The onus is on the lessor to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the lessee into possession.⁹³¹ But if the lessee has already paid rent under the lease, the onus of proving that he has not got possession is on him.⁹³² In the absence of any express provision granting over the terrace, the tenant/lessee cannot claim any right on the terrace above the portion of the property leased out to him by deeming fiction.⁹³³

So long as lease of immovable property does not get determined, lessee has a right to enjoy the property and this right is a right to property and cannot be taken away without the authority of law as provided in Article 300A of the Constitution. Further, without the determination of a valid lease, the possession of the lessee is lawful and such lawful possession of a lessee has to be protected by all courts and tribunals.⁹³⁴ Where the petitioner got an allotment of the land through fraud when the government decided to regularise land under the possession of the sevayats of lord lingraj by executing lease and sevayats were called to identify the land under their possession, he would not be entitled to get the delivery of possession of the property of land as per the lease deed.⁹³⁵

The lessor is not entitled to rent, unless and until he has fulfilled his obligation to put the lessee in possession of the land leased out to him.⁹³⁶ As regards the lessor's right to rent, as to when he did not put the lessee in possession of the whole of the leased land, the decisions were not uniform. In some cases, it had been held that if the lessor put the lessee in possession of only a portion of the property leased, the lessee would be entitled to a suspension of the whole rent, and in other cases to a reduction or abatement of rent. If the rent was an entire rent, ie, a lump sum rent for the whole land treated as an indivisible subject, the whole rent would be suspended until the lessee was put into possession of the whole.⁹³⁷ But if the land was let at a separate rent, ie, at so much per acre or per bhiga, the lessor was held entitled to an apportionment, and the lessee must pay a reduced or abated rent for the portion of which he has possession.⁹³⁸ Again, even if the rent was an entire rent, the lessee was only entitled to an abatement of rent if he knew at the beginning of the tenancy that part of the land was in the possession of another, and that the lessor would not be able to give him possession of it.⁹³⁹ This divergence of judicial opinion in India was set at rest in a case from Bengal in which the Judicial Committee held that in the case of a lease for a lump sum rent, the English Common Law rule of the suspension of entire rent should not be applied, where the lessor has failed to give possession of only a part of the premises leased.⁹⁴⁰ This decision clearly establishes that where the lessor fails to put the lessee in possession of the whole of the demised premises then, whether the premises were leased at a lump sum rent or at a rent at so much per acre or per bigha, there will not be a suspension of the entire rent, but that the lessee will be entitled to a proportionate reduction, or abatement of the rent.

This decision has been duly approved and followed by the Supreme Court in *Bibra, S K v Stephen Court*⁹⁴¹ in the case of the tenancy of a dwelling house; J Sikri (as he then was), observed:

On one hand it does not seem equitable that when a tenant enjoys a substantial portion of the property of the landlord, leased to him, without much inconvenience, he should not pay any compensation for the use of the property; in other words, to borrow the language of Sir George Rankin, that he should enjoy a windfall. On the other hand, it is unfair that if a tenant is not given possession of a substantial portion of the property, he should be asked to pay any compensation for the use of the property while he is taking appropriate measures for the specific performance of the contract. It seems to us that it will depend on the circumstances of each case whether a tenant would be entitled to suspend the payment of rent or whether he should be held liable to pay a proportionate part of the rent.

The note “Suspension of Rent”, under clause (e) may be referred.

[s 108.5] Clause (c)—Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment

The covenant implied by this section is the absolute covenant expressed in an English lease. The express covenant of an English lease is either

- (1) absolute or unqualified; or
- (2) restricted or qualified.

This is explained in the following passage from the judgment of J Mookerjee in a Calcutta case:⁹⁴²

This provision (clause (c) of section 108) secures for the lessee, the benefit of an unqualified covenant for quiet enjoyment. A qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heir and assigns, or any other person claiming by or under him, them, or any of them, whereas an unqualified covenant protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heirs and assigns, or by any other person or persons whomsoever. The covenant, in the unqualified form covers the case of interruption by the superior landlord or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising a power of re-entry, or otherwise, dispossessing the lessee. The chief distinction is that the restricted covenant does not cover eviction by title paramount, while the absolute covenant does protect the lessee even from title paramount.

In cases decided under the TP Act, 1882 the implied covenant under this sub-section has been held to be an unqualified covenant protecting the lessee from the title paramount.⁹⁴³

ILLUSTRATION

A leased some lands to B, who took possession under the lease. Subsequently, the government settled the lands with C and granted C a lease. B sued C for possession but failed, the decree providing that he should pay rent to C. B sued A for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment by reason of the constructive eviction. If B had proved that C, the government lessee had a better title than A, it would have been a case of eviction by title paramount and B would have been entitled to damages. But as B failed to prove a defect in A's title, it was a tortious eviction and B had no cause of action against A.⁹⁴⁴

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

Even before the TP Act, 1882, the covenant was implied in cases where the lessee was prevented from collecting rents, whether the interference was by the lessor himself,⁹⁴⁵ or other lessees of the lessor,⁹⁴⁶ or by title paramount,⁹⁴⁷ but not of course where the interference is by a stranger.⁹⁴⁸

The covenant does not extend to tortious acts.

Therefore, in absence of a forfeiture clause in the lease agreement, as regards non payment of rent, lessor cannot have a right to re-enter the premises but would be entitled to recovery of rent and its arrears with costs and interest. The departure from the restoration of possession to lessee when wrongfully dispossessed during subsistence of lease is warranted on grounds of equity, but the Power of attorney holder of the tenant does not have any locus standi to file appeal after termination of tenancy and such a claim is not maintainable.⁹⁴⁹ The applicability of writ jurisdiction to civil and private disputes of landlord-tenant relationship is limited to quashing the plaint or suit proceedings or to interfere with the injunction order passed by the trial court. The tenancy claims with allegations of harassment are not entertainable under Articles 226 and 227.⁹⁵⁰

An act done under compulsion of a statute is not within the covenant, for the covenant cannot be construed to be an agreement to do an illegal act.⁹⁵¹ So a lessee who was evicted under the Epidemic Diseases Act,⁹⁵² or under the Land Acquisition Act,⁹⁵³ had no cause of action against the lessor.

[s 108.5.1] Whether the covenant implied by section 108(c) applies to tortious acts

The covenant implied by section 108(c) protects against lawful, and not tortious interruptions; and this is so both in English as well as in Indian law. This is explained in the following classic passage in the judgment of CJ Vaughan in Hayes v Bickerstaff.⁹⁵⁴

By covenant in law, the lessee is to enjoy his lease against the lawful entry, eviction, or interruption of any man, but not against tortious entries, evictions or interruptions, and the reason of law is solid and clear, because against tortious acts, the lessee hath proper remedy against the wrongdoers.

In a further passage, the arguments against so extended a construction, were summarized as follows:

Inconveniences if the law should be otherwise—

- (1) A man's covenant without necessary words to make it such, is strained, unreasonable, and therefore, improbable to be so intended; for, it is unreasonable that a man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers, impossible for him to prevent, or probably to attempt preventing.
- (2) The covenantor, who is innocent, shall be charged, when the lessee hath his natural remedy against the wrongdoer; and the covenantor is made to defend a man from that which the law defends every man, that is, from wrong.
- (3) A man shall have double remedy for the same injury against the covenantor, and also against the wrongdoer.

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

- (4) A way is opened to damage a third person (that is the covenantor) by undiscoverable practice between the lessee and a stranger, for there is no difficulty for the lessee to secretly procure a stranger to make a tortious entry, that he may therefore charge the covenantor with an action.

However, when the act is that of the lessor himself, the lessee may sue on the covenant whether the act is wrongful or not.⁹⁵⁵

In Katyayani Debi v Udoy Kumar Das,⁹⁵⁶ the Privy Council observed that it was the duty of a tenant under a perpetual tenure to protect himself against illegal encroachments by others. This remark applies, however, to all leasehold estates; and Indian cases both before and after the TP Act, 1882 do not extend the covenant for quiet enjoyment to wrongful acts.⁹⁵⁷

A leases a mine to B on 22 April 1897, and later on 28 September 1901. A leases another adjoining mine to C. B removes certain pillars in his mine which cause a subsidence and C's mine is flooded. A is not liable to C, for B's act was a tort. Again B, through a lessee of A, was not a person claiming under A, for the act was not one authorised by A.⁹⁵⁸

But, where the lessor interfered with the lessee collecting rents from the sublessee and was himself the wrongdoer, this was said to be a breach of the covenant which justified a suspension of rent.⁹⁵⁹ So also, when the lessor's minor son challenged the lease.⁹⁶⁰ Indeed, in an old Calcutta case,⁹⁶¹ the lessor was held to be disentitled to rent because he had omitted to prevent his assignees from wrongfully evicting the lessee in butwara proceedings. The case is a strong one, but the decisions may be justified on the ground that the omission of the lessor amounted to active participation in the wrongful eviction.⁹⁶² On the other hand, the exception which allows the lessee to sue on the covenant in the case of a wrongful act by the lessor was overlooked in a Madras case,⁹⁶³ where it was said that no question of the covenant arose if the lessor instigated his former tenant to set up an unfounded claim, and thereby evict the lessee.

[s 108.5.2] Lessor may not derogate from his grant

There is a class of cases which are not covered by the covenant, but in which the lessor is liable on the ground that he must not derogate from his grant. The leading case is Alidin v Latimer, Clark, Muirhead Co,⁹⁶⁴ where the lessor demised land for a timber merchant's business and the lessee covenanted to carry on such business, and it was held that assigns of the lessor were not entitled to erect on adjoining property acquired from the lessor, buildings which interfered with the passage of air to the drying of sheds of the lessee. Another case on the same point is Jones v Consolidated Anthracite Collieries Ltd.⁹⁶⁵ The lessor had granted a mining lease, and then a building lease with reservation of the mines. Such a lease, implies the grant of a right of support from the mines. So when the buildings subsided, the lessor was held liable not on the covenant, but because he had derogated from his grant. The principle will not apply unless the disturbance is substantial, eg interference with privacy by the lessor constructing an external staircase on his adjoining building is not actionable.⁹⁶⁶

[s 108.5.3] Breach of covenant

A breach of covenant occurs when there is a substantial interference with enjoyment, even if it does not amount to dispossession. For instance, in Sanderson v Berwick-on-Tweed Corp,⁹⁶⁷ there was a breach when the lessee's field was flooded by overflow from a drain badly constructed by the lessor. Also in *Shaw v Stenton*⁹⁶⁸ where the lessor by excavating ironstone caused his lessee's coal mine to be flooded. In Manchester Sheffield & Lincolnshire Ry Co v Anderson,⁹⁶⁹ a railway company bought the reversion of a lease and started works which caused structural damage to the lessee's house and temporarily blocked the road giving access to it. The court held that the damage to the house was a breach, but that the temporary inconvenience caused by the blocking of the road was not a breach.

Interference with the lessee's use of the premises for the particular purpose for which they were taken is a breach. So, in a case already referred to,⁹⁷⁰ when premises were let for drying timber, the lessor could not use the adjoining land so as to block the access of air. But, interference which do not make the premises less useful generally, but only less useful for some purpose, unknown to the lessor at the time of the letting, is not a breach of the covenant. In Robinson v Kilvert,⁹⁷¹ the lessor let the upper part of a building for a paper warehouse, and then installed a heating apparatus in a cellar. This did not interfere with the lessee's comfort or make the house unfit for storing paper generally, but it did affect a particular class of delicate paper that lessee stored. This was not a breach of the covenant, for the lawful enjoyment of the house as a paper warehouse was not inferred with, and if the lessee required special protection he should have bargained for it. The disturbance must be the natural consequence of the act done. In Harrison, Ainslie & Co v Muncaster,⁹⁷² the lessee's mine was flooded by water from a mine of another lessee from the same lessor, who, while properly working his mine, tapped what is called a feeder, the effect of which was to release a large quantity of underground water. The lessor was not liable, for this was an extraordinary and accidental consequence of a lawful act. This case must be distinguished from Shaw v Stenton,⁹⁷³ where the collapse of the upper stratum of ironstone was a consequence which could have been foreseen. The disturbance must be physical interference; and it has no reference to noise.⁹⁷⁴ But persistent knocking on the door of the lessee and threatening to evict her and throw out her belongings, amounts to a breach of this implied covenant even though an assertion, however emphatic or rude, that the tenancy had determined, would not.⁹⁷⁵ The mere likelihood of interference is not enough; so, a decree which is not acted upon and, therefore, does not lead to actual entry and disturbance is not a breach.⁹⁷⁶

Interference with the lessee collecting rents from his sub-lessee is a breach.⁹⁷⁷ A sub-lessor is entitled to recover damages from the lessee, if the head lessor puts an end to the lease during the term of the sub-lease.⁹⁷⁸

[s 108.5.4] Damages

Damages for the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment are not limited by the rule in Bain v Fothergill,⁹⁷⁹ that a purchaser of real estate cannot recover damages for loss of his bargain, but only his deposit and expenses; nor is the measure of damages the amount or a proportion of the rent, for the two matters are not directly connected.⁹⁸⁰ The lessee in a case of eviction is entitled to recover the value of the term.⁹⁸¹ He is also entitled to recover the cost of any structure he may have erected,⁹⁸² and the costs of defending the action for eviction.⁹⁸³

[s 108.5.5] Payment of rent

The payment of rent and the performance by the lessee of the contracts binding on him are not conditions precedent to the covenant for quiet enjoyment. This has been held in English cases⁹⁸⁴ where the covenant usually contains a clause in terms similar to clause (c). These cases have been followed in a Madras decision⁹⁸⁵ where it is explained that the effect of a different construction would be to give the lessor a right of re-entry in the case of every breach by the lessee.

A similar clause in a different context may or may not operate as a condition precedent. Thus, when the right to a lease for a further term was dependent on the lessee paying rent and performing the covenants of the lease, this was construed as a condition precedent.⁹⁸⁶ In another case,⁹⁸⁷ a lessor who had previously purchased the premises from the lessee agreed to recover them at a certain date, and the agreement contained the following words: "You are further required to act rightly and in conformity with the deed of rent granted by you on this date, and in the event of your failing so to do, this agreement shall be null and void." This clause was not construed as a condition precedent as there was no natural connection between the lease and the right of repurchase, which was not forfeited when the rent fell into arrears. "The benefit of such contract shall be annexed to, and go with the lessee's interest".

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

The second para of clause (c) enacts that the covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land. It can, therefore, be enforced by the assignee of the lessee not only against the lessor, but also against the assignee of the lessor whose liability is also referred to in section 109.

Leases have always been an exception to the rule that all contracts are personal. The common law of England allowed the assignee of the lessee to enforce the covenant for quiet enjoyment against the lessor; and the Statute 32, Hen 8 c 34 extended the liability under the covenant to the assignee of the lessor. The law as to the liability on covenants in leases was settled in 1583 by Spencer's case,⁹⁸⁸ where it was held that the burden of a covenant runs with the land—

- (1) if it directly concerns the land and relates to a thing in esse irrespective of whether assigns are named; and
- (2) if it directly concerns the land demised and relates to a thing in future, and the assigns are named.

The notes “Leases,” “Covenants annexed to the land” and “Covenants” running with land” under section 40 may be referred.

The law as to covenants annexed to the land is also discussed under section 40. The liability under the lessee's covenants is explained under section 108. The liability under lessor's covenants is the subject of section 109.

It is not open to a licensee of the lessee, during the subsistence of the licence or in the suit for recovery of possession of the property instituted after the revocation of the licence, to set up title to the property on the ground that he had purchased the property from the owner and so, refuse to deliver possession.⁹⁸⁹

[s 108.5.6] Any part thereof

These words refer to the case where the lessee has assigned his interest in a part of the premises leased. They indicate that the covenant for quiet enjoyment can be apportioned under section 37. The duty of the lessor to perform the covenant is severed, and must be performed for the benefit of each sharer in the lessee's interest.

[s 108.6] Clause (d)—Accretions

The rule of English law is that land which imperceptibly accretes has the legal characteristics of the land on which it is formed.⁹⁹⁰

The doctrine of accretion is capable of applying to a land situated over the shores of an inland lake, whether the accretion be caused by wind or water, and irrespective of whether the land to which accretion is claimed is crown land. Of course, the accretion must be gradual and imperceptible, according to the English law. The doctrine will apply, unless expressly excluded in the conveyance.⁹⁹¹

The Privy Council decision in Secretary of State for India v Raja of Vizianagram,⁹⁹² should be related to the facts of that case.

Lord Wilberforce observed as under:

This is a doctrine which gives recognition to the fact that where land is bounded by water the forces of nature are likely to cause changes in the boundary between the land and water. Where these changes are gradual and imperceptible (a phrase considered further below), the law considers the title to the land as applicable to the land as it may be so changed from time to time. This may be said to be based on grounds of convenience and fairness. Except in cases where a substantial and recognisable damage in boundary has suddenly taken place (to which the doctrine of accretion does not apply), it is manifestly convenient to continue to regard the boundary between land and water as being where it is from day to day or year to year. To do so is also fair. If part of an owner's land is taken from him by erosion, or diluvion (ie advance of the water), it would be most inconvenient to regard the boundary as extending into the water. The landowner is treated as losing a portion of his land. So, if an addition is made to the land from what was previously Water, it is only fair that that landowner's title should extend to it. The doctrine of accretion in other words, is one which arises from the nature of land ownership, from in fact, the long-term ownership of property inherently subject to gradual processes of change. When land is conveyed, it is conveyed subject to and with the benefit of such subtractions and additions (within the limits of doctrine) as may be taking place over the years. It may of course be excluded in any particular case, if such is the intention of the parties. But if a rule so firmly founded in justice and convenience is to be excluded, it is to be expected that the intention to do so should be plainly shown.

The language of the English law was adopted by the Privy Council in Lopez v Muddun Mohun Thakoor,⁹⁹³ which was, however, a case of diluviated land reforming in situ. Again, in Secretary of State v Kadirikutti,⁹⁹⁴ the Madras High Court held that the English rule applied unless excluded by enactment or local usage. But the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation 11 of 1825, spoke of "gradual" (and not "imperceptible") accretion. The earlier Indian cases⁹⁹⁵ use the same phrase, and it is now settled that in India it is not necessary for the accretion to be imperceptible, and that it is sufficient that it is gradual.⁹⁹⁶ If the accretion is not imperceptible or gradual, no change occurs in the ownership of the land.⁹⁹⁷

[s 108.6.1] Lessee's right to accretions

Land gradually or imperceptible accreted forms part of the demise. The lessee holds it during his term, paying a proportionate increment of rent, and must surrender it to the lessor at the end of the term. This law has been declared in various local Acts,⁹⁹⁸ and in cases decided both before and after TP Act, 1882,⁹⁹⁹ but a mere licensee who has no property in the land would acquire no right by an accretion.¹⁰⁰⁰

[s 108.6.2] Encroachments

The English rule as to accretions applies whether the accretion is caused by natural or artificial means, provided the means are lawful and the accretion is gradual.¹⁰⁰¹ The dictum of Lord Chelmsford in A G v Chambers,¹⁰⁰² and followed in Secretary of State v Kadirikutti,¹⁰⁰³ that if the acts causing artificial accretion were done with that intention, the rule did not apply, seems to have been overruled by Bradford Corp v Pickles.¹⁰⁰⁴ Therefore, although the clause does not in terms apply to encroachments made by the lessee, the law as to encroachments is the same. If the lessee encroaches upon adjoining land and acquires title thereto by prescription, he must surrender the land, to the lessor at the expiry of the term whether the land be waste land or land of a stranger.¹⁰⁰⁵ The true presumption is that the land so encroached upon is added to the tenure and forms part thereof, for the benefit of the tenant so long as the original holding continues, and afterwards for the benefit of the landlord.¹⁰⁰⁶ If the land of the lessor is encroached upon, the lessor may of course, eject the lessee before he has acquired a prescriptive title,¹⁰⁰⁷ but not in the interval after the acquisition of that title, and before the end of the term.¹⁰⁰⁸ Nor can the lessor eject the lessee before the expiry of the term, if he has recognised him as lessee of the land encroached upon.¹⁰⁰⁹ It has, however, been held that if a lessee encroaches, the property encroached upon must be treated as part of the demised premises, and the lessee

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

must repair it under the covenant to repair.¹⁰¹⁰

[s 108.7] Clause (e)—Destruction

The generally accepted rule that is also endorsed by the Supreme Court in T Lakshmipathi v P Nithyananda Reddy,¹⁰¹¹ is that a lease of a house or of a shop is a lease not only of the superstructure, but also of its site. It would be different if not only the site, but also the land beneath, ceases to exist by an act of nature. In the event having been created in respect of a building standing on the land, it is the building and the land which are both components of subject matter of demise, and the destruction of the building alone does not determine the tenancy when the land which was site of the building continues to exist, more so when the building has been destroyed or demolished neither by the landlord, nor by an act of nature, but solely by the act of the tenant or the person claiming under him.

This clause overrides clause (m), and there is no duty to repair or restore, if the property leased is destroyed by fire not caused by the negligence of the lessee.¹⁰¹² If after the destruction of the premises leased, being a thatched shed, the lessee builds a new premises on the land despite the protest of the lessor, he cannot claim tenancy in respect of those premises, if the lease was for premises only, and not for land.¹⁰¹³ The site of a building on which it stands would be an integral or component part of the building. Thus, when a lease of a residential or commercial building is granted, it would normally take in the site, unless it is either expressly or impliedly excluded from the lease. Even complete destruction of a house does not by itself determine the tenancy of the land on which it stood. The right of a lessee in the lease property subsists even if the leased property has been destroyed by fire, tempest, or flood, or violence of an army or of a mob or other irresistible forces, unless the lessee exercises his option that on happening of such events the lease has been rendered void. By necessary corollary, therefore, if the leased property is destroyed wholly by fire, the lease cannot be said to be extinguished, nor can it be said that lessee's right in the leased property has come to an end, unless the lessee exercises such option. It means that destruction of the tenanted structure does not extinguish the tenancy automatically, and the right of occupation of the tenant under the contract of tenancy continues to exist between the parties.¹⁰¹⁴ Without the site, the superstructure of the building on the land cannot normally exist. There cannot be a building without a site and once a structure is put up on the land, the site becomes a part of the building. Section 108 (e) of the TP Act, 1882 may not be helpful in deciding the relationship between the parties when one is to consider the question on the basis of the definition under the rent control Act. Moreover, when there is no complete destruction of the building, only then the principle of section 56 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, read with section 108 (e) of the TP Act, 1882 can be applied. The relationship will continue till the tenant is evicted,¹⁰¹⁵ but if by some convulsion of nature the very site ceases to exist, by being swallowed up altogether, or buried in the depths of the sea, it seems clear that any lease of the property must come to an end.¹⁰¹⁶ Thus, where the shop room used as a godown by the tenant was pulled down by the municipal authorities, it was held that even after the destruction of the superstructure of the shop room, the tenant was entitled to continue in possession of the land on which the shoproom stood before its destruction as part of the demised property, subject to all the rights and liabilities as a tenant, since the landlord tenant relationship continued to exist.¹⁰¹⁷ The complete destruction of the subject of the lease ie, the building/superstructure and the destruction of the underlying land in a lease deed will affect leasehold rights but where a godown that was given on lease was destroyed by fire but the lessee did not opt for declaration of the lease deed as void, he would not be deemed to have exercised his rights under section 108 (e) as even as the godown was destroyed, the land on which it stood was still in possession of the lease.¹⁰¹⁸

However, the Supreme Court's¹⁰¹⁹ decision stands in sharp contrast to the abovementioned rulings. The apex court held that where the tenancy is exclusively for premises and not for land, on the destruction of the subject matter, the tenancy stands extinguished. A perusal of section 108(B)(e) shows that where a premises has fallen down under the circumstances mentioned therein, the destruction of the shop itself does not amount to determination of tenancy under section 111. In other words, there is no automatic determination of tenancy, and it continues to exist. If the tenancy continues, the tenant can only squat on the vacant land, but cannot use the shop for carrying on the business as it is destroyed, and further he cannot reconstruct any shop on the vacant land. Under such circumstances, it is tenant who is to suffer as he is unable to enjoy the fruits of the tenancy, but he is saddled with the liability to pay monthly rent to the landlord. It is for such a situation that the tenant has been given an option under section 108(B)(e) to render the lease of the premises void and avoid the liability to pay monthly rent to the landlord. Section 108(B)(e) cannot be interpreted to mean that the tenant is entitled to squat on the open land in hope that in future if any shop is constructed on the site where the old shop existed, he would have right to occupy the newly constructed premises on the strength of original contract of tenancy. The lease of a shop, is transfer of the property for its enjoyment. On destruction of the shop the tenancy cannot be said to be continuing since the tenancy of a shop presupposes a property in existence, and there cannot be subsisting tenancy where the property is not in existence. Thus, when the tenanted shop has been completely destroyed, the tenancy right stands extinguished as the demise must have a subject matter, and if the same is no longer in existence, there is an end of the tenancy and, therefore, section 108(B)(e) has no application in case of premises governed by the state rent Act when it is completely destroyed by natural calamities.

[s 108.7.1] Destruction by landlord

Destruction of the premises by the landlord is not an act of God, and section 108(e) does not apply. The tenant is protected by section 108(e). Suit by the tenant for directing the landlord to restore possession in the original condition is maintainable.¹⁰²⁰

[s 108.7.2] Clause (e) and the doctrine of frustration

In India, the provisions of sections 32 and 56 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 codify the law on the subject of contingent contracts and discharge due to impossibility. This was stressed by the Supreme Court in Ganga Saran v Ram Charan Ram Gopal,¹⁰²¹ and has been reaffirmed in *Satyabrata Ghose v Miigneeram Bangur & Co.*¹⁰²² It is not, therefore, possible to invoke the English doctrine of frustration as such in India. In the latter case, the Supreme Court observed that the doctrine (section 56) could apply to contracts for the sale of lands, as such contracts do not in Indian law create an interest in land. Presumably, therefore, it would apply to an agreement to grant a lease. As far as a lease is concerned, there is no scope for the doctrine as such, for, the mutual rights and obligations of parties in such cases are settled, subject to a contract to the contrary, by clause (e), and this has been so held.¹⁰²³ Where the property leased is not destroyed or substantially and permanently unfit, the lessee cannot avoid the lease, because he does not, or is unable to use the land for purposes for which it is let to him. The doctrine of frustration of contracts as embodied in section 56 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 has no application to leases which invoke a transfer of property, and the principle of frustration to the extent embodied in section 108(e) of the TP Act, 1882 alone, applies to leases governed by the TP Act, 1882.¹⁰²⁴

Clause (e) clearly indicates that where a material part of the property has been destroyed, it is the lessee's option to treat the lease as void. This clause is obviously based on the assumption that there is no frustration in the sense of the lease automatically coming to an end,¹⁰²⁵ for it is left to the volition of the lessee only, and not to that of the lessor, to put an end to it, provided that he is not in default. In this sense, therefore, clause (e) only partially accepts the doctrine of frustration in its application to a lease.

Cases have arisen in India in which demised premises have been requisitioned by the government for long periods of time. Thus, it has been held that where part¹⁰²⁶ or even the whole¹⁰²⁷ of the demised premises have been requisitioned, there is no frustration of the lease. No reference was made in these cases to clause (e). If reference was made to it, vital interesting questions would have arisen. First of all, it would have had to be considered whether the governmental action of requisitioning amounted to "other irresistible force", or whether these words had to be read ejusdem generis so as to mean some physical force. A single judge of the Allahabad High Court has, however, held that clause (e) can have no application where premises are demolished under the orders of a municipal authority.¹⁰²⁸ The next question would have been whether the property had been "rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purpose for which it was let". In Purshonam v Batala Municipality,¹⁰²⁹ A obtained a lease of tonga stands from the municipality for ₹5,000, but during the whole period of the year the tongawallas refused to use the stands for no fault of A. It was held that the contract was frustrated. No question was raised as to whether a lease could be frustrated at all. Where except a small portion of the wall of the structure which was leased alongwith the site all the remaining portions fell down, and the structure did not remain levitate, even then there would be no frustration of lease, and the landlord tenant relationship would not come to an end. However, in such a case, the tenant was not entitled to put a superstructure on the site without the permission of the landlord, and the landlord would be entitled to get decree of mandatory injunction to demolish the structure put up by the tenant.¹⁰³⁰

[s 108.7.3] Other illustrative decisions—Clause (e)—Applies

This clause gives the lessee the option of avoiding the lease by notice, if the premises are rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which they were let by any of the events described. The clause was applied and the lessee was allowed to avoid the lease when coffee plants,¹⁰³¹ and godowns¹⁰³² were destroyed by fire during the term of the lease. The Madras High Court doubted whether the clause applied when the property leased was flooded with sea water.¹⁰³³

[s 108.7.4] Clause (e)—Does not apply

The clause was held not to apply when a house was damaged by earthquake so as to need repair, but which was not in danger of collapsing.¹⁰³⁴ or when a godown was destroyed by fire caused by the negligence of the lessee's watchman.¹⁰³⁵ Nor will the clause assist a lessee of salt pans who is prevented from manufacturing salt by labour trouble,¹⁰³⁶ or where there is temporary damage due to a cyclone,¹⁰³⁷ or where crops are damaged by heavy rains,¹⁰³⁸ or where the parties have specifically provided for the payment of rent in the contingency contemplated by this clause.¹⁰³⁹

The clause confers an option, and the lease subsists if the lessee does not exercise it.¹⁰⁴⁰

Under section 108(e), where the property is destroyed, the lessee has the option to treat the lease as void. But where the destruction of the premises is on account of the wrongful act of the lessee, he cannot treat the lease as continuing and can neither construct a building in place of the destroyed building, nor require the lessor to reconstruct the destroyed building.¹⁰⁴¹ In such cases, the lease comes to an end and no question of notice to quit under section 105 arises.¹⁰⁴²

[s 108.7.5] Rent

The notice avoiding the lease takes effect immediately on service, and section 106 has no application.¹⁰⁴³ Rent is apportioned and the lessee is liable for rent up to the date of his notice. But if the lessee does not give vacant possession, he will be liable for rent on an implied tenancy by holding over.¹⁰⁴⁴

This clause was referred to in a Lahore case,¹⁰⁴⁵ where a cantonment market was blown down after the cantonment Authority had granted license for the sale of vegetables for three years. The TP Act, 1882 applies in cantonments, and the court in one passage of the judgment treated the license as a lease which the lessee had omitted to avoid under section 108(e). Another part of the judgment treated the license as an agreement, and suggested that the abandonment of the premises amount to rescission. The court omitted to notice that if the document was a lease, registration was necessary, and the terms of the lease could not be proved. The case seems to have been one of a license revoked by the destruction of the premises and thereafter, renewed by permission to set in other premises.¹⁰⁴⁶

[s 108.8] Clause (f)—Lessor not Liable to Repair

The lessor is under no liability to repair in the absence of an express contract making him liable.¹⁰⁴⁷ Indeed, section 108(m) implies that the liability is that of the lessee.¹⁰⁴⁸

[s 108.8.1] Lessor's covenant to repair

The words in the section "any repairs which he is bound to make to the property" refer to an express covenant to repair. The onus of proving such express covenant is on the lessee. If the lessor commits a breach of his express covenant, the lessee is not entitled to terminate the tenancy; for the section gives him the right after notice to the lessor, to do the repairs himself and deduct the amount from the rent.¹⁰⁴⁹ The lessor's covenant to repair, and the lessee's covenant to pay the rent are independent covenants.

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

A lessor's covenant to repair is construed on the same principles as the lessee's covenant to repair,¹⁰⁵⁰ and does not extend to giving the lessee a different thing from that which he took at the beginning of the tenancy.¹⁰⁵¹ A covenant to repair external parts of a house has been construed to apply to a wall left without proper support by reason of the demolition of an adjoining house under a local statute.¹⁰⁵² Where the lessor of shop premises, forming part of the lessor's building which contained a theatre and a rehearsal room, covenanted to keep the exterior of the demised premises in good and tenantable repair and condition, and owing to a severe frost and not to any default of the lessor, certain sprinklers for discharging water in case of fire fitted in the rehearsal room and extending to the demised shop, burst and damaged the lessee's goods, it was held that there had been no breach of the covenant.¹⁰⁵³ Where an under-lease contained a covenant by the sub-lessor to "keep the outside walls and roofs in good and tenantable repair as and so far only as is required to be done by them under the head lease" and by the head lease the lessee (the predecessor in title to the sub-lessor) covenanted to keep the premises "in good and tenantable repair (destruction or damage by fire and fair wear and tear excepted)", it was held that the exception includes damage to the outside walls and roofs caused by natural agencies such as rain, wind and decay and also consequential damages to the interior of the house.¹⁰⁵⁴ A covenant by a lessor to repair is construed in English law as covenant to repair upon notice,¹⁰⁵⁵ even with reference to defects in existence at the time of demise,¹⁰⁵⁶ and this, is also the effect of the section in TP Act. The law in England, and also this section requires the tenant to give notice to the landlord of latent as well as patent defects irrespective of whether the landlord has means of access, otherwise no responsibility attaches to the landlord in respect of the covenant to repair.¹⁰⁵⁷

The lessor's covenant to repair overrides the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and gives the lessor a right of entry for a reasonable time to perform his covenant.¹⁰⁵⁸ The cleaning of a flue comes within the expression "executing repairs" and entitles the lessor to enter upon the demised premises under covenant of the lessee to permit the lessor to enter upon the demised premises for "executing repairs".¹⁰⁵⁹

The rule of tort that, on the lessee entering into possession, the lessor would not be liable even for existing defects, has certain exceptions — as when, under the contract, the lessor was bound to maintain the demised premises in sound condition. Therefore, where wiring and its maintenance were the responsibility of the lessor, and a visitor dies of severe electrical shock owing of defective wiring in the premises, the lessor was alone liable for the loss caused. The lessor would not be liable where he was under no obligation to attend to the upkeep.¹⁰⁶⁰

[s 108.8.2] Breach of express covenant

The lessor is liable for injury caused to the lessee by breach of an express covenant to repair, but not for injuries caused to the lessee's wife.¹⁰⁶¹

The occupier and not the owner is prima facie liable for damages for nuisance on the demised premises, or for injury of third persons, or to adjoining property due to the house being in a dilapidated condition.¹⁰⁶² But the lessor may be liable if the house was in a defective condition when it was let, or if he has committed a breach of his covenant to repair, and thereby injury is caused to a neighbouring owner,¹⁰⁶³ or to a passer-by,¹⁰⁶⁴ for according to the maxim sic mere tuo ul alienum non laedas, the owner owes a duty to his neighbour whether the neighbour's title is of property or of passage.¹⁰⁶⁵

ILLUSTRATION

A's assignor leased a Port Trust godown to B for a term of five years, beginning on 1 May 1911. On 15 April 1912, the assignor assigned the reversion of the lease to A. At the time of the assignment the godown was inspected by the Port Trust officials, and found to be in good order. On 19 February 1915, a wall of the godown collapsed and damaged the wall of the adjoining godown of C. C sued A and B for damage. Held, that A was not liable as the godown was in a good condition when let, but that the tenant B was liable.¹⁰⁶⁶

[s 108.8.3] Remedies of the lessee

The lessee has the right by this section to do the repairs himself, in case of the lessor's default after reasonable notice; but he is not entitled to terminate the tenancy by reason of the lessor's default and to quit,¹⁰⁶⁷ unless the performance of the covenant has been made a condition of the continuance of the lease.¹⁰⁶⁸ The lessee may deduct the cost of repairs with interest from the rent. A covenant by the tenant to pay the rent without deduction does not exclude the tenant's right to make this deduction.¹⁰⁶⁹ But when a tenant is not deprived of the premises destroyed, he cannot ask for the abatement of the rent.¹⁰⁷⁰

[s 108.9] Clause (g)—Payments Made on Behalf of Lessor

If the lessee makes a payment which the lessor is bound to make, and which if not made is recoverable from the lessor or from the land, the lessee is a person interested in the payment and is, therefore, entitled to be reimbursed. This is enacted in section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and the illustration to that section is that of a payment made by a tenant of land revenue payable by the zamindar in order to prevent the sale of his holding. So a patnidar is entitled to recover land revenue due by his superior landlord, and paid by him to avoid the risk to his holding.¹⁰⁷¹ If the lessor's mortgagee obtains a decree for the sale of the property leased, and the lessee pays the decretal amount and stops the sale, the lessee is entitled to recover the amount so paid under this section.¹⁰⁷² But a payment which the lessor is not bound by law to make is not within the section.¹⁰⁷³

Payments under this section may be government assessment or ground rent or rates and taxes payable by the landlord.¹⁰⁷⁴ The lessee reimbursed himself either by deducting the amount paid with interest from the rent or aliunde, eg by counterclaim to the lessor's suit for rent. The operation of this clause may, however, be excluded by special stipulation in that behalf. By an express condition in the contract, a lessee may undertake to pay all taxes due, such as the urban immovable property tax or riot tax in Bombay.¹⁰⁷⁵

In section 108(g), the term "neglect", in regard to taxation, should mean the non-payment of the tax at the time when it is payable and, in the absence of anything exceptional, the non-payment would be deemed to be "neglect", after the expiry of a reasonable time for the payment of the tax.¹⁰⁷⁶

[s 108.10] Clause (h)—Fixtures

This clause refers to the lessee's right to remove fixtures.

[s 108.10.1] Amendment

This sub-section has been amended by the insertion of the words "even after the determination of the lease" to settle a conflict of decisions referred to in Angammal v Aslami Sahib,¹⁰⁷⁷ as to whether a lessee is entitled to an allowance of a reasonable time after the determination of the lease for the removal of his fixtures. A further amendment by the words "whilst he is in possession of the property leased and not afterwards" fixes definitely the time during which the right may be exercised. The amendment introduces no new principle, but limits and defines the tenant's right to remove as one to be exercised during the term, and negatives any right to remove when the tenant is not in possession.¹⁰⁷⁸ If he once quits possession, he may not return and the fixtures become the property of the lessor.

[s 108.10.2] Subject to a contract to the contrary

Section 108 opens with a non obstante clause which reveals that where there is a contrary to the contrary the provisions of section 108(h) would not apply.¹⁰⁷⁹ Clause (h) of section 108 confers a right on the lessee to remove either during or even after the determination of the lease, at any time whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards, all things which he has attached to the earth which will include any building raised by him on the leased land. However, such right is subject to a contract or local usage to the contrary.¹⁰⁸⁰ In *Dhairyawan v J R Thakur*¹⁰⁸¹ the Supreme Court held that although under section 108, the lessee has the right to remove the building but by the contract, in the facts of the case, the lessee had agreed to hand over the same to the lessors without the right to receive compensation at the end of the lease. The matter would be governed by the contract between the parties. Such a contract did not transfer the ownership in the building to the lessors only while the lease subsisted. Obviously at the end of the lease, the things attached to earth by the tenants pass over to lessor-owners of land in accordance with the contract. On determination of lease, as entered into between the parties the consequences which follow are: (i) the lease of land comes to an end; (ii) the ownership of building raised by principal tenants stand vested in the lessor-owners of land, the building goes with the land, (iii) the principal tenants have to physically vacate the property, and (iv) the lessor-owners stand subrogated in place of principal tenants.

The section is subject to a contract to the contrary, and has no application if there is special stipulation in the lease as to the lessee's right of removal and of compensation.¹⁰⁸² If, on a true construction of such a lease, the buildings to be erected thereon are deemed to be the property of the lessor, and are leased back to the lessee, they are part of the demised premises, and the lessee is entitled to the benefit of the rent Acts;¹⁰⁸³ where, however, the building remains the property of the lessees during the pendency of the lease, on its expiry the lessee is not entitled to claim the protection of such acts qua the building.¹⁰⁸⁴

[s 108.10.3] All things which he has attached to the earth

The phrase "attached to the earth" has been explained in a note under section 3, and includes trees, shrubs, buildings and machinery. The lessee's right does not depend upon the maxim of English law quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit, but on the common law of India as stated in *Poramanick's case*¹⁰⁸⁵ which this section follows. In that case, a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court said:

We think it should be laid down as a general rule that, if he who makes the improvement is not a mere trespasser, but is in possession under any bona fide title or claim of title, he is entitled either to remove the materials, restoring the land to the state in which it was before the improvement was made, or to obtain compensation for the value of the building if it is allowed to remain for the benefit of the owner of the soil—the option of taking the building, or allowing the removal of the material, remaining with the owner of the land, in those cases in which the building is not taken down by the builder during the continuance of any estate he may possess.

The lessee is the owner of the building put up by him on the land leased.¹⁰⁸⁶ It is by now well settled that the maxim, what is annexed with the soil goes with the soil, has not been accepted as absolute rule of law of this country. A person who bona fide puts up constructions on land belonging to others with their permission would not be a trespasser, nor would the buildings so constructed vest in the owner of the land.¹⁰⁸⁷

The English law allows a tenant to remove fixtures such as can be removed without causing serious damage to the structure, but under this section the lessee may remove anything he has attached, provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it.

The right to remove the buildings negatives the rights to compensation.¹⁰⁸⁸ The option is with the lessor either to take the building on payment of compensation, or if he is unwilling to pay compensation, to allow the lessee to remove the building.¹⁰⁸⁹ If there is nothing to remove, as when the tenants have sunk a well in the property, there is no right to compensation.¹⁰⁹⁰ But if the land and building are acquired under the Land Acquisition Act during the term, the lessee will be entitled to compensation for the buildings he has erected.¹⁰⁹¹ Where the leased land was acquired by the government for the lessee-company, while the lessee company was still in possession, and continued to be in possession by virtue of the land having been acquired, the Supreme Court held that the real effect of clause (h) of section 108 was that the lessor could not claim any title to the construction or the materials.¹⁰⁹²

The principle of the section was applied when a lease proved to be invalid, and the tenant was allowed to remove a building he had erected.¹⁰⁹³ But in such a case, a tenant has no higher right on equitable grounds or otherwise, and cannot claim compensation; he is only entitled to remove the structures.¹⁰⁹⁴ A lessor is entitled to require the lessee to remove a permanent structure on the land leased, which the latter has erected in breach of the conditions of the lease and against the will of the lessor.¹⁰⁹⁵ Section 13 of Tamil Nadu City Tenants Protection Act, repeals or modifies the provisions of the TP Act, 1882 to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of that Act. Thus section 108(h) of the TP Act, 1882 will not in a case where that Act applies, govern the question as to payment of compensation for superstructure.¹⁰⁹⁶

[s 108.10.4] Trees

Trees are part of the land, and the right of the tenant to cut them down depends upon custom and the terms of the lease.¹⁰⁹⁷ In the absence of a contract to the contrary, trees planted by a tenant pass to the landlord on the expiry of the lease.¹⁰⁹⁸ The question generally arises in agricultural tenancies which are outside the scope of TP Act, 1882. The tenants' rights vary in different provinces according to local usages and local Acts. In Bengal, the tenant's right has varied at different times. Before the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, the tenant had the right to enjoy the benefit of trees on his holding, but not to cut them down, unless they had been planted by himself.¹⁰⁹⁹ After the Bengal Tenancy Act his right was enlarged, and he had the right to fell trees which were on the land when it was leased to him, unless the landlord could prove a custom prohibiting him from doing so;¹¹⁰⁰ but the trees when felled were the property of the landlord,¹¹⁰¹ unless they had been planted by the tenant himself or his predecessor.¹¹⁰² The Allahabad High Court has held that a tenant at fixed rates has rights of ownership, and that the trees belong to him,¹¹⁰³ yet an occupancy tenant has only the right to enjoy the trees so long as his tenure lasts,¹¹⁰⁴ and is not entitled even to trees which he has planted himself.¹¹⁰⁵ The Bombay and Madras High Courts recognize the right of a permanent tenant to trees planted by himself.¹¹⁰⁶ So also, the Calcutta High Court when the tenancy has come into existence after the TP Act, 1882.¹¹⁰⁷ With regard to the trees that were on the land when the lease was granted, the tenants are not entitled to fell or sell timber trees. They may enjoy the usufruct thereof. In regard to the trees which have been planted after the commencement of the tenancy, the tenant is entitled to fell timber trees, but not non-timber trees.¹¹⁰⁸ However, this does not apply to babul trees which have spontaneously grown, and the lessee cannot remove them.¹¹⁰⁹ The lessor cannot cut down trees that belong to him during the continuance of the term, unless he has reserved a right of re-entry for that purpose,¹¹¹⁰ for his entry would be a trespass.¹¹¹¹ But if the trees are expressly exempted from the demise, such exemption would probably carry with it the incidental right of re-entry for removal.¹¹¹² In the absence of special custom to the contrary, the principle underlying section 108 can be invoked in the case of agricultural leases. Such a lessee is not entitled to claim the timber of trees which have spontaneously grown on the land.¹¹¹³

[s 108.11] Clause (i)—Crops

Where the lease is of uncertain duration and the lessee's interest is determined otherwise than by his fault, the lessee is entitled to the benefit of all crops growing on the land, and planted or sown by him. As ancillary to the right to remove growing crops, the lessee has the right of free ingress to and egress from the property in order to carry them away, for "when the law doth give anything to one, it giveth impliedly whatsoever is necessary for the taking and enjoying of the same".¹¹¹⁴ The right under this section is similar to that given by section 51 to a bona fide transferee who has sown crops, and is evicted by a person having a better title. A similar right is reserved by the common law of England in regard to emblements grown by a tenant from year to year whose tenancy is determined by no fault of his. This section has, therefore, been described as representing the common law of India.¹¹¹⁵ The section does not apply directly to agricultural tenancies, but the principle would no doubt be applied. Various local Acts safeguard the evicted tenant's right to their crops.

[s 108.12] Clause (j)—Assignment

Property rights are ordinarily heritable in nature.¹¹¹⁶

In English law a tenant can, as an ordinary incident of the estate granted to him, both assign his term, and create sub-tenancies. Except as to some non-transferable agricultural tenancies, this has been the law in India both before and after the TP Act, 1882.¹¹¹⁷

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

The rule of the lessee assigning the interest under a lease can in India be taken away by a contract to the contrary.¹¹¹⁸ Where there is a permanent lease, and there is no covenant restricting the right of the lessee to assign his interest, the lessee's rights are heritable and transferable.¹¹¹⁹

The clause does not apply to tenancies of homestead land in Bengal created before the passing of the TP Act, 1882, and these are not transferable except by custom or by a condition in the contract.¹¹²⁰ The clause refers to assignments that are absolute and to assignments by way of mortgage and sublease. It has, however, been held that a lessee cannot by his unilateral act of assigning his interest in the leasehold premises, put an end to the obligations which he has undertaken either by contract of lease, or under this section. As far as privity of contract is concerned, the only person liable is the lessee himself. The obligation to hand over possession of the property on the determination of the tenancy is not upon the assignee, but upon the lessee. The lessee is, therefore, the proper person to whom notice to vacate should be given.¹¹²¹ In a case where the lease-deed itself stipulated that the buildings put up by the tenant shall not be sold or let out to others, it was held that the doctrine of dual ownership could be of no avail to the tenant.¹¹²² A relinquishment is different from an assignment of tenancy.¹¹²³ In the case of the latter, the assignor remains liable to the landlord for the fulfillment of his obligations as a tenant, while the assignee becomes liable by the privity of the estate. In the absence of a contract, no consent of the landlord is necessary for the assignment. The relinquishment of possession must be to the lessee, or to one who holds his interest. The surrender or extinguishment extinguishes the lease.¹¹²⁴

[s 108.12.1] Absolute assignments

Absolute assignments are assignments of the whole interest of the lessee. Such an assignment creates privity of estate between the lessor and the assignee, and the assignee becomes liable to the lessor on covenants running with the land, including the covenant to pay rent.¹¹²⁵ Equally, the assignee is entitled to the benefit of all the covenants, including an option given to purchase the reversion. However, this liability does not extend to pay interest on arrears of rent.¹¹²⁶

In English law; a sublease for the whole residue of the lessee's term operates as an absolute assignment of the lease. So does a sublease for a term exceeding that of the head lease. The Privy Council has pointed out that this is not the law in India, and that a sublease for the whole of the expired term does not operate otherwise than by a sublease.¹¹²⁷

[s 108.12.2] Assignment by way of mortgage

An Indian mortgage is not as a rule an absolute assignment, and does not create privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee;¹¹²⁸ though, of course, the mortgagee of the term when he forecloses stands in the shoes of the lessee.¹¹²⁹ It has been held that a privity of estate is created where the usufructuary mortgagee pays rent to the lessor who accepts it,¹¹³⁰ but this does not seem to be consistent with the decision of the Privy Council in Ram Kinkar's case.¹¹³¹ As pointed out by the Privy Council in a later case,¹¹³² even after a mortgage the lessor retains certain interest. The mortgagee cannot be liable to the lessor for the whole of the rents and covenants, and cannot be liable for any part of it without apportionment even if he takes possession. In such circumstances, if the mortgagee in possession pays the whole rent to the lessor, he may be regarded as doing so on behalf of the lessor, and such payment will not by itself create a privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee. Nor will taking of possession by the mortgagee create such privity. An English mortgage is in the form an absolute assignment, and when a mortgage in India took this form, it was thought that it made the mortgagee of the term liable by privity of estate to the lessor. This rule was laid down by CJ Wallis in Thethalan v The Eralpad Rajah.¹¹³³ The same view was adopted by CJ Rankin in Bengal National Bank v Janakinath Roy.¹¹³⁴ This was, however, doubted by J Mukerji in the undernoted case.¹¹³⁵ There was thus a conflict of decisions as to whether an English mortgage by a lessee of his leasehold interest operated as an absolute assignment so as to create a privity of estate with the lessor. This conflict has now been set at rest by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ram Kinkar v Satya Charan,¹¹³⁶ in which it has been held that a mortgagor in India, when he assigns his interest under a lease to a mortgagee, does not under any of the forms of mortgage specified in section 58 transfer an absolute interest and consequently, the mortgagee is not liable by privity of estate for the burdens of the lease.

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

[s 108.12.3] Assignment by way sublease

A subletting is permissible under a contract between the landlord and the tenant.¹¹³⁷ The term “sub-let” is not defined under the TP Act, 1882. However, the definition of “lease” can be adopted mutatis mutandis for defining “sub-lease”. What is “lease” between the owner of the property and his tenant, becomes a sub-lease when entered into between the tenant and tenant of the tenant, the latter being sub-tenant qua the owner-landlord. A lease of immovable property as defined in section 105 is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property made for a certain time for a consideration of a price paid or promised. A transfer of a right to enjoy such property to the exclusion of all others during the term of the lease is sine qua non of a lease. A sub-lease would imply and stands discharged by adducing prima facie proof of the fact that the alleged sub-tenant was in exclusive possession of the premises or, to borrow the language of section 105, was holding right to enjoy such property. A presumption of sub-letting may then be raised, and would amount to proof unless rebutted.¹¹³⁸

A sublease is an assignment of a lesser term and accordingly, there is no privity of estate between the lessor and the sublessee,¹¹³⁹ and this is so in Indian law, although the sublease is for the whole residue of the term.¹¹⁴⁰ A sublease which specifies no term is construed as one for the whole residue of the term.¹¹⁴¹ Subletting postulates two distinct persons—the head tenant and sub-tenant.¹¹⁴² A mere arrangement for management of the business of the tenant on fixed monthly payments, is not an agreement of sub-tenancy.¹¹⁴³ Where the landlord enters into an agreement of lease directly with the sub-lessee, the relationship of sub-tenancy between the lessor and sub-lessee may come to an end. From the date of attornment, the status of sub-tenant comes to an end, and the sub-lessee becomes a lessee. It was held that in the circumstances of the case, it was open to the landlord to enter into a direct lease with the sub-lessee.¹¹⁴⁴ Where the lessee of business premises enters into an agreement of partnership respecting the business, such a deed would amount to an assignment only if the premises are an asset of the partnership.¹¹⁴⁵

In the case of sub-letting, the onus lying on the landlord would stand discharged by adducing prima facie proof of the fact that the alleged sub-tenant was in exclusive possession of the premises or, to borrow the language of section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, was holding right to enjoy such property. A presumption of subletting may then be raised and would amount to proof unless rebutted.¹¹⁴⁶ Where the property had been sub-let without the permission of the landlord, it violates section 108 of the TP Act, 1882 if there is an express stipulation in the lease deed barring such sub-letting.¹¹⁴⁷ If the premises remain the possession of the tenant or sub-tenant after the termination of the tenancy, then there is an obligation to pay mesne profits.¹¹⁴⁸ The burden of proof in an eviction suit lies on the landlord to prove illegal subletting, even if the tenant has parted with the legal possession of the premises in favour of another person without the landlord's consent. Subletting can be proved on the basis of legitimate inferences.¹¹⁴⁹ Where an advertisement for sale was given by LIC but instead a sub lease was pressed upon with a restraint clause that the sub-lessee will not be entitled to further transfer, mortgage, sublet, sub-lease or otherwise part with the possession of the property without prior consent of the Cuttack Development Authority in writing ... and the allottees cannot mortgage the house with any nationalized bank for any purpose other than construction without due permission or cannot create a permanent right of tenancy over the said land, but that there shall not be any restriction to let out the building in question on rent for the purpose for which it is constructed, the writ petition challenging such restraint was allowed.¹¹⁵⁰

A decree passed against the original lessee is binding upon the sub-tenant and non-joinder of such sub-tenant in the eviction suit filed by head lessor against its lessee will not make the eviction decree inexecutable qua sub-tenant. The sub-lessee does not acquire any independent right in respect of the suit premises.¹¹⁵¹

The right of lessee springs only from letter of allotment and lease agreement and he is obliged to comply with and adhere to conditions of letter of allotment and lease agreement, he cannot compel the lessor to allow it to use the land for some other purpose than specified in such letter of allotment and lease agreement.¹¹⁵² In an agreement entered into between the lessee and sub-lessee for management, maintenance of tenancy held by the tenant, no deed of lease was executed between them and so a mere agreement of maintenance does not confer any right upon sub-lessee to prefer appeal as a co-lessee, being not a co-lessee he was neither necessary nor proper party and would not be entitled to challenge the decree of eviction suffered by the lessee.¹¹⁵³ In the renewal of a lease, there exists an inefficacy of renewal of sub-lease during subsistence of renewal of head lease.¹¹⁵⁴

[s 108.12.4] Liability of the lessee after the transfer

The section expressly enacts that the lessee by transferring the whole of his interest does not absolve himself from his contractual liabilities to the lessor.¹¹⁵⁵ Notice to the lessor of the transfer does not affect the liability.¹¹⁵⁶ The original lessee is liable on his covenant, ie, by privity of contract and the assignee is liable by privity of estate. There is no inconsistency between the liabilities of the two.¹¹⁵⁷ The word “only” shows that mere transfer does not absolve the lessee, and that the transfer coupled with other circumstances may do so. Thus, the liability of the lessee ceases when the lessor releases the lessee. The release may be express or implied. The facts that the lessor served a notice on the assignee determining the lease, that the lessor filed a suit against the assignee describing the latter as lessee in the plaint and recovered judgment which, however, remained unsatisfied, have been held, in the last mentioned Bombay case, not to be enough to justify an inference that the lessor had released the lessee.

[s 108.12.5] Privity of estate

In early times, the action of debt for rent in England was proprietary. The idea of a personal obligation played a very small part in the relation of landlord and tenant; and the landlord who demanded a rent in arrear was not seeking to enforce a contract, but was seeking to recover a thing. The result was that under the old system of pleading, the lessor in the absence of an express covenant, could not maintain an action for debt against the lessee for rent accruing due after an assignment of the term. Subsequently, when the personal and contractual nature of the action for debt was recognized, it became necessary to explain how a person who was not party or privy to the contract could be made liable. This difficulty was got over by applying the principle that the assignee who takes the whole interest of the lessee in the land takes it subject to the burdens. As between himself and the lessor, the assignee stands in the place of the lessee, acquiring his rights and being subject to his liabilities, and in fact becomes a tenant. In the case of a sublease, the sublessee becomes a tenant of the lessee, and does not stand in the lessee's place. Therefore, there is neither privity of estate, nor privity of contract between the head lessor and the sublessee, and the sublessee is not liable for rent nor on the covenants in the head lease to the head lessor.

The doctrine of privity of estate has been applied in India in cases referred to in the next paragraph. But in Keshavalal v Maganlal,¹¹⁵⁸ CJ Beaumont doubted whether the doctrine could be applied in India because the lessee in India has no estate, and because there is no reversion in the case of a perpetual lease. The word “estate” originally referred to the feudal tenure under which all real property was held for some estate under the Crown. It first meant personal status, and then status in relation to land, and now means simply the interest of a tenant in his land. In this sense it applies to the interest of a lessee in Indian law, for the lessee is recognized as having an interest in section 108(c) and section 108(j). Then, as to reversion, it is true that in English law a lease in perpetuity would operate as a grant in fee simple, and there would be no reversion. But in Indian law there is a reversion, for as Sir Lawrence Jenkins said:

A man who being owner of land grants a lease in perpetuity, carves a subordinate interest out of his own and does not annihilate his own interest.¹¹⁵⁹

It seems therefore, that CJ Beaumont, referred to privity of estate in the strictest sense of English law, ie, the relationship between a legal term and a legal estate in reversion. The phrase “privity of estate” when applied in

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

India, cannot carry precisely the same implication as in English law, since the common law of England attached very special results to the relationship between the tenant of a legal term and the owner of a legal estate in reversion, which differed in many respects from the relationship between a tenant and a landlord who had no legal reversion. But if the expression is used with reference to the relationship of landlord and tenant, there seems no reason why the principle underlying the doctrine, viz that the assignee who takes the whole interest of the lessor should take it subject to the burden, should not apply in India.

[s 108.12.6] Liability of assignee to the lessor

The doctrine of privity of estate has been applied in India, and also the liability of the assignee of the term to the lessor is founded upon privity of estate. An absolute assignee is liable by privity of estate to the lessor for rent,¹¹⁶⁰ and on all covenants running with the land. There is neither privity of estate, nor privity of contract between the head lessor and the sublessee or mortgagee and, therefore, the sublessee or mortgagee is not liable for rent, or on covenants in the head lease to the head lessor.¹¹⁶¹ The liability of an assignee from a lessee to pay rent to the lessor arises because of the privity of estate and, therefore, the assignee is not liable for the period prior to the date of the assignment, unless by some clear contract he becomes liable.¹¹⁶²

The respective liabilities may be expressed in a table as follows:—

Lessor
↓
Lessee	→ Absolute assignee
↓
Liability to lessor by privity of contract and privity of estate		Liability to lessor by privity of estate.
↓
Sublessee and Mortgagee
Not liable to lessor as there is no privity of estate or of contract.

The lessor can, therefore, enforce payment of rent from the lessee by privity of contract; and also from the assignee of the lessee by privity of estate. But he can have execution only against one.¹¹⁶³

The lessee ceases to be liable, and the privity of contract is extinguished when the lessor accepts rent from the assignee or otherwise recognizes him as his tenant¹¹⁶⁴ in circumstances implying that the lessor has released the lessee. This would also be the case where the lease is varied by the lessor and the assignee, for this would amount to a new lease, but the lessee would continue to be liable where the assignee exercises an option for renewal contained in the original lease.¹¹⁶⁵ Mere acceptance of rent from the assignee by itself, it is submitted, is not enough to release the lessee. But there is no such recognition when the assignee pays the rent not as assignee, but as the agent of the lessee.¹¹⁶⁶ In Treasurer of Charitable Endowments v Tyabji,¹¹⁶⁷ it has been held that on an assignment of a lease, although a property in estate comes into existence between the lessor and the assignee, the lessee continues to remain liable to the lessor in respect of all the covenants between him and the lessor. A lessee, therefore, cannot by his unilateral act of assigning his interest in the leasehold premises, put an end to his obligations which he has undertaken either under his contract to lease, or under this section.

The liability of the assignee is founded upon privity of estate, and it, therefore, continues only so long as his estate lasts and he is only liable for rent due and for breaches of covenant incurred during his time.¹¹⁶⁸ As the liability rests upon privity of estate, it ceases when the assignee makes a reassignment.¹¹⁶⁹

A leases a house to B for a term of nine years commencing on 1 January 1900. B on 1 January 1901, assigns the lease to C. C on 1 July 1901 assigns the lease to D. B is liable by privity of contract to A for the rent of the years 1900 and 1901. C is liable to A by privity of estate for the rent of the first half year of 1901. D is liable to A by privity of estate for the rent of the second half year of 1901.

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

However, if there be a special covenant by the assignee to pay the rent, the liability of the assignee continues even after assignment by him. Further, a covenant by the assignee with the lessee to pay the rent is not a mere covenant of indemnity, but is an absolute covenant the benefit of which may be assigned by the lessee to the lessor who may sue upon it, although the assignee is no longer possessed of the rent. The liability of the assignee does not depend upon possession,¹¹⁷⁰ for mere possession does not render a man liable for rent if there has not been a complete assignment.¹¹⁷¹ The contrary decision in a Bombay case¹¹⁷² is based on a misreading of the English authorities as shown in the judgment of CJ Wallis in Thelhalan v Eralpad Rajah.¹¹⁷³ The assignee is liable for rent from the date of the assignment, and not from the date of taking possession.¹¹⁷⁴

[s 108.12.7] Liability of assignees of part of the demised premises to the lessor

The question of apportionment of rent or other covenant in the case of the assignment of a part of the demised premises by the lessee is not free from difficulty. The Patna High Court has taken the view, with some doubt, that in such a case the lessor is entitled to sue the assignee for the whole rent, and the assignee is liable jointly and severally with the lessee for the entire rent.¹¹⁷⁵ In a later case, the same High Court has held that if the assignee of a part is in separate possession of that part, he is liable only for proportionate part of the rent.¹¹⁷⁶

[s 108.12.8] As between the lessee and absolute assignee

The primary liability to the lessor being that of the assignee who has the property, the liability of the lessee has been said to be that of a surety for the assignee. So if the lessee has had to pay rent accruing during the period of the assignment or damages for breach of covenant during the holding of the assignee, he can recover from the assignee. It is usual to express this liability in a covenant for indemnity, and when so expressed, it is a contractual liability which the assignee cannot get rid of by re-assignment. In the case of a sublease of the property which is subject to a maintenance charge and the sublease contains a covenant for quiet enjoyment, on the sublessor failing to pay the maintenance charge, the sublessee is entitled to pay the same in order to secure quiet enjoyment of the property, and to then recover the same from the sublessor.¹¹⁷⁷

[s 108.12.9] Covenants running with the land

The liability of the assignee is on covenants running with the land. This expression has been explained in the note under section 40 and in the note under section 108(c). The following are instances from case law:

- (i) a covenant by the lessor to grant a perpetual lease on a part of the land demised, in case the lessee required it for an indigo factory;¹¹⁷⁸
- (ii) a covenant for renewal;¹¹⁷⁹
- (iii) a covenant giving the lessee an option to purchase;¹¹⁸⁰
- (iv) a covenant in a lease of a mine to leave a barrier of coal of a certain thickness between it and the mine;¹¹⁸¹
- (v) a covenant by the lessor to renew, as it affects the very existence and continuance of the term.¹¹⁸²

[s 108.12.10] Collateral or personal covenants

A collateral or personal covenant is a covenant which affects land other than that demised, or affects the covenantor personally. Such a covenant does not run with the land, and, except under the equity referred to in the next paragraph, cannot be enforced against assigns.¹¹⁸³

[s 108.12.11] Restrictive covenants

Covenants relating to land may bind an assignee in equity, if they are of restrictive nature, though they are not made by a lessee in relation to the land comprised in the lease, or are otherwise not binding on the assignee at law.¹¹⁸⁷ This is on the principle that “a party shall not be permitted to use the land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into by his vendor and with notice of which he purchased”.¹¹⁸⁸ This is so whether the covenant be that of the lessor or of the lessee.

[s 108.12.12] Covenant not to assign

The lessee's right to transfer or assign his interest is subject to a contract to the contrary. Section 10 shows that the right of the lessee to alienate may be restricted. If the restrictive clause gives the lessor a right to re-entry, its breach may under section 111(g) involve the forfeiture of the lease, and the consequent extinction of the right of the assignee.¹¹⁸⁹ If there is no provision of re-entry, the breach does not give the lessor a right to determine the lease,¹¹⁹⁰ but only a personal right to an injunction or damages.¹¹⁹¹ Since the amendment of section 111(g), a provision in the lease that it shall be void in case of assignment without a right of re-entry is not sufficient to determine the lease, and the undernoted cases¹¹⁹² are now obsolete.

Section 10 recognises the validity of conditions restrictive of alienation in leases where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him. The construction put upon these words in some cases¹¹⁹³ is that the restriction is invalid, unless accompanied by a proviso giving the lessor a right of re-entry on breach. This view was dissented from on the ground that every restriction is for the benefit of the lessor.¹¹⁹⁴ The covenant cannot be invalid, for such a covenant by itself, will support a suit for injunction and damages.¹¹⁹⁵ The words in section 10 seem to be words of explanation, rather than of limitation. In some cases¹¹⁹⁶ the covenant not to assign has been described as inoperative. This can only mean inoperative as being per se, and without words giving a right of re-entry, insufficient to determine the lease. Section 111(g) has been amended to show that a mere provision that the lease shall be void on breach of condition, is not enough to determine the lease. Whether the restriction is by simple covenant or by a covenant to which a right of re-entry is annexed, an assignment in breach of the condition is valid. This is because the condition is constructed as making the lease voidable at the lessor's option; and until the lessor exercises his right of re-entry, the assignment stands. This is the law in England, and is followed in India.¹¹⁹⁷ But it has been suggested that the lessor could treat the assignment as a nullity.¹¹⁹⁸ This point was referred to by CJ Wallis in Udipi Seshagiri v Seshawa,¹¹⁹⁹ and again by the Judicial Committee in Hunsraj v Bejoy Lal Seal,¹²⁰⁰ but in neither case was it decided.

A covenant against absolute assignment is not broken by a sub-lease for the whole residue of the term. The English law that such a sub-lease operates as an absolute assignment does not apply in India.¹²⁰¹

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

Where the lessor entered into an agreement of sale of the leasehold interest that belonged to the government in violation of the conditions of the lease deed, the state cannot be directed through a suit for specific performance to execute a sale deed in favour of the vendee and pro forma defendant and as owner of the land would be entitled to re-enter the suit premises as well as prevent the use of the land for purposes other than that specified in the lease deed.¹²⁰² Where the tenant claimed that the partnership business was run in shop with consent of the landlord, the burden of proving the consent on part of the landlord would be on the tenant and not on the landlady.¹²⁰³

[s 108.12.13] Consent of lessor

A lessee who is under a covenant not to assign may not assign without the consent of the lessor. Such consent must be a direct consent to a contemplated assignment to a particular assignee.¹²⁰⁴ This is frequently expressed in the covenant, and with the added term that such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld. This is construed not as a covenant by the lessor not to withhold consent unreasonably, but as a qualification of the covenant not to assign. So if consent is unreasonably refused, the lessee may assign without consent, or may obtain from the court a declaration of his right to assign.¹²⁰⁵ Consent is unreasonably withheld if the lessor refuses to consent because he wishes to regain possession of the premises, but not if he genuinely believes that the assignment would be detrimental to the property. A covenant in a lease not to assign the demised premises without first obtaining the lessor's consent, and that such consent is not to be unreasonably withheld is not a separate covenant which the lessee has to fulfill. It only limits or qualifies the lessee's covenant not to assign by relieving him from the burden of the covenant, if the lessor withholds his consent unreasonably.¹²⁰⁶ Such a covenant is construed to enable the lessor to refuse his consent only if he has bona fide objection to the proposed lessee from the point of view of his respectability or financial responsibility.¹²⁰⁷

The onus of proving that the consent has been unreasonably withheld should be on the lessee. A transfer by the lessee of his right in contravention of the terms of the lease is not wholly void, but voidable at the instance of the landlord.¹²⁰⁸ A superstructure built on a plot taken on joint lease can be partitioned by metes and bounds according to the respective shares of the parties, while keeping the plot underneath as joint, and no permission of the lessor is needed for affecting the partition of the building by metes and bounds.¹²⁰⁹

[s 108.12.14] Statutory restrictions on sub-letting

There can be no assignment or transfer of government land.¹²¹⁰

In absence of any statutory bar positively prohibiting the creation of sub-tenancies, the contract of sub-tenancy is valid, and enforceable. The rent control legislations restricting such assignments and sub-letting by tenant, by providing that the sub-letting or assignment shall not be done without the previous consent in writing of the landlord, do not make the unauthorised transaction void ab initio, though it can be avoided at the instance of the landlord. Until and unless it is avoided, it remains a valid transaction as between the tenant and the unauthorised sublessee.¹²¹¹

Under West Bengal Tenancy Act, 1956, the Calcutta High Court relying upon the decision of Supreme Court in *Dhuli Chand v Janminder Dass*¹²¹² and Ramsaran v Pearylal,¹²¹³ held that mere knowledge of the landlord about occupation of the tenanted premises by a sub-tenant and acceptance of rent for the tenanted premises tendered by the tenant in the name of the sub-tenant will not create sub-tenancy, unless induction of such tenant is made with the written consent of the landlord.¹²¹⁴ Where the tenant retained complete and exclusive control and possession of the premises and the other party had been specifically excluded from having any right or interest in the premises or tenancy, the mere fact that the tenant was only to sell the products of such other or was to follow marketing strategies or instructions on decoration and design of a specified agency, would not mean that the premises have been sublet.¹²¹⁵

[s 108.12.15] Involuntary assignment

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

An involuntary assignment by the operation of law is not a breach of the covenant; for the covenant is not the same as one to do no act from which an assignment may result. Hence, it is not broken by an execution unless the proceeding is collusive.¹²¹⁶ On the other hand, a covenant may be so framed as to restrain involuntary assignment.¹²¹⁷

[s 108.12.16] Runs with the land

A covenant not to assign or sub-let runs with the land.¹²¹⁸ But a contractual restriction on assignment does not apply to an assignment by a person upon whom the property has devolved by the operation of law, and who is under an obligation to assign, and so a trustee in bankruptcy may assign despite the covenant.¹²¹⁹ A liquidator of a company in voluntary winding up is bound by the covenant,¹²²⁰ and so is the liquidator of a company in a company winding up, for he represents the company and acts on their behalf.¹²²¹ The covenant is, extinguished on the extinction of the lease by merger.¹²²²

[s 108.12.17] Strictly construed

The courts do not favour restriction on alienation, and covenants not to assign are strictly construed. An assignment of a part is not a breach of a covenant against assignment of the whole.¹²²³ A covenant against assignment does not prevent sub-letting,¹²²⁴ and a covenant against sub-letting does not prevent sub-letting of a part.¹²²⁵ Nor does a mere contract to sub-let which does not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties amount to a breach of covenant not to sub-let.¹²²⁶

[s 108.12.18] The whole or any part

These words recognize the right of the lessee to assign or sub-lease not only the whole, but also a party of the property. An assignment of a part creates privity of estate,¹²²⁷ and the assignee is liable for a proportionate part of the rent.¹²²⁸

The assignee of a part of the property leased is entitled to the benefit of covenants which run with the land and which can be apportioned under section 37, so far as they affect his part of the land. Such covenants may be covenant to repair, or a covenant for quiet enjoyment. In Simpson v Clayton,¹²²⁹ an assignee of a share of sub-lease was allowed to recover damages for breach of the lessee's covenant to obtain a fresh lease from the head lessor, without joining the owner of the other share of the sub-lease as a party. But a covenant for renewal of a lease is a covenant to renew the lease as a whole, and a lessee who has assigned his interest in a part cannot by suit for specific performance require renewal of the lease as to the part that he has not assigned.¹²³⁰

[s 108.12.19] Non-transferable tenures

These are tenures which are by custom not transferable. They are generally agricultural tenures to which this chapter does not apply. A similar exception was added to section 6 of TP Act, 1882 by Act 3 of 1885. Agricultural tenancies are generally regulated by local Acts. The note under section 6(i) may be referred in this connection.

If a non-agricultural tenancy is by custom not transferable, that custom overrides the provisions of this section.¹²³¹ The incident of non-transferability was common to tenancies of homestead lands and of agricultural lands before the passing of the TP Act, 1882 in the absence of a custom to the contrary.¹²³² But section 26B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended by Bengal Act 4 of 1928, the holding of an occupancy raiayat in Bengal was subject to the provisions of that Act, capable of being transferred like other immovable property.

[s 108.13] Clause (k)—Lessee's duty of disclosure

The lessor is by section 108(a), under an obligation to disclose defects of which he is aware and which affect the intended use of the property, but the duty of the lessee is more limited. He is only bound to disclose facts affecting the lessor's title which increase the value of the lease, and of which the lessor is unaware. The section is similar to section 55(5)(a) which imposes a similar duty on the buyer and refers to the title, and not to physical advantages. A lessee like a buyer would be under no duty to disclose the existence of a coal mine of which the lessor was unaware. The note under section 55(5)(a) may be referred in this connection.

But if the lessee obtained an agreement for a renewed lease, in consideration of the surrender of the old lease, suppressing the fact that the person on whose life the old lease depended was then on his death-bed, the agreement could not be enforced.¹²³³

[s 108.14] Clause (l)—Obligation to pay rent

Under this sub-section there is an implied covenant by the lessee to pay rent. But there is no charge for unpaid premium¹²³⁴ as in the case of unpaid price. Again as all leases have now to be executed by both parties, the covenant will always be expressed. The obligation to pay rent begins as soon as the lessor has fulfilled his obligation under section 108(b), and put the lessee in possession.¹²³⁵ This would be so, even if one of the joint lessees is in actual possession, and the other lessee is not obstructed by lessor in getting joint possession.¹²³⁶ Payment to one of several joint lessors is a payment to all¹²³⁷ and conversely, payment by one of several joint lessees is a payment by all.¹²³⁸ But payment to a landlord by a stranger to the tenancy of a sum equivalent to the amount of the rent owing by the tenant is not a good satisfaction of the rent, even if it be accepted by the landlord, unless it is made by the payer as agent for and on behalf of, or in the name and account of the tenant or with his authority or subsequent ratification. Thus, where the tenant being in arrears, the estate agent of the landlord paid the amounts in arrears out of his own pocket in the hope of recouping himself when the tenant would pay and, the tenant not still paying, the estate agent on behalf of the landlord put in a distraint and recovered the amount, it has been held that there had been no satisfaction of arrears of rent, and distraint was not unlawful.¹²³⁹ Joint lessors may sue together, or any one of them may sue alone for the whole rent.¹²⁴⁰ for a lease who are the joint tenants of a property operates as a lease by each and by all. If lessors are tenants-in-common, lessee should pay rent on joint receipt to all, or to one who is authorised by the others. Payment to one co-sharer landlord is not a discharge against all.¹²⁴¹ If a lessor purchases the whole of the interest of the lessee, the whole of the lease is extinguished by merger, but there can be no merger or extinction where one of the several joint holders of the mokarari interest purchases a portion of the lekhraj interest.¹²⁴²

Lessors who are tenants-in-common can maintain a joint action for rent or one co-sharer may sue for the whole rent if he joins the other co-tenants as parties.¹²⁴³ But one co-sharer cannot sue separately for his share of the rent, unless there is an agreement that the lessee shall pay each his share separately.¹²⁴⁴ However, the mere fact that they have been recovering rent separately in the past does not prevent them from suing jointly.¹²⁴⁵ Where the plaintiff and defendants were joint owners of a zamindari and the defendants purchased the lessee's interest in certain parcels, it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain a suit for rent for those parcels, apparently because the rights of the parties could only be worked out in a partition suit.¹²⁴⁶ Where premises were let out to two persons who jointly and severally covenanted for the payment of rent and on the death of one the other paid the whole rent, it has been held in England that as the lease created a joint tenancy both in law and in equity and as the surviving tenant succeeded to the whole benefit of the lease, there was no reason why equity should compel the executors of the deceased tenant to contribute.¹²⁴⁷ In India, it is submitted, the two tenants would be regarded as co-tenants and the benefit of the lease will also devolve upon the legal representative of the deceased, and the surviving tenant will be entitled to contribution. Where there is a joint electricity meter for the tenants of the property, there being no privity of contract between the tenants inter se, each tenant would be liable to pay only his share of the electric bills.¹²⁴⁸ Where the electric charges are not fixed and can only be ascertained at the end of the month, after electricity consumed is known, while the rent is payable in advance, it is clear that the electric charges cannot be held to form part of the rent.¹²⁴⁹

Where the tenant and the landlord had agreed and the same was through letters written by the tenant as well, that the tenant would pay for increase of 10% in respect of all tenancies and additional increase of 15% for the ground floor lobby, the landlord would be entitled to such agreed occupation charges month by month for use and occupation of the premises as well as the enhanced rate.¹²⁵⁰ In a suit or eviction, the rent note can be admissible in evidence.¹²⁵¹ Where the tenant was inducted in the premise on the fixed rent but the lessor claimed increased rent on the basis of an unregistered rent note that was not signed by both the parties, his claim on the basis of such rent note would be improper.¹²⁵² In Surinder Singh Arora v Rajeev Dhirgra,¹²⁵³ the lease was executed for nine years through a registered deed. It contained a clause as per which, in case of two months consecutive default the lease was liable to be terminated. The tenants did not pay the rent for a year and the lessors terminated the lease. In light of clause (f) of section 108 the court directed the lessee company to hand over vacant physical possession of the leased premises.

A stipulation for interest on arrears of rent is enforceable.¹²⁵⁴ Even if there is no such stipulation, as rent is a certain sum payable at a certain time, interest on arrears of rent are recoverable under the Interest Act if the lease is in writing, or otherwise from the date of demand in writing, giving notice that interest will be claimed. The Patna High Court has, however, held that in the absence of any term in the lease providing for the payment of interest, the claim of interest upto the date of the suit cannot be allowed.¹²⁵⁵ A mere omission by the lessor to charge interest is not a waiver of his right.¹²⁵⁶ Where in a mining lease, the lessee covenanted to pay the royalty and also to “pay and discharge all taxes, rates assessments and impositions whatsoever being in the nature of public demands which shall from time to time be charged, assessed or imposed upon the said mines”, it has been held that the lessee was under this covenant liable to reimburse the lessor for the road and public works cess and the expenses of the Mines Board of Health paid by the lessor, but not for income tax paid by the lessor on the royalty.¹²⁵⁷

The lease agreement provided that the lessee should pay the house tax and other taxes. But the lessor did not intimate to the lessee the actual amount of the taxes due and the lessee, therefore, could not pay it. On the lessor's refusal to receive the rent on the ground that the lease had been forfeited for non-payment of taxes, it was held that in the circumstances there was no justification for forfeiture.¹²⁵⁸ An increased payment is sometimes stipulated for in case of breach of covenant, eg not to carry on certain trades;¹²⁵⁹ to restore to its original condition land on which slag had been placed;¹²⁶⁰ not to sell hay off the premises.¹²⁶¹ English cases turn upon the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages. If it is a penalty, only the actual damage suffered is recoverable, but if it is a liquidated damage, the full amount is recoverable as increased rent. But in India, the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages having been abolished, the lessor cannot recover more than reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount named. In a Madras case,¹²⁶² increased rent in the event of a breach of any of the several stipulations was allowed as liquidated damages. No reference was made to section 74 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and it is submitted that the increased rent should not have been allowed except on the finding that it was reasonable compensation. In Tejendro Narain Singh v Bakai Singh,¹²⁶³ the lessee held fields under a kabuliyat, some at rents of eight, some of four, and some of two annas for seven years and by that kabuliyat, agreed that on the expiry of the term he would execute a fresh kabuliyat and then cultivate, and that if he cultivated without executing a kabuliyat, he would pay at the uniform rent of ₹4. The lessee did not execute a fresh kabuliyat and was charged at the rate of ₹4. The court held, J Rampini dissenting, that the increase was a penalty. It is submitted that J Rampini was right. The agreement to execute a fresh kabuliyat was not a condition of the existing tenancy. At the determination of the tenancy the agreement gave the tenant the option (1) to restore possession; or (2) to execute a kabuliyat for a fresh tenancy on such terms as might be agreed; or (3) to continue in possession on an oral tenancy at a rental of ₹4; and he accepted the oral tenancy. Where after a lease has been granted, another lease of the same property is granted, terms being concurrent with the existing lease, which transfers an interest in the reversion and entitles the concurrent lessee to recover the rent from the earlier lessee.¹²⁶⁴

Generally, the tenant is not expected to demand from the landlord issue of a rent receipt for the payment of the rent. After all, it is a relation of confidence between the landlord and the tenant, unless there is a special contract in that behalf.¹²⁶⁵

[s 108.14.2] Time of payment

The section does not specify the proper time for payment. That may be fixed by the terms of the lease or by custom, and, if not, it is at the end of the period for which the rent is reserved.¹²⁶⁶ It has been held that if rent is payable on a specified day, it is due then, and is in arrears on the day following.¹²⁶⁷ Rent may be reserved, payable in advance as forehand rent. But if rent is paid before it is due, it is treated as an advance to the landlord with an agreement that on due date, such advance will be treated as a fulfillment of the obligation to pay rent. The note “Rent paid in advance” under section 50 may be referred. The inclusion of future rents does not make the tenancy invalid.¹²⁶⁸

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

[s 108.14.3] Place of payment

The common law rule is that in the absence of an express covenant, the lessee must be ready to pay the rent on the land demised. If there is an express covenant for payment, the lessee must seek out the lessor and pay him wherever he may be.¹²⁶⁹ It is not necessary that the lessor should make a demand for rent.¹²⁷⁰ This rule has been adopted as to the implied covenant in this clause, and it has been held that if no place is specified, the lessee must seek out the landlord to make the payment.¹²⁷¹ A tender at the landlord's or his agent's usual place of business is valid and sanctioned by custom.¹²⁷²

[s 108.14.4] Mode of payment

The mode of payment is the same as in the case of any other debt. Rent reserved is money payable in cash.¹²⁷³ Payment through the post is at the tenant's risk,¹²⁷⁴ unless the landlord has led the lessee to believe that he may resort to the post for payment.¹²⁷⁵ If the landlord accepts a bill of exchange or a promissory note for the rent this may, if that is the agreement, be taken as an absolute payment.¹²⁷⁶ But if that is not the agreement, the bill or the note, if a negotiable instrument, operates as a conditional payment, and the lessor, if he has not endorsed the instrument, may sue for the rent if the bill or note is dishonoured. If the bill or note is not a negotiable instrument, it operates only as security for the rent, and does not extinguish the debt. A party is not bound to make a useless tender of rent when he knows for certain that the tender would be refused.¹²⁷⁷ With reference to section 108(1) (sic), it has been held that where the practice of the tenant was to make payment to the previous landlord by cheque, and where, after the sale of the premises, the new landlord had not given any contrary instructions and the tenant made the payment bona fide by cheque, the new landlord cannot refuse acceptance of the cheque and file a suit for eviction on the ground that payment should have been made in cash.¹²⁷⁸

[s 108.14.5] Suspension of rent

If the lessee is evicted by the lessor from the whole of the property leased, the lessee is not liable for rent for the period of the eviction.¹²⁷⁹ Such eviction, therefore, involves suspension of rent. The word suspension implies that the liability for rent is not finally determined, but revives as soon as the lessee is restored to possession. There cannot be any abatement of rent where the lessee is deprived or ousted from the part or whole of the premises. A mere breach of a condition to repair does not give a right to abatement.¹²⁸⁰

The principles governing suspension of rent are based on justice, equity and good conscience. It will depend on the facts of each case, whether a tenant is entitled to suspension of rent. Where the tenant of an industrial premise had deliberately stopped paying rent to his landlord for almost a year before the landlord had got the electricity disconnected, and the tenant took no steps for reconnection for about three years, the court rejected the plea of the tenant that it had a right to suspend the payment of rent.¹²⁸¹

[s 108.14.6] Eviction

To constitute an eviction it is not necessary that the lessee should be forcibly dispossessed.¹²⁸² In the case of Upton v Townend,¹²⁸³ an eviction was said to be "not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises." Substantial interference by the landlord with the tenant's enjoyment will suffice even if there is no complete dispossession.¹²⁸⁴ It is an eviction if the lessor induced the lessee's tenants to pay rent to him,¹²⁸⁵ or if he prevents the lessee from collecting rent from the sub-lessees;¹²⁸⁶ but not when he merely takes kabuliyats from the sub-lessee which do not result in any interference with the lessee.¹²⁸⁷ Where, however, the lessor recovered rent from a sub-lessee by mistake, it was held that such act does not amount to eviction. It must be shown that the lessor deliberately and intentionally evicted the lessee.¹²⁸⁸

[s 108.14.7] Effect of partial eviction by lessor

It has already been noted that if the lessee is evicted by the lessor from the whole of the property leased, the lessee is not liable for rent for the period of eviction. In this connection, see note "Suspension of Rent".

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

The question is what is the effect of the eviction of the lessee by the lessor from a part of the demised premises. The answer to this question appears, from the decided cases, to have been given differently on a consideration of different factors, namely:

- (i) whether the lease was for a lump sum rent;
- (ii) whether the lease was for separate or divisible rent, eg so much per acre or per bigha; and
- (iii) whether the eviction was a deliberate act of the lessor.

It will be convenient to note the decisions under these different heads.

(i) Effect of partial eviction in case of a lease at a lump sum rent—If the premises are let for one rent, the rule of English law is that the eviction of the lessee by the lessor from part of the demised premises, suspends the rent for the whole.¹²⁸⁹ Judicial decisions on this point have not been uniform in India. In some cases this rule of English law has been followed and it has been held that if the rent is an entire rent for all the property leased, eviction by the lessor of the lessee from part of the property leased suspends the whole rent.¹²⁹⁰ In some cases¹²⁹¹ decided by the Madras High Court, it was said that if the lessee is in possession of any part of the premises demised, he is estopped from pleading that he is not liable for the rent of that part. In a later Calcutta case it was said that if the rent is an entire rent, the tenancy is indivisible, and it is not open to the landlord to assert that any portion of the rent is payable in respect of any portion of the premises demised.¹²⁹² This view has been followed in Allahabad.¹²⁹³ In Katyayani Debi v Uday Kumar Das,¹²⁹⁴ the Privy Council held that the doctrine had no application where the rent was per bigha or acre. The observations in that case that the doctrine applied where the rent was a lump sum have been explained in a later case by the Privy Council¹²⁹⁵ as obiter. This issue has been considered by the Supreme Court in Bibra S N v Stephen Court,¹²⁹⁶ a case where the lessee was not given possession of the entire premises demised. The court held that it would depend on the circumstances of each case whether the rent would be suspended or the tenant would be liable to pay a proportionate part. In a Calcutta case it was held that where two tenancies comprising a different plots of land in two different rouzas and held at different jamās are amalgamated so as to form one tenancy in law and the tenant is dispossessed by the landlord from a portion of one of the plots, the tenant cannot claim suspension of the whole rent, but only of the rent of the plot from the portion of which he has been dispossessed.¹²⁹⁷

(ii) Effect of partial eviction in case of a lease at separate or divisible rent—In the case of partial eviction by the lessor the whole rent is not suspended, unless the rent is a lump sum rent for the whole land treated as an indivisible subject.¹²⁹⁸ In Sajjad Ahmad v Jralakhya Hath,¹²⁹⁹ Rankin, CJ said that the doctrine of suspension of rent depends solely upon this that the rent due is an entire sum in respect of the land demised. When the land is let at a stipulated rent at so much per acre or per bhiga, the whole rent is not suspended and the lessor is entitled to an apportionment. In such cases there is an abatement of rent, and the lessee pays a reduced or abated rent or the portion of which he is in possession.¹³⁰⁰

(iii) Where the partial eviction was not a deliberate act of the lessor—Again, as suspension of the whole rent is in the nature of a penalty, it is not enforced if the eviction is not the deliberate act of the landlord. When the lessor by inadvertence included a part of the lessee's lands in a rent suit filed against other tenants, and the lessee was dispossessed of that part the lessee was only entitled to an abatement of rent,¹³⁰¹ although the rent was an entire rent. So also where the lessor recovered rent from a sub-lessee by mistake, it was held that such act does not amount to eviction so as to entitle the lessee to suspension of the entire rent.¹³⁰² Nor will suspension be enforced if the lessee has consented to give up possession of part of the demised premises.¹³⁰³ This exception is similar to the equity of apportionment which the lessor has when he is unable to put the

lessee in possession of part of the land leased, and the lessee knows at the beginning of the tenancy that the part is in the possession of another, and that the lessor will not be able to give him possession.¹³⁰⁴

It has already been noted (note “Covenant to give possession” under clause (b) of this section) that where the lessor fails to put the lessee in possession of the whole of the demised premises, the English rule of suspension of the entire rent whether it was a lump sum rent or a separate rent, was not applicable in India. In laying this down the Privy Council in *Ram Lal v Dhirendra Nath*¹³⁰⁵ observed:

As the case before the Board has been held to be a case not of eviction by the lessors, but of their failure to give possession, their Lordships in this ex parte appeal confine themselves to the law applicable to the latter class of cases. To that class they think that the doctrine of suspension of rent should not be applied in Bengal. Whether it should be applied at all to cases of eviction of the lessee by the lessor from a part of the land, and if so, whether it is limited to rents reserved as a lump sum, and whether it is a rigid or discretionary rule — these questions will call for careful review when they are presented by the facts of a particular case. Their Lordships must guard themselves from being supposed to assume that had Srinath been ousted from any portion of the lands in 1886, it would be open to his successors to set up for the first time in 1931 that the entire rent must be suspended.

Their Lordships explained Katayayani's case¹³⁰⁶ and stated that it had been wrongly taken to lay down that if rent was a lump sum rent then in all cases of failure to give possession of any part, there must be a suspension of the entire rent.

It now seems fairly clear that there is no rigid and inflexible rule and the technical common law rule of suspension of the entire rent on partial eviction in a case where a lump sum rent is reserved by the lease ought not to be applied rigidly in India in every case. It is submitted that the courts in India should apply the principle of justice, equity and good conscience and decide each case on its own particular facts. Where, for example, the dispossession does not amount to a tortious or wrongful act deliberately done by the lessor, or where the area from which the tenant has been dispossessed is insignificant or when the claim for suspension of rent is put forward after the lapse of a long period, it would not, it is submitted, be in accordance with rules of justice, equity and good conscience to allow suspension of the entire rent even if a lump sum rent is reserved by the lease. This has been so held by the Calcutta High Court¹³⁰⁷ and has also been the approach adopted by the Supreme Court in Bibra, SN v Stephen Court.¹³⁰⁸

[s 108.14.8] Eviction by title paramount

Eviction by title paramount does not involve the penalty of suspension of rent, and the lessor is entitled to have the rent apportioned. Title paramount is a title superior to both that of the lessor and of the lessee, against which neither is able to make a defence.¹³⁰⁹ To constitute eviction by title paramount, Foa says that three conditions must be fulfilled:

the eviction must have been from something actually forming part of the premises demised; the party evicting must have a good title; and the tenant must have quitted against his will.¹³¹⁰

Eviction by title paramount is a good defence against a covenant to pay rent. If the three conditions mentioned above are satisfied, the lessee can claim abatement of rent.¹³¹¹ The lessee is not entitled to have the whole rent suspended, but must pay rent in proportion to the part of which he has possession.¹³¹² The onus is on the lessor to show what is the fair rent of the land out of which the tenant was not evicted.¹³¹³ If the lessee is evicted from the whole of the property leased by title paramount he is, of course, not liable to pay any rent at all for the period of the eviction.¹³¹⁴ Even if the lessee allowed the person who evicts both the lessor and the lessee in execution of the decree obtained against the lessor, the lessor is not entitled to recover any rent from the lessee. His title is extinguished.¹³¹⁵ It is tantamount to an eviction if the lessee is obliged to attorn to the person having the superior title,¹³¹⁶ but not if he attorns because he has been bribed by the offer of a lower rent.¹³¹⁷

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

[s 108.14.9] Diluvion

If part of the tenant's holding is lost by diluvion, he is, in the absence of any special stipulation in the lease, entitled to a proportionate abatement of rent.¹³¹⁸ He will not be entitled to suspension of the whole rent even if the land re-forms by alluvion and the landlord settles it with a stranger.¹³¹⁹ If the tenant is entitled to a proportionate abatement of rent by reason of diluvion or partial eviction by title paramount, the onus is on the tenant to prove from what portion he has been evicted and the extent to which the rent should be reduced.¹³²⁰ The fact that the tenant has proved dispossession in a previous suit is not sufficient to shift the onus.¹³²¹

[s 108.14.10] Acquisition

When part of the land is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the compensation includes the value of the leasehold and of the reversion. The right to an abatement of rent will depend upon whether the whole compensation is paid to the landlord.¹³²² A condition in a lease that if the tenancy is terminated by acquiring the land for a public purpose the whole amount of acquisition money shall be payable to the landlord, is valid.¹³²³

[s 108.14.11] War Damage

Special provisions were made in England by statute regarding war damage and rights inter se between the landlord and tenant. There was no such legislation in India and the matter would be governed by an express covenant, if any, or by the provisions of this section.

[s 108.14.12] Doctrine of Frustration

As to the doctrine of frustration, see notes under clause (e).

[s 108.14.13] Apportionment of rent

Rent may be apportioned either by time, or by estate. This subject is dealt with in the notes under sections 36 and 37.

[s 108.14.14] Illegal or immoral purpose

Rent is not recoverable for premises leased for an illegal or immoral purpose. Note "Immoral" under section 6(h) may be referred.

[s 108.15] Clause (m)—Repairs

This clause imposes the same obligation in the case of all leases, and section 108(o) requires the lessee to use the premises as a person of ordinary prudence would use them, as if they were his own. The lessee is liable for permissive waste,¹³²⁴ and must keep the property in as good a condition as he found it, and must yield up the property in the same condition, subject only to fair wear and tear and irresistible force.

There are thus two implied covenants:

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

- (1) to keep in repair, on which suits may be filed from time to time during the term; and
- (2) to restore in repair, ie, in as good a condition as he found the property, on which covenant a suit can only be filed at the end of the term.

[s 108.15.1] Keep

The word “keep” refers to the state in which the property is to be maintained,¹³²⁵ and obliges the lessee to maintain the property in the same condition at all times during the whole term.¹³²⁶ The breach of the obligation is continuous so long as the premises are not in the requisite state of repair.¹³²⁷

[s 108.15.2] Restore

The obligation to restore the premises in good repair is not affected by the mode in which the tenancy is terminated, whether by efflux of time or by forfeiture.¹³²⁸ This obligation is subject to section 108(e), and does not apply if the property is destroyed by a fire not caused by the negligence of the lessee.¹³²⁹

The tenant would be responsible for material damage caused to the premises by the sub-tenant with whom the landlord has no privity.¹³³⁰

[s 108.15.3] Reasonable wear and tear

This exception exonerates the lessee in case of dilapidation caused by the friction of the air, by exposure and by ordinary use.¹³³¹

In England, covenants obliging the tenant to repair are frequent, subject to exceptions regarding “fair wear and tear” or “reasonable wear and tear”. Such an exception only excuses the tenant from liability for a want of repair which is directly attributable to wear and tear, and he is obliged to prevent the consequences flowing originally from wear and tear from producing others, which wear and tear would not directly produce.¹³³²

[s 108.15.4] Irresistible force

The lessee is not liable to repair damage due to extraordinary causes such as storm, flood or accidental fire. Under this section, the lessee is not responsible for accidental fire, unless he has definitely taken that burden on his shoulders by covenant.¹³³³ The lessee is of course, liable for fire lighted intentionally or caused by negligence.¹³³⁴ The storage of cotton in an unventilated room where it is ignited by spontaneous combustion is negligence which makes the lessee liable.¹³³⁵ But the storage of spirits does not make the lessee liable on the principle of *Ryland v Fletcher*¹³³⁶ which says that a dangerous thing may be only kept at a man's own peril,¹³³⁷ for the rule in that case does not apply, unless there is a special use bringing increased danger to others and is not applicable to such matters as domestic use of gas and electricity.¹³³⁸ If the property is destroyed by accidental fire, the lessee can avoid the lease under section 108(e). In a case in which a godown was burnt down owing to the negligence of the lessee's watchman, the lessee sought to avoid the lease and escape responsibility on this ground. But the court held that the lessee was liable in damages, and that this disclaimer of liability was a waiver of notice under this section.¹³³⁹

Section 108(e) refers to destruction which renders the house substantially unfit for inhabitation so that if the chimney of an uninhabited room were blown down the lessee could neither avoid the lease, nor call upon the lessor to restore it unless there was an express covenant for repair by the lessor. The lessee would not be liable to replace it, but if the broken chimney let in rain, he would be under an obligation to do such repairs as were necessary to prevent damage to the house by wetness. Where part of the leased building collapses due to a natural calamity, the landlords cannot put an end to the tenancy, or restrain the tenant from effecting

[s 108.15.5] Right of entry and view

The lessor is given, by this section, statutory authority to enter the premises for the purposes of inspecting the state of repair. In the absence of such authority or of an express power in the lease, he would be liable on such entry to be treated as a trespasser,¹³⁴¹ even though the non-repair renders the landlord liable to forfeiture under a superior lease.¹³⁴²

[s 108.15.6] At all reasonable times

This condition would no doubt be satisfied by the lessor giving notice of his coming.¹³⁴³

[s 108.15.7] Express covenant to repair

An express covenant by the lessee to repair is a contract to the contrary and excludes the implied covenant.¹³⁴⁴ The express covenant to repair is either special or general. The special covenant is for particular decorative repairs such as papering or painting. The general covenant is for general repairs.

A general covenant to repair includes repair not only of buildings existing when the demise is made, but all those which may be erected during the term.¹³⁴⁵ In a Calcutta case,¹³⁴⁶ J Page stated the rule as follows:

Now, the general rule of law with respect to the construction of covenants to repair is that where the covenant to repair is in general terms to keep the premises in repair, the covenant will attach to new buildings that subsequently are erected on the demised premises during the currency of the term. On the other hand, where the covenant to repair refers to a specific property that is demised, such as “the said buildings” or “the said houses,” unless the additional buildings in fact became part of the specific buildings which the tenant covenanted to repair, the covenant will not extend to such new and separate erections. Such a covenant would extend to premises not originally demised but encroached upon by the lessee.¹³⁴⁷

The covenant for general repairs may be expressed in different ways such as, to keep in good repair¹³⁴⁸ or “in good and substantial repair”¹³⁴⁹ or “in good and tenantable order and repair”¹³⁵⁰ or “in habitable repair”¹³⁵¹ or “in thorough repair and good condition”.¹³⁵² But all these forms have no technical significance, and are satisfied by substantial repairs.¹³⁵³

The covenant for general repair is construed with reference to the condition of the building at the commencement of the lease, and if the house is an old house, the lessee is bound only to keep the house in good repair as an old house¹³⁵⁴ and not to give the lessor the benefit of improvements.¹³⁵⁵ On the other hand, repair implies renewal and replacement of parts that have decayed and when that is done the new is put in place of the old. So if the floor of a house had become rotten, the tenant must put down a new floor;¹³⁵⁶ or if an external wall has decayed and become dangerous, he must demolish and rebuild it.¹³⁵⁷ The landlord does, therefore, get the benefit of improved and renewed parts; and the dictum of Tindall, CJ in *Gutteridge v Munyard*¹³⁵⁸ that:

what the natural operation of time flowing on effects, and all that the elements bring about, in diminishing the value constitute a loss which so far as it results from time falls upon the landlord, is not correct if applied to parts. But it is correct if applied to the whole fabric, for the obligation to replace decayed parts does not extend to the recreation of the whole. Thus in Lister v Lane & Nesham,¹³⁵⁹ where a house built upon a timber platform resting on mud, decayed to such an extent that the platform could not be renewed and it was necessary to seek a new foundation on the solid gravel below the mud, this work was held not to be included in the covenant for general repairs. Lord Esher said:

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

However large the words of the covenant may be, a covenant to repair a house is not a covenant to give a different thing from that which the tenant took when he entered into the covenant.

The lessee is not bound to give the lessor a new house at the end of the term, but he is bound to make timely repairs, for, as said by Fletcher Moulton LJ in Lurcott v Wakely and Wheeler.¹³⁶⁰

If you properly repair as you go along the consequence will be that you will always get a house which will be in repair and usable as a house, but you will not get a house that does not suffer from age, nor a house which when old is the same as when it was new.

In Brew Bros Ltd v Snax (Ross) Ltd,¹³⁶¹ the English Court of Appeal has observed that no definition can bring out the distinction between repairs and improvements because:

things which are easily recognised are not always susceptible of simple definition.

In order to decide the question, one must look at the whole work required to be done, and not merely each component part separately. The covenant is also construed with reference to the class of house and the locality in which it is situated for the state of repair necessary for a house in Grosvenor Square would be totally different from the state of repair necessary for a house in Spitalfield.¹³⁶² An express covenant may be specific and require the tenant to keep the main walls and roof in good repair. Fixed windows may be treated as a part of walls in this context,¹³⁶³ but not glass windows and wooden window frames for they do not serve the function of a wall, viz to separate the outside from the inside, but merely admit light and air.¹³⁶⁴ Alterations not authorised are as much a breach of the covenant as dilapidations, eg opening a door in a wall,¹³⁶⁵ or pulling down a wall across a courtyard,¹³⁶⁶ or converting the ground floor into a shop.¹³⁶⁷

The express covenant is more extensive than the implied covenant, for if the premises are in a bad state of repair when let, the covenant to “put” in good repair obliges the lessee to give up the premises in a better state of repair than when he got them, and he is not justified in keeping them in bad repair because they were in a bad state when he took them.¹³⁶⁸ Again, the covenant to “keep in good repair” implies that the lessee must put them in good repair, for he cannot keep them in good repair, unless he put them in good repair.¹³⁶⁹ Moreover, the express covenant may require the lessee to rebuild if the property is totally destroyed by fire or other inevitable accident. An Indian illustration is the case of Hechle v Tillery.¹³⁷⁰ The lessee covenanted to “keep the premises wind and water-tight and in habitable condition,” and when the house was damaged by earthquake he was liable to repair it to the extent of making it wind and water-tight and habitable.

[s 108.15.8] Breach of covenant

Breach of covenant to repair will not be restrained by injunction of specific performance.¹³⁷¹ The remedy is damages.

If the covenant is to put in good repair, there can be only one breach for which only one suit can be maintained.¹³⁷² If the covenant is to keep in good repair, the breach is a continuing one as long as the premises are out of repair, and suits can be maintained from time to time during the term.¹³⁷³ The damages being for injury to the reversion, the lessor is under no obligation to expend damages recovered on the repair of the premises. The measure of damages is the depreciation in the market value of the reversion.¹³⁷⁴ But no hard and fast rule can be laid down and all the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration and damages assessed at such sum as represents the loss to the covenantee.

If the covenant is to leave or restore in good repair or in the same condition as when the lessee took possession, only one suit can be brought at the end of the term, and the damages will be the cost of putting the premises in the state of repair required by the covenant.¹³⁷⁵ Any sum recovered during the term as damages for breach of covenant to keep in repair will be taken into account.¹³⁷⁶

So far as the property other than the leasehold property is concerned, clauses (m), (o) and (p) of section 108 of the Act would not be attracted in respect of such other property inasmuch as the word “property” as mentioned in clauses (m), (o) and (p) of section 108 of the Act would mean only the premises demised and not any other property or premises. This is simply because of the fact that if the tenant occupies land of property other than the lease held property, he is not to be treated as tenant in respect of such excess land or premises unless there is any such contract, and in the absence of any such contract his said occupation would be that of a trespasser and/or unauthorised occupant but clauses (m), (o) and (p) of section 108 would not be attracted in such a case.¹³⁷⁷

[s 108.15.9] Section 108(m) and Uttar Pradesh Act 13 of 1972

The provisions of Uttar Pradesh Act 13 of 1972 are not inconsistent and can co-exist with section 108(m). Under the provisions of section 108(m), it is the duty of tenant to keep the premises in as good a condition, as they were when they were let out. These provisions make it obligatory upon the landlord to keep the premises wind proof and waterproof and to effect periodical repairs and to enforce this obligation, the tenant has been given a right to apply under section 28 to the prescribed authority and to claim adjustment of the expenses against the rent in the manner and to the extent provided for under that section. These provisions do not take away the right of the tenant himself to effect the repairs if he does not want to claim adjustment of the expenses against the rent.¹³⁷⁸

[s 108.15.10] Notice

Clause (m) of section 108 provides that when any damage has been caused by an act or default on part of lessees or his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months from the date of notice to that effect given by landlord. In case no notice being given by the lessor, lessee cannot be said to have violated clause (m).¹³⁷⁹

[s 107.16] Clause (n)—Lessee's duty to the lessor

It is correlative to the covenant for quiet enjoyment, for, while the lessor secures undisturbed possession to the

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

lessee, the lessee is under an obligation to give notice to the lessor, if his title is in jeopardy. Rankin Chief Justice explained the clause as throwing a duty on the lessee in order that the lessor may, if he chooses, protect his own interest and that the lessor may be safeguarded against the results, or a collusive eviction submitted to by the lessee.¹³⁸⁰

Even before the TP Act, 1882, the Calcutta High Court said that it is incumbent on every lessee to protect his lessor's property from encroachment or unlawful eviction.¹³⁸¹

The lessor's cause of action to recover possession accrues when the tenancy is determined, and there can be no adverse possession against him till then.¹³⁸² In Katyayani Debi v Uday Kumar,¹³⁸³ the Privy Council pointed out that the lessor could not maintain an action against a trespasser at his own hand for ejectment as he might be met with the objection that the apparent trespass had been acquiesced in by the tenant. But if his title is endangered, the landlord may sue for a declaration of his rights, and for a decree giving him formal possession as against the trespasser.¹³⁸⁴ It is no doubt true that an owner has every right to enter upon his property and restrain the trespasser from perpetuating his illegal occupation. It is not necessary for him to take recourse to a legal proceeding in order to vindicate his rights of ownership and possession in respect of his property of which another person without having any right or title enters into possession. He can throw out a trespasser while he is in act of or process of trespassing, but this right is not available to the true owner if the trespasser has been successful in accomplishing his possession to the knowledge of the true owner. In such circumstances, the law requires that the true owner should dispossess the trespasser by taking recourse to the remedies available under the law.¹³⁸⁵ The landlord holds possession through his tenant, and if the tenant is dispossessed, the landlord may sue for recovery of the land demised under the Specific Relief Act.¹³⁸⁶ The lessor may also sue for the purpose of giving possession to a person to whom he has granted a lease.¹³⁸⁷

[s 107.17] Clause (o)—User

The words “use the property for the purpose other than that for which it was leased” occurring in this clause mean that the change of business would not bring about change of user as contemplated by this clause.¹³⁸⁸ Section 108 starts with the word “in absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary”. In other words, it permits contract to the contrary mentioned under this section. If the lease deed spells out that “the tenant shall not carry out any other business than the business specified” then the parties restricts the user of the tenanted premises only for the business which is stated therein and no other.¹³⁸⁹ But it will be permissible only to a limited extent, that is to say, if the tenant was permitted to sell his goods and the shop was meant as an outlet for the goods manufactured by him elsewhere, he cannot start the manufacturing process in the shop itself.

This clause requires the lessee to use the land as a man of ordinary prudence would use his land, and not to use it for a purpose different to that for which it was leased. The lessee must not use or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. In case of any violation, he is liable for eviction.¹³⁹⁰ He shall also ensure that the occupant banks, nursing homes, companies or persons carrying on any commercial activity in the residential sector should stop such activity and shift the same to the appropriate sectors i.e. commercial, commercial pockets in industrial/institutional area and specified pockets for commercial use within the residential sector, strictly earmarked for that activity in the development Plan, Regulations and provisions of the Delhi Rent Act, 1995.¹³⁹¹

The words “or sell” were added by the amending Act of 1929. The words “belonging to the lessor, or” were inserted by the same amending Act.

[s 108.17.2] Diversion to a different use

The lessee may not use the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. However, where a new business started by the tenant in the premises let out to him is an allied business or a business which was ancillary to the main business, it would not amount to change of user.¹³⁹² In the case of Mohanlal v Jai

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

Bhagwan,¹³⁹³ it was held that if the building was rented for the purpose of carrying on a business, using it for another business will not in any way impair the utility or damage the building, and this business can be conveniently carried on in the premises. Where the original letting of the shop is not for any specific purpose and the shop was used for carrying on the business of foodgrains, the mere change in the user of the shop for setting up a flour mill does not amount to user for purposes other than that for which it was leased.¹³⁹⁴ But premises let for residential or trade purposes cannot be used for a flour mill.¹³⁹⁵

There is a change of user where:

- (a) A premise was demised for running a shop and the tenant installed an “atta chakki and oil kolhu”.¹³⁹⁶
- (b) An open piece of land was let out for carrying on the business of sugarcane-crushing and it is being used for selling cloth and readymade clothes.¹³⁹⁷
- (c) A lawyer’s office was established in a part of the building let out solely for residence.¹³⁹⁸
- (d) A shop let out for carrying on business as general merchant and “kirana” was being used a tea-stall along with sale of cold drinks.¹³⁹⁹
- (e) In a shop let out for doing business in “dry fruits and soda water”, the tenant set up an “oven” and prepare “*pakor*as”.¹⁴⁰⁰
- (f) There was a change from the business of “general & provision store” to the business of selling “stones and marble chips”.¹⁴⁰¹
- (g) House let out for residential purpose was used as a shop.¹⁴⁰²
- (h) Residential premises was used as a boarding house.¹⁴⁰³
- (i) House let out for residential purpose was used by a dentist for carrying on his profession.¹⁴⁰⁴

A house let for residential purposes may not be used as a shop by the exhibition of goods therein without structural alteration.¹⁴⁰⁵ In UP Naing v Burma Oil Co,¹⁴⁰⁶ land was leased with the right to win oil from it. The lessees sank oil wells but the well yielded not oil but gas which the lessees used for their own purposes. The Privy Council held that they were entitled to do so without doing any damage to the property leased.

The Supreme Court, while applying the principle of dominant purpose, held that running of a tailoring shop in one of the rooms is not sufficient to convert, what otherwise to all intents and purposes is a residential building, into a non-residential building.¹⁴⁰⁷

Ordinarily, as long as the interest of the landlord is not prejudiced, a small change in the user would not be actionable. If a tenant who takes a petty premise for carrying on a small trade also stays in the rear portion, cooks and eats, he does not defeat the purpose of the lease.¹⁴⁰⁸ Where, along with a repair shop, sale of television sets was temporarily carried on, it was held that there is not change of user.¹⁴⁰⁹ It has been held that the question whether the change of user is in the substantial part of the building is not relevant.¹⁴¹⁰

The lessor may show that the property was being used for a different purpose and such purpose was destructive of or permanently injurious to the property.¹⁴¹¹ Before the landlord can rely on an act as one in contravention of section 108(o), injury must be proved, if a beam, ridden by termite, is removed and a new one is substituted in its place, it cannot be said to be an act destructive of, or injurious to, the premises.¹⁴¹² Where in an allotment of plots by auction, a person accepted the plot reserved for market, signed the lease deed, paid

money and got the lease deed registered with open eyes, he had full liberty at that time to refuse to accept plot and take his money back but did not do so, and having entered into the lease agreement without any protest he cannot later challenge the lease of the plot.¹⁴¹³

With reference to section 108(o), it has been held that the use of the premises for carrying on a wine trade did not, in the circumstances, amount to an act “destructive of or permanently injurious to” the premises. Use of premises as a gambling house or a brothel is very different, since the mere use will involve a slur or stigma, and will also decrease the value. But the use of the premises as a wine shop cannot have the same effect merely because the landlord’s religion (Islam) does not view drinking with favour. In this case, the landlord was residing far away from the premises. The argument that the national policy of total prohibition was violated was also not material. Further, the positive covenant in the lease to carry on a business did not necessarily carry with it a negative covenant not to carry on any other business, and carrying on of wine trade would not, in this case, be inconsistent with the original purpose of the letting.¹⁴¹⁴

English cases mostly turn on express covenants, such as, to use the premises as a private residence only, and not to carry on a trade or business.¹⁴¹⁵ A covenant to use premises for private residence in the occupation of one household is, therefore, violated by the tenant taking paying guests.¹⁴¹⁶ Earlier Indian cases mostly arose with reference to agricultural tenancies, but the principle is the same. A tenant may not let land for cultivation or to construct a tank¹⁴¹⁷ or an orchard.¹⁴¹⁸ When an agricultural tenant let his land temporarily to a theatrical company, this was held to be a diversion.¹⁴¹⁹ Thus, a land leased for the purposes of a grove cannot be used for building even temporary structures.¹⁴²⁰

[s 108.17.3] Waste

Waste is said to be voluntary, ie, doing an act which is destructive of the premises; or permissive, ie, an omission to make necessary repairs. The liability for permissive waste arises out of the obligation under section 108(m) to keep the property in a good condition, subject to fair wear and tear. This clause deals with voluntary waste and imposes a liability similar to that imposed upon bailees by sections 151 and 154 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. An act which a person of ordinary prudence using his own property would commit is not waste, although it damages the property. Thus, where a warehouse was damaged by the weight of the goods placed in it, and the user was reasonable having regard to the class of building, the lessee was not liable.¹⁴²¹ But even in a lease which permits excavation, the lessee will be liable if the excavation is done in such a manner as to cause damage.¹⁴²² A mere omission of a tenant to put manure in the land does not amount to waste.¹⁴²³ It is not every construction or alteration that would result in material impairment to the value or utility of the building. The impairment must be of a material nature so as to substantially diminish the value of the building either from commercial or monetary point of view, or from the utilitarian aspect of the building. The burden of proof of such material impairment would be initially on the landlord. Thus, a hole eight inches in diameter bored by the tenant in the floor of the balcony on the first floor for the purpose of laying a pipe to drain out the accumulation in the urinal, was held not to amount to any waste or damage of the property leased.¹⁴²⁴ The mere fact that the building which is the subject matter of tenancy has fallen down does not, by itself, fasten the liability on the tenant to answer for its value. Liability must be proved. In the case of a tenant at will, it is well settled that the obligation is only to ensure that his own conduct does not contribute to the deterioration of the tenanted premises.¹⁴²⁵

[s 108.17.4] Structural additions and alterations

The tenant cannot make structural additions and alterations without the consent of the landlord. The putting up of a heavy overhead tank without adequate supports is not permissible because it constitutes waste.¹⁴²⁶ The Bombay High Court has held that an overhead cement concrete water tank erected by the tenant in the open space adjoining the premises was only a temporary structure which could be removed by dismantling, and no damages to the demised premises would be caused thereby.¹⁴²⁷ It has already been noted that alterations that are not authorised amount to a breach of the implied covenant mentioned in clause (m). Such alterations will also be a breach of the implied covenants mentioned in clauses (o) and (p). The Supreme Court in a case under a rent control Act observed that “material” alterations would mean important alterations such as those which substantially changed the front or structure of the premises; it was immaterial whether such alterations damaged the premises or diminished the value of the premises.¹⁴²⁸

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

Even if there was no contract between the parties, section 108(p) would have prevented the tenant from putting up a permanent structure on the land without the landlord's consent and eviction of tenant on the ground of erection of permanent structure on demised property is valid.¹⁴²⁹ Demolition of construction by the tenant without landlord's consent Destruction of a house or building constructed on the leasehold property does not determine the tenancy rights of the occupant as giving a building or structure on leased does not mean the lease of only the superstructure in exclusivity.¹⁴³⁰

A tenant is entitled to make alternations or adjustments in the demised premises to make them suitable to his requirements, and the landlord cannot be heard to take exception to them, when no damage impairing the premises and material alteration has resulted which cannot be restored back to the original position by the tenant at his own cost, whenever he vacated the same. No order for removal would be called for in such a case. The tenant, however, should not obstruct the landlord or his agent from entering the premises at reasonable times to inspect its condition. The landlord should avail of this facility with due deference of the business of the tenant, without causing any obstruction or annoyance to him. In a suit for a declaration that the roof of the demised single storeyed building did not form part of the demised building, a rent note irrespective of its being unregistered or unstamped can be looked into in order to ascertain whether the roof of the building was not part of the document as alleged by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is competent to refer to it to this extent. There is, therefore, no bar to looking into the document to ascertain whether a certain matter alleged to form part of it, in fact, is not part of it. This ascertainment is not with regard to what forms part of the documents, but the absence of it, ie, non-existence of something in the document or negative part thereof.¹⁴³¹

The lease deed in the absence of registration can be looked into for ascertaining the extent or portion of which the possession is granted to the lessee.¹⁴³²

[s 108.17.5] Special legislative provisions

Section 13(l)(h) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act which specifically provide for cases of change of user of premises originally let out for residential purpose only, would supersede the general provisions of section 108(o) of the TP Act, 1882 in respect of premises let out for residential purpose.¹⁴³³

[s 108.17.6] Timber

Timbers as a rule are trees used for building or repairing houses. In this connection, note "Timber" under section 3 may be referred. Felling timber is an act of waste; and this applies to bamboos even though fresh bamboos sprout when cut.¹⁴³⁴ The words "or sell" have been inserted by the amending Act of 1929 apparently to make it clear that the lessee may not sell the standing timber to a vendee to be felled and carried away by him. The prohibition must refer to timber which was standing when lessee entered, for the lessee has the right under section 108(h) to fell and remove trees that he has planted himself, but not those which he has not planted.¹⁴³⁵

[s 108.17.7] Building

The words "belonging to the lessor" have been inserted by the amending Act of 1929. They make it clear that the right of the tenant to remove the material of buildings erected by himself recognised in section 108(h) is not affected. The prohibition against pulling down buildings of the lessor includes making any structural alterations.¹⁴³⁶ Pulling down a house is waste even if it is rebuilt.¹⁴³⁷

[s 108.17.8] Mines and quarries

The right of the lessee to minerals depends upon the terms of the leases. The note "Attached to the earth" under section 8 may be referred.

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

In the absence of such right the lessee has no right to work quarries or mines other than those open when he entered;¹⁴³⁸ or to dig and carry away soil;¹⁴³⁹ or shells;¹⁴⁴⁰ or even to take stones lying loose and exposed on the surface.¹⁴⁴¹ The lessee may not make bricks on land not let for that purpose.¹⁴⁴² Subsoil rights in tenure are assumed not to have been granted, unless an express grant is made.¹⁴⁴³ A tenant may, however, have a right to make bricks for his own domestic or agricultural purpose.¹⁴⁴⁴ If the lease confers a right to work a mineral field, the right is, not cut down by this section.¹⁴⁴⁵

[s 108.17.9] Acts destructive or permanently injurious

The last clause embraces every act which causes permanent injury to the property. Thus, if the tenant merely converts the user of the premises from office to residential purpose, without affecting the property the same would not come within the prohibition of the statute.¹⁴⁴⁶ In order that the landlord may invoke the provisions of section 108(o), he must show not only that the property was used for a different purpose than that for which it was rented, but also that the use is destructive of or permanently injurious, to the property.¹⁴⁴⁷ If lands leased for construction of a reservoir is used as a rubbish shoot, this is waste, because the level of the land being raised it would be more expensive to lay the foundations of a house.¹⁴⁴⁸ But small excavations which caused no damage are not actionable.¹⁴⁴⁹

[s 108.18] Clause (p)—Erection of buildings

Where the tenant raises unauthorised constructions, he is liable for eviction in view of section 108(p).¹⁴⁵⁰ The statutory requirement is that the lessee must not without lessor's consent erect any permanent structure on the property except for agricultural purposes.¹⁴⁵¹ On an agricultural holding a tenant may not erect a building not connected with agricultural operations.¹⁴⁵² An occupancy tenant in Bengal may build a pucca dwelling house as is suitable to his holding;¹⁴⁵³ or an indigo factory if indigo is grown on his holding.¹⁴⁵⁴

The word “permanent” is used in opposition to “temporary”.¹⁴⁵⁵ What is a permanent structure is a question of fact; it depends upon the nature of the structure, and the intention with which it is erected.¹⁴⁵⁶ The question whether the structure was permanent, can be judged from the intention of the party who put up the structure as may be gathered from the mode and degree of annexation, and from the fact whether it could be removed without causing irreparable damage to the demised premises, dimensions of the structure, the purpose of erecting it, the nature of the materials used in it and its durability.¹⁴⁵⁷ If a proper court has come to the conclusion on the examination of the nature of the structure, the nature of the duration of structure, the annexation and other relevant factors that the structures were permanent in nature which were violative of section 13(i)(b) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947 as well as section 108 (p) of the TP Act, 1882 and if such a finding is possible, it cannot be considered to be perverse, and the High Court cannot interfere with it under Article 227 of the Constitution.¹⁴⁵⁸ It must be of such a character that cannot be removed without damaging and/or impairing substantially any portion of the demised premises. Mere raising a wall, adjacent to demised premises either, mud or bricks which can be removed without any difficulty at any point of time, cannot be said to be a structure of permanent nature and character. Even if any roof is constructed either with asbestos or corrugated tin shed or even with concrete slab, it cannot be said to be permanent since it can be removed easily, unless such concrete roof is cast on a brick built missionary wall, which cannot be removed easily and need to be demolished with substantially or structural damage to the building.¹⁴⁵⁹

In deciding whether a construction is permanent or temporary for the purpose of section 108(p), two factors are primarily important, namely, the nature of the structure, and the intention with which it is made. If the structure is such that it will endure for a long time, ie, so long as the tenant expects to remain there as a lessee and the lessee expects it to use it as long as he remains as a lessee, it will be regarded as a permanent structure even though the construction is removable without causing permanent damage to the leased premises. A kitchen constructed with brick walls, tiled roofs and unplastered walls, would be a permanent construction within the clause of section 108(p),¹⁴⁶⁰ but not when it can be removed easily.¹⁴⁶¹ Similarly, replacing of worn out old tin shades with cement concrete slabs would not amount to erection of permanent structure,¹⁴⁶² but where the lessee, a government school, demolished old rooms and constructed new ones in their place without the lessor's permission the breach was held sufficient for the eviction.¹⁴⁶³ Affixation of a collapsible gate at the entrance of the tenanted premises does not amount to erection of a permanent structure.¹⁴⁶⁴ Construction of septic privy outside the tenancy would not violate section 108(p).¹⁴⁶⁵

The requirement of the law is that the lessee must refrain from erecting any permanent structure without the consent of the lessor and not without his prior consent. Thus consent of the landlord can be taken after making the construction, but such fact of not giving the consent has to be established by the lessor alone and not by any other person for fact of giving consent is within the special knowledge of the lessor under section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act.¹⁴⁶⁶

[s 108.19] Clause (q)—Restoration of possession

At the expiration of the term whether it terminates by notice or by efflux of time, the lessee is bound to put the lessor in vacant possession.¹⁴⁶⁷ This is known as the rule in Henderson v Squire.¹⁴⁶⁸ In the absence of contract or local usage to the contrary, it is an obligation of the tenant to put his lessor into possession of the property on the termination of the lease.¹⁴⁶⁹ Where the period of the lease is fixed, the lessee must put the lessor in possession of the property on its expiry, notwithstanding the absence of a specific term to that effect. Such a term is implied under section 108(q), and need not be express.¹⁴⁷⁰ However, the lessor cannot put terms and conditions for taking the possession when it is delivered, and should accept it.¹⁴⁷¹

Till the time the lessee restores the possession, the obligation incurred by him as lessee does not come to an end. If he continues in possession even after the determination of the lease, the landlord obviously has a right to eject him forthwith.¹⁴⁷²

In the case of an agricultural tenancy, Farran CJ said that the tenant not giving vacant possession after giving notice of relinquishment did not create a tenancy by holding over, but gave rise to a claim for damages by the landlord.¹⁴⁷³ When a tenant leaves the premises without placing the landlord in the possession thereof, that may entitle the landlord to claim rent or profits from him. But if the landlord acquires it in the act of the tenant, he cannot claim the tenancy to be subsisting.¹⁴⁷⁴ If there are several lessors and partition has not been effected between them, it is sufficient that vacant possession should be given to one of them.

If the landlord acquiesces in the act of the tenant, although he had not restored the possession, it cannot be held that the tenancy is subsisting.¹⁴⁷⁵

ILLUSTRATION

A and B lease a shop to C. C gave notice to A and B determining the tenancy. C then gave vacant possession to A alone. A alone gave a fresh lease of the shop to another tenant. B sued C for rent. Held that the tenancy was determined and that C was not liable for not giving vacant possession to B, as he had given vacant possession to one landlord.¹⁴⁷⁶

The liability under this clause as under the other clauses is subject to contract to the contrary. Thus, when the lease provided that the lessee shall always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built (by the lessee) on the said plot of land before he surrenders possession of the land either on the expiry of the lease hereby granted or any other future lease or at any time; the price shall be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment, the Privy Council held that the lessee was entitled to hold over as tenant by virtue of the above clause at the rent reserved by the lease until he was paid the then prevailing market price.¹⁴⁷⁷

The burden of proving a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 108(q) is on the lessee and before the burden can be held to have been duly discharged, there must be something to indicate an agreement to the contrary on such a matter involving a valuable right.¹⁴⁷⁸

[s 108.19.1] Restoration by force

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court¹⁴⁷⁹ that under the general law between a lessor and his lessee, there is no rule or principle which makes it obligatory for the lessor to resort to court and obtain an order for possession before he can put out the lessee who has refused to quit the land even after his right to remain on it has terminated. He is perfectly entitled to throw out the lessee himself, if he can and resume possession of his own property. This judgment was followed by a Full Bench of Jammu & Kashmir High Court¹⁴⁸⁰ holding that a lessor while enforcing his right of forfeiture has every right to take possession of the premises without his having resort to the court to obtain an order for possession, provided it is done peacefully and without actual resistance. The Punjab & Haryana High Court following these decisions has held¹⁴⁸¹ that the lessor having enforced his right of forfeiture, has every right to take possession of the disputed premises. Possession so taken cannot be termed either illegal or unlawful, and the defaulting lessee whose lease already stood terminated on the breach of express covenants of the lease deed could not move the court for restoration of possession to him so that he could remain in possession for the unexpired lease period.

[s 108.19.2] Damages

If the lessee fails to restore vacant possession, he is liable in damages for the breach of this obligation,¹⁴⁸² and is also liable to a penalty at the rate of double the value of the premises. This premise has been taken as a guide in Punjab for the assessment of damages when the lessee contumaciously holds over.¹⁴⁸³ The proper measure of damages is the loss sustained by the landlord. This will be mesne profits and damages in tort for trespass.¹⁴⁸⁴ Damages will also include premium received from a sub-tenant,¹⁴⁸⁵ and the cost of evicting a sub-tenant.¹⁴⁸⁶ If the tenant does not vacate the premises on efflux of time and unauthorisedly remains in occupation thereafter, damages can be awarded at market rate for such unauthorised use and occupancy.¹⁴⁸⁷

[s 108.19.3] Joint lessee

If one of two joint lessee fails to restore vacant possession to the lessor, both will be liable;¹⁴⁸⁸ unless the other has not assented to the holding over.¹⁴⁸⁹

With reference to section 108(g), it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that it is not open to proceed against all the joint tenants on the basis of a decree of eviction obtained only against some of them. The question of enforceability of the decree has to be kept apart from the question of the nature of the substantive rights of the parties. The fact that, in a case of joint promisors and joint promisees, the right and obligation are joint, has no bearing on the enforceability of the decree in such cases.¹⁴⁹⁰ Where the husband and wife were statutory co-tenants, it was held that even after the husband obtained a decree of divorce against her, the wife continued to be a co-tenant.¹⁴⁹¹

[s 108.19.4] Boundaries

It is the duty of the lessee to preserve the boundaries of the land intact and to leave them distinct at the end of the term,¹⁴⁹² particularly if his own land is adjoining. If there is a confusion of boundaries, the lessor is entitled to have them ascertained at the end of the term.¹⁴⁹³ If the boundary cannot be ascertained, the lessee will be compelled to make up land of equal value.¹⁴⁹⁴ A lessee is bound to keep identity of the leased property in the same condition as it was when it was put in his possession and to put the lessor in possession of the said property, on determination of the lease. If the lessee, by his own act, default or negligence has interfered with the boundaries or mixed up the leased property with his own land, he cannot dispute identity of the leased property and take advantage of his own act, default or negligence.¹⁴⁹⁵

[s 108.19.5] Rent control legislation

108. Rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee.—

It should be pointed out, that in many states, rent control legislation, generally applicable to urban areas, are at present in force and regulate a number of important matters concerning the relationship of tenancy, particularly the grounds on which the tenant can be evicted, the cutting off of amenities by the landlord, the circumstances in which rent may not be increased and the forum in which proceedings for determination of the rent or eviction of the lessee may be taken. The net effect of these provisions of such legislation is to modify a number of important rights otherwise available to the lessor under the TP Act, 1882. In particular, the general position that on the expiry of a contractual lease, the lessee is bound to vacate the premises has been largely restricted by such legislation in regard to tenancies that can be terminated by a notice to quit. Notwithstanding the giving of such a notice, the tenant is, by virtue of the protection given by such legislation, entitled to continue in occupation of the premises, unless the landlord can establish before the appropriate forum the existence of facts that warrant eviction under those special enactments. A tenant so continuing in occupation by virtue of the statutory protection has come to be known as a “statutory tenant”, although that expression does not usually occur in the legislation on the subject. The treatment in this commentary of landlord-tenant relationship should be read as subject to legislation of the nature referred to above, wherever applicable. It is needless to state that in other respects, the provisions of the TP Act still continue to govern such relationships. Those provisions also apply to premises situated in areas to which special enactments of the nature referred to above do not extend.

In Kailash Paliwal v Subhash Chandra Agrawal,¹⁴⁹⁶ the Supreme Court held that where relationship of landlord and tenant had not been established by the plaintiff, the only option left for the plaintiff was to sue for possession based on title of the property.

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

109. Rights of lessor's transferee.—

If the lessor transfers the property leased, or any part thereof, or any part of his interest therein, the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, shall possess all the rights, and if the lessee so elects, be subject to all the liabilities of the lessor as to the property or part transferred so long as he is the owner of it; but the lessor shall not, by reason only of such transfer cease to be subject to any of the liabilities imposed upon him by the lease, unless the lessee elects to treat the transferee as the person liable to him:

Provided that the transferee is not entitled to arrears of rent due before the transfer, and that, if the lessee, not having reason to believe that such transfer has been made, pays rent to the lessor shall not be liable to pay such rent over again to the transferee.

The lessor, the transferee and the lessee may determine what proportion of the premium or rent reserved by the lease is payable in respect of the part so transferred, and, in case they disagree, such determination may be made by any Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the property leased.

[s 109.1] Transfer of Lease Property

Section 109 enacts the law laid down in *Wordsley Brewery Co v Halford*¹⁴⁹⁷ that on the lessor assigning the reversion wholly or in part, the assignee shall possess all his rights, and be also subject to all the liabilities of the lessor provided the lessee agrees thereto. By a mere assignment, the lessor is not discharged from liabilities unless the lessee agrees to exonerate him, and hold the assignee as the person liable. The transfer may be of the whole property or a part of it, or it may be part of the lessor's interest therein. The grant of a lease passes the reversion so that where a person has let his lands for 30 years, and he lets to another for 40 years, this passes the reversionary interest.

[s 109.1.1] English Law

On an assignment of the reversion, the assignee succeeds to the rights and liabilities of the lessor in respect of covenants which run with the land. The assignee takes the benefits of the lessor's covenants, eg to pay rent,¹⁴⁹⁸ or to repair,¹⁴⁹⁹ and the burden of the lessor's covenants, eg for quiet enjoyment.¹⁵⁰⁰

The assignor cannot, after the assignment, maintain an action for the breach of any covenant by the lessee.¹⁵⁰¹ The lessee was held to be the assignee for rent even though he had, after the assignment, made an invalid

109. Rights of lessor's transferee.—

surrender of the lease to the original lessor.¹⁵⁰² The words “as to the property” in this section no doubt refer to covenants running with the land.¹⁵⁰³ The assignee of the reversion, accordingly, is not liable in respect of the lessor's covenants which do not run with the land. Thus, a covenant by the lessor to pay a sum to the lessee on the expiration or some determination of the lease, does not touch and concern the demised property, and so does not bind the assignee of the reversion, even if the lease also provides that, should the lessor be unwilling to pay the sum, the lessee may hold over the demand a new lease on the same terms including the term as to payment.¹⁵⁰⁴ On the other hand, where in a lease there was a covenant by the lessee that a particular individual should not be concerned in the conduct of the business to be carried on the demised premises, it has been held that the covenant was one running with the land as touching and concerning the thing demised, and could be enforced by the assignee of the reversion against the assignee of the lessee by terminating the lease on the ground of forfeiture for breach of the covenant.¹⁵⁰⁵

[s 109.1.2] Indian Law

The lessor's right to resume possession and terminate the lease would both co-exist.¹⁵⁰⁶ Since, the transfer of lessor's reversion/renthold absolutely to a third person does not terminate the lease and after the transfer of lessor's right in favour of the transferee, the latter gets all rights and liabilities of the lessor in respect of subsisting tenancy.¹⁵⁰⁷

This, is a statutory attornment and no other permission is necessary in law.¹⁵⁰⁸ The section does not insist that transfer will take effect only when the tenant acknowledges/attorns the new owner.¹⁵⁰⁹ Attornment by the tenant is unnecessary to confer validity to the transfer of the lessor's rights.¹⁵¹⁰ Nevertheless, the section protects payment of rent by the tenant to the transferor without notice of the transfer. It is well settled that a transferee of the landlord's rights steps into the shoes of the landlord with all the rights and liabilities of the transferor landlord in respect of the subsisting tenancy. An assignment of the reversion is an assignment of the lessor's interest. The case of an assignment of the term, ie, the lessee's interest, has been dealt with under section 108(j). An assignment of the reversion may be as the section indicates—(1) an assignment of the whole reversion or an absolute assignment; or (2) an assignment of the reversion in part of the property; or (3) an assignment of part of the reversion in the property. In the first case, there is no severance of the reversion. In the second and third cases, there is a severance of the reversion. The arrears do not pass the new properties along with the patta.¹⁵¹¹

This section applies to a partition among the lessors: but that even if it does not, the section would be applied as embodying a rule of justice and equity,¹⁵¹² but has no application where the transfer is effected after the lessor has ceased to have an interest in the property.¹⁵¹³ The section only governs a case where the lessor transfers his existing interest. In such a case a new lease does not come into existence, and an eviction order obtained by the transferor may be executed by the assignee of the reversion.¹⁵¹⁴

The general law under section 109 is that the assignee of the lessor has against the lessee all the rights that the lessor had, and can enforce not only covenants, but also conditions.¹⁵¹⁵ However, the liability of the lessor continues after the assignment, and the lessee is given the option of holding either the lessor, or the assignee liable. A lessee paid off a mortgage for which his lessor was liable and then sued to recover the amount from the assignee of the lessor in enforcement of the liability under section 108(g). Having exercised his election against the assignee, he could not also make the lessor liable.¹⁵¹⁶ This has been said to be an illustration of the equitable principle that a man cannot assign obligations, ie, cannot substitute someone else as the performer of his duties, without the consent or the authority of those to whom the duty is owing.¹⁵¹⁷ The lessor remains under a contractual liability under his express covenants.¹⁵¹⁸

In Ambica Prasad v Alam,¹⁵¹⁹ A transferred his property to B, but entered into a tenancy agreement with T, subsequent to the transfer A. T was never informed about the exchange deed and even after the execution of the exchange deed, A continued collecting rent from the tenants. Thereafter, B filed for eviction of the tenant on the grounds of non-payment of rent and need for bonafide use. The issue was whether attornment by the tenant in case of transfer of tenanted land is requisite under section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882? The Apex court held that attornment by the tenant is not necessary to confer validity of the transfer of the landlord's rights. Since attornment by the tenant is not required, a notice under section 106 in terms of the old terms of lease by the transferor landlord would be proper and so also the suit for ejectment.

109. Rights of lessor's transferee.—

When there is no written agreement between the parties then section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 is not attracted.¹⁵²⁰

[s 109.2] So Long as He is the Owner of it

These words indicate that the liability of the assignee lasts only so long as his estate lasts. He can get rid of his liability for that period by a re-assignment. This is because his liability depends upon privity of estate. This is also the case with the liability of the lessee's assignee to the lessor. Note "Liability of assignee to lessor" under section 108(j) may be referred.

[s 109.3] Rights of the Transferee

The right of lessee springs only from letter of allotment and lease agreement and he is obliged to comply with and adhere to conditions of letter of allotment and lease agreement, and cannot compel the lessor to allow it to use the land for some other purpose than specified in such letter of allotment and lease agreement.¹⁵²¹ The doctrine of estoppel applies in the case where the tenants try to assail the title of the property in different capacities.¹⁵²² In case the landlord sells the premises but repurchases the same after a short time period, the transfer of these premises for short period would not disentitle him to file a suit for eviction as against the tenant for non payment of rent as his status to that of the landlord was restored.¹⁵²³

The assignee of the lessor has against the lessee all the rights that the lessor had, and can enforce not only covenants, but also conditions.¹⁵²⁴ The TP Act, 1882 does not distinguish conditions from covenants. He can recover rent due subsequent to the assignment, and he can give notice to quit under section 106,¹⁵²⁵ or maintain a suit for eviction.¹⁵²⁶ In view of section 109, the assignee of the lessor has, as against the lessee, all the rights that the lessor had, including the right to receive the rent in terms of lease and the lessee cannot say that he is not bound to pay the same to the assignee merely because there is no privity of contract. Attornment is not required.¹⁵²⁷ After the transfer of lessor's right in favour of the transferee, all the rights and liabilities of the lessor in respect of the subsisting tenancy devolve upon him. A fresh attornment by the lessee to the landlord's assignee is not necessary.¹⁵²⁸ The Supreme Court has observed that where in a deed by which right, title and interest in the property in dispute was released in favour of one of the co-owners, and no where was any assignment of rent made, the assignee was not entitled to rent before assignment, and the amount due prior to the deed could not constitute arrears of rent as it was merely an actionable claim. Consequently, notice demanding rent certain before relinquishment deed by the co-owner was not valid.¹⁵²⁹

When a lessor of a leased property creates an usufructuary mortgage in respect of such property, what he transfers under section 109 of the TP Act, 1882 as a mortgagor in favour of the usufructuary mortgagee includes his right to possession of such property, and the right to receive the rents and profits accruing from it. From this it follows that the tenanted premises, if mortgaged by the landlord by way of usufructuary mortgage, the usufructuary mortgagee thereunder would become entitled to receive the rents and profits accruing therefrom in his own right and on his own account. A mortgagee in possession would be entitled, as much as the owner himself, to seek recovery of possession of the leased premises from a tenant for his own bonafide requirements of use in absence of any negation of such rights under the rent Act.¹⁵³⁰ The assignee's rights, like his liabilities, commence with the assignment. The section expressly enacts that he cannot sue for arrears of rent before his assignment, and he cannot sue on breaches of covenant committed before the assignment.¹⁵³¹ It was accordingly held that he could not determine a lease by forfeiture for a breach of condition before the assignment.¹⁵³² In a Bombay case, the assignee of a lessor was allowed to forfeit a lease for a breach committed three years before the assignment.¹⁵³³ This seems altogether indefensible.

The applicability of writ jurisdiction to civil and private disputes of landlord-tenant relationship is limited to quashing the plaint or suit proceedings or to interfere with the injunction order passed by the trial court. The tenancy claims with allegations of harassment are not entertainable under Articles 226 and 227.¹⁵³⁴

[s 109.4] Transfer of Any Part of Leasehold Property Leased or Interest Therein (Splitting of tenancy)

It is trite proposition that a landlord cannot split the unity and integrity of the tenancy, and recover possession of a part of the demised premises from the tenant. However, section 109 provides a statutory exception to this rule and enables an assignee of a part of the reversion to exercise all the rights of the landlord in respect of the portion respecting which the reversion is so assigned subject, of course, to the other covenant running with the land. This is the true effect of the words "shall possess all the rights ... of the lessor as to the property or part transferred ..." occurring section 109. There is no need for a consensual attornment. The attornment is brought about by operation of law. The limitation on the right of the landlord against splitting up of the integrity of the tenancy, inhering in the inhibitions of his own contract, does not visit the assignee of the part of reversion. There is no need for the consent of the tenant for the severance of the reversion, and the assignment of the part so severed.¹⁵³⁵

ILLUSTRATION

A leases a house and stable to B who covenants to keep the premises in good repair. During the term. A sells the stable to C. C can enforce the covenant to repair as regards the stable.

At the expiry of the term, the lessor's assignee can sue to evict the lessee from that part.¹⁵³⁶

A co-sharer cannot initiate action for eviction of the tenant from the portion of the tenanted accommodation, nor can he sue for his part of the rent. The tenancy cannot be split up either in estate, or in rent or any other obligation by a unilateral act of one of the co-owners. If, however, all the co-owners or the co-lessors agree among themselves and split by partition the demised property by metes and bounds and come to have definite, positive and identifiable shares in that property, they become separate individual owners of each severed portion, and can deal with that portion as also the tenant thereof as individual owner/lessor. The right of the joint lessor contemplated by section 109 comes to be possessed by each of them separately and individually.¹⁵³⁷ A usufructuary mortgagee is an assignee of part of the reversion, but as the right of enjoyment and the right of possession have been transferred to him, he can sue to recover all the rents. He can also give notice to quit determining a periodical lease.¹⁵³⁸ After the transfer of the reversion by usufructuary mortgage, the lessor-mortgagor cannot accept a surrender of the lease.¹⁵³⁹ A lessee for a term is assignee of part of the reversion, and can give notice to quit to a monthly tenant of the original lessor.¹⁵⁴⁰ According to the Madhya Pradesh High Court, a transferee of a part of the leased property acquires all the rights of the lessor in respect of that part as if that part alone had comprised the lease, and a new relationship is created between the transferee and the lessee.¹⁵⁴¹ Section 109 creates a statutory attornment, that the title of the assignee is complete on execution of the deed of assignment, and is not postponed till the notice of assignment is given. It cannot be contended that since the lessor had no right to terminate a tenancy by notice to quit in respect of a part of the demised

109. Rights of lessor's transferee.—

premises, the transferee could not, therefore, have such a right. The transferee is entitled to evict the tenant from that part which is transferred to him, not only when the lease has been determined before the transfer, but also where it had been determined after the transfer.¹⁵⁴²

Section 109 enables the transferee to exercise all rights of the lessor, including the right to terminate a lease by giving notice to quit. When a part of the property leased is transferred, the transferee of the part can terminate the lease of that part by notice. The provision for the apportionment of rent, irrespective of the consent of the lessee is an indication that section 109 intends to affect a severance of the lease.¹⁵⁴³ Where out of the tenanted premises, only the residential room was sold and the bathroom and latrine was retained by the landlord, it was held that under section 109 of the TP Act, 1882, the original tenancy had been split on account of the transfer, so that the purchaser became the landlord on receipt of the residential room, while the vendor continued to be a landlord in respect of the portion retained by him.¹⁵⁴⁴ It is open to the transferor and the transferee to agree that notwithstanding the transfer, the rights to terminate the lease and to enforce the right of reversion, shall continue to vest in the lessor.¹⁵⁴⁵ In an Allahabad case, the lessor transferred the premises to two brothers jointly. One of them died, leaving a son. It was held that the surviving brother being a joint transferee was alone to be treated as the lessor, and the son could not be regarded as a transferee of the former lessor.¹⁵⁴⁶

[s 109.4.1] Partition

The Supreme Court in *Mohar Singh v Devi Charan*¹⁵⁴⁷ left the law undisturbed to the effect that section 109 is applicable in case of partition even though it is not a “transfer” within section 5 of the TP Act, 1882. It was held that a partition is not actually a transfer of property, but would only signify the surrender of a portion of a right in exchange for a similar right from the other co-sharer or c-sharers. It also observed that though a few High Courts¹⁵⁴⁸ have taken the view that section 109 is attracted to the case of partition, several other High Courts have been content to rest the conclusion on the general principle underlying section 109 as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience. If two joint lessors affect partition, one of them can enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of the rent of his moiety.¹⁵⁴⁹

[s 109.5] Proviso—Rents

The substantive part of section 109 read with proviso necessarily indicates that the arrears of rent due is one of lessor's right as to the property transferred. Right to recover the arrears of rent vested with the original owner, and on transfer of all his rights the same vests in the transferee as per the provisions of section 109. Proviso to section 109 clearly indicates that if there is an assignment of rent due, then the transferee/landlord would be entitled to recover the same from the tenant as arrears of rent. The correct position of law is that a transferee is not entitled to recover the arrears of rent for the property on transfer, unless the right to recover the arrears is also transferred. If right to recover the arrears is assigned, then the transferee/landlord can recover those arrears as well.¹⁵⁵⁰

In the case of *Satti Krishna Reddy v Nallamilli Venkata Reddy*¹⁵⁵¹ the Supreme Court held that the arrears of rent assigned to the transferee landlord do not lose their character and become an actionable claim, and eviction proceedings can be maintained by the successor landlord on the ground of arrears of rent. In absence of any assignment in favour of the transferee, he is not entitled to rent before the assignment. Such rent is not part of the reversion, but is a mere debt.¹⁵⁵²

The right to recover such a debt is not transferred by the section, but it does not prohibit such an assignment.¹⁵⁵³ There is no obligation on the assignee to give notice of the assignment to the lessee, but it is desirable to do so, for if in the absence of notice the lessee pays rent to the lessor, he will not be liable to pay it again to the assignee.¹⁵⁵⁴ In a Gauhati case, rent was paid by the tenant to the former landlord before the landlord had transferred his rights in the land. It was held that in view of section 109, the tenant was not liable to pay the rent over again to the transferee landlord.¹⁵⁵⁵ During the pendency of a suit for eviction of the tenant,

109. Rights of lessor's transferee.—

the landlord transferred the suit property to another person (the transferee), by a registered sale deed, and the trial court allowed the transferee landlord to prosecute the suit on the ground of default committed by the tenant in paying rent for the period long before the date of transfer. It was held that although the transferee acquires all the rights of his transferor, in view of section 109, proviso, the transferee, ipso facto, is not entitled to the arrears of rent accrued before the transfer. Section 8 of the TP Act, 1882 provides that on transfer, the transferee is entitled to the rents and profits thereof accruing after the transfer.¹⁵⁵⁶

[s 109.6] Contract to the Contrary

It is open to the transferor-lessor and his transferee to agree to terms which may be inconsistent with the provisions of section 109. And even after transfer of the entire ownership of the property leased, it is open to the transferor and transferee to agree that notwithstanding the transfer, the right to terminate the lease and to enforce the right of reversion shall continue to vest in the lessor. Such a term shall be inconsistent with the provisions of section 109 and, therefore, the expression "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" appearing in that section enables a transferor and the transferee of a property leased to agree to such a term.¹⁵⁵⁷ In such an event, it shall be permissible for the lessor despite such transfer of the property leased, to enforce the right of reversion by filing a suit against the tenant.¹⁵⁵⁸

[s 109.7] Attornment

To "attorn" means to acknowledge the relation of a tenant to a new landlord. Attornment means acceptance of the new owner of the property as the landlord, thereby estopping the tenant to dispute the new landlord's title at a later stage. Attornment is not necessary under the TP Act, 1882.¹⁵⁵⁹ A fresh attornment by the lessee to the lessor's assignee, is not necessary under TP Act, 1882.¹⁵⁶⁰ In practice, however, attornment is generally insisted upon, as it is useful as an acknowledgement of the tenancy. The Supreme Court has held that there is no need for a consensual attornment. The attornment is brought about by operation of law. The limitation on the right of the landlord against splitting up of the integrity of the tenancy, inhering in the inhibitions of his own contract, does not visit the assignee of the part of the reversion. There is no need for the consent of the tenant for the severance of the reversion, and the assignment of the part so severed.¹⁵⁶¹ It has, however, been held that attornment would be desirable as it means the acknowledgement of relation of a tenant to a new landlord. It also implies continuity of tenancy.¹⁵⁶² Under the Indian law, a letter of attornment is not necessary to complete the title of the assignee of the reversion.¹⁵⁶³ An attornment by the tenant is not necessary to confer validity of transfer of landlord's rights where the tenant against whom the eviction proceedings commenced owing to non payment of rent received written intimation from managing officer-cum-custodian of evacuee property being sold to auction purchaser, more so as the tenant never paid rent to the auction purchaser and the auction purchaser acquired all rights and liability of the landlord in respect of subsisting tenancy by operation of law. Simultaneous pleas taken by tenant of being owner of suit premises and of adverse possession are mutually inconsistent. Where the Landlord gave due notice to the tenant terminating the tenancy, seeking vacant possession and arrears of rent and the tenant never specifically denied receipt of notice from the landlord and did send a reply, the suit filed would be within the limitation period of 12 years.¹⁵⁶⁴ An attornment by the tenant is also not necessary when the original landlord after the transfer of property admits the same and records the property in the name of the new owner and the existence of jural relationship of landlord and the tenant between the owner and the tenant would be established.¹⁵⁶⁵

[s 109.8] Apportionment

Notice to the tenant is, by virtue of section 37 sufficient to convert the single obligation to pay rent to the lessor, into a multiple obligation to pay rent to the lessor, and the assignee of part. On receipt of notice, the lessee is bound to pay to each the proportionate part of the rent.¹⁵⁶⁶ The lessor, the assignee and the lessee may make the apportionment amicably, or failing an agreement, a suit may be filed for the purpose. Even if there was some apportionment of rent in between co-landlords, such apportionment does not have the effect of severing the tenancy.¹⁵⁶⁷

[s 109.9] Statutory Transfers

Though section 109 contemplates transfer of lessor's right inter vivos, the spirit behind it is held to apply even when right, title and interest in immovable property stands transferred by operation of law, and the successor in interest would be entitled to the rights of the predecessor. Thus, terminating the tenancy issued by the predecessor Board under the state Act to the lessee under section 106 read with section 111(h) of the TP Act, 1882 terminating the tenancy in terms of the covenants of the lease, would ensure to the benefit of the transferee successor-in-interest Board under the central Act. ¹⁵⁶⁸

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

110. Exclusion of the day on which term commences.—

Where the time limited by a lease of immovable property is expressed as commencing from a particular day, in computing that time such day shall be excluded. Where no day of commencement is named, the time so limited begins from the making of the lease.

Duration of lease for a year.—Where the time so limited is a year or a number of years, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the lease shall last during the whole anniversary of the day from which such time commences.

Option to determine lease.—Where the time so limited is expressed to be terminable before its expiration, and the lease omits to mention at whose option it is so terminable, the lessee, and not the lessor, shall have such option.

[s 110.1] Application of Section

There is a difference of opinion on whether the section applies to oral leases, or is confined to written leases only. It has been held in some cases that it only applies to written leases.¹⁵⁶⁹ In another case, it was held that it was not confined to written leases, but could apply to an oral lease.¹⁵⁷⁰ In Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co v Victor Oil Co,¹⁵⁷¹ it was said that the first paragraph of the section contemplated that a time or period should be limited by the lease and the period must be expressed to commence from a particular day, and that when these two conditions were fulfilled, the rule of interpretation laid down in the section would apply. It follows from this, that as a monthly tenancy does not limit the time within the meaning of the section, the section cannot apply to such tenancy and so it has been held.¹⁵⁷² The Supreme Court in a case where month to month tenancy by holding over ended the 9th of every month, held that in view of section 110, in computing the period, the date of commencing, ie, 9th has to be excluded.¹⁵⁷³ However, the Andhra Pradesh High Court held that section 110 is not applicable to a tenancy from month to month by holding over, and it applies only to the periodical lease with a specific date of commencement of lease.¹⁵⁷⁴

Where a lease for years expressed to commence from the first day of a particular year also expressly stipulates that the lease is to terminate with the end of the last year of the term, such term is “an express agreement to the contrary” within the meaning of the second paragraph.¹⁵⁷⁵ In such a case, the strict application of the first paragraph will make the lease self-contradictory, and, therefore, it has been suggested in the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co's case, that the first paragraph should be read as qualified by some such expression as

“unless the context otherwise requires”.

It has been held that the rules contained in this section are technical and will not be applied in Punjab, where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force.¹⁵⁷⁶

Even where a period is fixed for the lease, it can provide for its early termination by an express covenant which clearly entitles the lessor to determine the lease. The recitals in the preamble to the lease cannot control its express terms and covenants laid down in the operative part of the document.¹⁵⁷⁷

[s 110.2] Computation of Time

The rule here enacted for the computation of time is the same as that in section 9(1) of the General Clauses Act, 1897. A lease “from the day of date” or a lease “from henceforth” means a lease from the day of execution.¹⁵⁷⁸ Thus, if no date of commencement is named, the lease begins from the date of execution,¹⁵⁷⁹ or from the first day of the month in which it was executed.¹⁵⁸⁰ The date on which notice is given cannot be excluded in computing the period of notice.¹⁵⁸¹ In Benoy Krishna Das v Salsiccioni,¹⁵⁸² the Privy Council held that a lease for four years from June 1921, expired on June 1925. The tenant held over on a monthly tenancy, each month of which expired on the 1st of each succeeding month, and this monthly tenancy was validly terminated by a notice to quit of February 1928, which treated the tenancy as expiring at midnight of March 1928. This decision has been followed in the under noted cases.¹⁵⁸³ But there may be an express contract to the contrary within the meaning of the second paragraph,¹⁵⁸⁴ and the section has no application where the lease provides as to when it will determine;¹⁵⁸⁵

The joint effect of the first two paragraphs of section 110 is that while the day of commencement is to be excluded, its anniversary is to be included to make a complete year. However, para 2 makes this subject to an express agreement to the contrary. Both these paragraphs of section 110 are integrally related and the duration cannot be determined, unless the date of commencement is also taken into consideration.¹⁵⁸⁶

[s 110.3] Option to Break

A lease “for three, six or nine years” is a lease of nine years terminable at the end of three, or six years.¹⁵⁸⁷ A lease may be for a term of years with option to “break” or determine the lease at the expiry of the earlier periods, eg a lease for 21 years terminable at the expiry of 7 or 14 years. If the option is given to each party, then either the lessor or the lessee may determine the lease.¹⁵⁸⁸ If the lease is “for the term of 21 years, determinable nevertheless, at the expiration of 7 or 14 years, if the said parties shall so think fit”, it is determinable only by the consent of both the parties,¹⁵⁸⁹ although it may be the intention that either party should have the option of determining it.

But if the lease is silent as to who shall have the option, the section enacts that the lessee shall have the option. This follows the English case of Dann v Spurrier,¹⁵⁹⁰ and rests upon the principle that when words of grant are ambiguous, they are to be construed most strictly against the grantor.¹⁵⁹¹ The exercise by the lessee of this power does not prejudice the lessor’s remedy for previous breaches of covenant.¹⁵⁹²

[s 110.3.1] Condition of the option

Any condition expressed in the lease as to the exercise of the option must be strictly complied with. If the lessor has the option, in case he requires the premises for building purposes, he must show a bona fide intention and that he has entered into an agreement to build.¹⁵⁹³ If the lessee has the option and the terms of the option are

110. Exclusion of the day on which term commences.—

that he shall have paid the rent and performed the covenants of the lease, this is a condition precedent.¹⁵⁹⁴

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

111. Determination of lease.—

A lease of immovable property determines—

- (a) by efflux of the time limited thereby;
- (b) where such time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event—by the happening of such event;
- (c) where the interest of the lessor in the property terminates on, or his power to dispose off the same extends only to, the happening of any event—by the happening of such event;
- (d) in case the interests of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property become vested at the same time in one person in the same right;
- (e) by express surrender; that is to say, in case the lessee yields up his interest under the lease to the lessor, by mutual agreement between them;
- (f) by implied surrender;
- (g) by forfeiture; that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that, on breach thereof, the lessor may re-enter ¹⁵⁹⁵[]; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself; ¹⁵⁹⁶[or (3) the lessee is adjudicated an insolvent and the lease provides that the lessor may re-enter on the happening of such event; and in ¹⁵⁹⁷[any of these cases] the lessor or his transferee ¹⁵⁹⁸[gives notice in writing to the lessee of] his intention to determine the lease;
- (h) on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease, or to quit, or of intention to quit, the property leased, duly given by one party to the other.

ILLUSTRATION TO CLAUSE (F)

A lessee accepts from his lessor a new lease of the property leased, to take effect during the continuance of the existing lease. This is an implied surrender of the former lease, and such lease determines thereupon.

[s 111.1] Amendment

Clause (g) has been amended by Act 20 of 1929.

[s 111.2] Determination of leases

Under the general law and in cases where the tenancy is governed only by the provisions of TP Act, 1882, once the tenancy comes to an end by determination of lease under section 111, the right of the tenant to continue in possession of the premises comes to an end, and for any period thereafter, for which he continues to occupy the premises, he becomes liable to pay damages for use and occupation at the rate of which the landlord could have let out the premises on being vacated by the tenant.

111. Determination of lease.—

¹⁵⁹⁹ A tenancy at will or a tenancy at sufferance is determined by demand for possession or, by entry by the landlord without notice or, by the tenant quitting. Other tenancies are determined in one or other of the eight ways indicated by this section. To these may be added determination under a power or option to break. The principles of this section have been applied to leases in Punjab,¹⁶⁰⁰ Haryana,¹⁶⁰¹ and to agricultural leases.¹⁶⁰²

Except by following the provisions of sections 106 and 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, tenancy cannot be determined. Both these provisions are to be read conjointly in order to come to the requirements of a valid notice.¹⁶⁰³ In suit for recovery of possession of property from tenant whose tenancy is not protected under Rent Control Act, landlord is required to establish existence of jural relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and termination of tenancy either by lapse of time or by service of notice.¹⁶⁰⁴ The courts have also expressed concerns about the tendency of the landlords to evict the tenants on one pretext or the other so that the former can rent out the premises at a higher rate of rent and have held that the provisions of the rent law must be construed harmoniously so as to balance the rights and obligations of the tenant and the landlord.¹⁶⁰⁵ Therefore, the Rent Act, severely restricting the grounds for enhancement of rent and for eviction of the tenant from the rented premises, regulates the relationship between the landlord and the tenant beyond the general law under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.¹⁶⁰⁶

Under the general law, and in cases where the tenancy is governed only by the provisions of Transfer of Property Act, 1882, once the tenancy comes to an end by determination of lease under section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, the right of the tenant to continue in possession of the premises comes to an end and for any period thereafter, for which he continues to occupy the premises, he becomes liable to pay damages for use and occupation at the rate at which the landlord could have let out the premises on being vacated by the tenant.¹⁶⁰⁷ In Coal India Ltd v Apeejay House Pvt Ltd,¹⁶⁰⁸ a tenant under a lease deed had enjoyed the protection under old tenancy laws (The West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, that stood repealed by the new tenancy law that came in force in 1997). As lease was for a period of ten years being less than 20 years, with the repeal of old laws, the protection of enjoyment was granted to him for two years and on the expiry of such two years, it was held that no more protection would be available. Once a suit is also for enforcement of a legal right under the law of land and the enforcement of such right does not arise out of any express terms of the contract then it stands completely outside the sweep of section 69(2) of the Partnership Act and is not barred by the same.¹⁶⁰⁹

The Supreme Court of India has considered the application of section 13 of the Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act, 2002 in cases of lease and declared that “until lease of an immoveable property gets determined, lessee has right to enjoy the property and this right to property cannot be taken away without the authority of law. There is no provision in section 13 of the SARFAESI Act that a lease in respect of a secured asset shall stand determined when secured creditor takes steps mentioned in section 13.”¹⁶¹⁰

For maintaining a suit for declaration that termination of lease was invalid, the lessee need not show that he was dispossessed from leased property. Dispossession is different from termination of lease.¹⁶¹¹

A right to evict the tenant upon expiry of the lease is not a right “arising from a contract” but is a common law right or a statutory right under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.¹⁶¹² and can be exercised by the owner/lessor.

111. Determination of lease.—

If the property is owned by several owners, the suit for eviction can be filed by one co-owner.¹⁶¹³ If the execution of the lease deed was as per the decision by the competent authority, the lease can be terminated by the same authority who executed the lease deed, after a decision has been made in that regard by such competent authority.¹⁶¹⁴

[s 111.3] Emergency legislation

The effect of this section as of sections 106 and 108, clause (q) has been practically superseded by special legislation in some places to give greater protection to tenants against eviction. Note “Emergency Legislation” under section 108, clause (q) may be referred.

[s 111.4] Summary Eviction in case of appointment of a Court Receiver

Order XL, rule 1(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that nothing in O XL rule 1 shall authorise the court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove. The Supreme Court has held that a receiver appointed by the Court will be bound by the incidences of tenancy flowing from the statute regulating and determining inter se rights of landlord and tenant. No order for eviction of the tenant can be passed by the court at the instance of its officer, the receiver, without taking recourse to appropriate proceedings for eviction of the tenant under the appropriate statute regulating and governing the inter se rights of landlord and tenant. The court has no jurisdiction to pass orders and directions affecting the right of the tenant protected, controlled or regulated by the rent legislation on the score of expediency in passing some order or direction for the maintenance and preservation of the property in custodia legis. It is desirable that the court should refrain from such determination in a summary proceeding initiated before it.¹⁶¹⁵ However, the same would be inapplicable in case the trespasser or any person who obtains the possession after the Receiver took over symbolic possession or actual possession of the property.¹⁶¹⁶ In case the lessee came in possession of the premises by an order of the court pursuant to a report of the court Receiver, summary eviction cannot be proceeded against such tenant.¹⁶¹⁷

[s 111.5] Clause (a)—Efflux of time¹⁶¹⁸

Leases for a definite period, such as a lease for a year or for a term of year expires on the last day of the term,¹⁶¹⁹ and the lessor or person entitled to the reversion may enter without notice or any other formality.¹⁶²⁰ A lease merely stating that it is for a period of less than one year is ex-facie for an indefinite period and, as such, cannot expire by efflux of time.¹⁶²¹ As a lease is a transfer of an estate of inheritance, it does not terminate with the death of the original lessee, but survives during the remainder of the term of his heirs and representatives.¹⁶²² Where on the death of a tenant intestate, the landlord instituted summary proceedings for eviction against the grandson of the tenant (who had moved into the premises) without the landlord giving notice of eviction. It was held that on the death of the tenant intestate, the tenancy vested in the president of the family division. As no notice had been served on the president or any other appropriate person, the proceedings failed. A suit for eviction could not be brought unless the landlord had an immediate right to possession, which right did not arise in this case since the landlord had not terminated the tenancy by giving notice.¹⁶²³ The lessee cannot dispute the title of the lessor as a ground for refusing to give up possession at the expiry of the lease; for if he has been let into possession by the lessor, he cannot deny the title under which he entered without first surrendering possession.¹⁶²⁴ After expiry of the period of termination of the lease, the possession of the lessee is that of a tenant-at-sufferance as being one who came in by right and held over without right¹⁶²⁵ and if the premises remain in the possession of the tenant or sub-tenant after the termination of the tenancy, then there is an obligation to pay mesne profits.¹⁶²⁶ If the lessee has not surrendered possession, the estoppel continues even after the termination of the tenancy.¹⁶²⁷

ILLUSTRATION

A purchased land at a revenue sale in the name of B his benamidar. A then let the land to C. At the expiry of the lease C refused to give up the land alleging that the real owner was B. Held that C having been let into possession by A was estopped from disputing his title.¹⁶²⁸

111. Determination of lease.—

The estoppel extends to the assignee of the lessee,¹⁶²⁹ and to any person who has come in by collusion with the lessee.¹⁶³⁰ The Calcutta High Court has held that the estoppel applies only to the landlord who has let the tenant in.¹⁶³¹ But the Bombay and Madras High Courts have held that even if a tenant has not been let into possession by the landlord, there is an estoppel when a tenancy arises on his attorning to that landlord.¹⁶³² Section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 limits the estoppel to the landlord's title at the beginning of the term, and the tenant may show that the landlord's title has determined since he took the lease.¹⁶³³

Section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 has been explained by the Privy Council in Krishna Prasad Lal Singh Deo v Baraboni Coal Concern.¹⁶³⁴ The Privy Council have held that section 116 does not deal with all kinds of estoppel or occasions of estoppel which may arise between landlord and tenant, but deals with one cardinal simple estoppel. It postulates that there is a tenancy still continuing and that it had its beginning at a given date from a given landlord, and provides that neither a tenant, nor anyone claiming through a tenant shall be heard to deny that, that particular landlord had at date a title to the property, and there is no exception even for the case where the lease itself discloses the defects of title. In the ordinary case of a lease intended as a present demise, the section applies against the lessee, any assignee of the term, and any sub-lessee or licensee. The Privy Council have further held that the principle of the section does not disentitle a tenant to dispute the derivative title of one who claims to have since become entitled to the reversion and in that sense, the principle only applies to the title of the landlord who "let the tenant in" as distinct from any other person claiming to be reversioner. Nor does the principle apply to prevent a tenant from pleading that the title of the original lessor has since come to an end. Under section 116, "the tenancy" does not begin afresh every time the interest of the tenant or the landlord devolves upon a new individual by succession or assignment. Further, under that section, a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title irrespective of whether he was already in possession of the property at the time when he took the lease. The Calcutta cases mentioned above have been explained as being outside section 116. In view of the observation of the Privy Council that neither a new tenant, nor a new kabulayat necessarily implies a new tenancy, the Bombay and the Madras decisions noted above may need reconsideration.

The lessee may resist eviction if a covenant for renewal gives him the option to take a lease for a further term.¹⁶³⁵ If in such a case the lessee continues in possession in exercise of his option as per the renewal clause over the leased property after the initial period is over, his continuance in possession would be deemed to be under the original registered deed. However, the period is to be treated in such a case as part of the period of the original registered deed.¹⁶³⁶ Where lease of land to petty shopkeepers came to an end by the efflux of time and the lessor city corporation refusing to renew it, evicted the lessees, it was held that the action of the corporation was not open to challenge as being in breach of Article 21 of the Constitution as it was only a case of a contractual obligation ceasing to exist.¹⁶³⁷

A suit for eviction has to be filed after the determination of tenancy by efflux of time and not before it. If it is instituted even before the expiry of the lease by efflux of time it would be a premature claim.¹⁶³⁸

In Delhi Development Authority v Anant Raj Agencies Pvt Ltd,¹⁶³⁹ the Delhi Improvement Trust granted a lease in favour of original lessee. After enactment of the Delhi Development Act, 1957, and all properties, movable or immovable, vested in the DIT came to be vested in the DDA. The DDA terminated the lease of the said land on account of non-observation of the terms and conditions contained in the lease deed. But payments towards rent were continuously made by the lessee to the DDA's office. The issue was whether the original lessee has acquired any right, in respect of the property in question after the termination of lease by efflux of time and also termination by notice, in the absence of renewal of lease by the DDA in writing, by virtue of payment of rent in the office of the DDA? The apex court held that there cannot be an automatic renewal of lease in favour of the original lessee once it stands terminated by efflux of time and also by issuing notice terminating the lease. Merely accepting the amount towards the rent by the office of the DDA after expiry of the lease period shall not be construed as renewal of lease of the premises for another period of 20 years.

111. Determination of lease.—

A dispute relating to eviction and recovery of rent in a lease made for a fixed period, coming to an end by efflux of time, would be a subject matter of civil suit and it cannot be referred to an arbitrator despite the fact that the lease deed entered into as between the parties contained an arbitration clause for resolving the disputes arising out of lease.¹⁶⁴⁰

The premises protected under the relevant tenancy Act, are not governed by section 111(a).¹⁶⁴¹

[s 111.5.1] Covenant for renewal

The lease may contain a covenant for renewal, ie, a covenant to grant a renewal of the lease either at the end of the term, or at some stated period within the term. Such a covenant confers an immediate right to a further term, and as the covenant runs with the land, it is exercisable by the assignees of the lessee, and binds the assignees of the lessor.¹⁶⁴² Such a covenant does not create an interest in property, and runs with the land, it cannot, therefore, infringe the rule against perpetuities.¹⁶⁴³ A covenant for renewal contained in a lease does not ipso facto extend the tenure or term of the lease, “but only entitles the lessee to obtain a fresh lease... in accordance with and in due satisfaction of the law governing the making of leases.”¹⁶⁴⁴ The lease cannot be automatically renewed and the tenant has to exercise the option for renewal. If he does not do so, and the ground of expiration of term of the lease is enforced, and the lessor erroneously accepts the rent after determination of the lease through efflux of time though he never consented to continuation of possession by the tenant, and the notice that he sent to the tenant did not manifest any intention of renewal of tenancy, the suit filed by the landlord for recovery of possession would be proper.¹⁶⁴⁵ Acceptance of rent after the expiry of the period of lease would not convert a fixed duration tenancy into a perpetual lease without any intention of the parties to continue that lease.¹⁶⁴⁶ Even the payment of entire rent would not entitle the lessee for automatic renewal of lease when renewal is subject to consent of the lessor.¹⁶⁴⁷ Where the lease in respect of a restaurant belonging to the local authority had expired, and auctions were held in which the erstwhile lessee participated without insisting on his rights at the appropriate time under the relevant rules which enjoined upon the local authority to make an offer to the existing lessee in the event of a decision to revise the lease amount, it was held that he was precluded by his own conduct from protesting over the auctions later.¹⁶⁴⁸

The terms of the lease agreement have paramount importance in renewal and extension of lease and the entire lease document should be considered in totality to decipher the terms and conditions of lease.¹⁶⁴⁹ In case, renewal was claimed under a clause of the previous lease, the lessor cannot be faulted for terminating the tenancy by a notice under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.¹⁶⁵⁰ The covenant generally, requires the lessee to give notice of his intention to take a renewal before the expiry of the term, and if so, the right of renewal may be lost by not applying within the specified time,¹⁶⁵¹ though relief will be granted in special circumstances against failure to give notice in time.¹⁶⁵² If no time is mentioned for giving notice, it will suffice if notice is given in a reasonable time.¹⁶⁵³ But it is not to be inferred that the lessee will lose his right of renewal by not giving notice or by not having made an application for renewal if he continues in possession with the assent of the lessor.¹⁶⁵⁴ Time is not regarded as of the essence of the contract for renewal, and if the lessee omits to exercise the option, the lessor may call upon him to decide whether he will take the lease, and any delay by the lessee after receiving such notice from the lessor will be fatal.¹⁶⁵⁵ In a Calcutta case, the landlord made a fresh settlement of a village after the term of the original lease had expired. But the settlement was held to be invalid because there was a covenant for renewal in the original lease, and the landlord had omitted to give notice to the original lessees who were still in possession. If the lessee merely holds over and does not exercise his right of renewal, he becomes an annual or monthly tenant, as the case may be.¹⁶⁵⁶ But where no notice of the exercise of the option was required to be given, an option may be exercised by continuing in possession, and payment of rent after the expiry of the lease.¹⁶⁵⁷

On principle, a lessor may, after expiry of the period for which lease is granted, (i) renew the lease; or (ii) resume possession (ie, re-enter). But if he chooses to grant a fresh lease or, atleast creates that impression by his conduct spread over a long time, it results in abandonment of right of re-entry. Thus where the lessee continued in possession after the expiry of the lease of the nazul land granted by the government for a long period and no action was taken by the government, it was held that lessee can seek execution of fresh lease.¹⁶⁵⁸

There may be conditions precedent to the exercise of the option, such as, performance of the conditions in the lease and as to repairs, and these will be very strictly construed.¹⁶⁵⁹ But where the covenant speaks of such an option being exercisable if the other covenants have been “reasonably fulfilled”, compliance such as would be done by a reasonable man would suffice.¹⁶⁶⁰ Where the covenant of renewal is subject to conditions precedent, the right of renewal arises only when notice is given to the lessor in terms of the renewal clause and the lessee has performed all the conditions precedent as provided in the renewal clause. In an Allahabad case, the original lessee did not ask for the renewal of the lease, nor did he perform the other conditions precedent, though the municipal Board (lessor) had given him notice to do so. Hence, the lease did not stand renewed merely because of the approval of the district magistrate to the proposal of the municipal Board for renewal at an enhanced rent.¹⁶⁶¹ A covenant for renewal must be definite as to the term, otherwise it may be void for uncertainty.¹⁶⁶² A covenant in a lease that after the expiration thereof, the lessor shall be at liberty to lease out the premises and the lessee shall be entitled to take the lease at the lessee’s will, was held as not amounting to a covenant for renewal.¹⁶⁶³ But, in Indian Cotton Co v Raghunath,¹⁶⁶⁴ a lease for five years with a covenant for renewal so long as the lease is renewable at the option of the lessee as long as the company lasted, was a covenant for renewal. So also, a clause allowing the lessee to remain if he wishes to remain a new bandobasta, was upheld as a covenant for renewal.¹⁶⁶⁵ Where the lessees of a plot leased by the government for manufacture of salt were allowed to induct financial partners and after doing so, they themselves retired without bringing it to the notice of the government and the renewal of lease was obtained in the name of the original lessees, it was held that the renewal was fraudulently obtained, and no estoppel could be pleaded against the government which refused the request for further renewal and resumed the plots.¹⁶⁶⁶ Where a lease that expired with efflux of time had a renewal clause that provided that the lease can be renewed subject to fresh terms and conditions mutually agreed upon by the parties and the arbitration clause referred to remedy for resolving disputes in connection with breach/termination of lease, this lease cannot be automatically renewed as a matter of right by the lessee under the guise of pending arbitration proceedings. Where such a lessee fails to hand over the vacant possession of property on the expiry of the lease the eviction proceedings initiated under the Act would be proper.¹⁶⁶⁷

A covenant for renewal is not void for uncertainty or vagueness merely because it provides for renewal on terms to be agreed upon, or contingent to the tenant upon erecting a building as agreed upon; and that if parties do not agree, the court can settle the terms.¹⁶⁶⁸ Where a lease contained a covenant for renewal “for a rent and containing the like covenants and provisions as are herein contained” (save for the renewal clause); it was held that this was, in fact, to be a renewal of the old lease, so that the rent must be the same.¹⁶⁶⁹ The chief difficulty about a covenant for renewal is to distinguish a covenant for one renewal from a covenant for perpetual renewal. This is a matter of construction of the covenant,¹⁶⁷⁰ and the leaning of the courts always has been against perpetual renewal, and unless the intention is clearly shown, the agreement is exhausted by one renewal.¹⁶⁷¹ A covenant for a perpetual renewal of the lease must always be unequivocal.¹⁶⁷² A covenant for a new lease “with all covenants, grants, and articles” contained in the old lease will not include the covenant for renewal;¹⁶⁷³ for an option of renewal is not the same thing as an option for renewal after renewal.¹⁶⁷⁴ But the addition of the words “including this present covenant” will make the covenant one for perpetual renewal.¹⁶⁷⁵ In a Calcutta case, the lessee sub-let some portions of the leased premises to different persons. The lessor started realising rent from the sub-lessees, while the lessee continued to pay the original rent to the lessor. It was held that in the absence of evidence to show that there was even any agreement between the parties from which it could be inferred that a new relationship was created, it could not be said that there was implied surrender in respect of the premises sub-let.¹⁶⁷⁶ Where, however, the covenant gave the lessee an option “of continuing the tenancy for a further period of six months on the same terms and conditions including this clause”, it was held that the lessee had the right to renew for one further period of six months and no more,¹⁶⁷⁷ but this decision has been criticised by the Court of Appeal, which observed that it ought not to be followed; such a clause must ordinarily be construed as entitling the lessee rights of perpetual renewal.¹⁶⁷⁸

Where a covenant for renewal exists, its exercise is, of course, a unilateral act of the lessee, and the consent of the lessor is unnecessary.¹⁶⁷⁹ However, where the terms in a lease agreement provided for renewal of the lease on certain conditions, mere sending the letter to a person for renewal of lease, would not create a lease or allow renewal of the same more so if there was inaction of the lessee to pay market rent and also no appropriate claim for renewal of lease.¹⁶⁸⁰

A tenancy created for a period of one year with a clause that the tenant would vacate the shop when required by landlord for her use, is not a perpetual lease and the landlord would be entitled to file a suit for eviction after a period of one year without the need to show her personal need for the premises.¹⁶⁸¹

[s 111.5.2] Statutory Tenant

A person remaining in occupation of the premises let to him under a rent control legislation after the determination of or expiry of the period of the tenancy is commonly, though in law not accurately, called “a statutory tenant”. Such a person is not a tenant at all; he has no estate or interest in the premises occupied by him. He has merely the protection of the statute in that he cannot be turned out so long as he pays the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy. His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal; it is not capable of being transferred or assigned, and devolves on his death only in the manner provided by the statute.¹⁶⁸²

[s 111.6] Clause (b)—Contingent term

If a lease is not periodic or in perpetuity, it must be for a certain time; but it is sufficient if the time is certain with reference to a future event. The note “Lease for a certain time” under section 105 may be referred.

If the term depends upon the happening of a future event, the lease determines on the death of the lessee. A lease for the duration of the war¹⁶⁸³ determines when peace is declared. The word “certain” under section 105 of the TP Act, 1882 cannot mean certain on the date of the lease. It is enough if it is capable of being made certain on a future date.¹⁶⁸⁴

[s 111.7] Clause (c)—Termination of lessor's interest or power

If the lessor's interest is limited, the lease is determined with that interest. Thus, a lease by a tenant for life is void at his death.¹⁶⁸⁵ Accordingly, where a Maharaja made a grant of a village for the maintenance of his nephew for his lifetime and the nephew granted a permanent lease, the lease determined and became void on the death of the nephew.¹⁶⁸⁶ Since, a sub-tenancy comes to an end when the main lease is determined though if lawfully created it may be protected by provision of Tenancy Act.¹⁶⁸⁷ In the renewal of a lease, there exists an inefficacy of renewal of sub-lease during subsistence of renewal of head lease.¹⁶⁸⁸ A sub lessee is estopped from denying the title of the landlord so long as he actually or ostensibly enjoys the possession under the lease created by such landlord and must deliver possession back to him even where the head lease had expired. where there was sale of the leasehold property by the lessor to the third party and sub-lessee entered into arrangement with the purchaser and started occupying the property under him, de-recognition of the lease by the sub-lessee would not be proper and after the expiry of the head lease, the sub lessee would be liable to be evicted.¹⁶⁸⁹ A lease granted by a Hindu widow having a widow's estate would determine at her death, unless justified by necessity. A lease under a statutory or testamentary power would determine at the expiry of the time limited by that power for the term.¹⁶⁹⁰ A mortgagee in possession cannot grant a lease extending beyond the term of the mortgage, and a lease made by a mortgagee determines on redemption.¹⁶⁹¹ That does not mean that the lease created by the mortgagee is automatically determined. But the mortgagor is entitled to exercise his right to determine.¹⁶⁹²

If a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior mortgagee, he may treat lessee of the latter who continues in possession as trespassers.¹⁶⁹³

[s 111.8] Clause (d)—Merger

The doctrine of merger has been explained in the note under section 101. Merger is largely a question of

111. Determination of lease.—

intention, dependent on circumstances, and courts will presume against it when it operates to disadvantage of a party. “Merger” is generally defined as the absorption of a thing of less importance, by a greater whereby the lesser ceases to exist but the greater is not increased, and rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. In a merger a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, in one and the same right, without any intermediate estate. The less estate is immediately annihilated, or, in the legal terminology, is said to be merged, ie, sunk or drowned, in the greater. The rule in equity is the same as at law, with this modification that at law it is invariable and inflexible; in equity it is controlled by the expressed or implied intention of the party in whom the interest or estates unite. Thus, section 111(d) has to be read along with section 109, and not in isolation.¹⁶⁹⁴

Doctrine of merger, as statutorily recognised in India, contemplates (i) coalescence of the interest of the lessee and the interest of the lessor; (ii) in the whole of the property; (iii) at the same time;¹⁶⁹⁵ (iv) in one person; (v) in the same right. There must be a complete union of the whole interests of the lessor and the lessee so as to enable the lesser interest of the lessee sinking into the larger interest of the lessor in the reversion.¹⁶⁹⁶

Thus, if the lessor purchases the lessee's interest, or the landlord executes a sale deed,¹⁶⁹⁷ the lease is extinguished, as the same man cannot be at the same time both landlord and tenant.¹⁶⁹⁸ But a mere agreement to sell cannot, of course, result in a merger.¹⁶⁹⁹ However, where the landlady entered into an agreement of sale with her tenant, accepted money towards the sale consideration, delivered possession in lieu of such agreement, it indicates that she had repudiated her old relationship of landlord and tenant.¹⁷⁰⁰ In Shabbir Ahmed v Syed Mohammad Ali Ahmed Kabir,¹⁷⁰¹ a sale deed was executed for a portion of the tenanted premises in favour of the tenant who later claimed an extinguishment of the tenancy by merger. It was held that since there is no merger of the interest in the whole of the property, hence, the tenancy cannot be said to have been determined under section 111(d), and the tenant is not entitled to oust the landlord as there is no extinguishment of tenancy.

There can be no merger of lease and mortgage, even where the two transactions are in respect of the same property.¹⁷⁰² Merger postulates that there should not remain any outstanding interest in the property, and that one of the interests should be higher than the other. A mortgage is not a higher or a lower interest than a lease. Even if the rights of the lessee and the mortgagee are vested in one person, the reversion (in regard to the lease) and the right of redemption (in regard to the mortgage) would be outstanding in the owner of the property, and accordingly, there would not be a complete fusion of all the rights of ownership in one person.¹⁷⁰³

Where the issue is, whether, upon the redemption of an usufructuary mortgage, a tenant mortgagee could be directed to deliver actual or physical possession of the mortgaged property to the lessor mortgagor,¹⁷⁰⁴ the answer must depend on whether there was an implied surrender of the lessee's rights when the usufructuary mortgage was executed in favour of the lessor mortgagor. And this obviously depends upon what the intention of the parties was at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed in favour of the sitting tenant. The intention is to be gathered from the terms and conditions of the mortgage transaction, in the light of the surrounding circumstances of the case. All in all, it depends upon whether, by executing a possessory or usufructuary mortgage in favour of a sitting tenant, the parties intended that there should be a surrender of the lessee's rights. It is only if such a surrender can be inferred, that the mortgagor would be entitled to have delivery of physical possession upon redemption, but not otherwise.¹⁷⁰⁵

Where an agreement for sale is entered into between the lessor and lessee, the old relationship (of landlord and tenant) comes to an end. The rights and liabilities have thereafter to be worked out on that basis. If the purchase money is not paid, the agreement stands cancelled in terms of the agreement for sale.¹⁷⁰⁶ There is no inconsistency or incompatibility in one person being the tenant and also the mortgagee of the same property. In such a case, instead of paying the rent to the landlord, he adjusts it against the amount claimable by him as a mortgagee from the landlord. In such a case, it would be unreasonable to attribute to a tenant the intention to surrender the tenancy, and to invoke the sophisticated doctrine of implied surrender—a doctrine about which an ignorant and often illiterate tenant knows nothing.¹⁷⁰⁷ Where the landlord mortgaged the leased premises to the lessee and the mortgage-deed stipulated that, 'so long as the house will remain mortgaged with you, there shall be no interest of amount to you and no rent of the house', the Supreme Court held that both, interest and rent, accrued and there was only an adjustment of one liability against the other, and it could not be said that there was any symbolic surrender of possession by the lessee upon execution of the mortgage-deed on the ground that no rent accrued during the period of mortgage. In other words, the relationship between the parties as lessor and lessee subsisted, and there was no merger of the lease and the mortgage, as no such merger could take place in law. The decree for redemption in such a case only redeemed the mortgage, and did not determine the lease.¹⁷⁰⁸ The mortgage of house by the landlord in favour of the tenant by a mortgage-deed results in implied surrender of tenancy rights.¹⁷⁰⁹ However, a different opinion was stated by the Supreme Court in an earlier case, wherein it was held that the conduct of parties and the deed in question did not show any intention to surrender tenancy. This being so, the redemption of mortgage would revive the tenancy. The only effect of mortgage was that the lessee's rights were kept in abeyance, and they stood revived upon the redemption of the mortgage.¹⁷¹⁰ Where, apart from the provisions of section 111, merger is pleaded, it will have to be determined in each case as to what was the intention of the owner of the bigger estate.¹⁷¹¹ In an Allahabad case, a partnership firm entered in possession as sub-lease of the lessee, the main lease being for a fixed term and also prohibiting sub-letting. Subsequently, a partner of the firm became the landlord by transfer from the previous lessor. The landlord partner filed a suit for ejectment against the firm, alleging that it was his licensee. The firm denied the title of the landlord partner as a licensor and pleaded that they occupied the premises as sub-tenants, but did not adduce any evidence as to holding over in respect of the tenancy after its expiry. It was held that the lessor partner would be entitled to a decree of ejectment because there was no evidence that there was any act on the part of the lessor to accept the tenant as lessee. Had the tenancy continued, the landlord partners entry in the demised premises as a partner of the firm would determine the lease under section 111 (d), because the landlord partner would have been deemed to be in possession as a partner, over each and every parcel of the premises, and the lease would stand determined.¹⁷¹²

The transfer of lessor's reversion/renthold absolutely to a third person does not terminate the lease.¹⁷¹³ A condition of delivery of possession on determination of lease is not mandatory for such determination if it was not incorporated in the lease deed.¹⁷¹⁴

[s 111.8.1] The whole of the property

The interests of the lessor and of the lessee must be in the whole of the property, otherwise there is no merger. The interest of the lessor and the lessee in the whole of the property should become vested at the same time in one person in the same right, ie, there must be the union of the entire interest of the lessor and the lessee.¹⁷¹⁵ Thus, a lease is not extinguished because the lessee purchases a part of the reversion.¹⁷¹⁶ Where a property is given on lease and a part of it is sold to the tenant and the remaining to another person, there is no merger as the sale to the tenant is not with respect to the whole property,¹⁷¹⁷ but if one of the joint tenant section purchases the whole property leased to them and the other tenant neither pays rent nor claims tenancy rights joint tenancy would merge into a right of ownership.¹⁷¹⁸

If a co-lessee wife purchases the property which was leased to her along with her husband, there would be no determination of tenancy of the husband by the principle of merger, and the husband would be a tenant in the property now owned by his wife.¹⁷¹⁹ Where sub-lease of portion of the premises was granted, the sub-lessee acquired only part of the interest of the superior lessor. The doctrine of merger does not apply. The sub-tenancy is not extinguished. Under section 111 (d), a lease of immovable property is determined, in case the interest of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property becomes vested at the same time in one person, in the same right. When a leasehold and a reversion coincide, there is a merger of the lesser estate in the greater. The lease determines, for it sinks into the reversion. Thus, if the lessor purchases the lessee's interest or the lessee purchases the lessor's interest, the lease is extinguished. But the interest of the lessor and the lessee must be in the whole of the property. A lease is not extinguished if the lessee purchases a part of the reversion. There is no merger, even though, by virtue of purchase, the sub-lessee becomes one of the co-sharer landlord of the lessee.¹⁷²⁰

111. Determination of lease.—

ILLUSTRATION

A is the owner of a property and leases it to B for ₹1400 per mensem. A then sells seven-eighth of the property to C and the remaining one-eighth to the lessee B. C claims that B's lease is extinguished by merger and that the reasonable profits of the property are ₹3500 per mensem and sues B for seven-eighth of that sum. Held that as seven-eighth purchase was not of the whole property the lease was not extinguished. C is therefore only entitled to seven-eighth of ₹1400 per mensem from B.¹⁷²¹

[s 111.8.2] No intervening estate

The expression “the whole of the property” seems inadequate to express the further condition that the union must be of the entire interest of the lessor and of the lessee. With reference to section 101, the legislature had discarded the equitable rule of intention, and has adopted the simple rule that the existence of an encumbrance prevents merger. So also, with reference to the interest of the lessor and lessee, the union of the estates cannot occur if there is any intervening estate.¹⁷²² Thus, in Bunon v Barclay,¹⁷²³ the lessee subleased for a term shorter by a few days, and then assigned his interest to his lessor. This did not operate as a merger of the sublease, for the term of a few days intervened. A mortgage in Indian form is not a transfer of the whole interest of the mortgagor, and it is submitted that a mortgage by a lessor of his reversion to the lessee would not effect a merger. An Allahabad case,¹⁷²⁴ though not decided under this section, illustrates this principle. A zamindar mortgaged to an occupancy tenant and on redemption claimed physical possession on the ground that the tenant's right had been extinguished by merger. The court, however, held that the only effect of the mortgage was to suspend the rent during the period of the mortgage. But in a later judgment,¹⁷²⁵ the same High Court has held that Kallu v Diwan had no application to cases of mortgages by conditional sale; where a lessee is such a mortgagee, there is a merger and the lease determines. Both the Madras¹⁷²⁶ and the Punjab¹⁷²⁷ High Courts have differed from the ratio of Kallu v Diwan, and held that there would be a merger if the demised property is mortgaged with possession to the lessee. However, in a Calcutta case, the court was inclined to the view that there would be no merger where a lessee purchased the equity of redemption of his lessor.¹⁷²⁸ The Andhra Pradesh High Court has considered and distinguished the Madras case.¹⁷²⁹ In Lachman Das v Heera Lal,¹⁷³⁰ the Allahabad High Court has reaffirmed Kallu v Diwan.

[s 111.8.3] In the same right

Another requisite for the operation of merger is that the estates must be held in the same right, for, as said by Lord Kenyon, Nothing is dearer than that a term which is taken in alieno jure is not merged in a reversion acquired suo jure.¹⁷³¹ There is no merger if the lessee makes the lessor his executor,¹⁷³² or if the lessee is administrator of the lessor.¹⁷³³ Accordingly, a device to prevent merger is to take a conveyance of one of the interests as a trustee;¹⁷³⁴ or the purchase of the interests by different members of a joint family.¹⁷³⁵

[s 111.8.4] Where section inapplicable

As to leases before the TP Act, 1882, it has been said that the doctrine of merger was not recognised by the law of India,¹⁷³⁶ and it is true that as to such leases, section 2(c) makes the section inapplicable.¹⁷³⁷ Both as to leases prior to the TP Act, 1882, and to leases to which the section does not apply, the question of merger is decided by the general law under which merger depends upon the intention of the parties.¹⁷³⁸ Accordingly, there is a merger if the conduct of the parties shows that there was no intention to keep the interests apart.¹⁷³⁹ Following this rule, the Calcutta High Court held that there was a merger in a case in which a putni interest was purchased by a zamindar,¹⁷⁴⁰ though in an earlier case the same High Court had said that the rule of merger was not applicable to putnis.¹⁷⁴¹ In two Calcutta cases,¹⁷⁴² the rule of merger was wrongly applied following a dictum of the Privy Council in Rajah Kishendatt v Rajah Mumtaz Ali,¹⁷⁴³ which was a case of accession, and of resumable tenures which fell into the parent estate.

[s 111.9] Clause (e)—Surrender

A surrender is yielding up of the term of the lessee's interest to him who has the immediate reversion or the lessor's interest.¹⁷⁴⁴ It takes effect, therefore, like a contract by mutual consent, on the lessor's acceptance of the act of the lessee.¹⁷⁴⁵ The lessee cannot, therefore, surrender, unless the term is vested in him;¹⁷⁴⁶ and the surrender must be to a person in whom the immediate reversion expectant on the term is vested.¹⁷⁴⁷ Thus, a

111. Determination of lease.—

lessee cannot surrender to a receiver in whom the reversion is not vested;¹⁷⁴⁸ or to a lessor after he has sold,¹⁷⁴⁹ or mortgaged¹⁷⁵⁰ the reversion. Nor can the lessee surrender if the lease is for a fixed term, and contains a clause expressly forbidding surrender.¹⁷⁵¹ Where there are several lessees, one of them can surrender in favour of the lessor, in which case the lessor will be entitled to be called for partition of that interest alone.¹⁷⁵² In a Gujarat case, the question arose whether, after the surrender of tenancy rights by the husband (who was admittedly the contracting party in the matter of agreement of lease), the wife, of her own, had any right to the premises. It was held that after a voluntary surrender by the husband, the wife had no legal right to be on the premises and, in the eye of the law, she was a trespasser and liable to be evicted in a suit for eviction.¹⁷⁵³

Surrenders are either express or implied. This clause deals with express surrenders, and the next clause with implied surrenders.

[s 111.9.1] Express surrender

In England, express surrenders are required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing. No such formality is necessary in India.¹⁷⁵⁴ A deed of surrender need not be registered, if there are facts de hors.¹⁷⁵⁵ No particular form of words is essential to make a good surrender.¹⁷⁵⁶ In England, the words generally used are “surrender, grant and yield up,” but they are not necessary if the intention to surrender is sufficiently expressed. Some local Acts provide for a written surrender in the case of agricultural tenancies.¹⁷⁵⁷

An express surrender takes effect at once, and there can be no surrender in the future.¹⁷⁵⁸ But an agreement to surrender becomes effective as an implied surrender when the estate is yielded up; and such an agreement can be enforced by specific performance. But delivery of possession is necessary, and so an insufficient notice to quit accepted by the landlord does not operate as a surrender if the lessee remains in possession after the notice.¹⁷⁵⁹ When the parties surrendered the tenancy and substituted it by a fresh arrangement, it was held that merely the fact that physically the possession was not handed over, is not of much consequence.¹⁷⁶⁰ Creation of a subsequent usufructuary mortgage in favour of the tenant does not determine prior lease by merger. But where the mortgage-deed expressly mentions delivery of possession and the tenant mortgagee agrees to pay the market rent and not the fixed rent, the prior lease is determined by express surrender.¹⁷⁶¹ Where the lessee, by a letter, intimates surrender of lease on a certain future date, no writing by the landlord is necessary as a token of acceptance. But if, after expiry of the date of surrender, the lessee continues in possession and the lessor gives to the lessee a notice to quit by the end of the next month, it indicates that the lessor has not acted on the surrender.¹⁷⁶² Where tenant validly surrenders a portion of the lease-hold property, ie, a portion in possession of sub-tenant, the sub-tenant is bound by the surrender, and must deliver possession of the portion in his occupation to the landlord. But the lessee, having parted with a part of the interest in the property in favour of the sub-lessee, cannot surrender that part of the property which is in the possession of the sub-lease. He cannot restore possession of the same to the lessor. This is apart from the fact that he can terminate the contract of lease, only as a whole, and not in respect of a part of it.¹⁷⁶³ Where conditions in the mortgage deed established surrender of tenancy rights for all time to come, no suit for eviction is maintainable, and the only remedy available to the landlord is to fall back upon his title as mortgagor and file suit for redemption of mortgage, and claim possession of suit house on the strength of mortgage deed.¹⁷⁶⁴

[s 111.10] Clause (f)—Implied surrender

The principle which governs the doctrine of implied surrender of a lease is that when certain relationship existed between two parties in respect of a subject matter and a new relationship has come into existence regarding the same subject matter, the two sets cannot co-exist, being inconsistent and incompatible between each other, ie, if the latter can come into effect only on termination of the former, then if it would be deemed to have been terminated in order to enable the latter to operate. A mere alteration or improvement or even impairment for the former relationship would not ipso facto amount to implied surrender. It has to be ascertained on the terms of the new relationship vis-a-vis the erstwhile demise, and judge whether there was termination of the old jural relationship by implication.¹⁷⁶⁵

111. Determination of lease.—

Implied surrender or surrender by operation of law occurs—

- (1) by the creation of a new relationship; or
- (2) by relinquishment of possession.

The clause has been applied as embodying a rule of justice, equity and good conscience to agricultural leases.¹⁷⁶⁶

Surrender of part of a tenancy does not amount to implied surrender of the entire tenancy. Likewise, the mere increase or reduction of rent also will not necessarily import a surrender of an existing lease, and the creation of a new tenancy.¹⁷⁶⁷ In Manik Lal v Ravindra Kumar Gupta,¹⁷⁶⁸ a tenancy was for a fixed period of 25 years, but the lessor pleaded that since the entire amount has been adjusted, the fresh tenancy would commence with enhanced rent. In such cases the mere acceptance of fresh tenancy by the tenant would not result in automatic determination of lease as implied surrender

In English law, delivery of possession by the tenant to a landlord and his acceptance of possession affects a surrender by the operation of law. It is also called implied surrender in contradistinction to express surrender which must be either by deed, or in writing. Directing the occupier to acknowledge the landlord as his landlord, ie, to attorn to the landlord, is a sufficient delivery of possession by the tenant to the landlord. Under the illustration to clause (f) of section 111 of the TP Act, 1882, there would be an implied surrender of the former lease if a lessee accepts from his lessor new lease of the property leased, taking effect during the continuance of the existing lease. This illustration is, however, not exhaustive of the cases in which there may be an implied surrender of the lease. There can be an implied surrender if the lessor grants a new lease to a third person with the assent of the lessee of the existing lease, who delivers the possession to such person, or where the lessee directs his sub-tenant to pay the rent directly to a lessor.¹⁷⁶⁹ Where the lessee becomes the mortgagee, his rights as lessee remain in abeyance so that the larger rights as a mortgagee come into effect; his rights as lessee are restored when the mortgagee right comes to an end.¹⁷⁷⁰ A surrender by one of the several joint lessee's is valid only as to his share,¹⁷⁷¹ Where only some of the heirs of the lessor made a surrender, but the other heirs were never made parties to the suit, nor did they come up to assert their tenancy rights and had never paid any rent, it can be presumed that they had impliedly surrendered their tenancy rights, if any.¹⁷⁷² The fact that co-tenants did not defend their rights by paying rent to the landlord and obtaining rent receipts in their own names prior to the filing of written statement, could not amount to implied surrender.¹⁷⁷³ Where there is a parol agreement to vary the rent stipulated in a registered lease for a term and there is no intention to create a new lease, there is no implied surrender to the earlier lease. In view of section 17(l)(b), Registration Act, 1908, the lessor is not (in the absence of a registered deed varying the rent) entitled to rent at enhanced rate.¹⁷⁷⁴

The illustration to clause (f) of section 111 of the TP Act, 1882 is not exhaustive of the cases in which there may be an implied surrender of the lease. Just as under the English law, there can be an implied surrender, under the law of transfer of property in India, if the lessor grants a new lease to a third person with the assent of the lessee under the existing lease who delivers the possession to such person, or where the lessee directs his sub-tenant to pay the rent directly to the lessor.¹⁷⁷⁵

[s 111.10.1] New relationship

If the lessee accepts a new lease, that in itself is a surrender of the old lease, for the new lease could not be granted, unless the old was surrendered.¹⁷⁷⁶ Such surrender can also be implied from the consent of the parties, or from such facts as the relinquishment of possession by the lessee, and taking over possession by the lessor.¹⁷⁷⁷ This has been put on the ground of estoppel, and surrender by operation of law has been said to be “an act done by or to the owner of a particular estate, the validity of which he is estopped from disputing and which could not have been done if the particular estate continued to exist”;¹⁷⁷⁸ and as the surrender is founded upon estoppel, the intention of the parties is immaterial. It does not matter that the old lease is by deed and the new one by parole,¹⁷⁷⁹ and a new lease of a part will operate as a surrender of that part of the old lease.¹⁷⁸⁰ However, the new lease must be immediately operative, and the surrender is void if the new lease proves to be void.¹⁷⁸¹ Where the rent control Act was silent with regard to any procedure prescribed for surrendering the tenancy, it was held that the provisions of section 111(f) providing for implied surrender were not excluded.¹⁷⁸² When a new lease does not pass an interest according to the contract, the acceptance of it will not operate as a surrender of the former lease. In the case of a surrender implied by law from the acceptance of a new lease, the condition ought also be implied by law, making void the surrender in case the new lease should be made void. Thus, where the sanction obtained from the rent Controller was vitiated by fraud and, therefore, a nullity, the Supreme Court held that it could not be said that by reason of the tenants having agreed to take limited tenancy rights under the order of the rent Controller for a period of two years, they must be deemed to have impliedly surrendered their earlier tenancy rights as envisaged under clause (f) of section 111 of the TP Act, 1882.¹⁷⁸³

111. Determination of lease.—

ILLUSTRATION

A, the karnavan of a Malabar tarvad, grants a lease for years to B. A then grants a perpetual lease to B which if valid would have implied a surrender of the lease for years. But the perpetual lease was in excess of A's powers, and it was set aside by A's successor. But A's successor could not evict B as a trespasser, for the surrender being invalid, B was entitled to hold until the expiry of the lease for years.¹⁷⁸⁴

There is an implied surrender if the lessor grants a new lease to his lessee to take effect during the continuance of the existing lease as in the illustration to the section. When during the continuance of demise, the lessee executed a fresh lease, this operates in law as a surrender of the original lease.¹⁷⁸⁵ The execution of a fresh kabuliyet will imply the surrender even of a permanent lease.¹⁷⁸⁶ There is an implied surrender when the lessor lets to a new lessee at the request of the first lessee.¹⁷⁸⁷ However, this rule was held not to apply if the two leases were not incompatible as when the first was a mining lease, and the second, a lease for coffee planting.¹⁷⁸⁸ Where the parties entered into a compendious lease covering both the portions which were previously leased out, it was held that there was no escape from the conclusion that two earlier leases were thereby surrendered, since there cannot co-exist a lease for the two portions together, as well as two other separate leases of these two portions.¹⁷⁸⁹ On the other hand, an agreement regarding a change in the rent which does not import a new demise will not operate as a surrender.¹⁷⁹⁰ There is no inflexible principle that every variation of the rate of rent payable under a registered deed of lease necessarily implies surrender of the said lease and creation of a new tenancy, or whenever the rate of rent is altered a new relationship between the parties gets created. It is a question of fact to be determined.¹⁷⁹¹ There is an implied surrender when the lessee accepts an offer inconsistent with the lease, eg by remaining in possession as a servant, for the possession of the servant is that of the master.¹⁷⁹² It was held by the Delhi High Court that there is an implied surrender of a lease when the lessee takes a usufructuary mortgage of the demised premises.¹⁷⁹³ Surrender amounts to the yielding up of a term by the tenant of his landlord. There must be delivery of possession by the tenant to the landlord, and the acceptance of possession by the landlord. It is a mutual act between the landlord and the tenant. When the government takes possession under a requisition order, there is no such mutuality, because they take possession both from the landlord and the tenant.¹⁷⁹⁴

[s 111.10.2] Relinquishment of possession

Relinquishment of possession operates as an implied surrender, if there is—(1) an yielding up by the lessee; and (2) an acceptance of possession by the lessor. There must be a taking of possession, not necessarily a physical taking, but something amounting to a virtual taking of possession.¹⁷⁹⁵ Whether this has occurred, is a question of fact. Thus, if the lessor says he will give up his claim for rent if the lessee gives up possession in the middle of the quarter, and the lessee then gives the keys to the lessor who accepts them, the lease is terminated to surrender.¹⁷⁹⁶ So also, when after a dispute as to rent, the lessee returns the key to the lessor who accepts them;¹⁷⁹⁷ or when the lessee says that she will quit immediately and the lessor replies that she may go when she likes, and the lessee quits and the lessor re-enters.¹⁷⁹⁸ But leaving the keys with the lessor is not sufficient, unless the lessor accepts them as a symbol of possession. Thus, there was no surrender when the lessee left the keys with the clerk of the Official Assignee on the lessor's bankruptcy, and the Official Assignee continued to demand rent;¹⁷⁹⁹ or if the lessee leaves the keys at the office of the lessor who is unable to return them as he cannot find the lessee.¹⁸⁰⁰ But if after the keys are left, the lessor at first refuses to accept but afterwards puts up a to-let board on the premises, gives the keys to an agent and paints out the name of the tenant from the front of the house, his conduct shows that he has exercised his option to accept the surrender.¹⁸⁰¹ But the fact that the lessor attempts to re-let the house does not necessarily imply acceptance of possession. In a case where the lessee went to America and left the keys with an agent who, not finding a sub-tenant, gave them to the lessor, who attempted to re-let, the lessor had acted for the benefit of both parties, and there was no acceptance.¹⁸⁰² Nor will acceptance be implied merely from the fact that the lessor entered for repairs after the lessee had quit;¹⁸⁰³ unless the lessor remains in possession for a considerable time, and embarks on works of reconstruction.¹⁸⁰⁴

111. Determination of lease.—

Mere abandonment of possession by the lessee does not amount to surrender. The abandonment must be accompanied by acceptance of surrender on the part of the landlord, though even subsequent acceptance will suffice.¹⁸⁰⁵ It matters not that the lessor accepts, under a mistaken impression that the lessee is entitled to quit.¹⁸⁰⁶ If the lessor re-enters in exercise of a right of forfeiture, the lessee's assent to such re-entry does not constitute a surrender.¹⁸⁰⁷ When tenancy is surrendered and substituted by a fresh agreement, not handing over the physical possession would not be of much consequence.¹⁸⁰⁸

[s 111.10.3] Not an assignment

A surrender of a term puts an end to the lessee's rights, and lets in the lessor. It does not operate as an assignment, and so a judgment against the lessee is not res judicata against the lessor after the surrender.¹⁸⁰⁹

[s 111.11] Clause (g)—Amendments

The following amendments have been made in this sub-section by the amending Act 20 of 1929:

After the word "re-enter", the words "or the lease shall become void" have been omitted. These words were misleading, because, even if the condition professed to determine the lease, the lessor could not re-enter in the absence of an express provision to that effect.

The words "or (3) the lessee, is adjudicated an insolvent and the lease provides that the lessor may re-enter on the happening of such event" have been inserted to provide for forfeiture in the event of the lessee's insolvency.

The words "any of these cases" are substituted for the words "either case".

A statutory technicality, such as a notice in writing prescribed under section 111(g) is not a rule of justice, equity and good conscience and, as regards cases before the extension of the section to a particular area, the mere institution of a legal proceeding for eviction fulfills the requirement of law. "The conscience of the court needs nothing more and nothing else".¹⁸¹⁰

Lessor can resume possession, only in a manner known to, or recognised by law. A lessor, with the best of title, has no right to resume possession extra-judicially by the use of force from the lessee even after the expiry of earlier termination of the lease by the forfeiture or otherwise. The use of the expression “re-entry” in the lease deed does not authorise extra-judicial methods to resume possession.

On the expiry of the period of lease, the erstwhile lessee continues in possession because of the law of the land, namely that the original landlord cannot physically throw out such an erstwhile tenant by force. He must get his claim for possession adjudicated by a competent court.¹⁸¹¹

Under the law, the possession of a lessee, even after the expiry or its earlier termination, is judicial possession, forcible dispossession of which is prohibited. A lessee cannot be dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law. The fact that the lessor is the state, does not place it in any higher or better position. Therefore, the government cannot appropriate to itself an extra-judicial right of re-entry. Possession can be resumed by the government, only in a manner known to, or recognised by law. It cannot resume possession otherwise than in accordance with law.¹⁸¹²

[s 111.11.1] Forfeiture

The right of forfeiture is founded upon the existence of a lease, and the jural relationship of lessor and the lessee as contemplated under section 105. It is implicit that if the lease is in operation, the lessor had been given the right to determine such a lease for committing breach of a covenant or for disclaimer by the lessee or for the insolvency of the lessee, and the happening of any of the three specified events, ipso facto does not put an end to the lease, but it only exposes the lessee to the risk of forfeiting his lease, and gives a right to the lessor, if he so elects, to determine the lease.¹⁸¹³ A lease of an immovable property would stand determined by forfeiture if any of the three conditions enumerated in clause (g) thereof is fulfilled and the lessor gives notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease.¹⁸¹⁴ Thus, according to this clause, as worded, two things, namely, the happening of any of the specified events, and the giving of the notice by the lessor amount to a forfeiture.¹⁸¹⁵

The forfeiture of a lease requires the operation of two factors—

- (1) A breach by the lessee of an express condition of the lease which provides for re-entry on such breach; and
- (2) A notice by the lessor expressing his intention to determine the lease.¹⁸¹⁶

Even if the lease is determined by a forfeiture under the TP Act, 1882, the tenant under the rent law continues to be a tenant, ie, there is no forfeiture in the eyes of law. The tenant becomes liable to be evicted and forfeiture comes into play only if he has incurred the liability to be evicted under the state rent Act and not otherwise. Once the requirements of rent Act are satisfied, the tenant cannot claim the double protection of invoking the provisions of the TP Act or the terms of the contract.¹⁸¹⁷

The law as to tenancy being determined by forfeiture by denial of the lessor's title or disclaimer of the tenancy has been adopted in India from the law of England, where it originated as a principle in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience. On enactment of the TP Act, 1882, the same was incorporated in clause (g) of section 111. The rule is applicable even in areas where TP Act, 1882 does not apply. However, the principle is not applicable where rent control legislation intervenes, and such legislation while extending protection to tenants from eviction does not recognise such denial or disclaimer as a ground for termination of tenancy and eviction of tenant.¹⁸¹⁸ It is settled that even where the leasehold provides for forfeiture, in case of assignment by the lessee, there cannot be any forfeiture and automatic resumption by the lessor without notice to the lessee to determine the lease. The breach of condition of the lease only makes the lease voidable. Therefore, forfeiture is not complete unless and until the lessor gives a notice to the lessee that he wishes to exercise his option to determine the lease.¹⁸¹⁹ Where the lease was for 30 years, and did not stipulate a forfeiture clause in the lease, the Supreme Court held that the contractual tenancy would subsist under the provisions of the TP Act, 1882, and eviction cannot be claimed against a contractual tenant during the subsistence of the lease.¹⁸²⁰

Under the terms of the lease given by the Delhi Improvement Trust, the building erected on the land was to be used for residential purpose only and if it was used for any other purpose without approval of the lessor, the lease would become void. The landlord in violation of the terms of the lease, let out the building for commercial purpose. The Delhi Development Authority being the successor of the original lessor gave notice to the landlord that since the building was not permitted to be used for commercial purposes, the lease was liable to be terminated. It was held by the Supreme Court that the policy of the legislature, which enjoined that no person shall convert a residential building into a non-residential building except with the permission of the Rent Controller,¹⁸²¹ was put to end unauthorised use of the leased lands, rather than merely to enable the authorities to get back possession of the leased lands. The lease is not forfeited in such cases merely because the building put upon the leased land is put to unauthorised use.¹⁸²²

[s 111.11.2] Termination by lessee

There is no provision in the TP Act, 1882, empowering the lessee to terminate the lease for a breach of covenant by the lessor.¹⁸²³ A written agreement is necessary and in absence of any written agreement between the landlord and the tenant, lease cannot be determined by way of forfeiture, but as a necessary corollary, the tenant would not be entitled to the protection of section 114 as against forfeiture.¹⁸²⁴

[s 111.11.3] Condition

The word “condition” is not used in this section in the same sense as in English law, and overlaps what is called a “covenant” in English law. A condition puts a bridle or restraint on the estate granted. Thus, in a lease which stipulated and conditioned that the lessee would not assign except to his wife and children,¹⁸²⁵ these words indicated that the lease could be determined for breach of the conditions. But a covenant only imports an agreement. Thus, in a lease where the lessee “hereby agrees that he will not underlet the premises without the consent in writing of the landlord”, these words are a covenant, the breach of which gives the lessor only the right to recover damages or obtain an injunction.¹⁸²⁶

Section 111(g) does not make any distinction between a condition, and a covenant.¹⁸²⁷ Irrespective of whether the provision was a condition or a covenant, the lease enures despite the breach, unless the lessor determines it. This he does by enforcing a right of re-entry. The words which have been omitted from the section, ie, “or the lease shall become void” referred to a condition in the strict sense in which it is understood in English law. Nevertheless, it was held that “void” must be construed as voidable,¹⁸²⁸ and that the breach of a condition did not involve forfeiture, unless the lease expressly so provided.¹⁸²⁹ In a Calcutta case,¹⁸³⁰ there was an express condition against alienation, but its breach was held not to work a forfeiture in the absence of a provision giving a right of re-entry. Conditions making the lease void on their breach are also construed in English,¹⁸³¹ as well as Indian¹⁸³² cases as making the lease voidable at the option of the lessor. However, the condition or covenant must be an express condition. This has been said to mean so expressed that the court can be certain that it was part of the stipulation between the parties.¹⁸³³ If the covenant to pay rent is express and a proviso for re-entry is annexed, non-payment of rent will support a forfeiture.¹⁸³⁴ But in the absence of such a proviso, forfeiture will not be incurred by the breach of an express covenant either to pay rent, or not to assign or sublet.¹⁸³⁵ Where one of the two partners on the dissolution of the partnership assigns to the other partner his interest in partnership in the premises, it does not amount to a breach of the covenant prohibiting the assignment of the lease.¹⁸³⁶

A lease may determine in several ways. The parties may provide that it will determine on a particular day. This is provided in clause (a). In clause (b), on the other hand, the lease does not come to an end on the doing of an act, or the happening of an event. It applies where the time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event, and that event happens. In clause (g), the lease is brought to an end by a defeasance clause. That is different from the two clauses (a) and (b). A lease for a term of 99 years granted to a company contained a clause to the effect that in case the company went into liquidation voluntarily or otherwise, the lease shall cease to be operative and the company shall make over the possession of the property to the proprietors. The company went into liquidation. It was held that clause (b) did not apply, as time was fixed. But as there was a condition that on the happening of a particular event, the lease would terminate, there was forfeiture.¹⁸³⁷

ILLUSTRATION

A leased land to B on the following condition:—"You will enjoy the profits from generation to generation by erecting houses upon the land and dwelling thereupon. If you fail to dwell upon the land, you shall have no interest in or connection with the land." B failed to dwell upon the land. Held that as there was no proviso for re-entry, A could not forfeit the lease or evict B.¹⁸³⁸

[s 111.11.4] Proviso for re-entry

The proviso for re-entry gives the lessor the option whether he will exercise his right to determine the lease. But even if the condition makes the lease void on its breach, it is voidable, and not void,¹⁸³⁹ and only the lessor can avoid it, for the lessee cannot avail himself of his own wrongful act.¹⁸⁴⁰ Unless there is an express condition to pay rent at a specified time accompanied by a provision for re-entry in default of such payment, the non-payment of rent will not entail forfeiture.¹⁸⁴¹

The application of the proviso to a particular covenant is a matter of strict construction; and for this reason, a proviso for re-entry on the ground of the lessee's insolvency was held not to apply when the company for which the lessee was the benamidar went into liquidation.¹⁸⁴² A covenant against subletting the premises is not broken by the letting of lodgings,¹⁸⁴³ nor by the subletting of a part of the premises.¹⁸⁴⁴ But where the entire interest has been transferred by a tenant by separate alienations, the condition against alienation is broken and would work as forfeiture.¹⁸⁴⁵ A covenant against assignment is not broken, by the sale of a part,¹⁸⁴⁶ nor by a mortgage,¹⁸⁴⁷ for a mortgage is an assignment only of an interest in the property, or by a sublease, even though the sublease be for the whole of the unexpired residue.¹⁸⁴⁸ A proviso for re-entry on breach "of all or any of the covenants hereinafter contained" was held not to apply to covenants contained in a lease before the proviso, even though there were no covenants after the proviso.¹⁸⁴⁹ Again, when an underlease contained a clause restrictive of sub-letting and also incorporated the covenant of the head lease which contained a proviso for re-entry, but no restriction on subletting, it was held that the proviso was not applicable to the clause restricting sub-letting contained in the sublease.¹⁸⁵⁰

The proviso for re-entry may be applicable to negative as well as to positive covenants, ie, both to omission and to acts. The appropriate phrase for positive covenants is "non-performance" and for negative covenants "non-observance".¹⁸⁵¹ But after many conflicting decisions, it has been held that failure to perform refers to negative as well as to positive covenants.¹⁸⁵² A proviso for re-entry on breach of any covenant would include both positive as well as negative covenants;¹⁸⁵³ but the court will reject a covenant that is insensible,¹⁸⁵⁴ or ambiguous.¹⁸⁵⁵ The lessor must show that there is a breach of the covenant to which the proviso is annexed.¹⁸⁵⁶ The covenant is construed according to the ordinary rules, and the court must see what the object of the covenant is, and put a fair construction upon it according to the intention of the parties.¹⁸⁵⁷ For though the law abhors a forfeiture,¹⁸⁵⁸ yet, as Lord Tennterden said, "Judges are bound to give all instruments their natural construction and attach to them their legal consequences whatever their own inclinations may be".¹⁸⁵⁹ Thus, where a lease contained a covenant for forfeiture in case of a transfer without the consent of the lessor, a mere unregistered contract by the lessee for sale subject to the sanction of the lessor and putting the intended vendee in possession as an agent and giving him the right to work the quarry and sell lime and stone, was held as not amounting to subletting, but was a transfer of an interest and as the contract was not registered, the transfer was not effective and so there was no breach of the covenant.¹⁸⁶⁰ Sub-letting, if not prohibited by the contract of tenancy, is not a valid ground for forfeiting the tenancy,¹⁸⁶¹ but if it is specifically prohibited, a violation of the same would result in the forfeiture of lease. Thus where the tenant without the permission of the landlady sublets the premises to another person, who is not even his family member to run business in the shop in his independent name, the tenant would be liable to vacate the shop for such unauthorized sub-letting.¹⁸⁶² Mistake or forgetfulness will not excuse a breach.¹⁸⁶³

A notice terminating the lease erroneously making a mention of a wrong provision ie, of section 111(g) instead of section 111(h) would not exclude the jurisdiction of Rent Tribunal to entertain petition.¹⁸⁶⁴

In absence of a forfeiture clause in the lease agreement, as regards non payment of rent, lessor cannot have a right to re-enter the premises but would be entitled to recovery of rent and its arrears with costs and interest.¹⁸⁶⁵ There has to be some cogent evidence that rent has not been paid. In absence of any admission as to arrears of rent in written statement nor any admission or any equivalent statement or any other pleadings, non payment of arrears of rent cannot be a ground for entailing for eviction. If there is an admission of existence of arrears of rent it is same as admission as to existence of relationship of lessor and lessee. Even if the lessee is a person who pays the rent with utmost promptitude, eviction can be sought just by delivering a notice under section 106 of TPA.¹⁸⁶⁶ If he gives a notice for non payment of rent, and the tenant also replied to it, the plea of the tenant that the petition is not maintainable in absence of a valid notice would not be entertained and the order for release of the premises would be proper.¹⁸⁶⁷ The complete destruction of the subject of the lease ie, the building/ superstructure and the destruction of the underlying land in a lease deed will affect leasehold rights.¹⁸⁶⁸ In Ramiya v Govt of Tamil Nadu,¹⁸⁶⁹ the landlord sought eviction on ground of construction of permanent structure by the tenant without his consent and for recovery of arrears of compensation towards damages. As per the report of the commissioner, extensive damage was caused to the premises that were given on lease. He estimated, calculated and awarded Rs 50,000 to the landlord. The same however was reduced by the appellate court on an appeal by the tenant without following any evidence to Rs 25000. On an appeal to the Madras High court, it was held that this reduction was not proper.

In Ferrazzini's Bakery v Amitava Mitter,¹⁸⁷⁰ there were concurrent findings regarding damage of suit property, making of new constructions and creation of sub-tenancy, and it was held that the termination of lease would be proper and the tenants would be liable for eviction. Where the tenant claimed that the partnership business was run in shop with consent of the landlord, the burden of proving the consent on part of the landlord would be on the tenant and not on the landlady.¹⁸⁷¹

[s 111.11.5] Disclaimer or denial of landlord's title

Disclaimer or denial of the landlord's title is a ground for forfeiture. The section adopts the definition of disclaimer by CJ Tindal, in *Deo d Williams and Jeffery v Cooper*¹⁸⁷²—"A disclaimer, as the word imports, must be a renunciation by the party of his character of tenant, either by setting up a title in another, or by claiming title in himself." The Supreme Court has held that to constitute a denial of title of the landlord, a tenant should renounce his character as tenant and set up title or right inconsistent with the relationship of landlord and tenant, either in himself, or in a third person. In the case of derivative title of the landlord, in the absence of a notice of transfer of title in favour of the landlord or attornment of tenancy, a tenant's assertion that the landlord is a co-owner does not amount to denial of his title, unless the tenant has also renounced his relationship as a tenant.¹⁸⁷³

This is only a particular application of the general principle of law that a man cannot approbate and reprobate, or, as it is more familiarly expressed, he cannot blow hot and cold.¹⁸⁷⁴ It had, therefore, been acted upon before the TP Act, 1882 was enacted.¹⁸⁷⁵ It has been held¹⁸⁷⁶ in cases where the section was not applicable, that there would be no forfeiture unless the disclaimer was in a judicial proceeding or other public document; this decision is no longer good law as the Supreme Court has held in Mohammed Amir v Municipal Board,¹⁸⁷⁷ "the implication is a repudiation of it. An omission to acknowledge the landlord as such, by requesting further information, will not be enough." Refusal to pay rent is not in itself a disclaimer, but it may be evidence of a disclaimer.¹⁸⁷⁸ Accordingly there is no disclaimer if the lessee refuses to pay rent until he knows who is the right

owner,¹⁸⁷⁹ or until he is satisfied as to the lessor's title to receive the whole rent.¹⁸⁸⁰ Nor will the denial of the title of an assignee of the original lessor work a forfeiture of the tenancy.¹⁸⁸¹ It would appear that if a tenant denies title of the landlord mistakenly, the protection under the rent Act would continue. A mere statement of the tenant that he was not aware in the particular set of facts as to who was his landlord is not to say that he ever denied title of his landlord. Mere non-response of the notice to pay arrears of rent is not an expressed declaration of denial of title.¹⁸⁸² By a mere denial of title of the landlord by the tenant of the premises and setting up title in himself, the tenancy does not automatically stand terminated under section 111(g). The landlord must choose this conduct of the tenant, and forfeit his tenancy right by giving a notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease. Disclaimer of owner's title by a tenant protected by rent legislation will not result in termination of his tenancy.¹⁸⁸³ So long as the tenant accepts the relationship of landlord and tenant, the question of title, as such, is immaterial. A person may not be the owner, and may yet be the landlord. If there is no repudiation of the relationship of landlord and tenant, the question of forfeiture would not arise and a controversy as to the real ownership of the property is immaterial for the purpose of this clause.¹⁸⁸⁴ If a tenant after admitting tenancy questions the title of the landlord over property, the doctrine of estoppel applies.¹⁸⁸⁵ In an eviction suit, where there is a question as to the title of the landlord, the tenants must surrender possession of the property before challenging such title.¹⁸⁸⁶ Section 111 (g) will have an independent operation without being dependant on applicability of rule of estoppel under section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act, that is an enabling provision.¹⁸⁸⁷ If the denial of title that is not bonafide, is in the written statement or before the Rent Controller, or there is a failure of the tenant to obtain declaration against the landlady about her ownership after selling the premises to her himself, or is on the ground that the suit on the basis of which landlord was claiming title was never put in execution nor acted upon,¹⁸⁸⁸ determination of lease by forfeiture takes place.¹⁸⁸⁹ Where the tenant after the death of the owner of the property had accepted his wife and his son as his landlord and had paid both of them the rent at certain occasions, the suit at the behest of one of the co-owners would be maintainable and the tenant's plea of conflict of interest of the co-owners would not be sustained.¹⁸⁹⁰

ILLUSTRATION

A is a tenant of B, but C claims to be the landlord. B sues A for rent and A in his written statement states—"I have never paid rent to B. C now claims rent. I am ready to pay whosoever is the rightful owner". This is not a disclaimer which will entitle B to evict A in a subsequent suit.¹⁸⁹¹

On the other hand, a direct repudiation of his landlord is sufficient,¹⁸⁹² especially if the tenant executes a kabuliyet in favour of another landlord.¹⁸⁹³ In an Orissa case, the lessee sold the leased house to a third person, describing himself as the "owner", thus renouncing his character as a lessee. The lessor gave notice to quit, whose validity with reference to section 106 was questioned. It was held that the lessee's disclaimer which was a ground for forfeiture under section 111(g)(2) coupled with the notice to quit (even assuming that it was not valid under section 106) brought the case within section 111(g)(2), and the suit for eviction was maintainable.¹⁸⁹⁴ Where a tenant disclaims the title of the lessor, there is forfeiture of the tenancy. Thereafter, if he remains in possession and pays, what he calls, rent or is prepared to pay it, the rent can only be understood, in these circumstances, as money paid towards damages for use and occupation.¹⁸⁹⁵ The section indicates that although the tenant does not deny that he is a tenant, yet it is a disclaimer if he claims to be a tenant of another landlord.¹⁸⁹⁶ So a refusal to pay rent accompanied with the words "you are not my landlord",¹⁸⁹⁷ or "I have no rent for you, I have been ordered to pay no one",¹⁸⁹⁸ operates as a disclaimer, for this amounts to setting up a title in a third person. Where the trust was the landlord and the tenant denied the status of the trustee who represented the trust, the Madras High Court took the view that this amounted to denial of title in view of the definition of the word "landlord" in section 2(b) of Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease & Rent Control) Act, 1960, and the tenant was liable to be evicted on that ground.¹⁸⁹⁹

A plea set up by the lessee in the written statement in a suit for eviction, denying the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, would entail forfeiture under section 111, clause (g), and no notice terminating the tenancy under clause (h) is required.¹⁹⁰⁰ Where the tenant disputes the title of the landlord by setting up a plea of adverse possession, the lease is forfeited and any defect in the notice to quit given by the lessor to the lessee would not avail the lessee, since the lessor becomes entitled to the possession of the property by reason of forfeiture of the lease.¹⁹⁰¹ In cases where eviction suit in a claim for adverse possession were filed under the Transfer of Property Act, equitable relief under O VII rule 7 could be granted. There is a difference in exercise of jurisdiction when the civil court deals with a lis relating to eviction brought before it under the provisions of Transfer of Property Act and under any special enactment pertaining to eviction on specified grounds. Needless to say, this court has cautiously added that if alternative relief is permissible within the ambit of the Act, the position would be different.¹⁹⁰² If the question of title of the property is directly and substantially in issue between parties in an earlier eviction suit, it shall operate as res judicata.¹⁹⁰³ In a Madras case, the owner of land filed a suit for a permanent injunction restraining the lessees from cutting or damaging the trees on the land. The lessees, in the written statement, contended that their fathers and forefathers had planted the trees and reared them with their own labour and at their own expense, and for their own benefit, thereby denying the title of the owner to the trees. It was held that by doing so, they forfeited the right to claim as the lessees, and the lease would stand determined under clause (g) of this section.¹⁹⁰⁴ If the title of the heir of the landlord is denied, the denial acts as the forfeiture of the lease.¹⁹⁰⁵ When a proceeding was initiated for eviction of the defendants from the suit land as adhiars and they renounced their character as tenant or adhiar and claimed title for themselves, it was held that the doctrine of forfeiture under section 111 (g) of the TP Act, 1882 was clearly applicable to the case.¹⁹⁰⁶ The repudiation must be clear and unequivocal, whether in pleadings or in any other document; the mere claiming of a higher right by the lessee does not involve forfeiture;¹⁹⁰⁷ it must be to the knowledge of the landlord.¹⁹⁰⁸ The denial, if clear and unequivocal, would undoubtedly affect the interests of the landlord adversely and substantially. The tenant merely denying the landlord's title bona fide with the object of seeking information of such title or with the object of having such title established before a court of law so as to protect himself, would not attract the charge of disclaimer.¹⁹⁰⁹ Denial of a mere derivative title does not amount to disclaimer of title.

An incidental statement in a sale deed referring to other property will not operate as a forfeiture.¹⁹¹⁰ The bare statement that there is no relation of landlord and tenant with the lessor may operate as a surrender, but it is not a disclaimer as it does not amount to setting up title, either in a third person, or in the tenant himself.¹⁹¹¹ There is, therefore, no disclaimer if the tenant mortgages the property, describing himself as the owner;¹⁹¹² or describes himself as the owner in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act.¹⁹¹³ In a Calcutta case, the tenant had said that he had no relation of landlord and tenant with the lessor and that he was the tenant of another to whom he paid rent, and the court held that this was no disclaimer.¹⁹¹⁴ This, it is submitted, is bad law. In a suit for eviction, if the lessee claims to be the tenant, not of the plaintiff but of a third person, and had paid rent to the third person even prior to the suit, it amounts to denial of title of the lessor.¹⁹¹⁵ Disclaimer by a lessee who has assigned his term will not affect the interest of the assignee.¹⁹¹⁶

Plea of disclaimer not raised in the plaint cannot be entertained,¹⁹¹⁷ unless the parties have chosen to go on trial on an issue of disclaimer framed at the trial.¹⁹¹⁸

[s 111.11.6] Verbal disclaimer

Although there is no case on the point it would seem that under TP Act, 1882, a verbal disclaimer is sufficient to support a forfeiture, whether the lease be periodic or for a term of years. But in a case not governed by the TP Act, 1882, the disclaimer must be by record.¹⁹¹⁹

[s 111.11.7] Claim to permanent tenancy

There is no disclaimer if the lessee sets up a permanent tenancy, for although he repudiates the particular holding which the lessor attributes to him, he does not question the lessor's right to receive rent, nor does he renounce his character as lessee.¹⁹²⁰ An older Bombay case held that the assertion of a permanent tenancy did operate as a disclaimer.¹⁹²¹ This was following the English case of Vivian v Moat.¹⁹²² But the tenants assertion in Vivian v Moatwdy, of a right to hold at a customary rent, which involved a denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant. The Bombay case is, therefore, incorrect and, though not formally overruled, it has not been followed in subsequent decisions, and is no longer an authority. But in a subsequent Bombay case,¹⁹²³ J Ranade said:

111. Determination of lease.—

It is disclaimer for a yearly tenant, when he claims to be a mirasi or permanent tenant, and such a disclaimer need not necessarily be made to the landlord himself.

On both points, it is submitted that this is an incorrect statement of the law.

The assertion of a permanent tenancy by a yearly or monthly lessee does not operate as a waiver of notice to quit, and the cases cited assume that the lessor cannot evict without such notice. This is because a notice to quit is only necessary when a tenancy is admitted on both sides, and it is only when the tenant denies any tenancy that there is no necessity to end that which, he says, has no existence.¹⁹²⁴

[s 111.11.8] Before suit

The disclaimer must be before the suit is filed to eject the lessee.¹⁹²⁵ This is on the principle that the action must be based on something accruing before the suit, and the rule is followed by all the courts in India, for it has been held that disclaimer in the written statement or after the suit is filed will not support a forfeiture, or dispense with the necessity for notice to quit in the case of a yearly tenancy.¹⁹²⁶ However, a disclaimer in a previous suit operates as a disclaimer so as to support the subsequent suit for ejectment.¹⁹²⁷

The Supreme Court has, however, approved the observations of the Punjab & Haryana High Court in Sada Ram's case,¹⁹²⁸ to the effect that a denial of title in the written statement cannot be taken advantage of in that suit, but can be taken advantage of only in a subsequent suit to be filed by the landlord, as it would only lead to unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings as the landlord would be obliged to file a second suit for ejectment of the tenant on the ground of forfeiture entailed by the tenant's denial of his character as a tenant in the written statement. The plaint should in that event be amended so as to incorporate the ground of denial of title for the relief on that ground.¹⁹²⁹

The amendment of the section by the requisition for notice to the lessee makes it clear that the disclaimer must be before notice, and the notice before the suit. In the case of forfeiture, one written notice is required under the law, and not one under section 111 (g), and another under section 114A.¹⁹³⁰

[s 111.11.9] Agricultural tenancies

In the case of agricultural tenancies, the right of forfeiture for disclaimer depends upon the provisions of the Act governing the tenancy. It was not excluded by the Bombay Land Revenue Code;¹⁹³¹ nor by the Bengal Act 8 of 1869.¹⁹³² But it is excluded by the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885.¹⁹³³ When the right of forfeiture has not been excluded by the local Act it has been applied on the principle of English law,¹⁹³⁴ and even in the case of a permanent tenancy.¹⁹³⁵ But when the relationship is not that of a landlord and tenant, but of a grantor and grantee, the rule of forfeiture has no application.¹⁹³⁶ If a perpetual lease is granted for a premium and then forfeited, the consideration is exhausted by the granting of the lease, and the forfeiture does not convert the original premium into a debt.¹⁹³⁷ A disclaimer by one co-tenant will not justify a suit to evict the other co-tenants, unless his act was the act of all.¹⁹³⁸ If the disclaimer is given effect to by the court, and the landlord's suit for rent is dismissed, the tenant cannot plead the tenancy in a subsequent suit to evict him as a trespasser.¹⁹³⁹

[s 111.11.10] Insolvency

A condition determining a lease in the event of the insolvency of the lessee is recognised in section 12 when the condition that is for the benefit of the lessor is a condition that reserves to the lessor a right of re-entry. In this connection, notes "Lease" under section 12 and under section 10 may be referred. Accordingly, if the condition against insolvency reserves a right of re-entry to the lessor, he has a right to determine the lease by forfeiture for that reason.

This ground of forfeiture was added by the amending Act of 1929. It was not covered by the section before the amendment, as a condition against assignment means a condition against voluntary assignment, and is not broken by an involuntary assignment, or an assignment by the operation of law, such as an execution sale;¹⁹⁴⁰ or an insolvency;¹⁹⁴¹ though an express condition against involuntary assignment may be valid.¹⁹⁴²

The repealed clause “or the lease shall become void” would suggest that the breach of a condition avoiding a lease would involve a forfeiture, although there was no proviso for re-entry. But this is not the law.

[s 111.11.11] Lessor or his transferee

A proviso of re-entry runs with the land, and may, therefore, be enforced by the lessor's transferee.¹⁹⁴³ The transferee cannot enforce a forfeiture for a breach occurring before the assignment, unless the breach is a continuing one.¹⁹⁴⁴ But in a Bombay case,¹⁹⁴⁵ an assignee was allowed to forfeit a lease for breach before the assignment. Note “Rights of the assignee” under section 109 may be referred.

[s 111.11.12] Notice in writing

As breach of a condition only makes the lease voidable, the forfeiture is not complete unless and until the lessor gives notice that he has exercised his option to determine the lease.¹⁹⁴⁶

A simple tenancy can therefore be terminated by service of notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and once a valid notice is served, the tenant becomes a trespasser. A notice under the Act is valid if it calls upon the tenant to hand over vacant, peaceful and khas possession of the premises.¹⁹⁴⁷ A suit filed by the landlord without issuance of notice is not maintainable.¹⁹⁴⁸ Even where the lease deed provides for forfeiture in case of assignment by the lessee, there can be no automatic resumption by the lessor. He has to exercise his right to determine the lease before he can resume.¹⁹⁴⁹ Thus even if the lease contains a clause to the contrary, a notice in writing manifesting a clear intention is an essential condition of forfeiture taking effect in law.¹⁹⁵⁰ By a mere denial of title of the landlord by the tenant of the premises and setting up title in himself even in a case where the tenancy is governed by the TP Act, 1882 only, the tenancy does not automatically stand terminated under section 111(g). The landlord must choose this conduct of the tenant, and forfeit his tenancy right by giving a notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease.¹⁹⁵¹ A notice under section 111(g) is essential even if the tenant has failed to pay rent, and the lessor cannot take possession of the leased premises by force.¹⁹⁵² If the lessors were tenants in common, the notice would have to be by, or on behalf of all.¹⁹⁵³

Before the amending Act of 1929, it was only necessary for the lessor to do “some act showing his intention to determine the lease”. With reference to this phrase, it was held that the lessor did an act showing his intention to determine the lease when he took possession with his durwans,¹⁹⁵⁴ or when he sent the lessee a lawyer's notice,¹⁹⁵⁵ or orally informed the lessee that the lease was forfeited,¹⁹⁵⁶ or when he filed a suit in ejectment, which he withdrew with liberty to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action.¹⁹⁵⁷ But there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the act showing an intention to determine the lease was a condition precedent to the rights of suit for ejectment. The Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts held that it was,¹⁹⁵⁸ and the Bombay High Court held that it was not.¹⁹⁵⁹ A subsequent Calcutta case, however, expresses a preference for the Bombay view,¹⁹⁶⁰ but a still later Calcutta case preferred to follow the earlier decisions of Calcutta.¹⁹⁶¹ The Patna High Court has followed the Bombay view.¹⁹⁶² It is now, however, clear that the lessor cannot file a suit in ejectment until after he has given notice for, until then the lease subsists.¹⁹⁶³ The giving of a notice in writing is, since the amendment, an essential condition of forfeiture taking effect in law,¹⁹⁶⁴ even if the lease contains a clause to the contrary.¹⁹⁶⁵ Where a notice under section 111(h) has been given, it is not necessary to also give a notice under section 111 (g) on the ground of forfeiture of lease.¹⁹⁶⁶ Where there is a simplicitor termination of tenancy under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 and not under section 111 (g) of the TP Act, 1882, these provisions of section 114 of the TP Act, 1882 cannot be attracted.¹⁹⁶⁷ If the lessor does not serve the requisite notice under section 111(g) read with section 114A, the lease would be deemed to be subsisting, and the owner cannot sell the land with vacant possession and unencumbered with the lease.¹⁹⁶⁸ A notice served by registered post direct to the contact address will be presumed to be duly served if the acknowledgment receipt comes back signed by someone.¹⁹⁶⁹ In the case of forfeiture of a lease granted before 1929, a disclaimer followed by some act by the lessor indicating his intention to determine the lease is all that is necessary, and no written notice is required.¹⁹⁷⁰ The Supreme Court has held that the rule that a notice in writing is required is not a rule based on any principle of justice, equity and good conscience, and is not applicable to leases executed before April 1930 when the amending Act of 1929 came into force.¹⁹⁷¹ The Patna High Court has expressed the view that the opening words of section 111(g) no doubt seem to imply that the lease comes to an end as soon as notice to quit is given, but the concluding words imply that something more, eg an actual entry or the institution of a suit for ejectment, is required to be done by the lessor to end it.¹⁹⁷² There does not seem to be any cogent reason to support this view. Lease is determined by forfeiture which is complete when notice is given. Note under section 112 “Waiver of forfeiture” may be referred.

The rule of English law (before the enactment of Law of Property Act, 1925, section 146) would appear to be that a suit in ejectment is equivalent to a re-entry;¹⁹⁷³ and this has been followed in some agricultural tenancies to which the TP Act, 1882 does not apply,¹⁹⁷⁴ and in the case of tenancies created before the TP Act, 1882.¹⁹⁷⁵

[s 111.12] Clause (h)—Notice to quit

Periodic tenancies are terminated by notice to quit under section 106. Until a periodic tenancy is determined, the lessor cannot treat the lessee as a trespasser.¹⁹⁷⁶ No notice is necessary to determine a tenancy for a fixed term,¹⁹⁷⁷ or when it determines by efflux of time,¹⁹⁷⁸ or before evicting a tenant on sufferance.¹⁹⁷⁹ Where under the terms of a lease for 21 years from 25 December 1934, either party could determine the tenancy at the end of seven years on giving six months' notice, and the landlord gave to the tenants' solicitors a notice as from 21 June 1941, which purported to terminate the lease on 21 December 1941, it has been held that the notice, although the mistake as to the date was obviously due to a slip, was invalid, and the acceptance of service by the solicitors did not cure the defect.¹⁹⁸⁰ A tenancy at will is determinable at the will of either party, by the tenant giving up possession, or by a demand for possession by the landlord,¹⁹⁸¹ or by the death of either party.¹⁹⁸²

The twin requirements of a notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act are that a minimum period of 15 days time for the tenant to vacate the premises; and that this time should expire with the end of the tenancy month.¹⁹⁸³ Both the provisions are to be read conjointly in order to come to the requirements of a valid notice.¹⁹⁸⁴ Notice must be with respect to the property leased. Where a quit notice was issued specifying the door number of suit premises, even though the boundaries was not properly specified, the tenant could have understood that the landlord has sought eviction from the suit premises, the notice is not bad for want of proper description and would be valid. Where the tenanted property was situated in two mohallas and the boundaries of property under tenancy had been correctly disclosed at the foot of notice, in such cases, defect in notice qua reference to one Mohalla would not vitiate notice and the quit notice would be valid.¹⁹⁸⁵ Notice must be given to the lessee. If notice is given to terminate the tenancy to one of the co-tenants who succeeded to the tenancy after the death of the tenant, it is valid with respect to all the tenants and impleading of all tenants would not be required.¹⁹⁸⁶

An invalid notice may not determine tenancy. A proper service of notice to quit is the backbone of the suit of ejectment filed under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 and where the deemed service of notice is not proved, ejectment decree passed banking on said deemed service of notice is not proper. Similarly, merely because a notice sent through registered post came back with an endorsement not present would not be sufficient and landlord has to prove cogent evidence that it was in fact refused by the tenant more so when the notice did not carry any date showing termination of tenancy, and in such a case the tenancy cannot be said to have been terminated by notice. Under section 106, the notice to quit must expire with the end of the month of the tenancy, or in other words, it must terminate the tenancy with effect from the expiration of the month of the tenancy. If it terminates the tenancy with effect from an earlier date, it would be clearly invalid.¹⁹⁸⁷ Where the suit was filed by the landlord for eviction of the tenant on the ground of non payment of rent, and it was shown that the tenant had replied to the notice for vacation, his plea that the petition is not maintainable in absence of a valid notice would not be entertained and the order for release of the premises would be proper. In an eviction suit where the quit notice given is short of six months period but the suit for eviction is filed after more than six months, the notice would be valid.¹⁹⁸⁸

In case of inconsistency between the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (Act 18 of 1960 and the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Tamil Nadu Rent Control Act shall prevail over the Transfer of Property Act and shall have overriding effect.¹⁹⁸⁹

In the case of an agricultural lease, section 105 to section 116 apply to the extent to which they are founded upon principles of reason and equity. In a Madras case, the plaintiff had leased out the land to cut coconuts from the coconut trees by means of a document which was renewed every year, but after 17 August 1967, there was no document in writing. It was held that when a tenant was in possession on the basis of a lease for an indefinite period; and he was entitled to assume that so long as he paid the rent and complied with the conditions of the lease, he would be allowed to continue and if the landlord wanted to terminate the lease, it was just and necessary that the landlord should intimate and terminate the tenancy so that the tenant could be put on notice that the tenancy is going to come to an end. In this case, in the absence of a notice to terminate the agricultural lease, the suit for permanent injunction in the alternative was dismissed.¹⁹⁹⁰

The single most important factor to be considered in an eviction suit is the correct service of the notice under section 106. Notice must be served either in person or even through post. If the notice is sent to the correct address; both the residential address as also the office address through registered post or through messenger of telegraph department but is either refused or returned as “not claimed” and the tenant does not dispute the correctness of address and is unable to establish that he is not residing in the premises, it would be treated as due service. If the notice is not received or taken by the tenant, it can be affixed to a conspicuous place of the suit property and an affidavit was filed in its support, the notice to terminate tenancy is proper and the burden of proof shifted to the tenants to discharge proof adduced by the landlord regarding service they had wholly failed in discharging the burden and service of notice would be proved. But where the notice is returned with an endorsement by the peon of postal services as refused but the endorsement is not by tenant and he denies service of notice, the presumption of deemed service is negated and the burden would be on the landlord to prove service by producing the peon on dock to discharge the burden of proving service of notice.¹⁹⁹¹ In a joint tenancy notice sent and received by all three brothers would be valid service of notice. For the purposes of calculating mesne profits, a valid notice under section 106 should have been served.¹⁹⁹² A notice terminating lease is at the discretion of the lessor but after the amendment of 2002, it has to be in accordance with the amended provision. The twin requirements to be fulfilled are that the notice must give a clear 15 days period to the tenant to vacate the property coupled with the second requirement that it must terminate on the last date of the calendar month. Where notice was short of the period specified in section 106 but the suit was filed after the expiry of the said period, notice would not be deemed to be invalid in view of section 106(3). A notice terminating the tenancy asking the tenant to vacate the premises immediately is valid, even if the suit for recovery of possession is filed after six months of date of issue. If through the termination notice, only 10 days’ time was granted to the tenant to vacate the premises but the suit was filed long after lapse of the statutory period of 15 days, the notice even if was a defective one, it would be deemed to be cured by virtue of the suit itself having been filed after 15 days. A notice to quit given in June and the suit for eviction filed in September, or where no date or time period was mentioned in the notice, it would not be invalid more so where the suit for eviction was presented after the expiry of 30 days from the date of the service of the notice as provided in the Act.¹⁹⁹³ A tenancy created through an unregistered lease agreement that was neither renewed nor registered, can be terminated by giving a 30 days notice and three months prior notice is not necessary and tenancy. In case of termination of agricultural tenancy, a notice of three months given by him would be illegal if the landlord is required to give a notice of six months.¹⁹⁹⁴ A notice cannot be invalidated simply on account of shortfall in the notice period specified in notice, and the landlord cannot be estopped from claiming relief of possession.¹⁹⁹⁵ The service of notice is a condition precedent for terminating the tenancy. The denial of service became a triable issue as the presumption of service of notice under section 27 of the General Clauses Act is a rebuttable presumption.¹⁹⁹⁶ The validity of a notice may be assailed on the ground that it is not in accordance with law and the tenancy has never been terminated. Such objections can be raised only by a tenant and the Power of attorney holder of the tenant does not have any locus standi to file appeal after termination of tenancy.¹⁹⁹⁷ Section 4 of the Tamil Nadu Public Premises (Eviction of unauthorised Occupants) Act envisages only a notice to quit giving a time of not less than 10 days for vacating but the tenants were given 30 days time, a suit filed by the tenants to preempt the authorities from taking proceedings against them for being in occupation of unauthorised public premises is clearly barred and a second appeal filed by them would be dismissed.¹⁹⁹⁸

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

112. Waiver of forfeiture.—

A forfeiture under section 111, clause (g), is waived by acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture, or by distress for such rent, or by any other act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting:

Provided that the lessor is aware that the forfeiture has been incurred:

Provided also that, where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture, such acceptance is not a waiver.

[s 112.1] Waiver of Forfeiture

On breach of an express condition to which a proviso for re-entry is annexed, or any of the other events stated in section 111 (g), the lease is voidable at the option of the lessor. If the lessor has knowledge of the breach, he may adopt one of three courses— (i) elect to avoid the lease; or (ii) elect not to avoid the lease; or (iii) make no election. These three alternatives were put by Baron Bramwell in Croft v Lumley.¹⁹⁹⁹ In case (i) he must be required by section 111(g) to give a notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease, and it is only then that there is a forfeiture and the lease is terminated. Thus, under section 111(g), two things, namely the happening of any of the three specified events, and the giving of the notice by the lessor, together amount to a forfeiture. Under that section, there can be no forfeiture unless and until the lessor gives the notice. Therefore, there can be no forfeiture as contemplated by that section, without the lessor being aware that the event which gives him the right to put an end to the lease has happened, for, without such knowledge, he cannot give the notice and without such notice, there is no forfeiture as defined in that section. In this view of the matter, the language of section 112 does not appear to be very optimistic. If “a forfeiture under section 111, clause (g)” means the happening of any of the three specified events followed by a notice from the lessor, the first proviso to section 112 becomes meaningless, for there cannot be a forfeiture under section 111(g) without knowledge of the lessor. This proviso, therefore, makes it clear that the word “forfeiture” as used in section 112 does not mean the same thing as “forfeiture” as defined under section 111(g). Therefore, the opening words “A forfeiture under section 111, clause (g)”, and the marginal note “Waiver of forfeiture” are not quite appropriate.

Section 112 deals with the second of the three alternative cases mentioned above; namely, the lessor electing not to avoid the lease despite the breach, or a disclaimer by or the insolvency of, the lessee. It would be more accurate, therefore, to say that in case (ii) there is a waiver of the breach, or the disclaimer or the insolvency, as the case may be, than that there is waiver of a forfeiture. Indeed, in Croft v Luniky, Baron Bramwell said that the expression “waiver of forfeiture” is not strictly accurate. The waiver in case (ii) is either express, or implied from one or other of the acts referred to in this section. In case (iii), the lessor takes no action and this is the case of lying by. However, the election is not between different rights, but whether to retain the right created or to give it up.²⁰⁰⁰

Acceptance of rent due on a date after the forfeiture is incurred, is a waiver of forfeiture.²⁰⁰¹ but, mere acceptance of rent after the expiry of lease would not amount to consent of the landlord for continuance of lease.²⁰⁰² If the landlord accepts rent without protest or making a grievance after the lease is forfeited or after the lessee has defaulted in his statutory obligation, or subsequent to suit,²⁰⁰³ such conduct would amount to waiver,²⁰⁰⁴ but not when he does it by mistake,²⁰⁰⁵ or when the landlord is actively prosecuting the suit for eviction filed by him against the tenant.²⁰⁰⁶ This is because acceptance of the rent is an affirmation that the lease was subsisting at the time when the rent became due.²⁰⁰⁷ For the same reason, receipt of rent due before the breach does not operate as a waiver.²⁰⁰⁸ But the giving of a notice to quit at a future day amounts to a waiver, because the giving of the notice recognises the continuance of the tenancy upto that day.²⁰⁰⁹ A contrary view has, however, been taken in Lowenthal v Vanhoute.²⁰¹⁰ It is explained there, that when a forfeiture of a lease is incurred, the lease is voidable, and not void and in those circumstances, the giving of a notice to quit may recognise the subsistence of the lease and may amount to a waiver of forfeiture, but when the tenancy is determined by a notice to quit, the position is entirely different. When a valid notice to quit is given, the lease is determined and a new tenancy can be created by an agreement, express or implied, and no such agreement can be inferred from the fact of service of a second notice. But see the second illustration to section 112. In Price v Worwood,²⁰¹¹ Martin, B, said: The mere receipt of the money, the rent having become due previously, is of no consequence, and for the very plain reason that the entry of a condition broken does not at all affect the right to receive payment of a pre-existing debt. But such waiver operates in respect of a particular breach.²⁰¹²

A leased a house to H with an express condition that if a default was made in the punctual payment for three successive months, the lease would be forfeited and A would have a right to re-enter. Rents payable in April, May, June and July were not paid. On 19 July, B paid the rent of April and May. The rent payable in August was not paid. A was entitled to forfeit the lease for the three successive defaults of June, July and August.²⁰¹³

But if the rent is accepted for any period subsequent to the breach, it makes no difference that it is accepted “under protest” or without prejudice to the forfeiture, eg as compensation for use and occupation;²⁰¹⁴ or that is credited to a suspense account;²⁰¹⁵ or that there is a proviso in the lease requiring waiver to be in writing.²⁰¹⁶ The protest is inoperative as the lessor has no right to take the money except on the terms on which it is paid, and because it is the law which decides that the acceptance of rent constitutes a waiver, and the lessor cannot by qualifying his acceptance alter the legal consequence of his act.²⁰¹⁷ Nor does it matter that the rent is accepted from an underlessee, or other person in possession.²⁰¹⁸

When money is tendered and accepted, whether it is accepted as rent is a question of fact; but once that is decided, whether it amounts to a waiver, is a question of law.²⁰¹⁹

[s 112.2] Distress

Under the English common law, the landlord has an incident to his reversion, the right to seize whatever movables he finds on the premises without legal process as a pledge to compel payment of arrears of rent. This right is not recognised in India, except in Presidency towns where it may be exercised through the small causes court; and is also recognised subject to statutory restrictions in some agricultural tenancies. In English law, there is no right to levy distress, unless the relationship of landlord and tenant still subsists when the distress is levied. Accordingly in English law, the levy of distress operates as a waiver, even if it is levied for rent for a period before the breach;²⁰²⁰ and in Price v Worwood,²⁰²¹ Chief Baron Pollock said that an actual distress is so clear an affirmation of the tenancy existing at the time, that it does away with all previous forfeitures. This section does not make this distinction and the words “distress for such rent” limit the operation of the waiver to rent becoming due since the forfeiture was incurred. This may be because the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act does not expressly require that the relationship of landlord and tenant should exist at the time of the application for a distress warrant. In this connection, section 53 of that Act may be referred.

112. Waiver of forfeiture.—

[s 112.3] Any Other Act

The election not to avoid the lease may be manifested in other ways, besides acceptance of rent or levy of distress. The test is whether the act constitute an unequivocal recognition of the continued existence and effective operation of the lease.²⁰²² Instances of such acts showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting are a demand for rent accruing due since the breach,²⁰²³ even a demand made “without prejudice”,²⁰²⁴ a suit for such rent,²⁰²⁵ or acceptance of a sum paid into court as damages for breach of covenant to repair alleged to have been committed during the term.²⁰²⁶ The pleadings in a suit for ejectment may even operate as a waiver of forfeiture, eg where the lessor describes the breaches as occurring during the existence of the term,²⁰²⁷ or makes an alternative prayer inconsistent with the determination of the lease.²⁰²⁸

In an English case,²⁰²⁹ the lessor, after the forfeiture, described the lessee as a “termor”, and this was treated as a waiver, although the statement was made in a receipt for rent due before the forfeiture. But in a Calcutta case already cited,²⁰³⁰ a similar description was held to refer to the period antecedent to the forfeiture and, therefore, not to operate as a waiver. However, an act of waiver would not amount to a waiver, unless it is communicated to the tenant.²⁰³¹

[s 112.4] First Proviso—Knowledge of the Breach

The principle underlying the first proviso is that there can be no election without knowledge. It must, therefore, be shown that the lessor had notice or knowledge of the breach which incurs a forfeiture at the time of the supposed waiver.²⁰³² Knowledge of an agent is not sufficient, unless the agent has authority to grant a new lease.²⁰³³ Waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. The foundation of a waiver is the knowledge of a person who is said to waive his right and there cannot be a waiver in ignorance. This principle is recognised in section 112.²⁰³⁴

[s 112.5] Second Proviso—Election Irrevocable

The second proviso results from the principle that an election once made is irrevocable. The lessor, when he has knowledge of the breach, may take time to make his election; but once he has made the election either by express words or unequivocal act, the election is irrevocable.²⁰³⁵ Therefore, if the lessor has given notice and filed a suit on the ground of forfeiture, he has determined the lease, and no subsequent act of his will amount to waiver. A distress levied after such a suit would be merely a trespass, and not an affirmation of the tenancy.²⁰³⁶ Acceptance of rent after such a suit is not a waiver.²⁰³⁷ A prayer for rent or mesne profits in a suit for ejectment on the ground of forfeiture will not necessarily operate as a waiver.²⁰³⁸ But the suit must be an unequivocal demand for possession, and if there are alternative prayers to enforce the covenants in the lease,²⁰³⁹ the plaint itself would not be unequivocal.

[s 112.6] Subsequent Breaches

Waiver of past breaches does not preclude the lessor from enforcing a forfeiture when the same or another condition is subsequently broken.²⁰⁴⁰ When the breach is of a continuing nature, the same rule applies, and the continuance of the breach after the waiver will justify a forfeiture.²⁰⁴¹ But where the breach of one covenant necessarily involves the breach of another, the waiver of one operates as a waiver of the other.²⁰⁴² But if the

112. Waiver of forfeiture.—

breach involves the creation of a subordinate interest, eg in the case of a covenant not to sublet, the waiver operates during the continuance of that interest,²⁰⁴³ but not afterwards.²⁰⁴⁴

[s 112.7] Lying by

This is the third case put by the Baron Bramwell in Crift v Lumley,²⁰⁴⁵ where the lessor, having knowledge of the breach, makes no election. Such lying by and witnessing the breach is no waiver, for some positive act must be done,²⁰⁴⁶ either to give notice under section 111(g), or to waive under this section. It does not matter that the lessee spends money on the premises, while the lessor is lying by.²⁰⁴⁷

The mere fact that the lessor does not take action for getting an unauthorised construction made by the lessee removed, does not stop the lessor from suing for ejectment.²⁰⁴⁸ But long continued acquiescence in repeated breach is evidence from which a waiver may be inferred.²⁰⁴⁹

This principle of this section applies to Punjab and Delhi.²⁰⁵⁰

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

113. Waiver of notice to quit.—

A notice given under section 111, clause (h), is waived, with the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given, by any act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting.

[s 113.1] Waiver of Notice to Quit

Waiver of notice to quit does not, like waiver of forfeiture, depend upon the election of one party, but upon the consent of both. Justice Maule in *Blyth v Dennett*²⁰⁵¹ said:

There is this difference between a determination of a tenancy by a notice to quit and a forfeiture; in the former case, the tenancy is put an end to by the agreement of the parties, which determination of the tenancy cannot waive without the assent of both; but in the case of a forfeiture, the lease is voidable only at the election of the lessor; in the one case the estate continues, though voidable; in the other, the tenancy is at an end.

This distinction is manifested in the section by the words “with the express or implied consent of the person to whom the notice is given.” Both the illustrations are of notices given by the lessor; and the consent of the lessee is implied in the illustration (a) by his tender of rent, and in illustration (b) from his remaining in possession. The effect of giving a second notice to quit had been considered in several cases.²⁰⁵² In Tayabali v Ahsan & Co,²⁰⁵³ the Supreme Court has held that such a notice would amount to a waiver of the first notice to quit, provided that there has been express or implied consent of the lessee to such waiver; such consent can be implied from the payment of rent in respect of a period after the lease would have expired under the first notice.

A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. There can be no waiver, unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights, and facts enabling him to take effectual action for the enforcement of such rights.²⁰⁵⁴ To constitute waiver under section 113, mere tender and acceptance of rent are not sufficient. These two actions should show an intention on the part of the landlord to treat the lease as subsisting. Whenever there is acceptance by the landlord of any sum tendered by the tenant as rent, the court is obliged to look to such acceptance in the light of the last of such requirement of section 113 as to where this expectance has shown an intention on the part of the landlord to treat the lease as subsisting.²⁰⁵⁵ The Allahabad High Court has held that to constitute a waiver under section 113, not only the landlord should have the knowledge of the fact that his conduct of accepting the rent amounts to waiver, but also that he should have the intention to treat the lease as subsisting.²⁰⁵⁶

Waiver of notice is not a pure question of law as waiver is a question of fact and must be properly pleaded and proved. No plea of waiver can be allowed to be raised unless it is pleaded and factual foundation for it is laid in the pleadings and in the absence of appropriate pleading, there can be no distinct issue.²⁰⁵⁷ Where the tenant, even after the first notice to quit, tendered rent for the post notice period by money order to the landlord and continued in possession and thereafter, second notice was served on him by the landlord, it was held that there was waiver of the first notice by both the parties who treated the tenancy as continuing after the first notice.²⁰⁵⁸

Illustration (a) to the section shows that in order that acceptance of rent may amount to a waiver, the rent accepted must be for a period after the notice.²⁰⁵⁹

[s 113.2] Effect of Waiver

Waiver of a notice to quit operates in English law as an agreement to create a new tenancy to take effect at the expiry of the old tenancy.²⁰⁶⁰ This section seems to regard waiver as an agreement to restore the old tenancy. But the Supreme Court has held that in principle, the consent of the lessee to treat the old tenancy as subsisting constitutes a new agreement.²⁰⁶¹ But under this section the result would be the same, for the surety's liability which has been determined by the notice to quit could not be extended without his consent. Under the section there can be a waiver of a notice to quit with an express or implied consent of the tenant, by any act on the part of the landlord showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting.²⁰⁶² But that act must be an act on the part of the landlord or somebody acting on his behalf.²⁰⁶³ So, in the case of a lease by joint lessors, an act of one cannot operate as a waiver as against the other.²⁰⁶⁴

There is a fundamental difference between a waiver of a forfeiture which is a matter which can be done at the election of the landlord alone and the waiver of a notice to quit which proceeds on the basis of a new agreement between the landlord and the tenant. The observations in *Lowenthal v Vanhoute*²⁰⁶⁵ may be referred. It is not in every case that the payment and acceptance of rent by the landlord after the notice to quit of necessity, waives the notice. The question under section 113 is whether the act of the landlord (whether it is a receipt of the amount sent as rent or is the receipt of the amount sent without any statement at all) is one from which one can impute to the landlord the intention of creating a renewal of the tenancy, or treating the tenancy as still subsisting, is a question of fact.²⁰⁶⁶ A mere production of rent receipt after the notice to quit was given, is not sufficient to show waiver.²⁰⁶⁷

In some cases, it has been held that payment and acceptance of rent after the expiry of a notice to quit operates as a waiver of the notice and the lease subsists;²⁰⁶⁸ but acceptance of rent for the period before the expiry of the notice does not operate as waiver.²⁰⁶⁹ In an Allahabad case,²⁰⁷⁰ the landlord had been throughout insisting that there were past arrears of rent. After the issue by the landlord of a notice to quit, the landlord accepted the rent remitted by the tenant alleging it to be for a period which included a certain period after the issue of the notice. The acceptance of rent in these circumstances, it was held, could not amount to a waiver of the notice. From the mere fact that under the Indian Contract Act, 1872,²⁰⁷¹ some amount would be adjusted towards a period subsequent to the notice to quit, an inference about intent to waive the notice could not be drawn. The acceptance of rent by mistake is not waiver of the notice.²⁰⁷² Nor is there waiver if the payment is for compensation for use and occupation;²⁰⁷³ or, where the rent Acts are in force, the acceptance of the “rent” may be attributable to the statutory tenancies created thereby.²⁰⁷⁴

Where the rent control Act applies, the lessee is allowed to continue in possession notwithstanding the termination of the contractual tenancy by notice under section 111(h). Any subsequent acceptance of “rent” by the lessor does not constitute a waiver of the notice.²⁰⁷⁵ The waiver of the notice is a bilateral act, exhibiting an ad idem to continue the old contractual tenancy despite the notice. Where the tenant becomes a statutory tenant on the expiry of a lease, the notice, according to the Rajasthan High Court, would not be waived by a mere acceptance of the rent by the landlord. The tenant offers rent to fulfill his obligation under the rent control Act. Similarly, the landlord accepts the rent, not because he shows thereby an intention to create a new tenancy or to treat the old tenancy as subsisting, but because he is entitled to accept the rent so long as the tenant remains in possession under the rent control Act.²⁰⁷⁶

Where, after issue by the lessor of a notice to quit, the lessee sends the rent by money order and the lessor accepts the amount under protest as compensation and not as rent, the conduct of the lessor shows that he did not intend to waive the notice, and no fresh tenancy is created in such circumstances.²⁰⁷⁷ The giving of a second notice to quit may operate as a waiver, as it shows that the lessee may rightfully remain in possession after the expiry of the first notice.²⁰⁷⁸ However, the terms of the second notice may show that this was not the intention of the lessor, eg if the notice is merely a demand for possession,²⁰⁷⁹ and therefore the fact that the landlord gives a second notice, does not necessarily imply waiver on his part of the first notice. In a proper case, it might be possible that despite the second notice, there was no intention to waive the notice to quit.²⁰⁸⁰ After determination of the tenancy by all the co-owners, it is not open to one of the co-owners either to waive the notice, or to revive the tenancy, or to create a fresh tenancy in favour of the tenant.²⁰⁸¹

Illustration (b) to section 113 clearly shows that if a tenant continues in possession after expiry of the period of notice given by the lessor, and the landlord serves upon him a second notice (thus indicating his intention to treat the lease as subsisting), the lessor has impliedly waived the first notice.²⁰⁸²

Mere acceptance of rent in absence of any written request for extension of lease after expiry of lease as per agreed terms would not amount to implied renewal,²⁰⁸³ if the lease deed contained a renewal clause, but the same was not exercised by the tenant and the lessor in the notice had not expressed any intention to renew the lease.²⁰⁸⁴ Payment of enhanced rent after determination of tenancy, in absence of a separate agreement to that effect would not result in creation of tenancy and the tenant would be a tenant holding over from month to month.²⁰⁸⁵ The terms of the lease agreement have paramount importance in renewal and extension of lease,

113. Waiver of notice to quit.—

and the entire lease document should be considered in totality to decipher the terms and conditions of lease.²⁰⁸⁶

[s 113.3] Effect of Institution of Eviction Proceedings

The question is where a landlord files a suit for ejectment after determining the tenancy by serving a notice on the tenant, whether the acceptance of rent by him thereafter, constitute a waiver. Decisions on the subject are conflicting, and sometimes one and the same High Court has expressed conflicting views. Thus, according to an earlier Allahabad judgment, if the landlord in such a case claims damages for the use and occupation and the defendant makes payment to the landlord without insisting on him to withdraw the suit, the landlord cannot be said to have waived his right asserted by him to eject the tenant.²⁰⁸⁷ Similarly merely because after the institution of the suit the rent for the period subsequent to the date of termination of the tenancy deposited by the tenant is withdrawn by the landlord, it cannot be said that there was an intention to waive the notice.²⁰⁸⁸ Further, if the landlord is actively prosecuting the eviction suit, mere acceptance of rent cannot be treated as waiver.²⁰⁸⁹ According to a few subsequent Allahabad rulings also, such acceptance cannot amount to waiver.²⁰⁹⁰ Departing from this trend, an Allahabad judgment of 1966 regards such acceptance as amounting to waiver.²⁰⁹¹

The Andhra Pradesh High Court has, in 1976, held that having regard to the language of section 113, even the acceptance of rent subsequent to the notice does not amount to a waiver, unless it shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. Where a person has instituted a suit seeking eviction, it is difficult to accept the contention that he still intended to treat the lease as subsisting, even if he accepts rent after such institution. Illustration (a) to section 113, it held, must be understood and applied in consonance with the principle underlying the section, and with due reference to the intention of the lessor. There is no warrant for the view that the mere receipt of rent, irrespective of the intention of the lessor, should, of its own force and divorced from the circumstances of the case, be regarded as amounting to waiver.²⁰⁹² According to the Bombay High Court, acceptance of rent during the continuance of a suit for eviction cannot amount to waiver. A termination of tenancy which has been made a cause of action for filing a suit cannot be done away with on the grounds of alleged waiver by the acceptance of a certain amount.²⁰⁹³ Where a tenant is in arrears of rent on the date of an application for eviction filed under the rent control Act, any payment made of rent, and any acceptance of rent after the filing of the eviction proceedings, does not come in the way of the landlord. Further, the tenant is not entitled to the benefit of relief against forfeiture under section 114, the relationship being governed by the special statute, namely, the rent control Act.²⁰⁹⁴ If the landlord actually continues the prosecution of the case or appeal with regard to the ejectment of the tenant, acceptance of the rent by him cannot be treated as a waiver, according to the High Courts of Nagpur, and Jammu and Kashmir.²⁰⁹⁵ The Oudh Chief Court held that in such a case the mere acceptance of a sum for use and occupation, would not amount to waiver of a notice to quit.²⁰⁹⁶ According to the Calcutta view, however, since there is no proviso to section 113 corresponding to the second proviso to section 112, the payment and acceptance, after the filing of a suit for rent subsequent to the expiry of notice would operate as a waiver.²⁰⁹⁷ In any case, the inclusion in the suit of a claim of rent subsequent to the expiry of notice does not have the effect of waiver, for a demand does not show consent.²⁰⁹⁸

The fact of the lessee holding over without an agreement for a new tenancy does not operate as a waiver;²⁰⁹⁹ nor the fact that the lessor, as a matter of indulgence, allows the lessee to continue in occupation after the expiry of the notice.²¹⁰⁰

A plea of waiver based on facts must be pleaded in the written statement.²¹⁰¹

After the determination of the tenancy by all the co-owners, it is not open to one of them to waive the notice, or to revive the tenancy. This can be done only by all the co-owners acting together.²¹⁰²

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

114. Relief against forfeiture for the non-payment of rent.—

Where a lease of immovable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and the lessor sues to eject the lessee, if, at the hearing of the suit, the lessee pays or tenders to the lessor the rent in arrears, together with interest thereon and his full costs of the suit, or gives such security as the Court thinks sufficient for making such payment within fifteen days, the Court may, in lieu of making a decree for ejectment, pass an order relieving the lessee against the forfeiture; and thereupon the lessee shall hold the property leased as if the forfeiture had not occurred.

[s 114.1] Relief Against Forfeiture for Non-payment of Rent

The rule of equity enshrined in section 114 postulates that where a lease of immovable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent and the lessor files a suit for ejectment of the lessee, the court exercises a discretionary jurisdiction of passing an order relieving the lessee against the consequences of forfeiture if at the hearing of the suit the lessee pays or tenders to the lessor the rent in arrears with interest and costs or furnishes such security as the court thinks sufficient.²¹⁰⁴ Having appointed a time for payment, the court still retains jurisdiction to extend the time.²¹⁰⁵ The legislature never intended to place a tenant, in a situation, worse than what it would have been under the principles as may be derived from section 114 of the TP Act, 1882.²¹⁰⁶

In terms, section 114 makes payment of rent at the hearing of the suit in ejectment, a condition of the exercise of the court's jurisdiction, but an appeal being a rehearing of the suit, in appropriate cases it is open to the appellate court at the hearing of the appeal to relieve the tenant in default against forfeiture. Passing of a decree in ejectment against the tenant by the court of first instance does not take away the jurisdiction of the appellate court to grant equitable relief. Failure of the tenants to avail themselves of the opportunity does not operate as a bar to the jurisdiction of the appellate court. The appellate court may have regard to the conduct of the tenant decline to exercise its jurisdiction to grant him relief against forfeiture. The question is not one of jurisdiction, but of discretion.²¹⁰⁷ Though the TP Act, 1882 does not apply to the state of Punjab, the principles underlying or contained in the provisions of the TP Act, 1882 as are essentially the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, have been held to be applicable. Section 114 embodies one such principle.²¹⁰⁸

In England, equity from very early times regarded a forfeiture clause for non-payment of rent as security for the rent, and granted relief whenever compensation could be given; and even the Courts of Common Law

114. Relief against forfeiture for the non-payment of rent.—

restrained actions for ejectment for non-payment of rent on the lessee bringing the rent into court. Relief was given upon the principle that, as the right of entry was intended merely as security for the rent, the lessor thereby recovered full compensation, and was put in the same situation as if rent had been paid to him when it was originally due.²¹⁰⁹ This section refers to non-payment of rent only,²¹¹⁰ while other cases of forfeiture are dealt with in the new section 114A. It therefore does not apply in cases of a simple suit for evicting a monthly tenant after service of notice to quit.²¹¹¹

Relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent was given in India before the TP Act, 1882.²¹¹² It is given in leases to which the TP Act, 1882 is not applicable,²¹¹³ and is recognised in various Acts referring to agricultural holdings.²¹¹⁴

Justice Shah (as he then was) has explained the object of section 114 thus in Pradyuman Kumar v Virendra Goyal.²¹¹⁵

The covenant of forfeiture for non-payment of rent is regarded by the Courts as merely a clause for securing payment of rent, and unless the tenant has by his conduct disentitled himself to equitable relief the Courts grant relief against forfeiture of tenancy on the tenant paying the rent due, interest thereon and costs of the suit.

There is no distinction between a clause of nullity, and a condition of forfeiture. A lease under the old section 111(g) provided that on failure to pay three installments of rent, the lease should be null and void. This was treated as a case of forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and relief was given under this section.²¹¹⁶ The section has no application to a tenancy from month to month.²¹¹⁷ It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that when the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 applies, section 114 of the TP Act, 1882 in so far as forfeiture against default is concerned, cannot be applied.²¹¹⁸

The principle of the section has been applied in Punjab,²¹¹⁹ and also to agricultural leases.²¹²⁰

Section 114 of the TP Act, 1882 cannot be applied to a case where the suit for eviction of a tenant has been instituted not on the basis of forfeiture of lease under the TP Act, 1882, but on the basis of statutory provision dealing specifically with the rights and obligations of the landlords and tenants such as section 12 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. Where a tenant renders himself liable to be evicted on the ground of being a defaulter in payment of rent as contemplated by section 12(2) section and section 12(3)(a) of the Bombay Rent Act, bar from the way of the landlord in instituting the suit for ejectment of a tenant is removed, and he gets a right to have a decree of eviction. Such removal of bar is not in any sense forfeiture of any of the rights under the lease which the tenant held. Section 114 applies to a case where a lease of immovable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent. Under clause (g) of section 111, lease of immovable property determines by forfeiture, inter alia, in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof, the lessor may re-enter. Therefore, in a case where forfeiture of lease is claimed on the ground of non-payment of rent, it would have to be established that one of the express conditions of the lease provided that on breach of that condition, namely non payment of rent, the lessor was entitled to re-enter, and that the lessee committed breach thereof followed by a notice in writing from the lessor showing his intention to determine the lease.²¹²¹

The claim of the tenant must be bonafide. If he comes up with a false claim of payment of rent of three months without receipts and of having oral agreement with landlord for execution of fresh lease deed the tenant is not allowed to discretionary relief as did not approach the court with clean hands.²¹²² Similarly, if the tenant neither gives any reply to a valid notice nor deposits the amount in court, he is not entitled to any benefit under section 114.²¹²³ Mere acceptance of the cheque where the rent is accepted after the institution of the suit for ejection on grounds of forfeiture would not extend any benefit to the lessee. Where the enhanced rent as per the agreement was to be paid by the lessee within six months from the date of its accrual but he paid it after the lapse of six months a termination of tenancy on grounds of non payment of rent would not be illegal.²¹²⁴ Where the lessor issued notice and claimed enhanced rent for renovation of property, it being dilapidated, but the lessee without paying the enhanced rent continued to be in the occupation of the property and damages were caused to the property, the lessor would be entitled to mense profits.²¹²⁵

[s 114.2] Distinction between Termination by Forfeiture and by Notice

Where a tenancy is legally forfeited, it comes to an end even before the expiry of the period of tenancy originally agreed. No question of notice of termination under section 106 arises in such a case. On the other hand, where the lease is not for a particular period, but only a yearly or monthly lease, and the agreement of tenancy provides for termination by notice under section 106, no question for forfeiture arises, and the benefit of section 114 cannot be claimed.²¹²⁶

Where there is a simplicitor termination of tenancy under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882 and not under section 111 (g) of the TP Act, 1882, these provisions of section 114 of the TP Act, 1882 cannot be attracted.²¹²⁷

[s 114.3] Relief not Available in Cases of Permissive Possession Short of a Lease

Where the possession of a person was not under a valid lease but was permissive, the same would be rendered akin to a trespasser after the revocation of permission under quit notice and no remedy would be available to him against the owner who would be entitled to seek possession.²¹²⁸

[s 114.4] At the Hearing

Under the English statutes, the lessee may apply for relief not only at the hearing, but within six months of the execution of the decree in ejectment;²¹²⁹ but under this section, the lessee must apply at the hearing of the suit. As an appeal is a continuation of the suit, the lessee may pay or tender even in appeal.²¹³⁰

Jurisdiction to grant relief against forfeiture can be exercised by the appellate court also.²¹³¹ The words “at the hearing of the suit”, also include the hearing of the appeal.²¹³²

Where the tenancy stood determined by efflux of time, it would be an empty formality to relieve the tenant against earlier determination of tenancy by forfeiture for non-payment of rent, as equity always looks at the substance, and not to the form. The grant of equitable relief under section 114 was, therefore, declined in appeal.²¹³³

The discretionary power under section 114, when exercised by the court, cannot be reversed in revision, unless its exercise is shown to be contrary to some principle of law.²¹³⁴ The section does not refer to tender of rent before a suit is filed; but such tender would be a ground for relief, and if the lessor nevertheless files a suit in ejectment, he does so at his own risk as to costs.²¹³⁵

Section 114 contemplates tender or payment at the hearing of the suit, namely, in the trial court before the suit is commenced. The deposit of the decretal amount and payment made in pursuance of stay order of the court cannot be taken into account for the purpose of section 114, nor can tender or payment at the appellate stage be availed of for a relief under section 114. Where the tenant made no payment at any stage of the suit, but took only a false plea of payments having been made, relief, under section 114, cannot be granted at the stage of second appeal for the first time.²¹³⁶

Deposit of standard rent with the Rent Controller under the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920 has been held to entitle a tenant to relief against forfeiture.²¹³⁷

[s 114.5] Conditions of Relief

The lessee is put on terms to make full compensation to the lessor, ie, he must pay all rent in arrears with interest and full costs of the lessor's suit;²¹³⁸ or if he does not pay, he must give security for payment within 15 days. The Madras High Court has held that he must pay arrears of rent even though they are time-barred.²¹³⁹ Rent in arrear means rent in arrear upto the date when relief from forfeiture is allowed.²¹⁴⁰ There must be actual payment. Mere readiness to pay,²¹⁴¹ or a conditional offer²¹⁴² will not be sufficient.

The relief is discretionary, and in some cases it has been refused on the ground that the lessee made no tender in the lower court, and set up a false plea of discharge.²¹⁴³ But in a case before the TP Act, 1882, the Privy Council gave relief inspite of a false defence.²¹⁴⁴ In Namdeo Lokman v Narmadabai,²¹⁴⁵ in which the Supreme Court cited with approval the decision of the House of Lords in Hyman v Rose,²¹⁴⁶ pointed out that the entire conduct of the lessee was relevant, for he was seeking an equitable relief. It was held that in exercising the discretion under section 114, each case must be judged by itself, the delay, the conduct of the parties and the difficulties to which the landlord has been put should be weighed against the tenant. It is a maxim of equity that a person who comes in equity, must do equity and must come with clean hands. If the conduct of the tenant is such that it disentitles him to relief in equity, then the courts hands are not tied to exercise it in his favour. Even though no third parties were affected, the court upheld a refusal to grant relief in the case of a tenancy who was recalcitrant, and a habitual defaulter. Where the landlord approaches the court with unclean hands by having committed a default in handing over the possession immediately after the execution of the lease agreement or within a reasonable time thereafter, it was held that the tenant is entitled to the protection under section 114²¹⁴⁷ which is a rule of equity, justice and good conscience.²¹⁴⁸

Relief has been refused where the lessee has been a persistent defaulter,²¹⁴⁹ or has raised frivolous or vexatious defences,²¹⁵⁰ or has withheld rent for a year and a half without justification.²¹⁵¹ Where the tenant has been a chronic defaulter, there is no scope for exercising any equitable powers for relieving him from eviction on the ground of non-payment of rent.²¹⁵² If there is sufficient cause, the court can relieve the lessee against forfeiture on the ground of non-payment of rent. But where the tenant does not show that he was not able to pay the rent, and makes no attempt to pay the arrears of rent even when the suit is instituted and makes the tender only after the application is moved by the landlord for striking off the defence under O XV, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court will be justified in refusing to grant relief against forfeiture.²¹⁵³ Relief against forfeiture was granted to tenants who were not chronic defaulters, though on some occasions they had not paid rents on the due dates.²¹⁵⁴ The order being discretionary, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the exercise of the discretion.²¹⁵⁵ Where the lease for a fixed period had already expired during the pendency of the appeal, the lease would stand determined by efflux of time, even if forfeiture is relieved against. The grant of equitable relief under section 114 in such an event is held to be entirely out of place.²¹⁵⁶

[s 114.6] Consent Decree

If the terms of the lease are embodied in a consent decree, the court executing the decree has power under this section to grant relief from forfeiture;²¹⁵⁷ but such relief cannot be granted in connection with decrees other than consent decrees.²¹⁵⁸

[s 114.7] No Double Protection

The Supreme Court has held that the executing court cannot grant relief against forfeiture on the strength of section 114 of the TP Act, 1882 notwithstanding section 12(3) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, of which clause (2) was a special provision incorporating the equity provision contained in section 114 of the TP Act, 1882. If a tenant fails to abide by the requirements of the special provision of section 12(3) of the Rent Act, he must take the consequences thereof, and there is no question of granting him double protection by resorting to section 114 of the TP Act, 1882.²¹⁵⁹

[s 114.8] Period of Grace

When the lease allows a period of grace after the due date for the payment of rent, the Madras High Court at one time held that the provision for forfeiture was not penal, and that the lessee was not entitled to relief.²¹⁶⁰ The Bombay High Court refuses to treat that as an inflexible rule.²¹⁶¹ It is obvious that such a rule might be a means of defeating the equity of relief, and the Madras High Court has repudiated it.²¹⁶²

Even though claiming unpaid rent for a period of three years beyond three years is barred by the law of limitation, but recovery of due rent is barred but remedy of eviction on grounds of non payment of rent beyond three period is not barred.²¹⁶³

[s 114.9] Extension of Time by Court

In England, it has been held that where an order for relief against forfeiture of a lease is granted to a tenant on terms to be performed within a specified time, the court has jurisdiction to extend that time if circumstances which would make it just and equitable that extension should be granted are brought to its notice.²¹⁶⁴ Following the said decision, the Supreme Court has held that even the time appointed by a consent decree can be extended.²¹⁶⁵

[s 114.9.1] Sub-lessee

The assignee has the same right to relief under this section as the lessee. In England, the right to relief is given to the “tenant” and his assigns.²¹⁶⁶ It, therefore, extends to a mortgagee,²¹⁶⁷ or underlessee.²¹⁶⁸ The Allahabad High Court has given a sub-lessee the benefit of this section.²¹⁶⁹ Where the lease itself gives a right to the lessee to sublet the premises, the sub-lessee has the right to avoid forfeiture by payment of rent under section 114 unless based on the facts, he is disentitled from claiming exercise of the discretion in his favour.²¹⁷⁰

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

²¹⁷¹[114A. Relief against forfeiture in certain other cases.—

Where a lease of immovable property was determined by forfeiture for a breach of an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter, no suit for ejectment shall lie unless and until the lessor has served on the lessee a notice in writing—

- (a) specifying the particular breach complained of; and
- (b) if the breach is capable of remedy, requiring the lessee to remedy the breach, and the lessee fails, within a reasonable time from the date of the service of the notice, to remedy the breach, if it is capable of remedy.

Nothing in this section shall apply to an express condition against the assigning, under-letting, parting with the possession, or disposing, of the property leased, or to an express condition relating to forfeiture in case of non-payment of rent.]

[s 114A.1] Relief Against Forfeiture

This section was inserted by the amending Act 20 of 1929. It provides for relief against forfeiture in certain other cases besides non-payment of rent, eg for breach of covenant to repair, or for breach of covenant to insure. Before the enactment of the section, relief was not granted in the case of a breach of a covenant to repair.²¹⁷²

The section does not apply to leases executed before the section was enacted,²¹⁷³ or brought into force.²¹⁷⁴ It also does not apply to a breach of the covenant to pay rent, for that is the subject of section 114.

This section would apply only when there is express condition governing the lease, which provides that on breach thereof, a lessor may re-enter. It cannot apply to a case governed by a rent law, which, while conferring on the tenants protection against eviction, also confers rights on the landlords to evict the tenants, if any of the grounds provided in the statute like default to pay rent is satisfied. A statutory provision like the one in section 4 of the Gangtok Rent Control and Eviction Act, 1956, providing the grounds on which only a tenant can be evicted, does not convert a periodic tenancy into one of fixed or indefinite duration, nor insert therein a clause of re-entry on the ground of non-payment of rent, and, therefore, the provisions of section 114A providing relief against forfeiture, cannot apply to premises-tenancies governed by such statutes.²¹⁷⁵ The section does not apply to forfeiture for disclaimer. There is no power to grant relief against forfeiture for disclaimer.²¹⁷⁶ But in the case last cited, it was said that the court would have such power if the disclaimer were occasioned by fraud, accident or mistake. This was obiter, and there is another obiter dictum in a Bombay case²¹⁷⁷ to the effect that in very special cases, a court might grant relief against forfeiture for disclaimer, even when the disclaimer was not occasioned by fraud, accident or mistake of the landlord. The section does not apply to forfeiture for breaches of covenants which have the effect of creating a subordinate interest such as assigning, under letting, parting with possession, or disposing of the property leased.

It has been held in England in the case of a user for immoral purposes,²¹⁷⁸ that certain breaches are by their nature irremediable. In Glass v Kencares Ltd,²¹⁷⁹ however, those cases have been distinguished. The court held that a breach of such nature may be irremediable if committed by the lessee, or if committed by the sub-lessee, if the lessee is aware of it and takes no steps to evict the sub-lessee, but it is not necessarily so. Whether such user causes so great a damage to the property as to render the breach irremediable, is a question of fact.

The principle of this section and its requirements have been applied to agricultural leases by the Bombay High Court.²¹⁸⁰ The Madras High Court has refused to do so in some cases,²¹⁸¹ but has done so in others.²¹⁸² The effect of the section is that the lessee, by remedying the breach, prevents the enforcement of the forfeiture, and he is not liable for the lessor's costs,²¹⁸³ as he is under section 114. If the court were satisfied that the lessee had complied with the terms of the section, the lessor's suit for eviction would be dismissed with costs. In the case of forfeiture, one written notice is required under the law, and not one under section 111(g), and another under section 114A.²¹⁸⁴ A notice calling upon the lessee to remedy the breach "if it is capable of remedy" is good notice.²¹⁸⁵ It is settled that even where the lease provides for forfeiture, in case of assignment by the lessee, there cannot be any forfeiture and automatic resumption by the lessor without notice to the lease determining lessee. The breach of condition of the lease only makes the lease voidable. Therefore, forfeiture is not complete, unless and until the lessor gives a notice to the lessee that he wishes to exercise his option to determine the lease.²¹⁸⁶

When the leased premises were themselves tenanted and the misuse was by the tenant, the time taken by the lessee in stopping the misuse by the tenant had to be considered to be reasonable time while interpreting a lease deed which specified that re-entry and forfeiture would not be ordered if the misuse was remedied within reasonable time. If the misuse was remedied within reasonable time, an order of re-entry would not be sustained.²¹⁸⁷

The provisions of section 108(p) amount to an implied term, while section 114A provides for relief against forfeiture in respect of express terms or conditions. Section 114A cannot be invoked for breach of an implied condition.²¹⁸⁸

Section 114A merely bars a suit for ejectment of the lessee. Where the land was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of the lessee company, it was held that the question of filing a suit for ejectment did not arise at all.²¹⁸⁹

[s 114A.2] Eviction Under Statute

The High Court of Sikkim has held that section 114A can apply only where the question is of applying an express condition in the lease which provides for re-entry by the lessor on its breach. It cannot apply where the case is governed by an Act relating to rent control and eviction of tenants, which, while conferring protection on tenants, also confers a certain right on the landlords to seek eviction on specified grounds. When such a ground is made out, it is not a case of forfeiture of the "lease" within section 111(g), but of forfeiture of the protection conferred on the tenant by the statute against eviction. The rent control Act does not insert a clause of re-entry on the ground of non-payment of rent.²¹⁹⁰

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

115. Effect of surrender and forfeiture on under-leases.—

The surrender, express or implied, of a lease of immovable property does not prejudice an under-lease of the property or any part thereof previously granted by the lessee, on terms and conditions substantially the same (except as regards the amount of rent) as those of the original lease; but, unless the surrender is made for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, the rent payable by, and the contracts binding on, the under-lessee shall be respectively payable to and enforceable by the lessor.

The forfeiture of such a lease annuls all such under-leases, except where such forfeiture has been procured by the lessor in fraud of the under lessees, or relief against the forfeiture is granted under Section 114.

[s 115.1] Effect of Surrender on Under Leases

Section 115 provides that the surrender of a lease does not prejudice an under-lease of the property or in part thereof previously granted by the lessee. The lessee, having parted with a part of the interest of the property in favour of the sub-lessee, cannot surrender that part of the property which is in the possession of the sub-lessee, for he cannot restore possession of the same to the lessor apart from the fact that he can terminate the contract of lease only as a whole, and not in respect of a part of it.²¹⁹¹

Surrender being a voluntary act, the principle applies that the lessee cannot derogate from his own grant, and by surrender to the lessor, destroy the rights that he has created in the sub-lessee.²¹⁹² The surrender, therefore, operates as a grant, subject to the rights of the sub-lessee. This section protects the rights of a sub-lessee in case of surrender and fraudulent forfeiture of the lease. It aims to protect a sub-lessee but only when he holds such a title. A person who under an agreement is responsible for management and maintenance of the tenancy is not a sub-lessee and cannot claim any remedy under this provision.²¹⁹³

It had been held in England in Walter v Yalden,²¹⁹⁴ that a surrender operates as an assignment, and the lessee can only give a title to his lessor by surrender, to the same extent as he could to a stranger by an assignment. The question arose whether the lessor to whom the lessee had surrendered the lease, could claim immediate possession against a squatter who had acquired a title by adverse possession against the lessee. It was held that he could not until the lease determined in the ordinary course, for the lessee could not, by a surrender, give to the lessor what he had not got himself. In view of the express language of section 115, it is clear that a surrender cannot, in India, operate to defeat an under lessee. Regarding a person other than a sub-lessee, it is submitted that the view taken in Walter v Yalden is correct.

To effectuate a valid surrender, possession need not be handed over.²¹⁹⁵ Similarly, an execution of the lessee cannot attach the sub-lessee's interest, for all that he can proceed against is the interest of his judgment-debtor.²¹⁹⁶ The position is the same when on the bankruptcy of the lessee, his trustee in bankruptcy disclaims the lease, and such disclaimer does not affect the sub-lessee's rights.²¹⁹⁷ When the lessee surrenders to the lessor, the sub-lessee, therefore, becomes a lessee of the lessor on the terms of the sub-lease. But if the surrender is made for the purpose of obtaining a new lease, the sub-lessee continues to hold under the lessee.²¹⁹⁸ However, where the grant of primary lease was subject to the sanction granted by the government, the renewal of the sub lease would not take effect in absence of sanction granted by government in favour of such sub-lessee.²¹⁹⁹

The same rule has been enforced in India before the TP Act, 1882,²²⁰⁰ and in the case of agricultural tenancies.²²⁰¹ Relinquishment by a patnidar of his interest does not affect subordinate interests.²²⁰² On the same principle, if an occupancy tenant mortgages his tenancy and then surrenders it to the zamindar, the surrender will not prejudice the rights of the mortgagee.²²⁰³

[s 115.2] Effect of Forfeiture on Underlease

If the lease is terminated by forfeiture in invitum, the principle that the lessee cannot derogate from his grant does not apply. In Great Western Railway Co v Smith,²²⁰⁴ LJ Mellish, said: It is a rule of law that if there is a lessee, and he has created an under-lease, or any other legal interest, if the lease is forfeited, then the under lessee, or the person who claims under the lessee, loses his estate as well as the lessee himself; but if the lessee surrenders, he cannot by his own voluntary act in surrendering, prejudice the estate of the under lessee, or the person who claims under him. In a case of forfeiture, the sublease falls within the lease from which it is derived. Thus, forfeiture of a lease also destroys the rights of the sub-lessee,²²⁰⁵ and in a suit for the eviction of the lessee, there is no need to implead or even to inform the sub-lessee;²²⁰⁶ and the decree in ejectment of the lessee can be executed against the sub-lessee, although he was not a party.²²⁰⁷ This is true of all derivative interests such as leases and mortgages created by the lessee;²²⁰⁸ but if by terms of the lease, the lessee is authorised to mortgage his interest, the lease should not be extinguished without giving the mortgagee an opportunity to prevent the extinction.²²⁰⁹ On the same principle, it has been held that the decree for ejectment against a lessee in a suit in which the sub-lessee was a party, extinguishes the sub-lessee.²²¹⁰

If the forfeiture is a collusive proceeding between the lessor and the lessee, this fraudulent practice will not affect the sub-lessee. Moreover, if the forfeiture is relieved against, the sub-lessee also gets the benefit of the continuance of the lease. The Allahabad High Court has held that the sub-lessee can himself claim relief against forfeiture. In this connection, note "Sub-lessee" under section 114 may be referred.

116. Effect of holding over.—

If a lessee or under-lessee of property remains in possession thereof after the determination of the lease granted to the lessee, and the lessor or his legal representative accepts rent from the lessee or under lessee, or otherwise assents to his continuing in possession, the lease is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, renewed from year to year, or from month to month, according to the purpose for which the property is leased, as specified in section 106.

[s 116.1] Scope and Applicability

Section 108 (q) mandates that on determination of the lease, the lessee is bound to put the lessor into possession of the property. However, section 116 provides for the situations under which, despite determination of lease, if the lessee continues in possession a new lease may come into existence.²²¹¹ A reference to section 116 shows that for application of this section, two things are necessary: (1) the lessee should be in possession after the termination of the lease; (b) the lessor or his representative should accept rent or otherwise assent to his continuing in possession.²²¹² The use of the word “otherwise” suggests that acceptance of rent by the landlord has been treated as a form of his giving assent to the tenant’s continuance of possession. There can be no question of the lessee “continuing in possession” until the lease has expired.²²¹³

The whole basis of section 116 is that, in case of normal tenancy, a landlord is entitled, where he does not accept the rent after the notice to quit, to file a suit of ejectment and obtain a decree for possession, and so his acceptance of rent is an unequivocal act referable only to his desire to assent to the tenant continuing in possession. That is not so where Rent Act exists, and if the tenant says that landlord accepted the rent not as statutory tenant but only as legal rent, indicating his assent to the tenant's continuing in possession, it is for the tenant to establish it.²²¹⁴ The principles of holding over under section 116 come into play only after determination of the lease. The lease must be determined first and then the principles of holding over apply. They cannot apply before or where the occupation of tenancy continues under the registered lease after exercise of the option.²²¹⁵ The doctrine of holding over does not apply to a person who has never been in occupation as a tenant.²²¹⁶

The effect of the second notice to quit under section 113 or a waiver of forfeiture under section 112, is that the determination of the lease under clauses (a) and (b) of section 116 does not take effect, because it is waived and the previous tenancy continues as before. The previous tenancy does not run as a fresh tenancy, but is the same as the old tenancy.²²¹⁷

This section has to be read along with section 111(a) which deals with the termination of a tenancy by efflux of time. This section does not affect the rights of the landlord and tenant as contained in sections 112 and 113.²²¹⁸ In the case of *Gangadutt Murarka v Kartik Chandra Das*²²¹⁹ it was held that where a contractual tenancy, to which rent control legislation applied, had expired by efflux of time or by determination of notice to quit and the tenant continued in possession of the premises, acceptance of rent from the tenant by the landlord after the expiration or determination of the contractual tenancy will not afford ground for holding that the landlord had assented to a new contractual tenancy. It was further held that acceptance by the landlord from the tenant, after the contractual tenancy had expired, of amounts equivalent to rent, or amounts which were fixed as standard rent, did not amount to acceptance of rent from a lessee within the meaning of section 116.

The expression “holding over” is used in the sense of retaining possession.²²²¹ The act of holding over after the expiration of the term does not create a tenancy of any kind.²²²² If a tenant remains in possession after the determination of the lease, the common law rule is that he is a tenant on sufferance.²²²³ A distinction should be drawn between a tenant continuing in possession after the determination of the lease without the consent of the landlord, and a tenant doing so with the landlord's consent. The former is called a “tenant by sufferance” in the language of the English law, and the latter class of tenants is called a “tenant holding over” or “a tenant at will”. In view of the concluding words of the section, a lessee holding over is in a better position than a tenant at will. What the section contemplates is that on one side there should be an offer of taking a new lease evidenced by the lessee or sub-lessee remaining in possession of the property after his term was over, and on the other side there must be a definite consent to the continuance of possession by the landlord expressed by acceptance of rent or otherwise.²²²⁴ Section 116 does let a statutory recognition to the concept of holding over.²²²⁵

To bring a new tenancy into existence within the meaning of section 116, there should be an agreement as the section contemplates that on one side, there should be an offer of taking a fresh demise evidenced by the lessee's continuing occupation of the property after the expiry of the lease and on the other side, there must be a definite assent to this continuance of possession by the lessor/landlord,²²²⁶ and that such an assent of the landlord cannot be assumed in cases of tenancies to which the rent restriction Acts apply on account of the immunity from eviction which a tenant enjoys even after the expiry of lease. In such cases, the landlord cannot eject him except on specified grounds mentioned in the rent restriction Acts and thus the acceptance of rent by the landlord from a statutory tenant, whose lease has already expired, would not be taken as evidence of a new agreement of tenancy and it would not be open to such a tenant to urge that by acceptance of rent, a fresh tenancy was created.²²²⁷ Mere continuance in possession after determination of lease does not create a tenancy by holding over and the lessee must also prove that the lessor accepted rent or otherwise assented to the lessee's continuance in possession.²²²⁸ The relationship of landlord and tenant may be created before payment of rent. Thus, a person in possession of a building without the consent of the landlord is a tenant on sufferance and not one at will, and is no better than a trespasser.²²²⁹ So also, where a tenant remained in possession after the expiry of the date on which he was required to deliver possession by the Rent Controller,

116. Effect of holding over.—

he cannot take advantage of the section even if he had paid rent for such period.²²³⁰

ILLUSTRATION

A leased a godown to B for a term expiring on 20 October 1923. B wrote that he would vacate the godown on 30 October 1923. A replied that in that case he would require a proper notice to quit. B gave no notice but vacated the godown on 26 October 1923, and claimed to be liable for six days rent as compensation for use and occupation. But A's demand for a notice was an assent to B's continuing in possession and after 20 October, B was a monthly tenant. B was therefore liable for two months' rent, one month from 20 October plus one month in default on notice, one month being the period of notice required by usage.²²³¹

The tenancy on sufferance is converted into a tenancy at will by the assent of the landlord, but the relationship of landlord and tenant is not established until the rent is paid and accepted. The assent of the landlord to the continuance of the tenancy after the determination of the tenancy would create a new tenancy. The courts in England have taken a different view, according to which no fresh tenancy is created.²²³²

Tenancy of holding over is a creature of a bilateral, consensual act, and does not come into existence by a mere unilateral intendment or declaration of one of the parties.²²³³ This is really no tenancy at all in the strict sense and requires no notice to determine it, the expression being merely a fiction to avoid the continuance of possession operating as trespass. It is different from the concept of a tenancy at will, which arises by implication of law in certain cases of permissive possession.²²³⁴ However, a tenant holding over as a tenant from month to month is entitled to notice to quit of 15 days.²²³⁵

Where a suit for ejectment and mesne profits was filed without giving a notice to quit required by section 106 of the TP Act, 1882, against a tenant in occupation of the rented property after expiry of lease, the suit would not be maintainable. Such a person is a tenant holding over and notice to quit is necessary. On expiry of the specified term under the unregistered lease deed executed before the filing of the suit, he does not become tenant at sufferance under section 111(a).

Where the lease was determined by efflux of time and a valid notice was admittedly served upon the tenant and rent deposited by the tenant was accepted by the landlord not as rent, but as damages for occupation of premises, it was held that the tenant is not a tenant holding over.²²³⁶ Under the Indian law, the possession of a tenant who has ceased to be a tenant is protected by law. Although he may not have a right to continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy, his possession is juridical,²²³⁷ and the occupation does not become unauthorised or wrongful until a decree for eviction is made.²²³⁸

A suit filed by the landlord for arrears of rent and also decree of ejectment of the tenant holding over month to month and therefore a trespasser from the demised premises by giving 15 days notice under section 106, is legally justified.²²³⁹ On the other hand, a tenant holding over with the implied consent of the landlord as he paid rent and the same was accepted by the landlord, can be evicted only by observing due procedure of law, and a suit filed by the tenant restraining the landlord from evicting him and restoration of his electrical supply would be proper.²²⁴⁰ In Ramratan Pannalal Jaiswal v Rohit Raghunathdas Udasi,²²⁴¹ The issue was whether a compromise recorded in the Court created new tenancy in favour of the sub-tenant? The court held that, section 116 does not necessarily amount to creation of a fresh tenancy agreement. The whole basis of section 116 is that a landlord is entitled to file a suit for ejectment and obtain a decree for possession and, therefore, his acceptance of rent after expiry of lease is an unequivocal act referable to his desire to assent to the tenant continuing possession. Therefore, no new contract can be said to have taken place between the subtenant and the landlord by virtue of compromise between the tenant and the landlord.

In Tarun Kumar Ghose v The Credit Union Co-op Enterprises Ltd,²²⁴² a lease was carried out for a period of twenty one years on two conditions: first, that the lessee was debarred from creating any sub-lease and second, there was no contemplation for renewal and/or extension of the period reserved. Despite this prohibition, the lessee sub-leased a portion of the premises. The lease expired by efflux of time and a suit for recovery of possession was filed. The sub-lessee, contended that even after expiry of time, they continued possession over the premises and the lessor continued to accept rent for the same, therefore there was a right of holding over. The Court held that if the head lease goes either on expiration of period by efflux of time or forfeiture, it annuls all sub-leases or under leases. It also noted that under section 108, the lessee had a write to sub-lease premises only if it was not specifically barred to do the same. As there was such a bar in the lease deed, the claims of the sub-lessee were found misplaced. Holding over, the Court said can result from a bilateral contract between the erstwhile lessor and the erstwhile lessee and mere acceptance of rent cannot be regarded as evidence of fresh tenancy. Where the lessee was continuously paying rent to the lessor for almost 14 years after the determination of the tenancy and the lessor accrete the rent, it would result in a new tenancy by way of holding over. This lease deed executed between the lessor and the lessee being unregistered would be considered as holding over and a month to month tenancy.²²⁴³ A tenant continuing in possession after termination of the lease cannot be dispossessed except by authority of law. If he is dispossessed by force, he can seek back possession under the Specific Relief Act. This is so even where the lessor is the government.²²⁴⁴ Where after determination of the tenancy, the landlord on his own snapped the power supply in order to resume possession extra-judicially by use of force the lessee's juridical possession would be protected and forceful dispossession would be prohibited. He would be entitled to a relief of restoration of power supply as he can be evicted only by following due process of law.²²⁴⁵ He can get an injunction against eviction by the landlord otherwise than in due course of law, under section 38, Specific Relief Act, 1963.²²⁴⁶

The rule enacted in this section was followed before the TP Act, 1882.²²⁴⁷ In the undernoted case,²²⁴⁸ a tenant under a yearly lease was held at the expiry of the term to have become by payment of rent, a tenant from month to month, as the lease was not for an agricultural or manufacturing purpose. A tenant holding over as a tenant from month to month is entitled to notice to quit, of 15 days, expiring with the end of each month of the tenancy, and the day on which each month expires is calculated according to the rule in section 110 of TP Act, 1882.²²⁴⁹ Section 116 is based upon consideration of justice, equity and good conscience and in the absence of anything to the contrary, its provisions are applicable even to cases not governed by the TP Act, 1882. Thus, where a lessee of agricultural land holds over after the expiry of the lease, he holds subject to all the covenants in the expired lease that are applicable to the new situation.²²⁵⁰

The expression “tenants at sufferance” is merely a fiction to distinguish their unlawful possession from that of the possession from that of the trespassers. Possession of “trespassers” is lawful both in its inception and in its continuance, whereas possession of a tenant at sufferance is rightful in its inception. A distinction can be drawn between tenant continuing in possession after determination of lease without the consent of the landlord and a tenant doing so with the consent of the landlord. The former is called a tenant by sufferance and later class of tenants is called tenants holding over or tenant at will. Act of holding over in any event after expiration of term does not necessarily create tenancy of any kind; if the lessee remains in possession after determination of term then for all practical purposes, he becomes tenant at sufferance. Where the heirs of the tenant were permitted to continue in possession of the suit land after the expiration of the lease period for some time upon the payment of rent, but they committed a default in the payment of rent, the continuation of possession by them would be deemed to be without consent of the landlord and they would be held to be the tenants at sufferance.

116. Effect of holding over.—

Possession after the expiry of lease is juridical possession, the possession by a person in possession of the suit premises as tenant at sufferance is protected by law until their eviction by due process of law.²²⁵¹ After retirement, employees or their family members cannot claim their continuance over government allotted accommodation under the principle of holding over as the allotment of government accommodation cannot be termed a lease in favour of an employee. In absence of any other proof establishing their right on accommodation, they can be termed as unauthorised occupants and the authorities can evict them.²²⁵²

[s 116.3] Statutory Tenant

A person remaining in occupation of the premises let to him under a rent control legislation after the determination of or expiry of the period of the tenancy is commonly, though in law not accurately, called “a statutory tenant”. Such a person is not a tenant at all; he has no estate or interest in the premises occupied by him. He has merely the protection of the statute in that he cannot be turned out so long as he pays the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy. His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal; it is not capable of being transferred or assigned, and devolves on his death only in the manner provided by the statute.²²⁵³

[s 116.4] Oral Lease

An oral lease for more than one year, if accompanied by delivery of possession, is valid for one year and the lessee continuing in possession thereafter with the assent of the lessor, becomes a tenant by holding over.²²⁵⁴

[s 116.5] Assents of his Continuing in Possession

The basis of the section is a bilateral contract between the erstwhile landlord and erstwhile tenant.²²⁵⁵ On one side, there should be an offer of taking a new lease, evidenced by the lessee remaining in possession of the demised premises after his term was over. On the other side, there must be a definite consent of the landlord to the continuance of possession by the tenant, expressed by the acceptance of rent or otherwise.²²⁵⁶ A plea under section 116, which is really based on an implied agreement, must be taken in the pleadings by the defendants. They cannot fall back upon such a plea on their failure to prove a defence to actual tenancy rights.²²⁵⁷

The assent of the lessor may be inferred from the acceptance of rent,²²⁵⁸ or a demand for rent;²²⁵⁹ or a suit for rent;²²⁶⁰ or an agreement as to an item in an account for rent;²²⁶¹ or the grant of an invalid lease.²²⁶² But these circumstances merely create a presumption which may be rebutted. The Supreme Court has held that the context in which the provisions for the acceptance of rent find a place in the section, shows that what is contemplated is that the payment of rent should be made at such time and in such manner as to be equivalent to the landlord assenting to the lessee continuing in possession. When the payment is made at a time where there was no question of lessor assenting to the lessee's continuing in possession and neither party treated the payment as implying such assent, the case did not fall under the section.²²⁶³

Where the rent receipts were obtained by the lessee in collusion from a person who had no authority to realise rent on behalf of the landlord after the expiry of the period of the lease, it was held that such payment of rent cannot be held to be acceptance of rent by the lessor from the lessee within the meaning of these terms as used in section 116 of the TP Act, 1882.²²⁶⁴ If an individual chooses to adopt a remedy at the back of the real owner/landlord by depositing the rent in a bank, unilaterally styling himself as a tenant under a particular person, the relationship of tenant holding over cannot be created.²²⁶⁵ Where the tenant offered to renew the previous tenancy on the old terms after his interest under the earlier rent note had ceased, and there was positive assent by the landlord which could be inferred from his acceptance of rent from the tenant as such, it amounts to a clear recognition of tenancy rights asserted by the tenant who paid the rent.²²⁶⁶ Where the landlord, after the expiry of the lease, accepted rent at the old rate for a number of years, he cannot be allowed to charge rent at the enhanced rent provided in the penal clause of the earlier lease.²²⁶⁷ In an Allahabad case, by a document executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, the right to enjoy the pond, an immovable

property for the purpose of pisciculture, was transferred on payment of certain amount annually by specifying the period for which the transfer was made. The document was also signed by both the parties, and was duly registered. After the expiry of the stipulated period, the plaintiff continued in possession of the pond. The document was held to be a lease, and the plaintiff was held to be a lessee from year to year by holding over. He could not be evicted from the pond by the defendant otherwise than by the due process of law on termination of the lease after terminating it by a notice under section 106.²²⁶⁸

The tenancy, created by holding over, is a new tenancy in law by implication. But in order to create a new tenancy, there must be a bilateral act. What section 116 contemplates is that there should be an offer to take a renewed or fresh lease, evidenced by the lessee continuing in possession. Acceptance of rent, unless explained on any other hypothesis, may be evidence of assent, depending upon the facts of each case, but it is not the only evidence or basis. Where the contract of tenancy has expired, but the tenant continues in possession by way of statutory protection, it cannot be said to be an offer on the part of the tenant to take a renewed or fresh lease, simply by continuing in possession. In such a case, while the statutory tenancy continues, acceptance of rent by the landlord by itself will not afford ground for holding that he assented to a new tenancy. In such a situation, the mere payment and acceptance of rent by themselves cannot be taken as evidence of a new lease arrangement. There must be independent evidence of assent by the landlord.²²⁶⁹ Thus, the lessor may show that he accepted the rent in ignorance of the fact that the tenancy had terminated.²²⁷⁰ The acceptance of the rent long before the expiry of the lease raises a presumption, but is not conclusive of the assent on the part of the lease.²²⁷¹ No implication of a holding over arises, therefore, in the case of a repudiating tenant,²²⁷² and if the tenant holds over against the wish of the landlord, he is liable for damages as a trespasser.²²⁷³

The assent of the lessor cannot be inferred merely from his delay in taking steps to evict the lessee;²²⁷⁴ but in case where the tenant retained possession for 11 years after the expiration of the lease, the court inferred that there was a tenancy by holding over.²²⁷⁵ The mere fact of service of notice to quit on a tenant who continues in occupation is not an assent or recognition of the tenancy.²²⁷⁶ In a case which went upto the Supreme Court, municipal land was leased and a right to renewal of the lease was granted, subject to the condition that the lessee should pay upset price and increased rent within a specified period. The lessee did not comply with this condition, and thus did not obtain renewal of the lease. It was held that even though the rent which was paid at the old rate by the lessee was accepted by the Municipal Commissioner, the lessee could not be deemed to be a tenant holding over, but was only a tenant by sufferance, and could be evicted without notice.²²⁷⁷

After expiry of the lease, the successor in interest of the original tenant continued in possession. The landlord's successor in interest had assented to such possession by acceptance of rent offered by the tenant. In these circumstances, the burden of proving that the relationship of landlord and lessee had ceased to exist between the parties, lay on the landlord.²²⁷⁸

Mere delay in taking steps for evicting the tenant on expiry of a lease for a fixed term cannot lead to inference that the lessee assented to continuance of the tenant. Serving of notice to quit by the landlord cannot also lead to a presumption of holding over in such circumstances.²²⁷⁹ In a Gujarat case, the lease was initially for one year, but the lessee continued as a tenant because of the rent control Act. Subsequently, the lessee committed a breach of terms of the lease deed which fell under one of the grounds of eviction provided in the rent control Act. The lessor served on the tenant a notice terminating the tenancy, describing the tenant as a "monthly tenant". It was held that merely because the lessor did not take any action for recovery of possession against the lessee soon after the expiry of the lease and, in fact, accepted rent, could not be indicative of his accepting the tenant as contractual tenant by holding over, in view of rent control legislation. Further, a fresh tenancy could not arise merely because he was described as a "tenant" in the notice.²²⁸⁰

If the tenancy rights are protected by special enactment, the mere acceptance of rent after expiry of the lease would not necessarily lead to the conclusion that there was an implied agreement to continue the original tenancy.²²⁸¹

Mere acceptance of an amount equivalent to rent by the landlord from a tenant in possession after termination of the lease (whether by efflux of time or notice to quit) cannot, in itself, be regarded as creating a new agreement of “tenancy”. This is especially so in the case of a statutory tenant.²²⁸²

The act of an employer in giving some time to an ex-employee to vacate the quarters is for the convenience of the employee, and cannot be taken to mean that the employer agreed to the holding over by the tenant. Ordinarily, in practice, employers would give some time to their ex-employees to vacate the quarters in the latter’s possession.²²⁸³ A tenant acting on his own, surrendered the lease premises, but did not hand over possession of two rooms. It was held that he was only a licensee, and not a statutory tenant.²²⁸⁴ In a Calcutta case, after the passing of an ejectment decree against the tenant, the tenant approached the solicitors of the landlord for granting the tenant some time to vacate the premises. He had, in the meantime, offered to pay arrears of rent and mesne profits. Upon instructions from the landlord, the landlord’s solicitors did not take any step in the execution case, the object being to enable the tenant to deliver possession amicably. In the meantime, the tenant went on paying the mesne profits. It was held that the consideration shown by the landlord could not in the circumstances be interpreted as evidence of an agreement to create a new tenancy in favour of the tenant.²²⁸⁵

Where under such Acts as the Rent Control Act, a tenancy is converted into a statutory tenancy, the mere acceptance of rent is attributable to such statutory tenancy, and not to the tenancy contemplated by this section.²²⁸⁶ The mere acceptance of rent is not enough, so, if rent is accepted pending appeal in an eviction suit, there is no holding over.²²⁸⁷ But if it is tendered as rent and accepted, there is, even though it is accepted “without prejudice”, for the landlord cannot appropriate it contrary to the wishes of the tenant.²²⁸⁸

As the basis of the section is an implied contract, the mere acceptance of the rent by a particular officer will not suffice where the local authority can only enter into a contract after following certain formalities.²²⁸⁹ If there are several lessors who are tenants in common, payment to some of their share of the rent will not constitute a tenancy as regards the others, who will, therefore, be entitled to evict without notice to quit.²²⁹⁰ and on the other hand, if there are several lessee and some only hold over without the consent of the others, those not holding over cannot be made liable for rent.²²⁹¹ Again as there is no privity of contract between the lessor and the heirs of the lessee, the heirs, if they continue in possession after the expiry of the lease, cannot become tenants by holding over. The new tenancy must be created by the consent of both sides; otherwise the heirs are trespassers.²²⁹² For the same reason, section 116 cannot apply to a lease for life. When the heirs of a lessee for life paid rent to a mortgagee of the lessor in order to support their claim that the leasehold was hereditary, and the lessor subsequently refused to accept rent except in the name of the lessee, the Privy Council held that there was no implied assent to the continuance of the tenancy.²²⁹³ Unless there is a transfer of leasehold interest, no priority is created between the lessee and the transferee. The transferee cannot plead want of notice from the lessor, and no question of holding over arises.²²⁹⁴ Similarly, an assignee of a lessee cannot invoke this section.²²⁹⁵

[s 116.6] Acceptance of Rent for Pre-termination Period

Section 116 provides that it is only acceptance of rent by way of assenting to the lessee’s continuing in possession as a lessee, that constitutes holding over. Acceptance of rent for a period prior to termination would not, by itself, lead to any inference of the material animus on the part of the lessor assenting to the lessee's continuing in possession as a lessee, because what was being accepted by the lessor was an amount equivalent to rent for a period when he had no right to evict the lessee. A new tenancy is not created between the parties, by "holding over" in such circumstances.²²⁹⁶

116. Effect of holding over.—

[s 116.7] Agreement to the Contrary

An agreement to the contrary is an agreement which settles the terms of the holding over.²²⁹⁷ If there is such an express agreement, it will determine the duration and the terms of the renewed lease. In the Privy Council case last cited,²²⁹⁸ the expression "agreement to the contrary" was used in a different sense. The heirs of a lease for life continued in possession and paid rent which the lessor accepted, giving receipts in the name of the original lessee. But when the heir demanded receipts in their own names, the lessor refused to accept the rent. The Privy Council said that this was an agreement to the contrary which prevented the application of the section, meaning that the refusal to give a receipt in the name of the heir rebutted the presumption of assent to the holding over. Their Lordship's judgment referred to the principle of the section, for the lease being a lease for the life of the lessee, there could be no question of holding over. When the lease had expired and the lessee continued in possession under an express agreement to do so till the lessee reached a final decision as to the passing of a fresh lease, there is no holding over by the lessee.²²⁹⁹

For the purposes of section 116 of the TP Act, 1882, it is not necessary that there may be an agreement to the contrary subsequent to the termination of the original lease regarding the period of notice required under section 106 of the TP Act, 1882. The contract could be either in the original lease or may be arrived at between the parties after the determination of the original lease.²³⁰⁰

[s 116.8] Duration

The question whether there is an implied assent is a question of fact.²³⁰¹ If there is an assent by implication, the lease is renewed from month to month or year to year according to section 106.²³⁰² An agricultural tenant who holds over is a tenant from year to year,²³⁰³ and so is a tenant who holds over for manufacturing purposes.²³⁰⁴ Where a person holds over under an unregistered lease for a manufacturing purpose for one year, but continues in possession by paying monthly rent, the holding over must be held as a tenancy from month to month.²³⁰⁵ The lessee of premises for purposes other than agricultural or manufacture holds over as a monthly tenant.²³⁰⁶ It could not be contended that on the expiry of the lease by efflux of time, the power to resume could not be exercised because the lease was not in operation, and the government could not fall back upon its terms. A contrary view would mean that the lease becomes perpetual which could never be so.²³⁰⁷ An order of the court, postponing the execution of a decree for delivery of possession by a period of four months, does not protect the tenancy rights of the judgment debtor. If the latter continues in possession despite the order of the court, he has no statutory protection during that period.²³⁰⁸ A lessee who holds over after the expiry of one year becomes a monthly tenant.²³⁰⁹ In the case of a lease for building purposes, the tenancy created by holding over under section 116 is a monthly tenancy terminable by either party by 30 days' notice.²³¹⁰ When section 116 applies, presumption that by reserving a monthly rent the tenancy was from month to month, has no relevance. The mere fact that the rent was being paid not according to the month of tenancy, but according to the calendar month, could not convert the month of tenancy into one from the first of the calendar month.²³¹¹

[s 116.9] Terms of holding over

If there is an agreement fixing the terms of the new lease, the implied tenancy is in English law subject to such of the terms of the old lease as are applicable to a yearly or monthly tenancy.²³¹² In Digby v Atkinson,²³¹³ Lord Ellenborough said: Where the tenant holds over after the expiration of the term, he impliedly holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to his new situation. This has been explained in *Hyatt v Griffiths*²³¹⁴ to mean not merely the terms which are necessarily incident to a yearly or a monthly tenancy, but the terms, which may be incident to such a tenure. This rule has been followed in Indian cases, for the word "renewed" shows that there is no new contract of tenancy.²³¹⁵ But in Kaikhusrroo v Bai Jarbai,²³¹⁶ the Federal Court held that a new tenancy was created, the terms of which by implication would be the same as the one which had expired, this judgment has been approved by the Supreme Court.²³¹⁷ The lessee holding over with the assent of the lessor acquires an interest he can assign and which the lessor can determine by a notice to quit.²³¹⁸ The renewal of a lease within the meaning of the section is not continuance of the original lease.²³¹⁹

116. Effect of holding over.—

The time as to notice contained in an expired lease should not be held to be a term of the tenancy arising by holding over under this section.²³²⁰ It has, however, been held that that an arbitration clause in the expired lease would not be applicable to the implied tenancy created by the tenant holding over.²³²¹

[s 116.10] Legal Representative

This term refers to a person who occupies the same position as the lessor, it would include an assignee of the lessor, but not an underlessee.²³²²

[s 116.11] Underlessee

The rule as to holding over applies equally to a sublessee. If a sublessee holds over, he is a tenant at sufferance until the tenancy is renewed by the assent of the lessee.

[s 116.12] Mortgage by Tenant Holding Over

A mortgagee is entitled for the purposes of his security to a renewed lease under section 71. It has, therefore, been held that a tenant holding over with the assent of his landlord can affect a valid mortgage of the leasehold by deposit of the lease deed, although the term of the original letting has expired.²³²³

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 5 Of Leases of Immovable Property

Sections 105–117, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

117. Exemption of leases for agricultural purposes.—

None of the provisions of this Chapter apply to leases for agricultural purposes, except in so far as the State Government ²³²⁴ may by notification published in the official Gazette declare all or any of such provisions to be so applicable in the case of all or any of such leases together with, or subject to, those of the local law, if any, for the time being in force.

Such notification shall not take effect until the expiry of six months from the date of its publication.

[s 117.1] Agricultural Leases

In view of the specific provision of section 117 excluding agricultural lease from the operation of the TP Act, 1882, the principles of section 107 cannot be extended to an agricultural lease. ²³²⁵

These leases are exempted from the operation of this chapter because the rights of the parties are regulated by usages which have to a great extent been embodied in local Acts. Thus, in tenancies governed by the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1869, a reasonable notice to quit, not necessarily determining the tenancy at the end of the year, is sufficient. ²³²⁶ The legislature has abstained from making the sections of this chapter apply proprio vigore for the fear of interfering with settled usage. ²³²⁷ But in the absence of any local Act, or custom, or any special reason to the contrary, the principles of English law as reproduced by TP Act, 1882 are applied to agricultural leases; ²³²⁸ and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, such leases could be deemed to be from year to year. ²³²⁹ Thus, the principles of section 108(c) as to quiet enjoyment; ²³³⁰ section 108(e) ²³³¹ and of section 108(j) as to assignment; ²³³² of section 111(f) ²³³³ and section 111(g) as to forfeiture; ²³³⁴ but not the requirement contained therein of a notice in writing; ²³³⁵ of section 114 as to relief against forfeiture; ²³³⁶ and of section 116 as to holding over ²³³⁷ have been held to apply. But an agricultural tenant erecting buildings on the land does not necessarily incur a forfeiture. ²³³⁸

[s 117.2] Oral Leases Valid

Section 107 does not apply to agricultural leases. An agricultural lease may, therefore, be made orally. ²³³⁹ If made in writing, an agricultural lease would require registration under section 17(l)(d) of the Registration Act, if from year to year or for any term exceeding a year or reserving a yearly rent. ²³⁴⁰ In a later case from Punjab, it was held that agricultural leases are still admissible in evidence even if they are unregistered. ²³⁴¹

117. Exemption of leases for agricultural purposes.—

Consequently A lease deed even though not registered would still be admissible,²³⁴² as oral settlement of agricultural land requires the vesting of title through the declaration based on unregistered hukumnamas.²³⁴³

[s 117.3] Agricultural Lease in Writing Without Possession

A valid lease of agricultural land can be made by a registered deed, though it may not be accompanied by delivery of possession.²³⁴⁴

[s 117.4] Agricultural Purposes

The report of the Special Committee of 11 March 1881 seems to exclude gardens from agricultural purposes, and under the Agra Tenancy Act (Uttar Pradesh Act 2 of 1901), the planting of a grove of trees was not an agricultural purpose.²³⁴⁵ The Madras High Court at one time seemed to limit the phrase to cereals and excluded a coffee garden;²³⁴⁶ but subsequently admitted that the same was wrong and extended the meaning to the tillage of soil in its widest sense, including not only field cultivation, but also garden cultivation for the purpose of procuring vegetables and fruit as food for man or beast, and other products for human consumption by way of luxury if not an article of diet, ie, a betel garden;²³⁴⁷ and finally included arboriculture such as a casuarina plantation.²³⁴⁸ The Calcutta High Court has said that “agricultural” is a term of wider import than cultivation and includes horticulture in agricultural purposes,²³⁴⁹ but a lease merely for the purpose of gathering fruit from trees on the land is not for horticultural purposes.²³⁵⁰ Rearing of tea plants is an agricultural purpose. Where the bulk of land leased was used for cultivation of tea plants and only a small portion of it is occupied by a factory for manufacturing tea, this lease is agricultural,²³⁵¹ but the fact that a portion of a holding let for residential purposes is planted with fruit trees does not make it agricultural, and the TP Act, 1882 applies.²³⁵² The Privy Council has held that the creation of a tenancy for the purpose of the tenant realising the rent from cultivators is not a tenancy exempted from the provisions of this chapter.²³⁵³ So also, a lease mainly executed with the object of making an arrangement for collecting rents and not with the object of cultivating, is not a lease for agricultural purposes.²³⁵⁴

It is not the actual use of the land, but the original purpose of the tenancy which determines the question of applicability or otherwise of the TP Act, 1882.²³⁵⁵ So when the agricultural lease is surrendered, and the land is released for a non-agricultural purpose, the new lease is governed by the TP Act, 1882.²³⁵⁶ But a putni lease is not one for an agricultural purpose merely because the lessee sublets to cultivators, for he could use the land for other purposes also.²³⁵⁷ A permanent lease of a whole village was held not to be a lease for agricultural purposes and so exempt from the provisions of section 108 because there were waste lands in the village, for the primary object of the lessor was to secure his property right, and not to utilize the land for agriculture.²³⁵⁸ But a lease of a village for the purpose of bringing its lands under cultivation is, of course, a lease for agricultural purposes,²³⁵⁹ and so is a reclamation lease for jungle clearance to make the land arable.²³⁶⁰ A lease of land to an agriculturist, not for a homestead, but for a shop, is governed by the TP Act, 1882, and he is not protected from eviction by section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.²³⁶¹ A sublease of homestead land for residential purposes, granted after the TP Act, 1882 but before the Bengal Tenancy Act, is governed by the Act and the sublessee cannot be evicted without notice to quit.²³⁶² On the other hand, if the land is agricultural land, a liberal interpretation should be given to this section, so that the lessee should not be deprived of the privileges conferred on agriculturists by the Bengal Act.²³⁶³ The cultivation of indigo is an agricultural purpose,²³⁶⁴ and the Privy Council have held that the building of an indigo factory on a portion of an indigo plantation may be in conformity with the agricultural purpose.²³⁶⁵ A lease of a tank used for the preservation and rearing of fish is not a lease for an agricultural purpose²³⁶⁶ even though some land on the banks is included.²³⁶⁷ But a lease of a tank with a considerable area of pasture land is for an agricultural purpose,²³⁶⁸ because a lease of land for grazing is for an agricultural purpose, as grazing is ancillary to cultivation.²³⁶⁹

Where land as well as a tank within the land forms part of the lease, the true test as to whether the lease is for agricultural purposes, is to find out whether the primary object was lease of the tank or whether the primary object was lease of the land surrounding the tank for agriculture, alongwith the tank within the land. The area of the surrounding land is an important factor, as also the subsequent conduct of the plaintiff in cultivating the land. On the facts, it was held in a Patna case that the areas were such that agricultural lease of the embankment could be granted, and that the tank was an appurtenance of the embankment. Further, from the evidence, it was clear that the embankment was used for cultivation by the lessee, and that she had been appropriating the fish of the tank. Hence, the lease was for agricultural purposes.²³⁷⁰

[s 117.5] Local Law

By local tenancy legislations, the provisions of this chapter have been made applicable to agricultural leases so far as its provisions are not inconsistent with such legislation in many areas.²³⁷¹ In case of inconsistency between the Tamil Nadu Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (Act 18 of 1960 and the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Tamil Nadu Rent Control Act shall prevail over the Transfer of Property Act and shall have overriding effect.²³⁷² Similarly, the provisions of the U.P Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act, 1972 (U.P Act No. 13 of 1972) will prevail over the provisions of the TP Act, 1882 as it is a special law.²³⁷³

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 6 Of Exchanges

Sections 118–121, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

118. “Exchange” defined.—

When two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, neither thing or both things being money only, the transaction is called an “exchange”.

A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.

[s 118.1] Definition

“Exchange” means to part with, give or transfer for an equivalent.¹ Under section 118, a transaction is exchange when two persons mutually transfer the ownership of one thing for the ownership of another, provided it is not an exchange of money only. A transfer of property in completion of an exchange can be made only in the manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale.² For a valid exchange, there must be a physical delivery of the property to the parties and each party to the exchange has the rights and is subject to the liability of the seller as to that which he gives and also has the rights and liabilities of the buyer as to that which he takes.³ When we consider exchange of immovable property falling within the definition of “exchange” in section 118, both the properties should be situated in India.⁴

The definition of exchange is not limited to immovable property. An exchange is, therefore, not only exchange of land, but also barter of goods. If one of the items transferred is money, the transaction is not an exchange, but a sale.⁵ An exchange of one stamp for another is not a sale.⁶ A sale should always be for a price, but in the case of an exchange, the transfer of ownership of one thing is not one for the price paid or promised, but for the transfer of another thing in return.⁷ So, a transaction in which the consideration for the transfer of certain properties are shares in a limited company, is an exchange.⁸

The ownership of one party must be exclusive of the ownership of the other, so that a partition is not an exchange.⁹ However, if A mortgages X and Y to B and then transfers the equity of redemption in X to B in consideration of B transferring his mortgagee's right in Y to A, the transaction is an exchange.¹⁰ Again, if A and B are joint owners of X, and B the sole owner of Y, and A transfers his shares in X to B in consideration of B transferring Y to A, the transaction has been held to be an exchange.¹¹ This would seem to be a partition of the shares in X followed by an exchange of the divided share for Y.

A transfer by a husband to a wife in discharge of her claim to maintenance is not an exchange, as the wife transfers no ownership in anything.¹² Similarly, if the lessee surrenders a lease, and the landlord grants him a lease of another property, the transaction is not an exchange.¹³ There cannot, of course, be an exchange if the parties are not the same;¹⁴ but there can be an exchange where the transferor of a property receives another property benami in the name of his wife.¹⁵ This law may not hold good after promulgation of the Benami Transaction (Prohibition) Act, 1988. A document whereby one decree is set off against another and the balance made up by a transfer of land, is not an exchange, for there is no mutual transfer of two things.¹⁶ The usual type of family settlement by which each party takes a share by virtue of an antecedent title which is admitted, does not involve an alienation, and does not fall within the definition of an exchange.¹⁷ However, provided there is a reciprocal transfer of two things, it does not matter that money is paid for bringing about an equality of exchange, for the section requires that neither thing shall be money only.¹⁸

ILLUSTRATION

A transferred to B a house worth ₹1,50,000 and B transferred to A a field worth ₹1,00,000 and ₹50,000 in cash. The transaction is an exchange and therefore not subject to pre-emption as a sale.¹⁹

Where parties decided to transfer their rights in the respective plots situated in two villages, apparently for convenience in cultivating; it is an exchange, and the mere mention of sale consideration in the sale deed does not make it a sale.²⁰ Where a document was executed to correct the wrong entries made in the survey records, stating the respective ownership of the lands, the document does not constitute an exchange and would be admissible in evidence even if it is unregistered.²¹

When the parties to a document agree to rectify a “mistake” and call it a rectification under section 26, the document cannot be read as an “agreement to exchange”. It can be only read as a rectification deed, which could have been done only by a settlor.²²

[s 118.2] Mode of Transfer

The mode of transfer is the same as in the case of sales. Therefore, in the case of immovable property, the rules in section 54 as to registration or delivery of possession apply.²³ Thus, an exchange of tangible immovable property of the value of ₹100 and upward, if not made by a registered instrument, is invalid.²⁴ In the case of immovable property, an exchange is usually made by mutual conveyances,²⁵ but it is not necessary that there should be two separate deeds.²⁶ If the properties exchanged are movable, it is believed that this section and section 120 apply, as also the rules contained in the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, following the maxim permutatio est vicina emptio.²⁷

An oral exchange is not permissible in view of the amendment of section 49 of the Registration Act brought about by Amending Act no 21 of 1929, which by inserting in section 49 of the Registration Act the words “or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882” has made it clear that the documents of which registration is necessary under the TP Act, 1882, but not under the Registration Act, fall within the scope of section 49 of the Registration Act, and if not registered, are not admissible as evidence of any transaction affecting any immovable property comprised therein, and do not affect any such immovable property. Transactions by exchange are required to be affected through registered instrument, if it was to affect any immovable property worth ₹100 or more,²⁸ but where consideration was paid by one to another as the properties exchanged were not of equal value, it would not be an exchange but a sale.²⁹

However, an oral exchange of land was permissible in Tehri Kullu, which was in the state of Punjab in 1963, because section 118 of the TP Act, 1882 was not made applicable to the state of Punjab.³⁰

[s 118.3] Part Performance

If the parties have taken possession without a registered conveyance, in view of the amendment made to section 53A by the Registration and Other Related Laws (Amendment) Act, 2001 which has come into force with effect from 24 September 2001, the words “the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or,” as appearing in para 4 of section 53A has been omitted. Simultaneously, sections 17 and 49 of the Registration Act, 1908 have been amended making it clear that unless the document containing contract to transfer for consideration any immovable property for the purpose of section 53A is registered, it shall not have effect for the purposes of section 53A.³¹

[s 118.4] Section 23, Contract Act

A deed of exchange executed with the intention of compromising some criminal cases pending between the parties is hit by section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 and accordingly, is not a valid contract.³²

CHAPTER 6 Of Exchanges

Sections 118–121, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

³³[119. Right of party deprived of thing received in exchange.—

If any party to an exchange or any person claiming through or under such party is by reason of any defect in the title of the other party deprived of the thing or any part of the thing received by him in exchange, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the terms of the exchange, such other party is liable to him or any person claiming through or under him for loss caused thereby, or at the option of the person so deprived, for the return of the thing transferred, if still in the possession of such other party or his legal representative or a transferee from him without consideration.]

[s 119.1] Amendment

This section was amended by the amending Act 20 of 1929.

The section provides not only for the rights of the party deprived, but of his transferee. The rights are also made subject to a contrary intention apparent from the terms of the exchange. The party deprived cannot get back the thing transferred by him, unless it is still in the possession of the other party.

[s 119.2] Undertaking as to Title

This section implies in the case of an exchange, an implied undertaking as to title, similar to that in section 14 of the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930, as to movables, or in the case of a sale of land in section 55(2) of the TP Act, 1882.

According to the Orissa High Court, the principle of section 119 also applies where, instead of subsequent deprivation of the property transferred, there is non-receipt of the property stipulated as the property to be received in exchange. It impliedly follows from section 119 that when a party to an exchange has failed to obtain possession of the property which he is entitled to receive in exchange, then also he is entitled to his option for the return of property transferred by him, if the property is still in possession of the other party, or his legal representative, or a transferee from him without consideration.³⁴ Where the appellant had exchanged his lands with the first respondent, and had suffered a decree of two-third share of the monors who had admittedly taken possession to an extent of 52 kanals 10 marlas from the appellant, it was held that the appellant was deprived of that property, and the first respondent was liable to return to the appellant, land to the extent of 52

kanals 10 marlas.³⁵

[s 119.3] Remedy

The remedy is similar to that for breach of an undertaking as to title under section 14 of the Indian Sale of Goods Act, or that for breach of an implied covenant for title under section 55(2) of TP Act, 1882. The party aggrieved may either rescind, or claim compensation. If he rescinds, he must, no doubt, surrender any advantage he receives. If he is evicted from a portion of the land, he is entitled to recover the whole of the land that he gave, but he cannot retain the portion from which he has not been evicted.³⁶ But it does not appear that he can both rescind, and claim damages other than restitutio ad integrum by re-entry.³⁷ The right may be exercised by a person claiming under the party aggrieved. However, the right of re-entry cannot be exercised if the land is in the possession of a transferee for consideration.

In Ramsajivan v Lalji Ram,³⁸ an exchange of land took place in 1941 between A and the predecessor of B, but B sold the same illegally to a third party in 1988. It was held that the purchaser of the land would not have any locus standi to say anything about the exchange nor that of the title of A.

The principle of the section has been applied in Punjab,³⁹ and also in a Madras case⁴⁰ where the exchange was not completed at all.

It impliedly follows from the section that when a party to an exchange has failed to obtain possession of the property which he was entitled to receive in exchange, then also he is entitled at his option for the return of the property transferred by him.⁴¹

[s 119.4] Contrary Intention

The exchange may, however, be subject to express covenants as to title, and these would exclude the covenant implied by this section. Thus, in Subramania Ayyar v Saminatha,⁴² the covenant in the deeds of exchange was: If any claim or dispute arises, I hereby bind myself to settle it. If I do not get (the dispute) settled, I hereby bind myself to pay an amount not exceeding ₹4,014-8-6 at the rate of ₹1-4-0 per kuli of land for lands which go out of your possession. This was held to exclude the plaintiff's right under this section to recover the land he had transferred to the defendant. However, a clause that "neither party has after to-day any claim against the other contrary to the exchange; whatever proprietary rights each party had in his own land will be owned by the other party"—is not a contract to the contrary, but merely a recital of the effect of the exchange.⁴³

[s 119.5] Limitation

Under the Limitation Act, 1963, the period would be three years under Article 55. If the suit is to recover the land transferred, it is one for specific performance when it is founded on an express covenant to return, and Article 113 had been held to apply.⁴⁴ This corresponds to Article 54 of the Act of 1963, and the period is the same (three years). If the suit is to recover the land under the implied covenant, Article 143 had been held to apply;⁴⁵ the period is the same (12 years) under Article 66 of the Act of 1963, which corresponds to Article 143.

[s 119.6] Inapplicable

There is, of course, no right to the return of land, if there has been no exchange. There cannot be a triangular exchange.⁴⁶ Thus, if A transfers to B and B to C and C to A, then A could not, if evicted, require B to return the land. So also, if a lessee voluntarily surrenders his lease, and then receives another lease, there is no exchange, and if he is deprived of his leasehold, he cannot claim the return of the lease he has voluntarily

surrendered.⁴⁷

The sine qua non of the applicability of section 119 is, a party to the exchange losing possession by virtue of the defect in title of the property or thing received in exchange. If somebody forcibly dispossesses a person who has taken a property or thing in exchange by him, he cannot, by invoking section 119, seek recovery of the property or thing, which he gave in exchange to the other party.⁴⁸

CHAPTER 6 Of Exchanges

Sections 118–121, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

120. Rights and liabilities of parties.—

Save as otherwise provided in this Chapter, each party has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a seller as to that which he gives, and has the rights and is subject to the liabilities of a buyer as to that which he takes.

Under this section, the parties to an exchange, each have the rights and liabilities of a seller of the thing given, and a buyer of the thing taken. The rules in section 55 apply in the case of an exchange of land, and it is believed that the rules in the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, apply in the case of a barter of goods. However, these rules only apply so far as they are applicable. An exchange does not involve payment of a price, and so there can be no charge for an unpaid price; and when the exchange is not complete, there is no charge on the land given for the value of the land agreed to be taken.⁴⁹ Even when money is paid for equality of exchange, there is no charge for the money so paid.⁵⁰ Again, a right of pre-emption which arises out of a sale, does not necessarily arise out of an exchange.⁵¹

In the case of goods, the rule in the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930, that property passes on delivery of ascertained goods was applied in the case of an agreement to exchange cotton. A dealer delivered cotton to a press under an agreement, implied by custom, to receive in exchange an equivalent amount of cleaned and pressed cotton. It was held that property passed on delivery, and that when the cotton was destroyed by fire, the press had to bear the loss.⁵²

This section does not exclude the rule of estoppel enacted in section 43. When A had only half the property and he purported to give the whole of it to B in exchange, and subsequently purchased the other half, B was entitled to the other half also, as soon as A perfected the title.⁵³

On an exchange of money, each party thereby warrants the genuineness of the money given by him.

[s 121.1] Exchange of Money

Money here includes not only coins, but also currency notes.⁵⁴

In an exchange of money, there is no occasion for a warranty of title, as the title to money passes by mere delivery to one who receives it honestly. There is, however, an implied warranty as to the genuineness of the money. A false coin, or a forged currency note would involve total failure of consideration. This has been held with reference to a forged banknote,⁵⁵ a worthless cheque,⁵⁶ and stolen goods.⁵⁷

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

122. “Gift” defined.—

“Gift” is the transfer of certain existing movable or immovable property made voluntarily and without consideration, by one person, called the donor, to another, called the donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee.

Acceptance when to be made.—Such acceptance must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving.

If the donee dies before acceptance, the gift is void.

[s 122.1] Scope

For understanding the provisions on “Gift” contained in chapter VII of the TP Act, 1882, all the sections contained therein which are inter-related have to be read conjointly to understand their import and effect.¹ Section 122 of the TP Act, 1882 postulates that a gift is a transfer of certain existing movable or immovable property made voluntary, and without consideration by one person called the donor, to another, called a donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee. The essential elements of a gift are—

- (a) the absence of consideration;
- (b) the donor;
- (c) the donee;
- (d) to be voluntary;
- (e) the subject-matter;
- (f) the transfer; and
- (g) the acceptance.

The concept of gift is diametrically opposed to any presence of consideration or compensation. There may be certain transactions of transfer which may not amount to a gift within the meaning of section 122, but would be regarded as gifts for the purpose of subjecting such transfers to the levy of tax under the Gift Tax Act, 1958 because of the definition of gift contained in section 2(xii) read with section 4 of the Gift Tax Act.² Bequest under a will is not a transfer.³ Therefore, a will cannot be a gift since gift, by its definition under this section, is a transfer of property.

The incidents of a gift between two Mohamedans are governed by the Mahomedan Law, and not by the TP Act, 1882.⁴ The special features of that law are untouched by the provisions of this chapter.⁵ Under Mahomedan Law, a gift requires declaration; acceptance and; delivery of such possession of the subject of the gift by the donor to the donee as the subject of the gift is susceptible of.⁶ Writing is not essential. If evidenced in writing, such writing does not require registration or attestation.⁷

A deed of gift properly conveyed, transferred and exchanged as a consequence of a family arrangement is a deed of gift, even though the donee agrees to re-convey the property for a specified sum if called upon by the donor to do so within 10 years.⁸ Pasupu Kumkuma means a gift, a settlement or assignment of land to a daughter. The Andhra Pradesh High Court in *Allam Gangadhara Rao v Gollapallo Ganga Rao*⁹ held that since the father is under an obligation to maintain a daughter under section 3 of the Adoptions and Maintenance Act, which includes the reasonable expenses of her marriage and, therefore, any property given to her for or at the time of marriage, is not gift under section 122. This decision was followed in *Bhubaneswara Nayak Santoshrai v The Special Tehsildar, Land Reforms Tekkali, Srikakulam District*¹⁰ and P Buchi Reddy v Ananthula Sudhakar.¹¹ However, a Special Bench of the High Court in *Gandevalla Jayaram Reddy v Mokkal Padmavathamma*¹² overruling Bhubaneswara Nayak Santoshrai held that Pasupu Kumkuma creates a right in immovable property in one and the right of the owner thereof shall be extinguished, and hence is a "gift" requiring registration. It further observed that the daughters save and except under a customary or statutory right, cannot have any share in a joint family property.

A deed of relinquishment is in the nature of a deed of gift. A deed of relinquishment or a deed of gift, differs from a deed of partition in which it is not possible to hold that the partition is valid in respect of some properties, and not in respect of others because right of persons being partitioned are adjusted with reference to the properties subject to partition as a whole.¹³ Relinquishment of share by a tenant-in-common in favour of another amounts to a gift.¹⁴ Dan literally means a gift, and for all material purposes is governed by the TP Act, 1882.¹⁵ A gift of immovable property by a Hindu by way of sankalpa would not be a valid gift. It cannot divest the donor of the proprietary rights or clothe the donee with title without a registered instrument.¹⁶ A licence is not a gift under the Act as it constitutes a permissible use of property given out of love and affection and the descendants of original beneficiary cannot take benefit of magnanimity of original grantor.¹⁷

Unlike a gift, a will need not be necessarily registered.⁵ But mere registration of a "will" will not render the document to be a settlement or a gift. This is the only reliable test for distinguishing, to find out whether it transferred any interest in present in favour of the settlees or it intended to transfer interest in favour of the settlors only on the death of the settlors. In former case, it is a gift, while it is a will in the latter case.¹⁸ To determine whether it is a settlement deed or gift or a Will, the tests are (i) the name by which the document is styled; (ii) registration of the document; (iii) reservation of life estate in favour of executant; (iv) express words as to when possession passed; (v) use of the present or future tense in the document; and (vi) reservation of the power of revocation.¹⁹

[s 122.2] Voluntarily and Without Consideration²⁰

The essence of a gift is that it is a gratuitous transfer. Blackstone says: "Gifts are always gratuitous, grants are upon some consideration or equivalent".²¹ A gift does not contemplate payment of any consideration or compensation as it is a voluntary transfer of property without consideration; it is a parting by the owner of property without any pecuniary benefit. In a gift deed, the intention of the executor must be clear for the gift to be valid as a mere purchase of property in the name of someone, will not create a valid gift in his favour, without any other evidence supporting the said claim.²² Money spent for purchase of stamp duty does not amount to consideration. Where in a transfer document, bhumidari lands were said to be gifted to the donee with a mention of Rs 40,000/ as the valuation of the land and not the consideration for the purposes of payment of stamp duty, the transaction would be a gift and not a sale.²³

122. "Gift" defined.—

The word "voluntarily" in the section is used in its popular sense denoting the exercise of unfettered will, and not in its technical sense of "without consideration".²⁴ For proving that the deed was executed with free and voluntary consent of the donor it must be proved that the physical act of signing the deed coincided with the animus (mental act) ie, an intention to execute the gift.²⁵ The principles laid down in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, relating to free consent would apply in determining whether a gift is voluntary. This follows from section 4 of the TP Act, 1882. A bare allegation of gift being concocted or the non-appearance of witnesses would not indicate non execution of gift,²⁶ more so when the executants himself admits its execution.²⁷ In Subhas Chandra v Ganga Prosad,²⁸ the Supreme Court recognised this when it observed that it was well-settled that the law as to undue influence was the same in the case of a gift inter vivos, as in the case of a contract. In cases of fraud, undue influence and coercion, the parties pleading it must set forth full particulars, and the case can only be decided on the particulars as laid. There can be departure from them in evidence.²⁹ Merely because the parties were nearly related to each other, no presumption of undue influence can arise.³⁰ Thus a gift by the donor to his wife,³¹ or by the grandmother to the grandson³² in absence of undue influence would be valid. A gift by a person to his lawyer's wife is not liable to be set aside, if the gift is spontaneous.³³

In a subsequent case also, it has been held that the law as to undue influence in the case of gifts is the same as that in case of contracts, ie, section 16(1), Indian Contract Act, 1872. More than mere "influence" must be proved to render the influence "undue". It is not sufficient to prove merely a relationship wherein one person is in a position to dominate the will of the other. It must also be proved that the transaction was unconscionable.³⁴ Where the evidence showed that the executant, a law graduate and capable to take care of herself, executed a gift deed, mere fact of her old age and frequent hospitalization would not shift the burden on the donee to prove absence of fraud and undue influence,³⁵ but where a very old man, with weak eye sight, sues for a declaration and possession of a land on the ground that the gift deed executed by him was not a voluntary act and circumstances show that the donee was in a position to dominate the will of the donor, the onus shifts on the donee to prove that the gift was made voluntarily.³⁶ Thus, old age alone is not the determining or disability criteria and free and voluntary consent of the donor must be demonstrated.³⁷ Where the intention of the donee was to get the land of the donor for consideration which he had spent over his maintenance, once such monetary consideration is proved it ceases to be a gift and it could be said that donee was able to dominate his Will and that donee exercised undue influence to get the deed executed.³⁸ In Sulender Singh v Pritam,³⁹ in an alleged gift executed by an aged and ailing donor, the registrar was not examined to show whether the gift deed was read over to the donor and was understood by her, and it was held that the donees had taken undue advantage of the age and ill health of the donor for getting the gift deed executed in their favour and therefore the gift deed was held as invalid, but it was shown to the satisfaction of the court that the donor always wanted to make a gift of not the complete property but a portion of the land in favour of the donee and had even allowed them to construct over such portion. In such circumstances, the gift for that portion of the property was held as valid.

It has been held that if the plaintiff alleges fraud, then the plaintiff may establish the same, but if the plaintiff is an illiterate or a pardanashin lady and alleges fraud, the defendant must establish the fact that the plaintiff executed the document after it was read over and explained to her, and after she understood the contents thereof.⁴⁰ In case of an old illiterate lady, it was held that the absence of the husband's attestation to her left thumb impression on the deed of gift creates a doubt as to the fact that the donor was fully conscious and aware of the contents of the deed.⁴¹

When a court of competent jurisdiction has declared a gift deed to be valid, a party cannot be said to be lawfully in possession of land or be a deemed tenant.⁴² Where the gift was executed by the owner 30 years back and he during his life time never revoked the gift nor was any question raised about its validity, it can be concluded that the right, title and interest of the donee over the gift property was fully established, and his legal heirs cannot be deprived of their respective share in the property upon his death.⁴³

On behalf of the donor, the essential ingredient is that he should voluntarily and without consideration transfer the property to the donee, and the giving away implies a complete divesting of the ownership in the property by the donor.⁴⁴ An allotment by a Burmese father, on re-marriage, of lands to the children of his first wife is not a gift, but a partition.⁴⁵ A transfer can be a gift even if it is described as a release, if it is found that it vests title without consideration in a person having no right, title or interest in the subject matter.⁴⁶

The word "consideration" is used in the same sense as in the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and excludes natural love and affection. A transfer in consideration of an expectation of spiritual and moral benefit, or in consideration of natural love and affection is a gift, for such consideration is not that contemplated by the section.⁴⁷ In an Allahabad case, a gift deed of property was executed by the mother in favour of her only daughter, and the daughter promised to look after and maintain the mother throughout her life. It was held that the promise was not enforceable in law as such. The gift was held to have been made on account of natural love and affection, and not in consideration of the assurance or promise made by the daughter.⁴⁸ However, a "gift" in consideration of a donee undertaking the liability of the donor is not gratuitous, and is not a gift.⁴⁹ Where the intention of the donee is proved that he wanted to get the land of the donor for monetary consideration which he had spent over his maintenance, it ceases to be a gift.⁵⁰ A gift of immovable property effected by a deed of gift but brought about by undue influence of the donee, though the donor acted voluntarily in making it, is not void, but is only voidable and a suit to set it aside, before possession can be claimed by the donor or anyone claiming under him, must be brought within the three years' period prescribed by Article 91 of the Limitation Act, 1908,⁵¹ which corresponds to Article 59 of the Limitation Act, 1963. A gift in consideration of past, or with the object of future cohabitation is immoral, and invalid under section 6(h) of the TP Act, 1882.⁵² A transfer for services rendered may be a gift, if the services are the motive, and not the consideration, for the transfer.⁵³ A deed of gift by which property is conveyed, transferred and exchanged as a consequence of a family arrangement is a deed of gift, even though the donee agrees to re-convey the property for a specified sum, if called upon by the donor to do so within 10 years.⁵⁴ According to the Allahabad High Court, an undertaking by the donee (a municipal corporation) that the donee would permit the donor to live in a small room of the gifted premises and would pay him ₹100 per month as maintenance, does not constitute a "consideration".⁵⁵ A settlement on a wife is a gift, although the marriage proves to be invalid.⁵⁶ An "agreement to give" lacks consideration, and is void under section 25 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, but that section admits of an exception if it is in writing, registered and made on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other. Again, if the effect of the gift is to defeat or delay the creditors of the donor, it is, under section 53, voidable at the option of any creditor so defeated or delayed. And if the donor is adjudged insolvent within two years of the gift, it may be void as against the official assignee or official receiver under section 55 of the Presidency-Towns Insolvency Act, and section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

An order passed by an erstwhile ruler of a state providing for annual allowance to his sons with retrospective effect, from the date of their birth till the date of their attaining majority, was held to be a gift.⁵⁷

[s 122.3] Donor

The donor is the person who gives. Any person who is sui juris can make a gift of his property. A gift of property by a daughter who was not a coparcener would be valid even if she had not consulted any of the family members.⁵⁸ Similarly, a gift executed by the wife and the son of a Hindu man who disinherited them and bequeathed his property in favour of the trust would not be valid as the donee cannot claim any better title than what his predecessor in title did not possess.⁵⁹ As the concept of joint family property or coparceners under Hindu Law is not applicable to Christians so, a Christian, who is an absolute owner of the property, is entitled to divide and distribute his property as he considers fit.⁶⁰ A minor, being incompetent to contract,⁶¹ is incompetent to transfer,⁶² and a gift by the minor would, therefore, be void. It was upon the donor to prove that he was minor at the time of execution of gift, and not upon the donee.⁶³ Where the gift is by several donors and one of them although was a minor, had represented him to be 22 years old, the gift would be valid unless it is proved that his admission with respect to his majority was under duress, coercion or undue influence.⁶⁴ Trustees cannot make a gift out of trust property, unless authorised by the terms of the trust.

A coparcener is entitled to execute a gift of his share of property specified after affecting a partition. Mutation in records can be made on the basis of such registered gift.⁶⁵ The owner should have a title over the property that she purports to gift. The property that is once sold for legal necessity cannot be claimed by the seller once again to execute a gift after the alienation has been complete. Such a gift executed would be liable to be declared as void.⁶⁶ Where the gift is executed by the donor, a co-sharer of the property in favour of her son, the same cannot be challenged by a third party.⁶⁷ A guardian of property of a minor cannot make a valid gift of the minor's property.⁶⁸ He can however, on behalf of a minor accept a gift containing a condition that the person nominated in the gift deed shall act as a manager of the gifted property. Such acceptance would amount to recognition by the natural guardian of the nominated person as the manager or agent of the minor for the purpose of such property. Such a condition cannot be characterised as an onerous term involving any burden on the property, or on the minor's personality. Act of the natural guardian of the minors in accepting the gift, amounted to a ratification and recognition of the appointment of the mother of the minor as their de facto manager for the suit property. Consequently, the mother became (in that capacity) a "landlord" within the meaning of section 2(c) of Uttar Pradesh Act no III of 1947, and was entitled to serve on the tenant a notice of demand under section 3(l)(a) of that Act.⁶⁹ A Hindu man cannot execute a gift of the property of wife.⁷⁰

The father or his representative can make a valid gift, by way of reasonable provision for the maintenance of the daughter, regard being had to the financial and other relevant circumstances of the family. By custom or by convenience, such gifts are made at the time of marriage, but the right of the father to make such a gift is not confined to the marriage occasion. It is moral obligation and can be discharged either during the lifetime of the father, or thereafter.⁷¹ Question as to whether a particular gift is within reasonable limits, has to be judged according to the status of the family at the time of making a gift, the extent of the immovable property owned by the family and the extent of property gifted. No hard and fast rule prescribing quantitative limits of such a gift can be laid down. The answer to such a question would vary from family to family.⁷² A Hindu widow in possession of the estate of her deceased husband can make an alienation for religious acts which are not essential or obligatory, but are still pious observances which conduce to the bliss of the deceased husband's soul. Gifts by a widow of landed property to her daughter or son-in-law are valid.⁷³ In Lakshadweep, upon division of properties between branches or tavazhis of the family, a tavazhi does not possess the right to mortgage or sell or alienate the tarwad property so divided, and has only the right to enjoy the income from property during the lifetime of the members of the tavazhi. On that basis, a gift deed alienating such property was held to be invalid.⁷⁴ However, where the donor admits execution of the gift deed in cross examination and the evidence was found true, sufficient and satisfactory, the gift deed would be held valid.⁷⁵

The donee is the person who accepts the gift. Acceptance must be of donee and not of donor.⁷⁶ A gift may be accepted by, or on behalf of a person who is not competent to contract. A minor may, therefore, be a donee;⁷⁷ but if the gift is onerous, the obligation cannot be enforced against him while he is a minor. But when he attains majority he must either accept the burden, or return the gift.

The words "accepted by or on behalf of the donee" show that the donee may be a person unable to express acceptance. A gift can be made to a child en ventre sa mere, and could be accepted on its behalf.

The donee must be an ascertainable person, and so the public cannot be a donee under this section;⁷⁸ nor can a gift be made to an unregistered society.⁷⁹ Gifts to an idol, which though is a juristic person, and capable of holding property, is not a gift within the meaning of section 122⁸⁰ as an idol is not a living person.

A gift to two or more persons may be a gift to them as joint tenants, or as tenants in common. The presumption of English law in favour of a joint tenancy does not apply to a Hindu gift, and in a Hindu gift, the donees are presumed to take as tenants in common.⁸¹

122. "Gift" defined.—

Gift to two donees jointly with the right of survivorship, is valid in law,⁸² but a person who is not given any share under either a gift or arbitration award would not be called a donee.⁸³ In Chaudhary Ramesar v Prabhawati Phool Chand,⁸⁴ the donee was around 21 years on the date of the execution of the gift and as per the clear recitals in the gift that the donor was transferring his possession under the bhumidari rights and that the gift is accepted by the donee with recitals in the gift deed entitling the donee to effect mutation of property in his name in the revenue records. The actual physical possession remained with the donor father. It was held that the gift would not be invalidated on this account. Where the donees were put in possession of the property gifted to them and the Land Revenue was shown to be paid by them and the final Khitans were issued in their favour, the acceptance of the gift would be proved.⁸⁵

[s 122.5] Subject-matter

The subject matter of the gift must be certain existing movable or immovable property. It may be land, goods, or actionable claims. It must be transferable under section 6. However, it cannot be future property.⁸⁶ A gift of a right of management is valid;⁸⁷ but a gift of a future revenue of a village is invalid.⁸⁸ These cases were decided under Hindu and Mahomedan law respectively, but they illustrate the principle. A coparcener cannot make a valid gift of his undivided share in a coparcenary,⁸⁹ but a gift of property obtained after a preliminary decree of partition is passed by court would be valid.⁹⁰ In a Calcutta case,⁹¹ it was said that the release of a debt is not a gift, as a gift must be of tangible property. It is submitted that the release of a debt is not a gift as it does not involve a transfer of property, but is merely a renunciation of a right of action. It is quite clear that an actionable claim such as a policy of insurance may be the subject of a gift (section 130).

In order to constitute a valid gift, there must be an existing property. Where the donor (assessee) has a credit account with a firm or with a family or with a company, and the sum gifted is available to that firm or the company on the date of the gift, then a valid gift of that sum by book entries might be possible; but where a sum was not available with the firm or the family or a company which was not a banking company, and had no overdraft facility, such entries would not effectuate a valid gift.

The assessee, who maintained an account in a company, made a gift of a certain sum, by directing the company to debit his account with that sum and to credit the amount in the name of the donee. However, on the date of the gift, the company did not have sufficient cash balance and did not have any overdraft facilities with any bank, nor did the company itself carry on banking business. It was held that the gift made by assessee, even though accepted by the donee, was not valid.⁹²

[s 122.6] Transfer

For "transfer", section 123 may be referred to.

[s 122.7] Acceptance

In order to constitute a valid gift, the pivotal requirement is acceptance thereof. No particular mode of acceptance is required, and the circumstances throw light on that aspect. A transaction of gift in order to be complete must be accepted by the donee during the lifetime of the donor. Factum of acceptance can be established by different circumstances such as donee taking a property, or being in possession of deed of gift alone. If a document of gift after its execution or registration in favour of donee is handed over to him by the donor which he accepts, it amounts to a valid acceptance of gift in law. The specific recital in the deed that possession is given,⁹³ or delivery of duly executed instrument of gift,⁹⁴ raises a presumption of acceptance. However, once it is found that the gift was accepted and the truth of the contents of the gift deed was admitted, clinching evidence is required to establish that the donor still retained possession with him, and the document was not acted upon.⁹⁵

122. "Gift" defined.—

There was a divergence of view between the two schools of Hindu law as to the necessity of acceptance of the gift by the donee, Dayabhaga holding that it was not necessary, but Mistkshara holding the contrary. This section has modified the indigenous Dayabhaga law.⁹⁶ A transfer of a stock to the name of the donee vests the property in him, subject to his right to repudiate the gift, even though he be unaware of the transfer.⁹⁷ And this is so even though the gift be onerous.⁹⁸ It is, however, settled principle of law that normally a donee is expected to accept a gift which is not onerous.⁹⁹ The mutation entries of the property alleged to be gifted do not convey or extinguish any title, and those entries are relevant only for the purpose of collection of land revenue,¹⁰⁰ but where mutation in Municipal Registers is effected after filing a suit with a claim of ownership, it would signify acceptance of gift.¹⁰¹ When the gift deed reserves a life interest in the property in favour of the donor and further stipulates that the donor shall pay the revenue charges of the property during her lifetime, absence of mutation in favour of the donee is not of much significance.¹⁰² There is nothing in the section to show that the acceptance under this section should be express.¹⁰³ The acceptance may be inferred,¹⁰⁴ and it may be proved by the donee's possession of the property,¹⁰⁵ or even by the donee's possession of the deed of gift.¹⁰⁶ Oral evidence can be looked into for finding out whether the gift had, in fact, been acted upon.¹⁰⁷ Delivery of possession of the gifted property can prove the assent of the donor, but mere assent to the gift deed cannot prove delivery of possession of the property.¹⁰⁸

Where there is a specific recital in the gift deed that possession has been handed over to the donee, a presumption arises to that effect.¹⁰⁹ When title has passed on to the donee on acceptance of the gift, it has to be presumed that possession over the property also passed with such title.¹¹⁰ Where a father made a gift to his daughter and on its acceptance by her, she allows her father to enjoy the income from the properties settled in view of the relationship of father and daughter between the donor and donee, it could not be said that there was no acceptance of gift by the donee even assuming that the donor continued to be in possession and enjoyment of the property gifted. Delivery of possession of the gifted property is not absolute requirement, for the completeness or the validity of the gift as found in Muslim law of gifts.¹¹¹

When the donor continues with the physical possession of the property as stipulated in the gift deed, the delivery of possession is neither possible, nor required to complete gift. No express acceptance by the donee is necessary for completing a gift in such cases.¹¹²

Acceptance has been inferred from the acceptance of the right to collect rents in the case of a gift of tenanted property,¹¹³ or from the mutation in the register.¹¹⁴ However, mere standing by when the deed was executed or registered will not be sufficient proof of acceptance.¹¹⁵ Provided the donee is in possession of the property, the donor's retention of the deed is not necessarily proof of the fact that there has been no acceptance.¹¹⁶ In a Calcutta case, the gift deed was in possession of donee. He filed civil suit claiming his ownership right over the gifted property. The suit was decreed in his favour. He also got his name mutated in municipal records. It was thus held that the donee had duly accepted the deed of gift from the donor, and acted on the basis of the same thereby complying with the requirements of section 122.¹¹⁷

When a gift of immovable property is not onerous, only slight evidence is sufficient for establishing the fact of acceptance by the donee. When it is shown that the donee had knowledge of the gift, it is only normal to assume that the donee had accepted the gift, because the acceptance would only promote his own interest.¹¹⁸ Mere silence may sometimes be indicative of acceptance, provided it is shown that the donee knew about the gift. No express acceptance is necessary for completing a gift.¹¹⁹ While mere possession by, or on behalf of, a donee may amount to acceptance, mere possession cannot be treated as evidence of acceptance where the subject matter is jointly enjoyed by the donor and the donee.¹²⁰ Where a deed of gift was delivered by the donor to the donee, the Privy Council held that on delivery of the deed there was an acceptance of the transfer within the meaning of this section, and, therefore, the gift became effectual, subject to registration as required by section 123;¹²¹ and it is immaterial that the deed was not stamped. Failure to stamp the deed will render the document inadmissible in evidence, but will not affect its validity, and the deed becomes effectual from the very moment of its execution, subject to its being stamped and registered as required by law.¹²² Acceptance of duly exercised instrument of gift may constitute sufficient acceptance.¹²³ In a Patna case, the fact that the gift deed was handed over by the donor to the donee, who accepted it, was regarded as sufficient evidence of acceptance.¹²⁴ Acceptance may be by a donee, who is not competent to contract,¹²⁵ for a minor may accept benefit, although he cannot incur an obligation. Where a gift is made in favour of a child of the donor, who is the guardian of the child, the acceptance of gift can be presumed to have been made by him, or on his behalf without any overt act signifying acceptance by the minor.¹²⁶ And a minor's guardian may accept a gift for him. Gift would be complete where the guardian accepts the gifts on behalf of the minors and in token of acceptance, appends his thumb impression on the gift deed,¹²⁷ or takes possession of the property.¹²⁸ Where, after execution of a registered gift deed in favour of a minor, thumb impression of the minor's mother was obtained in token of acceptance of gift, the gift can be said to have been accepted by the mother to whom the deed is handed over after registration. In such circumstances, delivery of possession is not necessary.¹²⁹ So also in the case of a deity, this acceptance may be by its agent.¹³⁰ Where a gift deed had been signed by the donees in token of their acceptance of the gift, it is only the donor who can raise an objection that possession had not been delivered. If the donor supports the validity of the gift, the non-delivery of possession (even if such non-delivery be proved) becomes immaterial.¹³¹ A third party cannot challenge the validity of a gift on the ground that the donee has not got into possession of the property.¹³²

[s 122.8] Trusts

A gift may be made by the equitable machinery of a trust; and the interposition of the trustees enables a gift to be made to a person not yet in existence and, therefore, incapable of being the donee of a direct gift.

A trust is not complete until the trust property is vested in trustees for the benefit of the cestui que trust. The settlor may do this by a declaration of trust, if he is himself the sole trustee, using language which, taken in connection with his acts, shows a clear intention on his part to divest himself of all beneficial interest in it, and to exercise dominion and control over it exclusively in the character of a trustee.¹³³ Otherwise, he must transfer the trust property to trustees by registered conveyance or delivery of possession, as the case may be.¹³⁴ According to the Gujarat High Court, when a settlor creates a trust by settling some of his properties and appoints himself as the sole trustee, he makes a vesting declaration, and not a gift. It is not a transfer. He bifurcates his real ownership, he retains for himself the legal ownership of the property, and transfers the beneficial or equitable ownership to those for whose benefit he has created the trust. Looking to section 6, Indian Trusts Act, 1882, when the settlor appoints himself as the sole trustee, there is no "transfer". A transaction in which there is no transfer is not a gift. The creation of a gift by trust and the vesting in the trustee of the property, is a mode independent of, and de hors, a gift. Therefore, the transaction in question did not amount to a "gift".¹³⁵ If the settlor has not perfected the trust either by constituting himself a trustee, or by transferring the trust property to trustees, the court will not enforce the trust;¹³⁶ nor will the court perfect an incomplete gift by holding that the property was transferred in equity, or that an imperfect gift amounted to a declaration of trust.¹³⁷

[s 122.9] Hindu Law

The section applies to Hindus, and it contains nothing that is inconsistent with Hindu law,¹³⁸ except as to acceptance of the gift not being essential according to Dayabhaga. The rule of pure Hindu law that a gift in favour of an unborn person is wholly void so that it cannot be made even through the medium of a trust, was modified by the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916, by the Madras Act 1 of 1914, and by Act 8 of 1921.¹³⁹ These Acts have been amended by sections 11, 12 and 13 of Act 21 of 1929; and the effect of the amendment is that, subject to the limitations in chapter II of TP ACT, 1882 and in sections 113, 114, 115 and 116 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, no transfer inter vivos, or by will, or property of a Hindu shall be invalid by reason that only that any person for whose benefit it may have been made was not born at the date such disposition took effect.

There is no presumption of a joint tenancy in the case of a gift of several donees in Hindu law. The donees in Hindu law take as tenants in common. In Jogeswar Narain v Ram Chund Dutt,¹⁴⁰ the Privy Council said that the principle of joint tenancy was unknown to Hindu law, except in the case of a coparcenary. In this connection, note "Joint tenancy or Tenancy in common" under section 45 may be referred.

122. "Gift" defined.—

Acceptance has been held proved in cases decided under Hindu law by the assent of a donee already in possession,¹⁴¹ or by the donee's possession of the deed of gift.¹⁴² Although an idol is a juristic person capable of holding property, yet it has been held in some cases that an idol is not a living person, and that a dedication of land to an idol is not a gift within the meaning of sections 122 and 5, and need not be affected by registered instrument.¹⁴³ But these decisions have been criticised as whittling down the provisions of section 123 in a manner not contemplated when the Act was made;¹⁴⁴ for a gift is still a gift though made through the medium of a trust,¹⁴⁵ and in some cases a registered instrument has been held to be necessary.¹⁴⁶ It has also been said that an idol is a symbol of a deity, and that it would be contrary to the Hindu religion for an idol to make an acceptance of worldly goods.¹⁴⁷ A gift to an idol not yet instituted is invalid,¹⁴⁸ unless the transfer is to pujaris on trust to establish an idol.¹⁴⁹ The Indian Trusts Act, 1882 does not apply to religious or charitable endowments.¹⁵⁰ A Hindu may establish a religious or charitable institution without writing, and without the intervention of a trust.¹⁵¹ A gift to dharam is void for uncertainty as the object is too vague and uncertain for its administration to be under the control of the court.¹⁵² Property can be gifted to religious or charitable institution with conditions.¹⁵³ A gift to an "adopted son to look after and perform obsequies of adoptive parents" would fail on the failure of adoption.¹⁵⁴

[s 122.10] Fiduciary Relationship

Gift between parties in a fiduciary relationship are often questioned on the grounds of fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence. When fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence is alleged by a party in a suit, normally, the burden is on him to prove such fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation. But, when a person is in a fiduciary relationship with another and the latter is in a position of active confidence the burden of proving the absence of fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence is upon the person in the dominating position and he has to prove that there was fair play in the transaction and that the apparent is real, in other words that the transaction is genuine and bona fide. In such a case the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is thrown upon the dominant party, that is to say, the party who is in a position of active confidence. A person standing in a fiduciary relationship to another has a duty to protect the interest given to his care and the Court watches with jealousy all transactions between such persons so that the protector may not use his influence or the confidence to his advantage. When the party complaining shows such relation the law presumes everything against the transaction and the onus is cast against the person holding the position of confidence or trust to show that the transaction is perfectly fair and reasonable, and that no advantage has been taken of his position.¹⁵⁵ In Vathsala Manickavasagam v N Ganesan,¹⁵⁶ the father had purchased a property in the name of his son. The other legal heirs claimed partition of the said property on the ground that it was not a gift and that the purchase was made in the name of the son only to avoid violation of rules relating to his service. The Supreme Court held that, Going by the facts placed before the Court, except the ipse dixit statement made in the written statement, that late Nithyanandam gifted away the first item of the suit property in his favour, there was no other evidence lead in support of the said claim of gift. In fact, at that time, when the property was purchased, the first respondent was a college going student. Merely because the property was purchased in the name of the first respondent, it cannot be held that there was a valid gift in his favour, without any other evidence supporting the said claim. A mere allegation that the executant was suffering from various diseases at the time of the execution of the gift would be irrelevant and would not have any effect on the validity of the gift.¹⁵⁷ Only because the donee was instrumental in preparing the stamp paper would not lead to a presumption of the gift being executed under fraud and misrepresentation as the donee was able to prove the execution of a registered gift deed in his favour.¹⁵⁸

[s 122.11] Legal validity

A third party cannot challenge the validity of a gift deed. Such a challenge can be canvassed only by the donor or those who claim under him, and not by a third party. When the donor is not even a party to the suit, it is pointless to impeach the validity of the gift deed. Even if a person has continued in occupation of the house and enjoyed the property at the time of execution and acceptance of gift deed, he cannot, by that circumstance alone, challenge the transfer of title and legal possession over the property in favour of the donee under the gift. Anyone who claims possession over the property adverse to the donor or donee must establish his antecedent title to such property or adverse possession.¹⁵⁹

122. "Gift" defined.—

When donee has accepted gift during lifetime of donor, then such gift is deemed to be valid. In the recital in the deed itself it appears that the donees were put into possession of property gifted away and when it is proved that land revenue was paid by or on behalf of the donees, it presupposes possession of the donees and lends support to the case of acceptance of gift.¹⁶⁰

A gift can be made in favour of a minor and the minor himself can accept the gift especially a non-onerous gift. If the donor is the parent of the minor, possession of the property by the parent on behalf of the minor would be sufficient to hold that the gift was accepted.¹⁶¹

A document has to be read as a whole and when there is repugnancy or inconsistency between two recitals in a document, harmonious construction has to be adopted to give effect to the real intention of the executants.¹⁶²

Where the executant transferred the property in favour of her grandsons while reserving in her own favour a right to reside, possess and enjoy the property during her life time and a right of residence in favour of her daughter in law but prohibiting her from alienating the property, such deed would be a gift and not a Will in absence of any recital in the document that the document would be effective only on the death of the executant. Since through the deed, she did not confer/reserve in her favour a right to revoke it in any eventuality, a revocation without satisfying the condition would not be valid and the deed would confer a valid title in favour of the grandsons.¹⁶³

[s 122.11.1] Limitation

A suit for declaration of the gift deed as void must be filed within three years of it coming to the knowledge of the party. where the plaintiff admitted that he came to know of the alleged gift deed after the death of his father in 1987, but he filed the suit for its declaration as void in the year 2007 the suit would be barred by limitation.¹⁶⁴

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

¹⁶⁵123. Transfer how effected.—

For the purpose of making a gift of immovable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses.

For the purpose of making a gift of movable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery.

Such delivery may be made in the same way as goods sold may be delivered.

[s 123.1] Mode of Transfer—Immovables

Section 123 provides that for the purposes of making a gift of immovable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses.¹⁶⁶

This provision excludes every other mode of transfer and even if the intended donee is put in possession, a gift of immovable property is invalid without a registered instrument.¹⁶⁷ However, 12 years' possession under an oral gift will perfect a title by prescription.¹⁶⁸ A gift by way of dowry or sankalap to a bridegroom is invalid if not made by a registered instrument.¹⁶⁹ Recitals in an unregistered petition to the collector will not take the place of a registered deed of a gift.¹⁷⁰ So also, mere entries in a mutation register will not be sufficient.¹⁷¹ Mere residence in the alleged gifted house without adducing independent evidence to prove the alleged oral gift cannot be treated as gift of the property.¹⁷² A release deed which unambiguously transfers the right, title and interest of the executant, and is attested by two witnesses, would operate as a gift.¹⁷³ "Pasupu Kumkuma" is a gift of immovable property, the consideration whereof is love and affection and, therefore, requires registration under section 123.¹⁷⁴ Transfer of land in the wife's favour not followed by acceptance creates no gift, particularly where the wife showed complete disinterest in the property.¹⁷⁵

In cases where the TP Act, 1882 applies, an oral gift is void in law, unless there is a specific statutory provision dispensing with the formalities for gifts as laid down in the TP Act, 1882.¹⁷⁶

ILLUSTRATION

123. Transfer how effected.—

A registered owner of two villages presented a petition to the Collector, praying for the transfer of the villages to the name of B and stating that he had given the villages to B as stridhanam. The Collector registered the villages in B's name. Subsequently A's heir sued to recover the villages. The suit was dismissed as B had acquired a title by adverse possession; but with reference to the petition to the Collector, the Judicial Committee said:

It was not contended before the Board that the transactions effected a valid gift of the property to B; for such a gift must, under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, be made by registered deed. Nor, having regard to section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, can the recitals in the petition be used as evidence of a gift having been made.¹⁷⁷

[s 123.2] Signed by or on Behalf of the Donor

The deed must be signed by the donor, and a deed signed by the intended donee will not affect a transfer.¹⁷⁸ It is curious that while this section uses the words “signed by or on behalf of the donor”, yet in the case of mortgages—section 59—the words are “signed by the mortgagor.” There is, however, no significance in this distinction, and the words “on behalf of” are mere surplusage,¹⁷⁹ for where a party is illiterate, another person may with his consent sign his name for him.¹⁸⁰ A person cannot claim title on the basis of an oral gift when there is no mention of presence of any witness at the time of such alleged oral gift as the three essentials of the gift, namely declaration, acceptance and followed by delivery of possession of property were within the knowledge of the donee. Thus where the evidence on record showed that there was no gift made during the life time of the donor, no title can be claimed on its basis.¹⁸¹

[s 123.3] Attested

The definition of the word “attested” in section 3 as amended by Act 27 of 1926 and Act 10 of 1927, makes it clear that attestation in acknowledgement of execution is sufficient. The definition requires that the attesting witnesses should have signed in the presence of the executant. In this connection, the note under the same heading in section 3 may be referred.

The essential conditions of a valid attestation under section 3 of the TP Act, 1882 are that, two or more witnesses must have seen the executant sign the instrument or have received from him personal knowledge of his signature, and with a view to attest or to bear witnesses to this fact, each of them has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant. It is essential that the witnesses should have put the signature animo attestandi, ie, for the purpose of attesting he has seen the executant sign or has received from him personal acknowledgment of his signature. If a person has put his signature on the document for some other purpose, for instance, to certify that he is the scribe or an identifier or a registering officer, he is not an attesting witness. A gift is a document which requires two attesting witnesses.¹⁸² Where a person is not only the scribe of the document, but he has also seen execution and signing of the said document, he could also be treated as an attestator to the said document with the required animus. The scribe of a document can also be an attesting witness thereof, if he has signed the document with the required animus to attest.¹⁸³ In B Sudharmani v N Devarajan,¹⁸⁴ the court held that section 123 requires attestation of a gift deed by two witnesses and there is no law which prohibits a scribe from attesting the document prepared by him.

The proviso to section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 dispenses with the necessity of calling an attesting witness in proof of any document except a will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act, 1908 when there is no specific denial by the party against whom the document is relied upon. Therefore, a registered deed of gift can be received in evidence without examination of the attestors, if the person who has executed the deed of gift has not specifically denied its execution.¹⁸⁵

A gift deed not attested by witnesses is void.¹⁸⁶ Where validity of a gift-deed was specifically denied, it was necessary for the donee to examine the attesting witness of the gift deed.¹⁸⁷ Merely signing a document would not tantamount to conscious execution, and it requires something more. Where the signature of a person on a document is obtained on misrepresentation, there is no proper execution of the deed in the eyes of law. The execution does not mean mechanical act of signing the document, or getting it signed without understanding the contents thereof.¹⁸⁸

123. Transfer how effected.—

[s 123.4] Registration

The word “registered” in this section does not mean registered in the lifetime of the donor. If the other conditions to the validity of the gift are complied with, neither the death of the donor, nor his express revocation is a ground for refusing registration.¹⁸⁹ When a gift of an amount is made by a promissory note which is registered, the gift is valid and complete.¹⁹⁰ Any gift of immovable property cannot be made in violation of this rule, as mere delivery of possession without registered instrument cannot confer any title.¹⁹¹ If a deed of gift of immovable property is not registered, the gift cannot be enforced, and cannot be supported under the doctrine of part performance. That doctrine does not apply to gifts.¹⁹² In a Madras case,¹⁹³ the members of a coparcenary effected a partition, and allotted a share to a person who was not a coparcener; but the court held that as the deed of partition was not registered it could not operate as a gift to confer title on a stranger. In another case, where a father allotted a share of property to his sons by a registered deed of gift, the gift was valid although the sons executed a power of attorney authorising the father to manage the property, and to take the profits during his lifetime.¹⁹⁴ Registration will not perfect an imperfect gift if any of the essential ingredients of a gift are lacking;¹⁹⁵ and on the other hand, title cannot pass without there being a registered deed of gift.¹⁹⁶

The gift of immovable property should be made only for transferring the right, title and interest by the donor to the donee by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and must be attested by at least two witnesses. The pre-existing right, title and interest of donor thereby stand divested in the donee by the operation of section 17 of the Registration Act only when the gift deed is duly registered and thereafter, the donor would lose the title to the property.¹⁹⁷ A gift of immovable property which is not registered is bad in law, and cannot pass any title to the donee. Any oral gift of immovable property cannot be made in view of the provisions of section 123 of the TP Act, 1882. Mere delivery of possession without a written instrument cannot confer any title.¹⁹⁸ A property in respect of which there is a pre-existing right does not require registration whereas a decree in respect of a property requires registration if it created right, title, interest in favour of a person.¹⁹⁹

If the parties feel that they had committed any mistake, section 26 of Contract Act provides for rectification of the document. Only a donor can seek for rectification of a gift deed.²⁰⁰ A proof of registration of document of gift of immovable property is not by itself a proof of its genuineness.²⁰¹

Where the person who executed the release deed himself admitted its execution, it would not be necessary to examine the attesting witnesses to prove its execution.²⁰² Where the gift was executed through a registered instrument and the plaintiffs failed to prove that the gift deed executed by their mother in favour of his brother was a fabricated one, the gift would be valid and a prayer to declare it void would be dismissed.²⁰³ Where the plaintiff claimed that he put in possession of the property on the strength of an unregistered gift deed acquisition of title through gift would not be proved more so as the plaintiff himself acknowledged the title of the municipality over such land and prayed for settlement.²⁰⁴

A dedication of property to an idol in strict legal sense is neither a gift as understood in the Transfer of Property Act which requires acceptance by the donee of the property donated nor it is a simple “trust”.²⁰⁵ The validity of oral/unregistered gift in favour of deity does not require registration as it constitutes religious trust, therefore a gift to idol may be oral and it may also be effected by an unregistered document.²⁰⁶

123. Transfer how effected.—

An unregistered gift deed if also not in compliance with the requirements of section 122, and 123 would not be validated.²⁰⁷

[s 123.5] Whether Donor May Revoke Gift after Delivery of Deed and Before Registration

This question was considered by the courts in India in several cases,²⁰⁸ and it was ultimately set at rest by the Privy Council which decided that after delivery of the deed of gift and before registration, the donor cannot revoke the gift.²⁰⁹

In Kalyanasundaram v Karuppa,²¹⁰ Lord Salvesen said:

Their Lordships are unable to see how the provisions of section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act can be reconciled with section 47 of the Registration Act, except upon the view that, while registration is a necessary solemnity for the enforcement of a gift of immovable property, it does not suspend the gift until registration actually takes place. When the instrument of gift has been handed by the donor to the donee and accepted by him, the former has done everything in his power to complete the donation and to make it effective. Registration does not depend upon his consent, but is the act of an officer appointed by law for the purpose.

Where a gift has been affected by a registered instrument duly attested and the gift has been acted upon by the donee, the title legally passes to the donee, and cannot be defeated by any intention of the donor to the contrary.²¹¹ Thus, in a case where the gift deed was deposited with the Registrar, but was taken away by murdering the Registrar, it was held that the gift was completed, and could not be superseded by a subsequently registered deed.²¹²

If there is an acceptance of the gift after execution of the deed, even though the registration was postponed to a later date, the gift would remain irrevocable,²¹³ but if there is no acceptance at all, registration does not make the gift irrevocable.²¹⁴

Where the donor transferred the property ie, both title and possession of the property was delivered to the donee and the donee had purchased the stamp papers in his name and mutation of the property and payment of taxes were done by the donee himself, it was held that the gift had come into effect through proper acceptance and therefore the gift cannot be cancelled for want of acceptance by the donee of the same.²¹⁵

[s 123.6] Mode of Transfer—Movables

With regard to movables, the section allows two alternative modes of transfer—

- (1) Registered deed signed by or on behalf of the donor; or
- (2) delivery of possession.

123. Transfer how effected.—

Delivery of possession is the usual mode of transfer in a gift of goods.²¹⁶ As in English law,²¹⁷ an oral gift without delivery of possession would be a promise without consideration. It would transfer no property to the donee, and would in fact be no gift at all. So, when the directors of a railway company resolved to give a bonus to an employee and the sum had not been paid over by the district paymaster, the money could not be attached by a creditor of the employee as the gift was not complete.²¹⁸ When the donee is already in possession, no further delivery is required according to the English cases.²¹⁹ These would no doubt be followed in India, for the same rule obtains in regard to immovable property.²²⁰ In an Allahabad case,²²¹ a husband made a fixed deposit of money in a bank repayable to himself or his wife or survivor, and it was held that this involved no delivery and was not, therefore, a gift to the wife. The court referred to the general rule in India that a purchase by a husband in his wife's name is presumed to be benami, and that the presumption of English law that it is an advancement does not apply.²²² No oral gift can be made under section 123.²²³

In an Allahabad case, a gift deed by a Muslim recited that by this agreement certain household property is given by the executor to his three brothers. It further recited that the executor or his heirs will henceforth have no right in the property. However, there was no mention of the word “gift” in the entire document. It was held that the document was an agreement of transfer, and not a gift by a Muslim, or a document executed in recognition of an earlier oral gift. It was further held that the said document required registration. And, since the document was unregistered, it was inadmissible in evidence.²²⁴

[s 123.7] Delivery

Where the gift deed clearly showed that the possession of the property covered by the deed had been handed over to the donee, there was acceptance of the gift, and the gift could not be revoked.²²⁵

A valid gift must be ordinarily followed by possession, according to the High Court of Punjab and Haryana. Where the gifted property is capable of physical possession, non-delivery of the property makes a gift invalid.²²⁶ In order that a gift of movable property is valid under the provisions of section 123, the donor should have done all that he can to put the subject-matter of the gift within the power of the donee to obtain possession.²²⁷ Where the donee is a minor and is living with the donor and under his care, the question of delivery of possession to complete the gift does not arise. The gift is valid.²²⁸ A deposit of money by one person in the names of himself and another jointly, payable to “either or survivor”, cannot be held to be a gift of money by the depositor to the others.²²⁹ A deposit of money made by a Hindu in the joint names of himself and his wife (or himself and any other person) on the terms that it shall be payable to “either or survivor” does not, on his death, constitute a gift by him to his wife (or to the other person, as the case may be). The burden of proving that it was a gift lies on the person so alleging. Though the Post Office Savings Bank Accounts Rules contain provisions for payment to the survivor in the case of such accounts, those rules are designed only to regulate the easy operation of the account, and do not touch (i) the rights inter se among the depositors; or (ii) the right of inheritance,²³⁰ but, a transfer from the account of the donor to that of the donees who were his parents has been held to be a valid delivery, even though there were insufficient funds in the donor's account.²³¹ Mere entries in account books in favour of the wife would not be sufficient to complete a gift.²³² Where money is deposited in bank and the certificate was retained by the donor, there was no gift.²³³

[s 123.8] Actionable Claims

Before the amendment of section 130 by the insertion of the words “whether with or without consideration”, it was held that actionable claims were not movable property under this section, and a gift of an actionable claim must be in writing under section 130, and need not be registered.²³⁴ However, delivery was held to be a sufficient transfer in the case of a promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque payable to bearer. Government promissory notes were transferable by endorsement, and unless so endorsed, the gift was not complete.²³⁵ The donee could not retain the paper on which the note was inscribed as a chattel, for it could not be separated from the debt.²³⁶ In the case of a gift of shares to be allotted, a direction to the company to allot them to the donee perfects the gift, as the donor has done all that is in his power to do.

123. Transfer how effected.—

In a Supreme Court case,²³⁷ the question arose whether signature and delivery of a registered deed of a gift in respect of shares amounted to a valid gift of the right to the shares, where the donor had not actually got the shares transferred in the records of the company. In this case, the female donor had died before getting such transfer recorded. Before she died, she had signed several blank transfer forms (which were apparently intended to be filed by the donee), so as to enable the donee to obtain the transfer of the donated shares. But the shares could not, before the donor's death, be transferred in the registers of the various companies (in accordance with the relevant provisions of company law). The respondent, who was a nephew of the deceased husband of the donor, disputed the claim of the appellant (donee) to these shares in an administration suit. The question arose whether the appellant (donee) was entitled to the shares covered by the registered gift deed to which the blank transfer forms could be related. The registered document was signed by the donor as "the giver" as well as by the donee as "the acceptor" of the gift, and it was attested by six witnesses. In the deed, the donor specified and gave particulars of the shares meant to be gifted, and undertook to get the name of the donee put on the registers of the companies concerned. The donor even stated that she was henceforth a trustee for the benefit of the donee with regard to the income which, as a shareholder; she may get while her name was still in the registers of the companies concerned. The donor delivered the registered gift-deed together with the share-certificates to the donee. On these facts, the Supreme Court held that donation of the right to get the share-certificates made out in the name of the donee became irrevocable by registration as well as by delivery. The donation of such a right as a form of property was shown to be completed, so that nothing was left to be done so far as the vesting of such a right in the donee was concerned. The actual transfers in the registers of the companies concerned were to constitute mere enforcement of this right. They were necessary to enable the donee to exercise the rights of a shareholder. But the mere fact that such transfer had to be recorded in accordance with company law did not detract from the completeness of what had been donated.

[s 123.9] Hindu Law

section 123 superseded the rules of old Hindu law and delivery of possession of immovable property is not an essential condition in so far as there was an insistence on such rules of requirement of delivery of possession of the property and even if the donor retained the right to use the property during her lifetime and there was no immediate delivery of possession of property, if the gift is executed through a registered document and the recitals in the deed show complete transfer of absolute title of such property from the donor to the donee and the same is accepted by the donee, the gift would be complete and valid.²³⁸

This section applies to Hindus. It applied to Hindus even before the amending Act 20 of 1929, for it was made applicable to Hindus by the old section 129, which expressly abrogated the Hindu rule.²³⁹ The section was held to abrogate the rule of Hindu law that delivery of possession is essential to the validity of a gift.²⁴⁰ But the decision of the Privy Council in Kali Das v Kanhya Lal,²⁴¹ shows that there is no such rule. In Lallu Singh v Gur Narain,²⁴² a gift by a Hindu lady of seven villages made by a registered deed was held valid, although she reserved to herself a life interest in three of them. As to gifts to an idol, the note "Hindu law", under section 122 may be referred.

Where the gift deed by the husband in favour of his wife unequivocally showed that the properties mentioned in the deed were being given to her absolutely, it was held that a mere reference to the son in the recital of the document does not indicate any intention of creating any trust or of making any conveyance of the properties in favour of the son, and the wife had a perfect title in the properties gifted, and she could make a gift thereof to her granddaughter.²⁴³

[s 123.10] Mahomedan Law

Section 129 enacts that section 123 shall not affect any rule of Mahomedan law. Under Mahomedan law, delivery of possession, either actual or constructive, is necessary to validate a gift.²⁴⁴ Under Shia law, delivery of actual possession of appropriated property to the mutwalli by or by the direction of the wakf, is a condition precedent to a wakf having validity and effect. The wakf may appoint himself as mutwalli and in such a case, the change in the character of possession amounts to delivery of possession, eg by mutation of his name as mutwalli.²⁴⁵ If that rule is complied with, a gift of immovable property is valid even though a deed be executed and the deed is not attested,²⁴⁶ or not registered.²⁴⁷ However, the Andhra Pradesh High Court, has held that the

123. Transfer how effected.—

document which evidences a gift even though made by a Muslim cannot be acted upon unless it accords with section 123 of TPAAct and thus an unregistered deed cannot be recognized.²⁴⁸ This interpretation appears to be inconsistent with both the principles of classical Muslim law that permits an oral and even an unregistered gift and also with the apex court ruling,²⁴⁹ that if a gift fulfills all the essentials of a Muslim law and is also reduced to writing, it would not be converted into formal document or an instrument that required compulsory registration under section 17 of the Registration Act.²⁵⁰

A mere registration will not perfect an imperfect gift if any of the essential ingredients of a gift are lacking.²⁵¹

[s 123.11] Extent

The section does not apply to territories excluded from the operation of the Registration Act.

165 As to limitation to the territorial operation of section 123, see section 1, supra, section 123 extends to every cantonment—see section 287 of the Cantonments Act, 1924 (2 of 1924).

124. Gift of existing and future property.—

A gift comprising both existing and future property is void as to the latter.

There cannot be a gift of future property,²⁵² for such a gift can only be a promise, and a promise not supported by consideration is invalid as a contract. Accordingly, the definition in section 122 is limited to existing property.²⁵³ In a sale or mortgage, there is consideration, and so an assignment of future property by way of sale or mortgage operates as a contract.²⁵⁴

However, a deed of gift of existing property is not invalid as to that property; because it also professes to include future property. Similarly, an unregistered deed of gift of actionable claims and of immovable property was held to be valid as to the former, but void as to the latter.²⁵⁵

There cannot be a gift of future property either under Hindu or Mahomedan law.

125. Gift to several of whom one does not accept.—

A gift of a thing to two or more donees, of whom one does not accept it, is void as to the interest which he would have taken had he accepted.

This section, it is submitted, applied only when the gift is to two or more donees as tenants in common. The refusal of one will not prevent the gift taking effect as regards the share of the others.²⁵⁶ It is submitted that the terms of the section indicate a severance, and assume that the donees take as tenants in common, for when the donees take as joint tenants, there is only one donee.²⁵⁷ As already noted,²⁵⁸ the presumption of English law is in favour of a joint tenancy, while that of Hindu law is in favour of a tenancy in common. But when the terms of a Hindu gift clearly indicated that the gift was to be held in joint tenancy, the rule of survivorship was followed as a consequence to the nature of the gift, and not due to any peculiarity of English law.²⁵⁹

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

126. When gift may be suspended or revoked.—

The donor and donee may agree that on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor a gift shall be suspended or revoked; but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part, at the mere will of the donor, is void wholly or in part, as the case may be.

A gift may also be revoked in any of the cases (save want or failure of consideration) in which, if it were a contract, it might be rescinded.

Save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked.

Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to affect the rights of transferees for consideration without notice.

(b) A gives a lakh of rupees to B, reserving to himself, with B's assent, the right to take back at pleasure ₹10,000 out of the lakh. The gift holds good as to ₹90,000, but is void as to ₹10,000 which continue to belong to A.

[s 126.1] Conditional Gift

A gift is a transfer of property and is, therefore, subject to the rules enacted in chapter II of TP Act, 1882. Thus, if an absolute gift is made, subject to a condition restricting alienation, the condition would be void.²⁶⁰ Section 126 is controlled by section 10. A clause in a gift deed totally prohibiting alienation is void in view of section 10.²⁶¹ Section 126 is not to be read in isolation and has to be read along with section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act which says that any stipulation completely restraining the donee from transferring the gifted property is void, and if read together, which must be so read, the only reasonable conclusion that one can arrive at is that section 126 is the general section which is controlled by section 10.²⁶²

The condition so imposed must be one which is a valid condition subsequent, and is not repugnant to the gift under sections 10 and 11 of TP Act, 1882. But even if it is invalid as a condition limiting the interest transferred, it may be valid as a personal covenant binding on the immediate parties.²⁶³

126. When gift may be suspended or revoked.—

Where the gift is made for a specific charitable purpose and the condition attached to the gift for compliance in a particular manner or time, the donor can recall the gift on the breach of such condition. In case of such conditional gifts, the relationship between the donor and the donee is fiduciary in nature. In such cases, the donee is merely a custodian till condition is complied with and till then, gift does not take effect. Such gifts have been distinguished from gifts simplicitor.²⁶⁴

The Supreme Court has held that it is open to the donor to transfer by gift, title and ownership in the property, and at the same time reserve its possession and enjoyment to herself during lifetime. There is no prohibition in law that ownership in property cannot be gifted without its possession and right of enjoyment.²⁶⁵ However, in Narmadaben Maganlal v Pranjivandas Maganlal,²⁶⁶ it has been held that in case of a conditional gift, the gift may not be complete with the execution of the deed. For instance, where the donor himself retains possession and enjoyment till he is alive, there cannot be any delivery of possession of the property. In a case like this, the gift confers only a limited right upon the donee. Unless the donee fulfils the condition subject to which the donor has made a gift in his favour, it is open to the donor to cancel the conditional gift by another registered instrument. This is because the donor having retained enjoyment and possession of the gifted property during his lifetime, the gift never became complete during the lifetime of the donor. The result is that the gift becomes ineffective and inoperative, and puts an end to the conditional gift.

A condition reserving the profits to the donor for life is not repugnant,²⁶⁷ but a condition absolutely restraining the donee from alienating the interest in the property would be repugnant to the interest so created and would be void.²⁶⁸ Where a document is a gift, it would not cease so merely because there is preservation of life interest in it, or it provides for maintenance of the executant.²⁶⁹ A gift may be subject to a condition precedent under section 21, and there is no transfer and no gift, unless and until the condition is fulfilled. If the condition precedent is impossible or illegal, or immoral, the gift fails under section 25. This is exemplified by the illustrations to that section, and also by the illustrations to sections 126 and 127 of the Succession Act, 1925. A gift to a husband and wife on condition of the donor having physical possession of the wife, is invalid.²⁷⁰

A gift may be subject to a condition subsequent under section 31, and then the gift fails and property reverts in the donor if the condition is not fulfilled.²⁷¹ Such a condition may be implied by custom as in the case of a gift by a Hindu widow. The custom may provide that on her remarriage, the jewels given to her at the time of the first marriage, revert to the donor.²⁷² Such conditions are exemplified by the illustrations to section 31 of TP Act, 1882 and section 134 of the Succession Act, 1925. A gift to a daughter with a condition that no other heir, but her issue should take it, has been construed as a gift with a condition subsequent of defeasance on the failure of an issue living at the time of her death.²⁷³ A curious instance of such a condition was a gift to a relation, by a man sentenced to transportation for life, on his land, on condition that the land should be given back if he returned to his village.²⁷⁴ A condition of residence in a gift of a house is a valid condition subsequent,²⁷⁵ but if the gift is absolute, such a condition is invalid and cannot be enforced.²⁷⁶ A condition subsequent is intended to put an end to a gift. So if the condition subsequent is impossible or illegal or immoral, the condition is void under section 32, and the gift stands.

The section has, of course, no application where there is no condition as such, but a mere pious wish that the donee should maintain the donor,²⁷⁷ but a condition that the donee would serve the donor in her old age is valid and the gift would be absolute upon the donee performing such a condition.²⁷⁸

[s 126.2] Suspension or Revocation of Gifts

There is no scope in the normal course for revocation of a deed of gift when the said deed was executed by the donor, accepted by the donee, and registered by the registering authority. Thus a gift deed once executed and

registered cannot be revoked unless the mandatory requirements of the said section are fulfilled,²⁷⁹ but it can be cancelled only by mutual consent with participation of both parties and in absence of consent or participation would be improper.²⁸⁰ A deed of gift can be revoked if there is a prior condition that the gift can be revoked, or if the deed of gift has been executed under undue influence, or if donee commits fraud.²⁸¹

Revocation under the first paragraph of this section depends upon the donor and the donee at the time of acceptance agreeing to a condition subsequent which puts an end to the gift. The condition must be made at the time, for the donor cannot impose such a condition after the gift is absolute.²⁸² Such a condition must be express. In the absence of such condition, the donor has no power of revocation, and the court will not help him.²⁸³ Where the gift was not a conditional one and it was acted upon by handing over possession of properties to the beneficiary, subsequent cancellation was held to be impermissible.²⁸⁴ The gift and the revocation may be in separate documents. But if executed at the same time, they should be considered as one and the same transaction.²⁸⁵ The Supreme Court²⁸⁶ has held that position in law under the TP Act, 1882 read with the Indian Contract Act is that the acquisition of property being generally beneficial, a child can take property in any manner whatsoever either under intestacy or by will or by purchase or gift or other assurance inter vivos, except where it is clearly to his prejudice to do so. A gift inter vivos to a child cannot be revoked. There is a presumption in favour of the validity of a gift of a parent or a grandparent to a child, if it is complete.²⁸⁷ When a gift is made to a child, generally there is a presumption of its acceptance, because express acceptance in his case is not possible, and only an implied acceptance can be expected.²⁸⁸

Where the gift deed was executed and necessary mutation were also made in the records after delivery of possession of the property with the donee paying electricity and water charges, a deed of cancellation of such gift simplicities and its registration unilaterally is not permissible.²⁸⁹ In S Lingeswaran v The Sub-Registrar, Purasawalkam,²⁹⁰ a gift was executed by a woman in favour of her adoptive daughter and later cancelled unilaterally and the deed of cancellation of gift was duly registered. She then executed a settlement deed of the same property in favour of B and C who were minors. The main issue was whether cancellation of gift can be done unilaterally by the registrar under the exceptions laid down in section 126? The court held that section 127 permits revocation of a gift deed by way of a cancellation deed lays but only if it falls within the exception under section 126 of the transfer property act, the same has to be looked into by a competent authority, ie, a civil court. The registrar is not a competent person to register the unilateral cancellation deed by deciding the question and the same was not valid.

[s 126.3] Service Tenures

Service tenures are closely analogous to gifts with an implied condition of revocation. All service tenures are resumable on a refusal to render the services.²⁹¹ But there is a distinction between the grant of a land burdened with a condition of service, and the grant of land as remuneration for an office.

There is again a further distinction as to the services to be rendered, which may be either personal, or public.

The classification, therefore, is as follows:—

- A. Grants of land burdened with a condition of service either (1) personal; or (2) public.
- B. Grants of land as remuneration for service.

126. When gift may be suspended or revoked.—

Grants of class A(1) are resumable not only if the performance of service is refused, but also if the services are no longer required.²⁹² Grants of class A(2) are resumable if the performance of service is refused, but they are not resumable if the services are no longer required.²⁹³

Grants of class B are really grants of an office of which the remuneration is the land. When the office is terminated, the lands can be resumed. If the office is hereditary, the grantor can determine the office, and resume the land when the services are no longer required.²⁹⁴ But if services are required and the office is hereditary, the grantor cannot resume the land, and appoint another person to officiate.²⁹⁵

[s 126.4] Revocable at Pleasure—No Gift

A gift may be revocable by being subject to a condition subsequent; or it may be contingent so that there is no gift at all, unless a condition precedent is fulfilled. But the condition cannot depend upon the will of the donor, for a gift revocable at pleasure is no gift at all. The same principle applies in the law of contracts, for a promise to pay what the promisor pleases is no promise at all, and when a party to be bound by the declaration of his will annexes to such declaration a condition that he will be bound when he wills it, he is not bound at all.²⁹⁶

It is well settled that when a gift or immovable property has been accepted by the donees and they are in possession of the property, the fact that after making the gift the donors felt that it was a folly or imprudence or want of foresight on their part to have executed the deed of gift, will not clothe them with the power of revocation of the gift. A gift cannot be revoked by the donor, for a transfer by gift is as complete and binding on the parties when once completed, as any other form of transfer. The donor cannot set aside the gift once made on the plea that he had made a mistake,²⁹⁷ or that he had not read it.²⁹⁸

Where no specific condition for revocation has been made in the deed itself, in the event of the failure of the donee to render services to the donor or maintain the donor, the gift cannot be revoked.²⁹⁹

[s 126.5] Revocation by Rescission³⁰⁰

As the donee may not profit by his wrong, a gift may be revoked for coercion, fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence in the same way as a contract may be rescinded. But if the donor does not revoke, he cannot transfer his right to sue for revocation.³⁰¹ However, in case of the donor's death, the cause of action survives to his legal representatives.³⁰² This is the effect of the general law enacted in section 306 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

Coercion as defined in section 15 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 is wider than in English law, and need not proceed from the donee. It includes the committing or threatening to commit any act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code. The Madras High Court has held that this includes a threat to commit suicide, and that a deed of release executed by a mother and son in consequence of the father's threat to commit suicide is voidable for coercion.³⁰³

Fraud of the donor or his agent makes a gift voidable. However, where the donor by reason of such fraud signs a deed of gift believing it to be an instrument of a different kind, the deed is a nullity and void ab initio by the rule of non est factum. Such a gift is void, and need not be revoked.³⁰⁴ Not only fraud, but even innocent misrepresentation under section 18(3) of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 is a ground for revoking a gift.³⁰⁵

The most usual ground for revocation is undue influence, as defined in section 18 of the Contract Act. The court cannot prevent a man from making an improvident gift or disposing off his property in a way that no right-minded man would be disposed to do; and if he does so deliberately, the court cannot help him,³⁰⁶ for it is not the province of the court to decide upon what terms a man may dispose off his property.³⁰⁷ But the improvidence of the deed may afford an argument that the donor did not intend it.³⁰⁸ So when an improvident gift is made to a person, who is in a position to dominate the will of the donor, the presumption is that the gift was obtained by undue influence. When the parties are in fiduciary relationship and a person is in position to dominate the will of another person, the burden to prove that the transaction in question is a genuine transaction lies upon a person in whose favour the document has been executed.³⁰⁹ Instances of such undue influence are a gift by a child to a parent;³¹⁰ a cestui que trust to a trustee;³¹¹ a religious inferior to a religious superior;³¹² a patient to a physician,³¹³ or a client to a solicitor,³¹⁴ or to a person who is considered as an inmate of the family.³¹⁵

126. When gift may be suspended or revoked.—

Where there was evidence of spiritual domination over the mind of the donor and an attempt was made to keep the transaction a guarded secret, the registration of deed was made at a far away place and donee had a life long ill-health and almost a blind religious devotional frame of mind, the gift of his only property by the donor was held to be vitiated by undue influence and fraud.³¹⁶

If a gift is not a spontaneous and an independent act of donor, there maybe a question of undue influence, but the presumption of undue influence will appear only when the gift is unconscionable particularly keeping in view the relationship of the parties.

In India, the paradanashin ladies have been given a special protection,³¹⁷ and the general rule that the onus is on the person who alleges fraud, duress and undue influence, does not apply to them. On the contrary, there is a presumption of undue influence which is supported by the fact that the donors are pardanishin women.³¹⁸ These women live in a certain degree of seclusion and the courts have, therefore, thrown round them a cloak of protection. The donee must show that the transaction was a bona fide one, and fully understood by her, and that the deed was explained to and understood by her.³¹⁹ The test laid down is that the disposition made must be substantially understood, and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it.³²⁰ Where the donee though a 90-year old lady was not weak, was intelligent, had been doing all her outdoor works herself, had taken the advice of the neighbours before gifting the property, and had announced about the gift after its execution, it was held that the onus to prove fraud and misrepresentation was on the donor and the gift deed was valid.³²¹ Not only in the case of a pardanishin woman, but in all cases where there is a presumption of undue influence, the donee may rebut the presumption by evidence that the donor exercised a free and independent will³²² after a fair understanding of the whole matter;³²³ and the court will consider whether the transaction was a righteous one, whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor,³²⁴ and whether the donor had the benefit of independent advice.³²⁵ In some cases, the absence of a power of revocation in the deed is a circumstance which indicates undue influence, but it is not conclusive.³²⁶

The period of limitation for the revocation of a gift on the ground of coercion, fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence is three years from the time when the facts entitling the plaintiff to revoke became known to him under Article 59 of the Limitation Act, 1963.

[s 126.6] Mistake

A contract is not voidable because of the mistake of one party, and if both parties are under a mistake as to an essential matter, the contract is void, and does not require rescission. If both parties are under a mistake as to a matter that is not essential, the remedy is not rescission, but rectification. However, it is clear that a gift cannot be revoked on account of the mistake of the donor alone. So in a Madras case,³²⁷ the collector was not allowed to revoke a grant made under a mistake as to the effect of certain departmental orders. However, a mutual mistake will justify cancellation, as when a husband made and the wife accepted a gift in ignorance of the fact that it would be subject to a covenant in the marriage settlement.³²⁸ A mere mistake of law would not be sufficient for the revocation of a deed of gift.³²⁹

126. When gift may be suspended or revoked.—

[s 126.7] No Revocation Aliunde

A gift may be revocable on a condition subsequent not depending upon the will of the donor; or it may be revocable on grounds which would justify rescission in the case of a contract. However, it cannot be revoked for any other reason, for as already explained, a gift revocable at pleasure is no gift at all. In Behari Lal Ghose v Sindhubala Dasi,³³⁰ the Calcutta High Court said that the third paragraph in this section—"Save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked"—was a legislative recognition of the doctrine enunciated by Lord Nottingham in Villers v Beaumont.³³¹

If a man will improvidently bind himself up by a voluntary deed, and not reserve a liberty to himself by a power of revocation, this court will not lose the fetters he hath put upon himself, but he must lie down under his own folly; for it you would relieve in such a case, you must consequently establish this proposition, viz that a man can make no voluntary disposition of his estate, but by his will only, which would be absurd.

The Calcutta High Court in the case last cited decided that the heir of the donor or an occupancy holding could not revoke the gift on the ground that the holding was not transferable. Again in Re Antaji Keshav Tambe,³³² it was held that government could not by proclamation in 1851 withdraw the rights to trees, which had been granted by a proclamation of 1824. And in Rajaram v Ganesh,³³³ it was held that after a gift of a vritii was complete, the donor could not revoke it by his will. The donor cannot unilaterally revoke a valid gift by executing a registered deed of cancellation.³³⁴

[s 126.8] Incomplete Gift

The rule that a gift cannot be revoked except on the grounds mentioned in section 126, does not apply to an incomplete gift. An incomplete gift can be revoked at any time.³³⁵ The Rangoon High Court has held that when a donee is in possession under a gift incomplete for want of a registered deed, the donor may be estopped from denying the donee's title.³³⁶ A gift is effective, but cannot be enforced until the deed is registered.³³⁷

A cheque is an order to the donor's bankers which is revoked by the donor's death; but it is not revoked by the donor's death if it was presented in the donor's lifetime, and funds were appropriated by the bankers to meet it.³³⁸

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

127. Onerous gifts.—

Where a gift is in the form of a single transfer to the same person of several things of which one is, and the others are not, burdened by an obligation, the donee can take nothing by the gift unless he accepts it fully.

Where a gift is in the form of two or more separate and independent transfers to the same person of several things, the donee is at liberty to accept one of them and refuse the others although the former may be beneficial and the latter onerous.

Onerous gift to disqualified person.—A donee not competent to contract and accepting property burdened to any obligation is not bound by his acceptance. But if, after becoming competent to contract and being aware of the obligation, he retains the property given, he becomes so bound.

(a) A has shares in X, a prosperous joint-stock company, and also shares in Y, a joint-stock company in difficulties. Heavy falls are expected in respect of the shares in Y. A gives B all his shares in joint-stock companies. B refuses to accept the shares in Y. He cannot take the shares in X.

(b) A having a lease for a term of years of a house at a rent which he and his representatives are bound to pay during the term, and which is more than the house can be let for, gives to B the lease, and also, as a separate and independent transaction, a sum of money. B refuses to accept the lease. He does not by this refusal forfeit the money.

[s 127.1] Onerous Gifts

The first paragraph of this section corresponds to section 122 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, which refers to gifts by will. The first illustration is adapted from the case of Moffett v Bates.³³⁹ The second paragraph corresponds to section 123 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, and the second illustration is taken from the case of Warren v Rudall Ex paret Godfrey.³⁴⁰ In the first case, there is one gift of several properties and the donee must take all or none. In the second case, there are separate gifts to the same donee, and he may accept those that are beneficial, and reject those that are onerous. The gifts may be distinct although they are included in the same words of gift, and it is a question of the intention of the donor whether they are to be taken 127. Onerous gifts.—

together.³⁴¹

The rule as to onerous gifts in the first paragraph is analogous to the rule of election under section 35. Under that section, if an instrument confers a benefit and at the same time purports to deprive the beneficiary of other property, the beneficiary cannot take the benefit without surrendering the property, for it is said that he must either take under the instrument, or against it.³⁴²

The Supreme Court has held that the last paragraph of section 127 clearly indicates a minor donee, who can be said to be in law incompetent to contract under section 11 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is, however, competent to accept a non-onerous gift. Acceptance of an onerous gift, however, cannot bind the minor. If he accepts the gift, during his minority, of a property burdened with obligation and on attaining majority does not repudiate but retains it, he would be bound by the obligation attached to it.³⁴³

The principle is the same as that applied in the case of minor partners by section 30 of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932. In the case of a partnership, the estoppel arises from omission to repudiate within a reasonable time. In the case of the gift, the estoppel arises from the retention of the property, and no doubt a reasonable time would be allowed for repudiation. Similarly, when a minor has been made a shareholder in a jointstock company, he cannot repudiate his holding in the company if he has drawn dividends after attaining majority.³⁴⁴ But during minority, the gift is complete, so that if the donee dies a minor, his heir takes.³⁴⁵

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

128. Universal donee.—

Subject to the provisions of section 127, where a gift consists of the donor's whole property, the donee is personally liable for all the debts due by ³⁴⁶[and liabilities of] the donor at the time of the gift to the extent of the property comprised therein.

[s 128.1] Universal Donee

A universal donee is unknown to English law, according to which there is no universal succession, except in the case of death or bankruptcy. However, in Hindu law, this would occur when a man retires from the world, and becomes an ascetic.

A gift of the whole estate of the donor would in most cases be impeachable as to land as a fraudulent transfer under section 53.

However, this section is exclusive of section 53, and rests on the same principle as the first paragraph of section 127—Qui sensit commodum debet et sentire onus. The donee accepting the whole property becomes liable for the debts and other liabilities of the donor. Similarly, when a Hindu widow transfers the whole of her estate in favour of the next reversioner, the donee is liable for her maintenance.³⁴⁷

A executed a promissory note in favour of B, and subject to the payment of the amount due thereunder made a gift of his entire property in favour of C. It was held that C could not retain the benefit, and at the same time repudiate the burden.³⁴⁸ In another case, a reversioner in whose favour a Hindu female taking a woman's interest relinquished the property was held liable for her debts.³⁴⁹

Section 128 of the TP Act, 1882 does not provide anywhere that the donee is liable for all the debts due by the donor at the time of the gift. On a plain reading of the section, it is clear that the liability of the donee is to the extent of the property acquired by him by virtue of a gift deed from the donor, and cannot travel beyond the same. It is thus well settled that legal representatives of judgment debtors are liable for the debts of the predecessor to the extent of the estate acquired by the legal representatives from their predecessor.³⁵⁰

In section 2 (11) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the statutory definition of “legal representative” goes so far as to say that even the inter-meddler with the estate of a deceased will be his legal representative. If that is so, why cannot a universal donee, who by virtue of getting a gift, enters upon possession of the estate of a deceased, be regarded as his legal representative. It is particularly important to know that universal donees only take the estate of the deceased subject to the liabilities of the deceased. In fact, section 128 of the TP Act, 1882 fastens the personal liability upon the universal donee for all debts due by the donor at the time of the gift, though that liability is confined to the extent of the properties comprised in the gift. The liability of the universal donee to pay decree debt of the donor arises not only by the reason of the donee accepting the gift and on being the legal representative of the deceased, but also by the very terms under which he becomes a universal donee.³⁵¹

When a universal donee sued to redeem a mortgagee of the donor, the mortgagee was allowed to tack a simple contract debt of the donor on to the mortgage debt.³⁵² The position of the universal legatee and the universal donee is practically the same. In the case of a universal donee, it was necessary to provide for his liability under section 128, as otherwise, in case of personal liabilities, the donor being still alive, the donee would escape such liabilities.³⁵³

[s 128.2] Subject to the Provisions of Section 127

If the universal donee were a minor, he would be under no liability unless he retained the property after attaining majority.

If any portion of the donor's property, whether movable or immovable, is excluded from the gift, the donee is not a universal donee and the creditor is not entitled to the benefit of this section.³⁵⁴ But in a case in which a life interest in part of the property was reserved to the donor, the donee was held to be a universal donee.³⁵⁵ So also, where the part retained by a donor is insignificant and is for his own maintenance, the donee is nevertheless a universal donee.³⁵⁶

CHAPTER 7 Of Gifts

Sections 122–129, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

129. Saving of donations mortis causa and Muhammadan Law.—

Nothing in this Chapter relates to gifts of movable property made in contemplation of death, or shall be deemed to affect any rule of Muhammadan Law ³⁵⁷[].

[s 129.1] Constitutionality of the Section

In Bibi Maniran v Mohammad Ishaque,³⁵⁸ a Division Bench of the Patna High Court rejected the argument that section 129 violated Article 14 of the Constitution; the court held that the classification between Mohammadans and others was reasonable, having regard to the well-known fundamental differences between the religion and customs of Muhammadans on one hand, and the religion and customs of others. The court relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in Moti Das v S P Sahi.³⁵⁹ In *Rawther M v M Charavi*³⁶⁰ a single judge of the Kerala High Court has held that section 129 was ultra vires Article 14 of the Constitution, if it was held applicable to all Mahomedan gifts and should, therefore, be construed as limited to Mahomedan gifts of a charitable or a religious nature. This decision, if correct, would mean that this chapter would apply to non-religious or non-charitable Mahomedan gifts. It is submitted that the Patna decision is correct.

In a Kerala case decided after the above ruling, the donor (a Muslim lady) recited in the gift deed that the donor had, along with the title deeds, completely and absolutely surrendered possession of all her rights and interests in properties without receiving any consideration and by way of gift, to be enjoyed by the donees. It was not shown that the admission made in the deed was erroneous. It was held that the donor had parted with possession of the property. The gift must be held to be completed by the donor's act, as nothing remained to be done thereafter by the donor.³⁶¹

[s 129.2] Mahomedan Gifts

Nothing in this chapter applies to Mahomedan gifts.³⁶² Thus whether the writing requires registration or not depends on the facts and circumstances of each case,³⁶³ and an unregistered gift deed may in certain circumstances would not be recognised.³⁶⁴ An assignment of land by a Mahomedan bridegroom in favour of his bride at the time of the marriage in lieu of meher does not require writing.³⁶⁵

“Hiba” or gift under Mahomedan law is a transfer of property made immediately and without any exchange by one person to another, and accepted by or on behalf of the latter. By virtue of section 129 of TP Act, 1882, the chapter does not affect any rule of Mahomedan law and, therefore, “hiba” of subject matter of whatever value need not be registered as required by section 123. It can be oral but it should be adequately proved.³⁶⁶ On the other hand, hiba-bil-iwaz in India, being a gift for an exchange, is in the nature of a sale and if the subject matter is immovable property, then, it can only be by a registered instrument as provided under section 54 of TP Act, 1882. Oral gift in discharge of money owed to the donee, being one for consideration, amounts to a “sale”. It is not pure and simple “hiba”, but a hiba-bil-iwaz; and if property of value of ₹100 or more is involved, it can only be by a registered document.³⁶⁷

129. Saving of donations mortis causa and Muhammadan Law.—

The Supreme Court in Hafeeza Bi v Sheikh Farid,³⁶⁸ clarified and set at rest the ambiguity on application of chapter VII, to Muslims. It said that section 129 preserves the rule of Muslim law and excludes the applicability of section 123 of the TP Act to a gift of an immovable property by a Muslim. It is not the requirement that in all cases where the gift is contemporaneous to the making of the gift then such gift deed must be registered under section 17 of the Registration Act. Each case would depend on its own facts.

The three essentials of gifts under Muslim law are: declaration of the gift by the donor; acceptance of the gift by the donee, and delivery of possession. Where a gift of immovable property is made by a Muslim, and these essential requirements of declaration, acceptance and delivery of possession of the property were fulfilled, and the gift deed was only recital of factum of prior gift, the gift is complete and valid and does not require registration.³⁶⁹ The rules of Muslim law do not make writing essential to the validity of gift; and oral gift fulfilling all the three essentials make the gift complete and irrevocable. However, the donor may record the transaction of gift in writing. The apex court further clarified that merely because the gift is reduced to writing by a Muslim instead of it having been made orally, such writing does not become a formal document or instrument of gift. When a gift could be made by a Muslim orally, its nature and character is not changed because of it having been made by a written document. What is important for a valid gift under Muslim law is that three essential requisites must be fulfilled. The form is immaterial. If all the three essential requisites are satisfied constituting a valid gift, the transaction of gift would not be rendered invalid because it has been written on a plain piece of paper. The distinction that if a written deed of gift recites the factum of prior gift then such deed is not required to be registered but when the writing is contemporaneous with the making of the gift, it must be registered is inappropriate and not in conformity with the rules of gift in Mohammedan law. In the instant case, the gift was made by a donor by a written deed in favour of his son in respect of his properties. The gift as recited in the deed was based on love and affection for the son as after the death of the donor's wife, he has been looking after and helping him. The acceptance of the gift by son was evidenced as he signed the deed. The son was in physical possession of residential house with the donor. All the three essentials of a valid gift under the Mohammedan law were satisfied. The gift deed was a form of declaration by the donor and not an instrument of gift as contemplated under section 17 of the Registration Act and therefore it was complete and irrevocable. The apex court overruled the Andhra Pradesh High Court ruling that held against the validity of the gift for want of registration.

Where the dower was not fixed in cash so as to bring into existence a dower debt, but was to be by giving of land, the transfer of the land was held to be pure and simple oral gift (hiba) under the Mahomedan law.³⁷⁰

In Maqbool Alam v Khodaija,³⁷¹ the appellant examined himself as witness, and said that the gift was made on 10 February 1943, in the presence of his parents. His mother was alive, but she was not examined as a witness. The date of the gift was not mentioned in the plaint or any other document, and was disclosed for the first time in the witness box without it being made clear as to how the appellant remembered it in absence of any record. The Supreme Court held that the appellant failed to prove the alleged oral gift. The Andhra Pradesh High Court holding that it was unknown to law, that a Mahomedan can make an oral gift within the confines of his house and without the presence of anybody else, negated the plea of oral gift where the donor admitted that no one was present when he made the alleged oral gift.³⁷² In the case of a gift of immovable property amongst Muslims, delivery of possession following the execution of a gift deed amounts to a valid gift.³⁷³

In Imtiaz Rasul v Ataur Rasul,³⁷⁴ A, a Sunni Muslim and absolute owner of the plot of land gifted it to B, his younger brother under his influence through a registered gift deed. although he executed the gift deed and got it registered but did not hand over, possession of the same. Thereafter, B approached A and demanded possession of the property on the basis of the aforesaid gift deed to which A declined. Consequently, B started harassing A who later instituted the suit praying for declaration that notwithstanding execution of registered gift deed dated right, title and interest of the property remained with him. The issue before the court was whether a gift made by a muslim in favour of another muslim by executing a registered deed in compliance of sections 122 & 123 is sufficient and overrides the requirement under muslim law. The court held that section 129 saves the provision of the muslim law and even in the event of an execution of registered instrument by a muslim making a gift in favour of another muslim in that event unless the three ingredients ie, declaration of gift by the donor, an acceptance of the gift, express or implied, by or on behalf of the donee, and delivery of possession of the subject of the gift by the donor to the donee) are satisfied, a registered instrument within the meaning of section 123 would not get precedence. Here, the third condition was not fulfilled as the donor had not delivered the property in dispute to the donee after the execution of the registered gift deed hence there did not exist a valid gift deed between the two parties.

In Ismail Hajee Essa Trust v Muslim Educational Society (Registered),³⁷⁵ a Trust conveyed the property to a society B under an oral gift. All the members of the trust were Muslims and contended that the trustees being Muslims are competent to execute a valid gift of the same under an oral disposition. The court held that a public trust cannot transfer a property by oral gift to such a Society merely because its members are governed by Muslim Law. The Trust and the Society are independent juristic legal entities who are bound by section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 in the matter of gift. A transfer of immovable property by gift can only be affected by a registered instrument signed by the donor and attested by two witnesses. It necessarily follows that neither the Society nor its office bearers derived any title to the property under the oral gift as claimed by them.

The provisions of section 128 (universal donee) are, according to the Andhra Pradesh High Court, applicable to Muslims also, in the absence of any rule of Muslim law regarding the liability of a universal donee. A gift can be attacked on the ground of fraud on creditors under the general law (section 53), but, in the case of a universal donee, the liability is governed by the section itself. That the donor earns salary does not mean the donee is not a universal donee. Salary cannot be transferred in law.³⁷⁶

A dower debt being a debt payable by a husband to his wife, a gift in lieu of dower debt cannot be held to be valid, in as much as repayment of dower debt being consideration, no property can be transferred by way of a gift in lieu thereof.³⁷⁷

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

- (1) The transfer of an actionable claim ¹[whether with or without consideration] shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorised agent, ²[] shall be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instruments, and thereupon all the rights and remedies of the transferor, whether by way of damages or otherwise, shall vest in the transferee, whether such notice of the transfer as is hereinafter provided be given or not:

Provided that every dealing with the debt or other actionable claim by the debtor or other person from or against whom the transferor would, but for such instrument of transfer as aforesaid, have been entitled to recover or enforce such debt or other actionable claim, shall (save where the debtor or other person is a party to the transfer or has received express notice thereof as hereinafter provided) be valid as against such transfer.

- (2) The transferee of an actionable claim may, upon the execution of such instrument of transfer as aforesaid, sue or institute proceedings for the same in his own name without obtaining the transferor's consent to such suit or proceeding and without making him a party thereto.

Exception.— Nothing in this section applies to the transfer of a marine or fire policy of insurance ³[or affects the provisions of section 38 of the Insurance Act, 1938 (4 of 1938)].

ILLUSTRATIONS

- (i) A owes money to B, who transfers the debt to C. B then demands the debt from A, who, not having received notice of the transfer, as prescribed in section 131, pays B. The payment is valid, and C cannot sue A for debt.
- (ii) A effects a policy on his own life with an Insurance Company and assigns it to a Bank for securing the payment of an existing or future debt. If A dies, the Bank is entitled to receive the amount of the policy and sue on it without the concurrence of A's executor, subject to the proviso in sub-section (1) of section 130 and to the provisions of section 132.

[s 130.1] Actionable Claims

The definition, which is contained in section 3, provides that “actionable claim” means a claim to any debt, other than a debt secured by mortgage of immovable property or by hypothecation or pledge of movable property, or any beneficial interest in movable property not in possession, either actual or constructive, of the claimant,

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

which the civil courts recognise as affording grounds for relief, whether such debt or beneficial interest be existent, accruing, conditional or contingent. It is an ascertained sum due from one person to another, as contrasted from unliquidated damages and claims for compensation which require ascertainment/assessment by a court or tribunal before it becomes payable and due.⁴ Debts secured by a mortgage of immovable property or by a pledge of movable property are excluded from the definition. These are now transfers not of claims to property, but of the property itself. All claims under contract are excluded, except claims to the payment of a liquidated sum of money, or debt, or price. That a right to sue for damages is not an actionable claim is also stressed by the amendment made in section 6(e) to the effect that a mere right to sue cannot be transferred.⁵ On the other hand, the definition has been extended so as to include such equitable choses in action as debts or beneficial interests in movable property, whether existent, accruing, conditional or contingent. It includes a decree for specific performance in case of an agreement to sell.⁶

Actionable claims, therefore, include claims recognised by the courts as affording grounds for relief either—

- (1) as to unsecured debts; or
- (2) as to beneficial interests in movable property not in possession, actual or constructive—whether present or future, conditional or contingent.⁷

[s 130.2] Civil Court

A suit by a co-sharer to recover his share of the profits from a lambardar in the province of Agra and Oudh is cognisable by a revenue court, and not by a civil court—Agra Tenancy Act, 1926, section 230 and schedule IV. Such a claim by a co-sharer is, therefore, not within the definition of actionable claim.⁸

[s 130.3] Debt

A debt is a property. It is a chose in action and is heritable and assignable, and it is treated as property in India under the TP Act, 1882 which calls it an “actionable claim.”⁹

A debt is an obligation to pay a liquidated or certain sum of money.¹⁰ A debt may be a present or a future debt. If it is a present debt, it is existent, or now due and owing. If it is a future debt, it is existent but accruing, or payment is in the future. The distinction between present and future debts is made in the case of Subramanian v Arunachalam,¹¹ where the phrase “now due, owing or payable” was held to exclude debts accruing after the date of the deed. Both present and future debts are existing debts, and can be attached, and are actionable claims. In order to be an accruing debt, there must be a present debt, although it may be payable in the future. It has accordingly been held that sums paid into the bank to the credit of the judgment-debtor after the service of the garnishee summons on the bank, was not an accruing debt from the bank to the judgment-debtor, and was not bound in the hands of the garnishee bank by the service of the garnishee summons.¹² Conditional or contingent debts cannot be attached, but under the present definition, they too are actionable claims. Instances of contingent debts include the price payable by a purchaser of immovable property before the execution of the conveyance;¹³ or a maintenance allowance payable at a future date;¹⁴ or future rents;¹⁵ or annuities payable under a deed of waqf;¹⁶ or an amount due under a policy of insurance;¹⁷ or a letter of credit.¹⁸

An assignment of future rent can be effected only by a written instrument under section 130, and it must also be registered. A letter of the solicitor of the assignee to the tenant is not such an assignment.¹⁹ A judgment debt or decree is not an actionable claim, for no action is necessary to realise it. It has already been the subject of an action, and is secured by the decree.²⁰ Arrears of rent constitute a debt or actionable claim,²¹ but a claim to mesne profits is not a claim to any debt, but is a mere right to sue which cannot be assigned,²² for mesne profits are unliquidated damages.²³

In the case of a claim to compensation for a canal constructed by the government on a part of the mining site before transfer of the mining lease, the transfer of the mining lease does not, per se, result in assignment of the right to claim compensation. It is a mere right to sue which cannot be assigned. In any case, it cannot be enforced as an actionable claim, in the absence of an instrument executed in the manner provided in section 130.²⁴ In the instant case, the agreement was entered into between the industrial corporation and the allottee as, a sequel to the request made by the allottee to give him an industrial plot for the purpose of setting up an industry. The assurance given by the allottee, that he shall start construction of the building for setting up the industry within a period of six months and complete the construction thereof within two years from the date of issue of the allotment letter, was verified and found acceptable by the corporation, and only then had the corporation chosen to enter into the agreement with the allottee. If the allottee evacuates from the scene after inducting someone else into the plot without the consent of the corporation, it is not legally permissible for the inductee to compel the corporation to recognise him as the allottee.²⁵

A right to sue for damages cannot be transferred and where an advocate assigned his right to petitioner to sue the defendant and claim compensation for defamation, it was held that right to sue for damages concerning defamation cannot be transferred by one person in favour of another and a pauper application filed at the instance of this other person would not be maintainable.²⁶ A letter of subrogation, not being an assignment of a mere right to sue is valid and enforceable.²⁷ In the case of an agreement to sell, assignment of a decree for specific performance is transfer of an actionable claim and no consideration is required to be shown for assignment of decree for specific performance.²⁸

Distinction between a debt or actionable claim and a mere right to sue, which cannot be transferred, is discussed in the note “Mere right to sue distinguished from actionable claim” under section 6(e).

[s 130.4] Debt Secured by a Mortgage

Although a mortgage debt is not an actionable claim, yet, in the case of Imperial Bank of India v Bengal National Bank,²⁹ the Privy Council held that an unregistered assignment of a mortgage debt might be treated as an assignment of the debt dissociated from the security. The debt divorced from the security was not an actionable claim; but their Lordships said that it was a species of property for the transfer of which, no specific provision is made in the TP Act, 1882, so that the assignee has to sue in the name of the assignor.

[s 130.5] Transfer of Security

Transfer of a collateral security does not transfer the loan. In a Karnataka case, a money lending firm advanced a loan to the debtor, for the purchase of a vehicle. The bank financed the firm in respect of the loan so advanced by the firm. Subsequently, the firm also took a collateral security from the debtor in the form of promissory note, and assigned the note to the bank. It was held that the bank could not sue the debtor merely on the basis of collateral security, unless the loan was also assigned to the bank under section 130.³⁰

There cannot be an assignment of the promissory note, though there can be an assignment of debt.³¹

[s 130.6] Beneficial Interest in Movable Property

The property must not be in possession, actual or constructive, for such possession is ownership. Thus, a right to recover elephants trapped on the owner's land is a right of ownership in the elephants, and not an actionable claim.³² In Jaffer Meher Ali v Budge-Budge Jute Mills Co,³³ the right to claim the benefit of a contract, or the right on certain conditions to call for delivery of goods mentioned in the contract, was held to constitute a beneficial interest in movable property, conditional or contingent, within the meaning of the definition of actionable claim, and as such, assignable. The assignability of such a contract was said by Sale J to be subject to two conditions:

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

(1) that the benefit sought to be assigned was not coupled with any liability; and (2) that the contract was not induced by any personal considerations. A partner's right to sue for an account of a dissolved partnership is an actionable claim, being a beneficial interest in movable property not in possession.³⁴ The right to recover the insurance money on the death of the assured person, or on the expiry of the endowment period, is an actionable claim.³⁵ A right to recover back the purchase money on the sale being set aside is an actionable claim.³⁶ So also is the right to recover money left in the hands of a vendee;³⁷ or a right to the proceeds of a business;³⁸ or a decretal debt,³⁹ or the interest of the purchaser of the lottery in the prize money,⁴⁰ or a right to participate in the draw to be held in a lottery,⁴¹ or dividends of a share in a company.⁴²

A right to a sum of money is property. Merely because the claims pending before the arbitrator are liable to be reduced in the award to be passed by him, or that the court would not allow enhancement of the awarded amount for which it is pending in the court, it would make no difference.⁴³

There was a gift of actionable claim valued at Rs 3 lakhs, out of donor's right, title and interest as a whole in the firm. It was held that the transaction amounted to a gratuitous transfer of an actionable claim to which section 137 (in preference to section 130) applied, and there was a valid gift thereof to the minor donees.⁴⁴

[s 130.7] Transfer of Actionable Claims

This section of the TP Act, 1882, as observed by J Rankin in a Calcutta case,⁴⁵ contains a very special scheme which has some of the features of both the English common law, and of equity.

Thus, in equity, debts were assignable and also contingent interests and future property when the assignment was for valuable consideration.

Choses in action have been classed according to the procedure adopted for reducing them into possession. Legal choses in action were those enforceable by action at law, such as promissory notes, bills of exchange or policies of insurance.⁴⁶ Equitable choses in action, sometimes called choses in equity, were enforced by action in equity, e.g. a beneficial interest in a partnership,⁴⁷ or an interest in a trust fund.⁴⁸

The remedy of the assignee was imperfect. At law, he had to sue in the name of the assignor on giving him an indemnity against costs. In equity he could sue in his own name, but there had to be consideration for the assignment, and the assignee could not sue the debtor in equity, but had to sue in law in the name of the assignor, unless the assignor had refused to allow the assignee to sue in his name.⁴⁹ Moreover, the assignee could not give a valid discharge, unless expressly empowered to do so by the assignment.

The section of the TP Act, 1882 has some of the features of the statutory and some of the equitable modes of assignment. It resembles equitable assignment in that it applies to assignments, by way of charge as well as to absolute assignments, and takes effect as between the assignor and the assignee from the date of the assignment. On the other hand, it resembles a statutory assignment in that it must be in writing, and that it enables the assignee to sue in his own name, and to give a valid discharge.

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

In Loknarayan Sethia v State Bank of Jaipur,⁵⁰ the Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether an irrevocable power of attorney in favour of a creditor to execute a decree on behalf of the debtor-decree-holder constituted an equitable assignment. The court held that it did, as it was an engagement to pay out of a specific fund, viz the decretal amount. This decision was followed by the Supreme Court in Bharat Nidhi Ltd v Takhatmal,⁵¹ where it held that an irrevocable power of attorney authorising the creditor-bank to receive moneys due or that may become due to the borrower, coupled with a bill endorsed in favour of the bank for collection, constituted an equitable assignment.

Assignment of non-performing assets between banks and financial institutions are covered by the RBI guidelines, which is a complete code and therefore the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 are not applicable.⁵²

[s 130.8] Assignment of Debts

As an actionable claim includes future debts, there can be a valid assignment of a future debt,⁵³ e.g. of salary to become due,⁵⁴ or of future book debts,⁵⁵ or of future rents.⁵⁶ An outstanding in the account of the borrower is a debt due to the bank and consequently its assets which can validly be assigned by the bank. Such assignment does not amount to trading in debts.⁵⁷ In an earlier case,⁵⁸ the same court held that a part of a debt could not be assigned, and now that the legislature has abolished partial subrogation, this would seem to be correct. The Calcutta High Court followed the earlier Madras case that a part of a debt could not be assigned.⁵⁹

The question was considered by the Patna High Court,⁶⁰ which said that in India, the definition of an actionable claim, i.e., a claim to a debt which could not be enforced by action, e.g. when it was barred by limitation, was not property, and the same limitation must apply to a part of a debt which could not be sued upon under O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore, although the TP Act, 1882 did not make any distinction between whole debt and part of a debt and both might be transferred, the transferee might find that what had been transferred to him was not an actionable claim. It may be noted that it was a case of a separate and distinct debt, and the above observations of the learned judges were in the nature of obiter dicta. The Lahore High Court has, however, dissented from the Patna case, and held that a part assignment of a debt is valid in law and an action can be maintained thereon by the transferee, provided he makes the transferor and any other transferee who may be concerned parties to the suit, and that O II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no bearing on the question.⁶¹ It may be mentioned that although a decree is not an actionable claim, it has been held that there cannot be transfer of part of the decree.⁶²

[s 130.9] Assignment of Contracts

The benefit of a contract can be assigned but not the burden, for the promisor cannot shift the burden of his obligation without a novation. If the contract has been broken, nothing is left, but a right to sue for damages, which cannot be assigned—section 6(e)—although a difference due on cross contracts in which delivery was not to be given or taken, has been held to be a debt or actionable claim.⁶³ However, if the contract has been executed, the promisor having discharged the burden, may assign the benefit. If the contract is still executory, the assignment involves a delegation of performance to the assignee, and hence it is said that contracts involving special personal qualifications are not assignable.⁶⁴ The Calcutta High Court in Jaffer Meher Ali v Budge-Budge Jute Mills Co,⁶⁵ and the Bombay High Court in Hunsraj v Nathoo,⁶⁶ held that the interest of a buyer of goods in a contract for forward delivery can be assigned as an actionable claim. In the former case, J Sale said:

The rule as regards the assignability of contracts in this country is that the benefit of a contract for the purchase of goods as distinguished from the liability thereunder may be assigned, understanding by the term benefit, the beneficial right or interest of a party under the contract and the right to sue to recover the benefits created thereby. This rule is, however, subject to two qualifications: first, that the benefit sought to be assigned is not coupled with any liability or obligation that the assignor is bound to fulfil, and next that the contract is not one which has been induced by personal qualifications or considerations as regards the parties to it.

The right to call for payment of goods delivered would be a mere right to suit, and, therefore, under section 6(e), not transferable.

The benefit of a contract giving an option to purchase land may be assignable,⁶⁷ or it may be personal to the party to whom the option is given, and, therefore, not capable of assignment.⁶⁸ The benefit of a contract giving a power of submission to arbitration is personal to the parties, and cannot be assigned. It was so held in a Sind case following an earlier case.⁶⁹ In a later English case, however, it was held, distinguishing the earlier case, that if the benefit of the main contract is assignable, the benefit of the clause giving power of submission to arbitration can also be assigned.⁷⁰ In the instant case, no instrument got executed to say that the case of the petitioner was covered by section 130 of the TP Act, 1882, and to indicate that property in the cargo, passed in the favour of petitioner. Since it was apparent that neither the title in the cargo, nor in the claim had been transferred by the endorsement made on behalf of the Union of India, the petitioner could not take shelter under section 130 of the TP Act, 1882, for the position of the petitioner was just of an agent who could not sue in his own name. Therefore, the petition for referring the dispute to an arbitrator was not maintainable.⁷¹ An agreement for the sale or purchase of immovable property is a contract, the benefit of which can be assigned, unless the performance depends upon something personal or special.⁷² Similarly, the right to demand the reconveyance of property is assignable.⁷³

In order that an assignment should be effective, all the interest of the assignor under the contract must be transferred and conveyed to the assignee. The only question which the court has to consider with respect to the assignment is whether the debtor would get a complete and proper discharge if he paid the assignee.⁷⁴

[s 130.5] Mode of Assignment

No particular form of words is necessary in order to effect an assignment, if the intention is clear from the language used.⁷⁵

Section 130 does not require that any particular words be used or any particular form be adopted, or that the terms of transfer must be discernible from a single instrument. There should be an intention to transfer the debt represented by the receipt, and the intention must be evidenced in writing.⁷⁶

An assignment can be absolute or by way of security; but a deposit merely creating a pledge cannot amount to an assignment.⁷⁷ The delivery of a bond to A, with a letter requesting the debtor to pay A, constitutes an assignment of the bond to A.⁷⁸ In Hunsraj v Nathoo,⁷⁹ an endorsement on the back of a contract for the purchase of goods by the purchaser that he had sold all his rights and interest in the contract to a person named, was held to be a transfer of an actionable claim. A declaration by a retiring partner that he has no interest does not operate as a transfer to the remaining partners.⁸⁰ But where there has been an oral assignment of an actionable claim, a subsequent letter recording the transfer is a sufficient instrument in writing for the purposes of the section.⁸¹

A deed of assignment is treated only for assignment of the rights as creditor by conveying the rights in the immovable properties or security interests, and therefore the requirement under law providing for the documents to be registered would not be applicable.⁸² An Assignment of debt and Non-Performing Assets by one bank to another bank without assigning assignor's obligations towards its borrowers and debtors is not

violative of the Act.⁸³

A power of attorney executed by a company authorising the bank to demand and receive the rent from its tenant, was held not to create any equitable assignment in favour of the bank.⁸⁴ A promissory note which is not negotiable may be transferred by a separate deed,⁸⁵ and a direction endorsed on such a promissory note operates as an assignment.⁸⁶ If the promissory note is negotiable, some early cases supposed that the note could not be assigned as an actionable claim.⁸⁷ But later cases have held that even if the promissory note is negotiable, it may be assigned by an instrument in writing, although such an assignment renders the assignee under section 132 subject to the equities to which his assignor was subject.⁸⁸ A promissory note cannot be assigned, but there can be an assignment of a debt.⁸⁹ A document whereby the owner of a government promissory note authorises a person to recover the note or its value from the person with whom it is deposited, operates as an assignment.⁹⁰ Whenever transfer of actionable claim is intended, the hypothecation deed relating to actionable claim and followed by a document vesting a right to receive the money and to give full discharge to the debtor is normally adopted:—

- (1) If the actionable claim takes the form of a negotiable instrument like a promissory note, mere hypothecation will give the hypothecatee an equitable right of charge or right to proceed against it as security. Of course, the hypothecation itself will not enable recovery of the money due under the promissory note, until a decree is obtained.
- (2) However, if there is an endorsement transferring the right under the promissory note, the actionable claim itself is transferred, and the transferee would be in a position to recover the money due under the promissory note without obtaining a decree on the debt itself.
- (3) Where actionable claim is merely an intangible asset, the transfer is effected (a) only by the execution of a hypothecation bond with a right to recover the same; or (b) by a regular transfer of the debt itself by a document.⁹¹

In a case already cited,⁹² J Ramesam said that the instrument of transfer should, in general, be in favour of the assignee. The learned judge used the words “in general”, for when the obligee of a bond delivered it to A without any endorsement, but gave a letter to the debtor requesting him to pay A, this was held to constitute an assignment.⁹³ Again in a Bombay case,⁹⁴ J Chandavarkar held that a havalā or letter authorising a person to recover a sum of money due to the writer was an assignment. The provisions of this section have been held to override the rules of Mahomedan Law relating to the acceptance of a gift of an actionable claim; such a gift was held to be complete even without acceptance.⁹⁵

A, a contractor, was owed ₹2,156 by the Public Works Department. He intended to assign ₹1,600 of this money to a creditor, B, and accordingly wrote two letters—(1) to the creditor assigning ₹1,600 out of the debt to him; and (2) to the executive engineer giving him notice of the assignment. Letter (1) was lost and secondary evidence of its contents was not admissible as it was not stamped. It was then contended that the notice, letter (2) operated as an assignment. This contention was repelled as the letter was not addressed to the assignee, did not contain words of transfer, did not require payment out of a specific fund, and referred only to part of the debt.⁹⁶

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

The assignment of debts by the bank company to another banking company or non-banking company is not a transfer of property. As section 130 applies to a case where actionable claim, an assignment of debt/NPA with right to recover debt by state Bank of India to Banking Company is a valid transaction and such transaction is neither prohibited under the Transfer of Property Act nor is volatile of public policy.⁹⁷ The transfer of bare licences to use brand and accounting software free of charge for a limited period does not amount the conferral of a property right in either case so as to constitute transfer of a capital asset.⁹⁸

[s 130.11] Pay Order

Section 130 seems to require a transfer in writing addressed to the assignee, but the English rule under which, assignments, both equitable and legal, can be made by a direction to the debtor, has no doubt, influenced Indian decisions. It is, therefore, necessary to distinguish an assignment from a mandate or a pay order. A pay order is a revocable mandate. It gives the payee no interest in the fund. An assignment creates an interest in the fund, and is not revocable.⁹⁹ A pay order generally presupposes moneys of the drawer in the hands of the party to whom the order is addressed, held on terms of applying such moneys as directed by the order of the person entitled to them.¹⁰⁰ Again, a pay order is revocable, while an assignment is not, and a pay order ceases to be operative after the death of the creditor, while an assignment does not.

The Indian cases are not very consistent. Thus, while the delivery of a bond with a letter to the debtor directing him to pay was held to be an assignment,¹⁰¹ yet the delivery of a banker's deposit receipt with a letter to the bank directing payment was held to be only a pay order.¹⁰² However, in Thakur Das v Malik Chand,¹⁰³ a letter by a dairy man to the purchasers of his milk supply, directing them to pay the price of milk supplied to his creditor, was held to be an assignment; while in a Calcutta case,¹⁰⁴ a vendor's endorsement on a bill for goods sold requesting the purchaser to pay the amount to a third person, who would collect the amount on behalf of the vendor, was correctly held to be a pay order. That decision was distinguished in a later Calcutta case,¹⁰⁵ where the direction was unconditional and irrevocable. This was because there was no transfer, but a receipt of the money as agent of the creditor. In a Patna case, a letter of authority written by a debtor of a society authorising his employer to deduct from the amount of his salary, sums due to the society, was held as not constituting an assignment of an equitable charge.¹⁰⁶ A mere authority or power of attorney to recover debts does not constitute an assignment, as such attorney is the agent of the creditor.¹⁰⁷ In another case, where the subscribers of a company purchasing chits from the company, deposit money with a bank for payment to the company of the instalments of the chits as and when they fall due, it has been held that the money deposited by subscribers with the bank operates as a valid assignment in favour of the company.¹⁰⁸ Similarly, an agreement to advance funds for indenting stamps under which the stamps were deposited with the creditor as security, and under which it was agreed that its proceeds were to be handed over to him towards repayment, was held to amount to an equitable assignment.¹⁰⁹

[s 130.12] Novation

In a Bombay case,¹¹⁰ one M owed a sum of ₹27,500 to G & Co As against that amount, G & Co held, as pledges, 212 bales of cotton belonging to M. At the same time, M was also a debtor of one J for a certain sum of money. As between M, G & Co and J, a tripartite agreement was arrived at, whereby J took over the liability of M to pay G & Co, and G & Co agreed that they would hold 212 bales to the account of J instead of the account of M. G & Co thereafter wrote the following letter to J—"212 bales of M are credited to your account as per his and your instructions and ₹27,500 have been debited to your account and credited to the account of M." Under the above circumstances, the court held that the transaction amounted to a novation, and section 130 had no application.

[s 130.13] Whether with or Without Consideration

The words "whether with or without consideration" have been inserted by Act 20 of 1929 to include cases of gifts of choses in action. As to an assignment for consideration, it has been held that a conditional assignment by way of security is valid.¹¹¹

The question of payment of consideration is, in fact, one between the assignor and assignee, and the debtor

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

cannot take advantage of non-payment of the consideration for the assignment.¹¹²

[s 130.14] Instrument in Writing

The section embodies an important alteration of the law, for a transfer of an actionable claim cannot be made otherwise than by writing.¹¹³ The Supreme Court has, however, observed in *Bharat Nidhi Ltd v Takhatmal*¹¹⁴ that a document can amount to an equitable assignment independently of section 130. These observations suggest that a transfer of actionable claims may be recognised even if not in compliance with section 130. An entry in a settlement of account between the assignor and assignee is sufficient,¹¹⁵ but an oral transfer is invalid.¹¹⁶ But under the old section before the Act of 1900, a parol assignment was valid.¹¹⁷ As the assignment must be in writing, an equitable mortgage or charge is not created by the deposit of a policy of insurance.¹¹⁸

ILLUSTRATION

The deceased had insured his life, and in 1904, deposited the policy with A to secure present and future debts. In 1909, the deceased executed a written deed of assignment of the policy to B, and then committed suicide the day after the notice of the assignment was received by the insurance company. B being an assignee in writing, was entitled to payment. The deposit of the policy with A, not being accompanied with a written transfer, did not create a charge on the policy. Lord Moulton said—In the present case the respondent bases his claim on a deposit of the policy and not under a written transfer and claims that this creates a charge on the policy. The section specifically enacts that such a proceeding shall not have any such effect, such a charge can only be created by a written document. It follows that the respondent acquired no right whatsoever to the policy or its proceeds by reason of the deposit.¹¹⁹

Again, while an oral gift can be made of a cash balance, there can be no valid oral gift of rents in arrears and current dues, for the latter are actionable claims.¹²⁰

ILLUSTRATION

A debt was due by A to B for work done. B gave his creditor C a power of attorney and deposited with him vouchers for the work in order to enable him to get payment. Before C could draw the money, the debt was attached by another creditor. Held that C had no lien or charge on the money, for there was no written assignment of the debt.¹²¹

In Punjab, where the TP Act, 1882 is not in force, an assignment of an actionable claim may be made orally.¹²²

[s 130.15] Upon Execution of Such Instrument

The assignment is effectual from the date of the assignment. This is a departure from the English section by which the assignment only operates from the date of notice, though an equitable assignment is complete as between the assignor and the assignee, even when no notice is given to the debtor.¹²³ Under the old section, the assignment operated against the debtor from the date of express notice given to him, unless he was a party to or otherwise aware of the transfer of the debtor who were a party to the transfer, the case would be one of novation, and there would be no doubt as to his liability.¹²⁴ However, the words “otherwise aware of such transfer” had the effect of admitting constructive notice, and the section was interpreted to mean that the assignment was not void, but that its operation was suspended as against the debtor until he had notice of it, and it was sufficient if the debtor was made aware of it by the writ served upon him in the assignee’s suit.¹²⁵ These cases are now obsolete, for by the present section, the assignment takes effect from its date, and the rights of the debtor are safeguarded by the proviso.

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

[s 130.16] Proviso

The proviso is intended for the protection of a debtor who, without knowledge of the assignment, pays his creditor after the assignment. Such a payment is a valid discharge as against the assignee, if the debtor has not been a party to the assignment or has not received express notice of it. When the debtor has been a party, there has been a novation, and he has accepted the assignee as his creditor instead of the assignor. A debtor, the debt due from whom has been assigned over to a third person, cannot, after the notice of the assignment of the debt pay a portion of the debt, even under the order of the court in a case to which the assignee was not a party, so as to protect him from paying it over again to the assignee.¹²⁶ Express notice must be a notice in writing as required by section 131. Constructive notice is no longer sufficient.

The undernoted Madras case,¹²⁷ is an instance of the application of the proviso. The creditors had hypothecated a debt due to them by a railway company to the plaintiffs. They gave the plaintiffs a power of attorney to collect the debt, and the plaintiffs gave notice of the assignment to the company. The company, for no apparent reason, refused to recognise them and paid the creditors, and they had to make a second payment to the plaintiffs.

The principle of the proviso was applied in a Patna case.¹²⁸ A judgment debtor who had no notice of the assignment of the decree paid the decretal amount into court under O XXI, rule 1(l)(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree was held to be discharged, although no notice of the payment had been given to the decree-holder under sub-rule (2), and the assignee was not entitled to execute the decree. The assignee cannot recover from the debtor a debt which he has paid without notice of the assignment, but he has his remedy against the creditor who is accountable to him for what he has recovered after his assignment.¹²⁹ However, in UOI v Sri Sarada Mills,¹³⁰ it has been held that where a consignee subrogated its rights to an insurer in consideration of receiving the claimed amount, it could still sue the railways for the loss of the goods. In this case, the insurance company had allowed the assignor to sue the railways.

Under the English law, priority in the case of successive assignments of choses in action, each one without notice of the earlier one, is determined by the date of notice to the debtor. However, in India, no such notice to the debtor is necessary to perfect the assignee's title. Under section 130, the title vests in the assignee on the execution of the transfer deed and no further action on his part, e.g. sending of notice, is necessary to complete his title. In such cases, priority had ordinarily to be determined with reference to the date on which title vested in the transferee, i.e., the date of execution of the transfer deed. The proviso to section 130 is only for the benefit of the debtor, and it has nothing to do with the title of the transferee, or with priority of claims.¹³¹

In a Supreme Court case, certain trust property consisted of income from dividends on shares in companies and managing agency commission. The beneficiaries were also trustees under the trust deed. The beneficiaries effected two assignments of the trust property to two different creditors. The first assignee gave notice of assignment to the trustees/beneficiaries. He was held to have priority in receiving the trust income over the other assignee. In such a case, it could not be objected that the first assignee was negligent by failing to notify the companies whose shares were the trust property. In the facts of the case, the second assignee, to claim benefit as a bona fide transferee, ought to have made inquiry from the trustees, and not from companies who would have neither recognised a trust, nor an assignment. Also, there was no further obligation on the part of the first assignee to obtain a power of attorney, so as to make arrangements for directly receiving the dividend from the companies. The companies may, or may not, recognise such authority.¹³²

[s 130.18] Right to Suit

The section follows the English statutory rule by which the assignee has the right to sue in his own name and give a valid discharge, but while the English rule is limited to absolute assignments, the section embraces all assignments. In fact, after the assignment, the assignee is the only person who is entitled to recover the debt.¹³³ The second illustration shows that after the death of the assignor, his executor is not a necessary party to the suit. In Sham Kumari v Rameswar Singh,¹³⁴ when a mortgagor assigned a debt to a mortgagee and the latter made no attempt to recover it, he was debited with the amount in the mortgage account.

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

Where the goods entrusted to the transport carrier by the consignor, an unregistered firm, were, on delivery by the carrier to the consignee, found damaged and the insurance company with which the goods were insured, made payment of the damages to the consignee, the assignment by the consignor of its right to indemnification from the carrier to the insurance company would be valid under section 130, and would not be hit by section 6(e).¹³⁵

[s 130.19] Marine or Fire Policies

Policies of marine or fire insurance are excepted from this section, as they cannot be assigned apart from the property insured. (section 135.)

[s 130.20] Stocks and Shares

Debentures, negotiable instruments, and mercantile documents of title are excepted from this section by section 137.

The assignment of dividend is subject to section 53, Companies Act, 1956.¹³⁶

[s 130.21] Fixed Deposits

A fixed deposit is not a deposit of specie, but is a debt or actionable claim, and a transfer of it can only be made by an instrument in writing under this section.¹³⁷

A fixed deposit receipt is not a negotiable instrument. It represents a debt, and can be assigned under section 130.¹³⁸

[s 130.22] Public Policy

Some actionable claims are not assignable on grounds of public policy. Such are salaries of public officers and military, civil and political pensions. [section 6(f) and (g) of TP Act, 1882]

[s 130.23] Transfer by the Operation of Law

Actionable claims may also be transferred by operation of law. On the death of the person entitled, his actionable claims pass as a rule onto his legal representative. The legal representative is entitled to enforce performance of a contract with the deceased, unless his personal qualities were a material ingredient in the contract.¹³⁹ So also, on insolvency, the benefit of a contract with the insolvent,¹⁴⁰ or the right of an insolvent partner to sue for an account of a dissolved partnership,¹⁴¹ vests in the official assignee; the right to sue for an account of a dissolved partnership being not a mere right to sue under section 6(e), but an actionable claim. Again, on the death of a joint tenant or co-partner, the interest in the actionable claim passes to the other joint holder. A reversioner succeeding to the estate of a Hindu widow on her remarriage can enforce an actionable claim held by the widow.¹⁴²

[s 130.24] Dedication

Just as section 123 does not apply to a gift to an idol, so the dedication of an actionable claim, such as a bond, to an idol is not a transfer to which section 130 applies, and it may be made orally.¹⁴³

[s 130.25] Redemption of Mortgage Without Notice of Sub-mortgage

130. Transfer of actionable claim.—

A sub-mortgage being in the nature of an assignment of the mortgage, the principle underlying the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 130 of the TP Act, 1882, which is only a codification of the pre-existing law, has been applied to the case of a redemption of a mortgage by the mortgagor without the conjunction of the sub-mortgagee. The express notice contemplated by the proviso is not insisted upon, as the section is not in terms applicable; but if the redemption be without notice of the sub-mortgage, then it is valid and effective as against the sub-mortgage. Mere registration of the sub-mortgage is not notice thereof to the mortgagor, since by the redemption, he does not acquire the property transferred under the sub-mortgage or any part thereof.¹⁴⁴

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

131. Notice to be in writing, signed.—

Every notice of transfer of an actionable claim shall be in writing, signed by the transferor or his agent duly authorized in this behalf, or, in case the transferor refuses to sign, by the transferee or his agent, and shall state the name and address of the transferee.

[s 131.1] Effect of Notice

It has been held that notice is not necessary when the assignment is by a registered document;¹⁴⁶ or where a transferee of the lessor is claiming rent, because this is not a case of a transfer of an actionable claim.¹⁴⁷

It has been said that the assignment is not valid against the debtor until the debtor has in fact had notice of the assignment;¹⁴⁸ but a more correct statement of the effect of notice is that notice is not necessary to perfect the title to the assignee of a debt, but until the debtor receives notice of the assignment in accordance with law, his dealings with the original creditor will be protected.¹⁴⁹ Where the banking company assigns by way of transfer, the right to recover debt with rights of its sale, the assignee bank simply steps into the shoes of the assignor bank and the fact that no notice of such assignment was given to the debtor would not adversely affect the transfer, more so when statutory notice under section 434 of the Companies Act, 1956 has already been given.¹⁵⁰

[s 131.2] Form of Notice

The notice must be an express notice in writing. The section is to be construed strictly, and in order that the exception in the proviso to section 130 should be operative, there must be a strict compliance with the requirements of section 131.¹⁵¹ A notice which did not give the address of the transferee was held to be invalid.¹⁵² But a notice is sufficient if it brings to the notice of the debtor with reasonable certainty, the fact that the deed does assign the debt;¹⁵³ and a notice would not, therefore, be defective merely because it does not mention the date of the assignment, or contains an erroneous statement that notice of assignment has already been given.¹⁵⁴ The section does not require that the notice must be given forthwith. What is reasonable notice would be a question of fact. There is no time-limit within which an assignee of a promissory note should give notice to the promisor. Notice given within one year was held to be reasonable.¹⁵⁵ The notice of a transfer would be given by the transferor and if given by the transferee, it should be alleged or shown that the transferor had refused to sign the notice.¹⁵⁶

[s 131.3] Waiver of Notice

131. Notice to be in writing, signed.—

In Sadasook Ramprotap v Hoar Miller & Co,¹⁵⁷ it was suggested that the debtor might waive the provisions of section 131. Justice Rankin said that if the assignor had offered to let the debtor have the transferee's address in writing, and the debtor had said that there was no need to bother as he would make no point of the omission, the debtor might be liable to the assignee. In such cases it is submitted, the debtor becomes either by parole or by conduct, a party to the assignment and is, therefore, liable.

[s 131.4] Conditional Notice

Notice must be unconditional; otherwise it would lead to an intolerable increase in the burden of the debtor. In a Madras case,¹⁵⁸ A assigned to his creditor B, a debt due to him by a railway company, and gave B the power of attorney to collect the debt from the railway company. On the date of the power of attorney, A wrote to the company to inform them of the transaction and directed them to pay B, if he (A) had not in the meantime otherwise paid off his debt to B. The railway company refused to recognise B and paid A; but they were held not to be discharged by such payment. The court seemed to hold that a notice may be conditional, but added that if it were a good notice, it was validated by subsequent notices given by the plaintiff—a somewhat inconclusive and unsatisfactory decision.

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

132. Liability of transferee of actionable claim.—

The transferee of an actionable claim shall take it subject to all the liabilities and equities and to which the transferor was subject in respect thereof at the date of the transfer.

(i) A transfers to C a debt due to him by B. A being then indebted to B. C sues B for the debt due by B to A. In such suit B is entitled to set off the debt due by A to him; although C was unaware of it at the date of such transfer.

(ii) A executed a bond in favour of B under circumstances entitling the former to have it delivered up and cancelled. B assigns the bond to C for value and without notice of such circumstances. C cannot enforce the bond against A.

[s 132.1] Liabilities and Equities

The word “liabilities” indicates only the plain rule that the assignee can get no better title than the assignor. If nothing is due to the assignor, the assignee gets nothing.

A right of set off is an equity. A judgment debtor has a right to set off a cross decree under O XXI, rule 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he also has this right against an assignee of the decree-holder.¹⁵⁹ So a debtor when sued by the assignee of his creditor, is entitled to set off a debt due to him by the assignor on a transaction, independent of the debt assigned.¹⁶⁰

[s 132.2] Court Sales

The principle of the section has been applied to court sales.¹⁶¹

132. Liability of transferee of actionable claim.—

ILLUSTRATION

A sold his house to B but remained in possession as B's tenant. B owed A ₹2,818 for part of the price. This debt was attached and sold by a creditor of A. The purchaser at the court sale was C, who sued to recover the amount from B, but B was allowed to set off the rent due by A at the time of the court sale.¹⁶²

[s 132.3] Notice Immaterial

As already stated, it is immaterial that the assignee had no notice of the equity or liability to which the assignor was subject at the date of the assignment. This is expressly stated in the second illustration, and it is incumbent on the purchaser to make inquiries as to any equities and liabilities affecting his purchase.¹⁶³ Nevertheless, in a Calcutta case¹⁶⁴ decided under section 49 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, with reference to the assignment of decrees, it was assumed that the assignee should have notice. This was incorrect, and in the latter case of Monmohan v Dwarka Nath,¹⁶⁵ the court said: The assignee of a decree stands in no better position than his assignor, as regards equities existing between the original parties to the judgment, and takes it subject to all the equities and defences subsisting at the time of the assignment, which the judgment debtor could have asserted against in the hands of the judgment creditor, notwithstanding the assignee may have had no notice thereof.

[s 132.4] Mortgage Debt

As a mortgage debt is excluded from the definition of an actionable claim, the assignee takes subject to the liabilities of the mortgagee transferor, but not to the equities to which he was subject. The assignee takes subject to the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date of the transfer,¹⁶⁶ but the mortgagor cannot as against the assignee, claim a right of equitable set off.¹⁶⁷

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

133. Warranty of solvency of debtor.—

Where the transferor of a debt warrants the solvency of the debtor, the warranty, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, applies only to his solvency at the time of the transfer, and is limited, where the transfer is made for consideration, to the amount of value of such consideration.

[s 133.1] Amendments

This was originally section 134. It was numbered as section 133 by the amending Act 2 of 1900. There has been no change in the section.

[s 133.2] Warranty of Solvency

A warranty of solvency of the debtor is not implied. If there is a warranty, then, unless it is expressed to be of a continued solvency, it is limited to solvency at the time of the assignment. The liability under such an assignment is further limited to the consideration for the assignment, which is all that is necessary to indemnify the assignee. No warranty of title is expressed in the TP Act, 1882, but probably, the principle of section 14 of the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930 would be applied.

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

134. Mortgaged debt.—

Where a debt is transferred for the purpose of securing an existing or future debt, the debt so transferred, if received by the transferor or recovered by the transferee, is applicable, first, in payment of the costs of such recovery; secondly, in or towards satisfaction of the amount for the time being secured by the transfer; and the residue, if any, belongs to the transferor or other person entitled to receive the same.

[s 134.1] Amendment

This was originally section 138. It was renumbered as section 134 by Act 2 of 1900, which also made some verbal alterations and added the words “or other person entitled to recover the same”. Since then there has been no change.

[s 134.2] Assignment by Way of Mortgage

A debt may be assigned by way of security.¹⁶⁸ The distinction which exists in the English law between an absolute transfer of a chose in action, and a transfer by way of charge, does not exist under the TP Act, 1882.¹⁶⁹ A right to rent to fall due in future is an actionable claim which may be the subject of a mortgage.¹⁷⁰

It has been said in a Calcutta case:¹⁷¹

The position created by the precise language of section 134 seems to be somewhat anomalous, because where there is a transfer under section 130, all the rights and remedies of the transferor vest in the transferee. The expression “all rights” must of course include the right of ownership, and yet section 134 says that the residue, if any, belongs to the transferor which is only another way of saying that if there is anything left over, after the debt between the transferor and the transferee is satisfied, the transferor is the owner of the balance, whatever it may be. The anomaly consists in this that there is a contradiction between the provisions of section 130 and those of section 134. One would have expected that instead of saying “any residue belongs to the transferor” the section would have said “residue if any, shall be re-transferred by the original transferee to the original transferor”. It is submitted that there is really no conflict between the two sections. Under section 131, “all rights and remedies” of the transferor vest in the transferee vis-a-vis

the debtor, and the transferor cannot, after assignment even by way of security, sue the debtor, for that remedy is vested by the assignment in the transferee.¹⁷² Section 134 deals with the rights inter se of the transferor and transferee, when the debt is transferred by way of security, after the debt is recovered. The section prescribes the mode of realisation of a mortgaged debt. The assignee recovers the debt and pays the surplus, if any, to the assignor. The transaction may be described by the parties as a charge or lien, and yet it may be in substance an assignment, for when a creditor purports to create a lien or charge on a debt due to him in favour of another person, the words have no meaning except as giving the latter right to recover the debt from the debtor.¹⁷³

As already stated, a mortgage in the English form, which transfers the property with a proviso for reconveyance, is an absolute assignment under the English statute; though an assignment by way of charge only, is a conditional assignment and not within the English statute.¹⁷⁴ In Mulraj Khatau v Vishwanath,¹⁷⁵ the Privy Council rejected the contention that the requirement of an assignment in writing under section 130 referred only to a transfer of absolute rights, and not to the creation of a charge.

An assignment by way of mortgage or charge of a book debt of a company is void as against the liquidator or any creditor of the company, unless the provisions of section 109(d) of the Companies Act, 1913, now re-enacted as section 125 of the Companies Act, 1956, are complied with.¹⁷⁶

An assignment by way of charge on future property is a valid assignment in equity, which will attach to the property when it comes into existence.¹⁷⁷ The section does not permit a transferor to recover the debt. If the transferee and the debtor collude, the transferor can file a suit for redemption, and can get the debt reassigned to him.¹⁷⁸

Every assignee by endorsement or other writing, of a policy of insurance against fire, in whom the property in the subject insured shall be absolutely vested at the date of the assignment, shall have transferred and vested in him all rights of suit as if the contract contained in the policy had been made with himself.]

[s 135.1] Amendment

This section was inserted by Act 2 of 1900. It was transferred with slight alteration from the Policies of Insurance (Marine and Fire) Assignment Act, 1886, which is now entirely repealed.

[s 135.2] Policies of Marine and Fire Insurance

These policies constitute an exception to the general rule, for they cannot be assigned without a transfer of the property insured. So, when the ownership of goods passed to the plaintiffs on delivery into their trailers, they could not recover on a policy which was not agreed to be transferred to the plaintiffs by the contract of sale, though it was subsequently transferred to them.¹⁸⁰ However, a marine policy may be assigned after a loss.¹⁸¹

In a Supreme Court case, a consignment entrusted to a railway company for carriage was damaged by fire. The consignee obtained damages from the insurance company, after writing a letter of subrogation. A suit was subsequently filed for damages against the railway company by the consignee. The suit was held to be maintainable. The letter of subrogation was held not to divest the consignee of its cause of action against the railway administration for loss and damages. The letter of subrogation in this case contained intrinsic evidence that the consignee would give the insurance company facilities for enforcing the rights.¹⁸²

According to the High Court of Guwahati, where partnership assets are insured and the firm is subsequently dissolved, one partner (getting all its assets) cannot sue for recovery of damages, unless the policy is assigned in his favour by the insurer, i.e., by the firm, by formal endorsement.¹⁸³

[Rep. by the Marine Insurance Act, 1963 (11 of 1963), sec. 92, (w.e.f. 1.8.1963).]

This section which was inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act VI of 1944, has been repealed by section 92 of the Marine Insurance Act XI of 1933, and re-enacted by section 92 of the Marine Insurance Act XI of 1933, and re-enacted in sections 52(2), 79 and 91 of that Act.

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

136. Incapacity of officers connected with Courts of Justice.—

No judge, legal practitioner or officer connected with any Court of Justice shall buy or traffic in, or stipulate for, or agree to receive any share of, or interest in, any actionable claim, and no Court of Justice shall, enforce, at his instance, or at the instance of any person claiming by or through him, any actionable claim so dealt with by him as aforesaid.

[s 136.1] Object

The intention of the former section was said to be that officers attached to a court should not be placed in a position in which they may be tempted to use the influence or the information which they may have acquired by virtue of their possible connection with the transaction of business in the court, to the prejudice of persons who might have to resort to it for the adjudication of actionable claims.¹⁸⁵ The section was, therefore, not applied to a high court pleader purchasing at a sale held in a subordinate court in which he did not habitually practise. However, the principle underlying the section is of wider import affecting the administration of justice in all courts. In Kerakoose v Serle,¹⁸⁶ the Privy Council said:

It is of great importance in all countries, and more particularly in a country like India, that no officer of a Court of Justice should be even exposed to the suspicion that in the discharge of his official duties his conduct may be influenced by any personal consideration. The section is therefore analogous to O XXI, rule 73, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, which provides that no officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold.

The words “or other person” did not occur in the corresponding provision of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, and under that Code, a pleader was said not to be an officer of the court and not debarred from purchasing property sold in execution, though the courts disapproved of such purchases.¹⁸⁷ However, section 136 does not apply to such purchases, or to the purchase of a decree, for a decree is not an actionable claim.¹⁸⁸ The word “buy” in this section does not refer to purchases at court sales, for section 136 is subject to section 2(d), and it has been held that a purchase by a pleader of a policy of life insurance at a court sale is not invalid.¹⁸⁹ The prohibition applies irrespective of whether a suit has been filed on an actionable claim, and a purchase after a suit offends against public policy more than the purchase of such a claim before a suit.¹⁹⁰ Nor is the prohibition restricted to actionable claims in respect of which the pleader has a professional duty to perform; and when a pleader purchased a house under a kabala which assigned to him the rents which were in arrears, this section was a bar to his enforcing his claim.¹⁹¹ Again, an assignment by a Mahomedan widow to a pleader of her claim for unpaid dower is invalid.¹⁹² However, a pleader may make an assignment of arrears of rent, for a sale of an actionable claim is not forbidden, and a mere sale is not trafficking.¹⁹³

Where a person prohibited from dealing in an actionable claim under section 136, obtained an assignment of a bond through a bona fide mistake and instituted a suit on the basis of the same, it was held that the provisions of O I, rule 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure would apply, and the assignor can be substituted in the place of the assignee as plaintiff and allowed to continue the suit.¹⁹⁴

CHAPTER 8 Of Transfers of Actionable Claims

Sections 130–137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882

137. Saving of negotiable instruments, etc.—

Nothing in the foregoing sections of this Chapter applies to stocks, shares or debentures, or to instruments which are for the time being, by law or custom, negotiable, or to any mercantile document of title to goods.

Explanation.—The expression, “mercantile document of title to goods” includes a bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse-keeper’s certificate, railway receipt, warrant or order for the delivery of goods, and any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented.

[s 137.1] Negotiable Instruments and the Law

The assignment of a negotiable instrument is effected under the Negotiable Instruments Act by endorsement and delivery, or if payable to bearer, by delivery only.

Section 137 of the TP Act, 1882, and section 2(4) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1930 attribute negotiability to all such mercantile documents as are used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of the goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise by endorsement or delivery, the possession of the documents to transfer or receive the goods thereby represented.¹⁹⁵

A bill of lading is transferable by endorsement;¹⁹⁶ but a mate’s receipt is not a document of title, and cannot be transferred by endorsement.¹⁹⁷ A debenture was given as an illustration of the old section 137, but as it is a secured debt, it is not an actionable claim under the definition in TP Act, 1882. In Imperial Bank of India v Bengal National Bank,¹⁹⁸ CJ Rankin said:

The meaning of this section seems to be that debentures and certain other things may be transferred otherwise than in the manner provided by section 130 and that the effect of the transfer is not controlled by the subsequent sections. I do not think it has reference to debentures considered as transfers, but only as the subject-matter of a transfer.

Bearer debentures are now, by the general custom of merchants, regarded as negotiable instruments.¹⁹⁹ A railway receipt entitles the endorsee to delivery as a document of title of goods;²⁰⁰ and so does a delivery order.²⁰¹ It has, therefore, been held that in the case of an ordinary receipt, an endorsement and the delivery of the document are sufficient to complete a transfer. No separate document is necessary.²⁰² A pledge of a railway receipt has the effect of a pledging the goods.²⁰³ Shares can only be transferred as provided by the Companies Act.²⁰⁴ Shares are not, however, actionable claims, and are excluded from the operation of this chapter.²⁰⁵ When a negotiable instrument is negotiated, the holder in due course, does not take subject to the liabilities and equities affecting his transferor, but may acquire a better title. But the transfer of such instruments may be effected by an instrument in writing under section 130, and the transfer will then be subject to section 132.²⁰⁶ This is because while section 137 gives an extended privilege to mercantile documents, it is in no way restrictive.²⁰⁷ The contract indicated by a railway receipt can be transferred without a writing. An endorsement in blank, coupled with the delivery of the receipt, is sufficient.²⁰⁸

The section is no bar to the transfer of a negotiable instrument otherwise than by way of endorsement. If a promissory note is executed in favour of a joint Hindu family, the whole family can sue to recover the debt evidenced by the note; and if a partition is effected, each member may sue (not on the note, but on debt) to recover his share.²⁰⁹ The beneficial owner cannot sue on the note alleging that the payee is his benamidar, though he may sue for the debt evidenced by the note.²¹⁰ In some cases, a promissory note has been held to be transferred without an endorsement, by operation of law. Thus, the party entitled to possession after the release of the property from the superintendence of the Court of Wards, is entitled to sue on promissory notes executed by tenants to the Court of Wards.²¹¹ So also, when a promissory note was purchased at a court auction.²¹² However, in a case where a negotiable instrument was allotted to a party by a partition award and decree, the Bombay High Court held that there was no transfer by operation of law.²¹³

Section 136 does not apply to instruments under this section, otherwise it would be questionable if a legal practitioner could take a cheque in payment of his fees.

Section 137 must, by virtue of section 4, be read as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.²¹⁴

[s 137.2] Shares

Assignment of shares may be by sale, mortgage, or pledge. In the case of mortgage, the right to enjoy is given, while in a pledge, there is no such right.²¹⁵ Even if blank transfer forms are used, it cannot be said that the transaction is necessarily a pledge. In the case of a pledge, the right of enjoyment of property is not given to the pledgee, while in the case of a mortgage, such a right vests in the mortgagee. Where blank transfer forms are executed and the shares are delivered, and the transferee is specifically given the right to obtain a formal transfer of shares in his favour, and to exercise the rights of a shareholder, the transferee is a mortgagee, and not a pledgee. Further, even in a mortgage, there can be given a right to sell the shares privately for the realisation of the debt.²¹⁶
